A Quarterly Journal for Church Leadership

Volume 5, Number 3 • Summer 1996

... true religion claims the affections as well as the intellect; it is essentially, in Richard Baxter's phrase, "heart work." Second, theological truth is for practice. William Perkins defined theology as the science of living blessedly for ever; William Ames called it the science of living to God. Third, conceptual knowledge kills if one does not move on from knowing about God to a relational acquaintance with God himself.

Hooker, Thomas, 1586-1647.

Redemption: Three Sermons, 1637-1656. Rpt. Gainesville, 1956; Delmar, 1977. 3 v. in 1. Introd. by Everett H. Emerson.

A contemporary of John Cotton of Boston and Thomas Shepard of Cambridge, Thomas Hooker of Hartford was an influential Puritan minister in both church and state in Connecticut. Though known as a fighter for American democracy and congregational church government, he excelled most of all in tracing out the work of the Holy Spirit in the souls of God's children. He was a prolific writer, publishing twenty-two volumes in all, of which most were sermons and have never been reprinted to date.

This reprint consists of three sermons drawn from three volumes and explains many points about how God converts His people: "No Man By Nature Can Will Christ and Grace" (1638), "The Heart Must be Humble and Contrite" from The Application of Redemption (1656), and "The Soules Ingrafting into Christ," from The Soules Implantation (1637).

Mather, Cotton, 1663-1728.

Bonifacius: An Essay To Do Good. Boston, 1710. Rpt.

Gainesville, 1967. Introd. by J. K. Piercy.

Grandson of John Cotton and son of Increase Mather, Cotton Mather did more than any of his contemporaries to perpetuate the vision of the founding Puritan fathers during his forty-seven-year ministry in Boston. A champion of Reformed doctrine and a prolific writer, Cotton Mather is best known today for his valuable two-volume church history of New England, 1620-98 (recently reprinted by Banner of Truth Trust).

This volume is a guide for ordinary men written in the Puritan "plain style" on how to promote what is good in private circumstances (husband and wife, children, relatives, servants, neighbors) and in public circumstances (the minister, the teacher, the public office holder, the physician, the lawyer, etc.). Influenced Benjamin Franklin and others in developing practical ideas for humanitarian work.

Mather, Increase, 1639-1723.

Departing Glory: Eight Jeremiads by Increase Mather. Rpt. Delma, 1987. 8 v. in 1. Introd. by Lee Schweninger.

One of the most important American Puritans, Increase Mather (1639-1723), served the New England community both as a religious and a political leader; he was preacher and statesman, minister and diplomat. In his lifetime Mather wrote 175 works: theological tracts, historical documents, scientific analyses, letters, and many sermons. Mather's career in the pulpit was a long one; he preached his first sermon in 1657, became teacher of the Second Church of Boston in 1664, and preached and published until his death in 1723. During his career he had ample opportunity to observe the growth of New England. He watched his plantation change from a small religious community to a worldly metropolis. Much of the change he considered degenerate, and he blamed this degeneracy on his and his sons' generations. The founders had bequeathed to their sons a holy commonwealth; and, because of their backsliding, those sons were unworthy of their inheritance. Their degeneracy he lamented in the sermon form which has come to be called the jeremiad (introd., p. 9).

Contents: "The Day of Trouble Is Near" (1674), "An Earnest Exhortation" (1676); "Heaven's Alarm to the World" (1682), "Renewal of Covenant" (1682), "Returning unto God" (1684), "Ichabod" (1702), "Burnings Bewailed in a Sermon" (1711), "Advice to the Children" (1721).
