mental child abuse, evolution, and the attack on the family. The final chapter suggests ways in which Christians can influence the textbooks used in the public schools supported by their taxes. Christians need to be informed and concerned about public school texts, for their children will live in a society shaped by the philosophies contained therein.

Peck, Richard

Rock: Making Musical Choices

Greenville, SC: Bob Jones University Press, 1985, 164 pp paper $4.95; reviewed by Jeffrey P Tuttle

From his own experience as a former rock performer and publisher of contemporary Christian music, Peck confronts the Christian's relationship to music—both religious and secular. Emphasizing the holiness of God, he offers practical guidance for establishing music standards. The application of Scripture and lack of sensationalism in the book are refreshing. In view of the importance of musical discernment, this book is recommended to pastors, parents, young people, and Christians in general.

Berglund, Robert

A Philosophy of Church Music

Chicago: Moody Press, 1985, 112 pp hard $7.95; reviewed by Dean Kurtz

Since music occupies such a predominant part of the believer's public and private worship, it is imperative that every Christian develop a thoroughly biblical philosophy of music. The author of this book bemoans the lack of theological training among musicians and the lack of musical training among preachers. This volume will force readers to rethink goals and hopefully develop a music program that is consistent with the rest of their ministry. In evaluating the author's conclusions one must bear in mind that he is Lutheran and weak on personal separation. The book is short and the style is very readable by both minister and musician.
