THE EPISTLES OF ST PAUL.

II.

THE THIRD APOSTOLIC JOURNEY.

3.

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.
Cambridge:
PRINTED BY J. & C. F. CLAY, AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.
SAINT PAUL'S

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS

A REVISED TEXT

WITH

INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND DISSERTATIONS

BY THE LATE

J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D.

BISHOP OF DURHAM,
HONORARY FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

London:
MACMILLAN AND CO.
AND NEW YORK.
1896

[The Right of Translation is reserved.]
μιμήταί μοι ρίνεσθε καθώς κάρῳ χριστοῖ.

Παῦλος γενόμενος μέγιστος ὑπογραμμός.
Clement.

Οὐχ ὃς Παῦλος διατάσσομαι ὑμῖν· ἐκεῖνος ἀπόστολος, ἐγὼ κατέκριτος· ἐκεῖνος ἐλεύθερος, ἐγώ δὲ μέχρι νῦν δοῦλος.
Ignatius.

Ὅταν ἐγώ ὁτὲ ἄλλος θείος ἐμοὶ δώναι κατακλωθήσεται
τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ μακάρου καὶ ἐνδόξου Παύλου.
Polycarp.

First Edition printed 1865, Second 1866, Third 1869, Fourth 1874, Fifth 1876, Sixth 1880, Seventh 1881, Eighth 1884, Ninth 1887, Tenth 1890, Reprinted 1892, 1896.
TO

THE RIGHT REV. E. W. BENSON, D.D.,

LORD BISHOP OF TRURO,

IN AFFECTIONATE AND GRATEFUL RECOGNITION

OF

A LONG, CLOSE, AND UNBROKEN FRIENDSHIP.

The present work is intended to form part of a complete edition of St Paul's Epistles which, if my plan is ever carried out, will be prefaced by a general introduction and arranged in chronological order. To such an arrangement the half-title of the present work refers, assigning this epistle to the second chronological group and placing it third in this group in accordance with the view maintained in the introduction. Meanwhile, should this design be delayed or abandoned, the present commentary will form a whole in itself.

The general plan and execution of the work will commend or condemn themselves: but a few words may be added on one or two points which require explanation.

It is no longer necessary, I trust, to offer any apology for laying aside the received text. When so much conscientious labour has been expended on textual criticism, it would be unpardonable in an editor to acquiesce in readings which for the most part are recommended neither by intrinsic fitness nor by the sanction of antiquity. But the attempt to construct an independent text in preference to adopting the recension of some well-known editor needs more justification. If I had pursued the latter course, I should certainly have selected either Bentley or Lachmann. These two critics were thorough masters of their craft, bringing to their task extensive knowledge and keen insight. But Bentley's text\(^1\) was constructed

\(^1\) His text of this epistle is given in Bentleii Critica Sacra, p. 94 sq., edited by the Rev. A. A. Ellis.
out of very imperfect materials, and Lachmann only professed to give results which were approximate and tentative. Of the services of Tischendorf in collecting and publishing materials it is impossible to speak too highly, but his actual text is the least important and least satisfactory part of his work.
Dr Tregelles, to whom we owe the best recension of the Gospels, has not yet reached the Epistles of St Paul¹. But apart from the difficulty of choosing a fit guide, there is always some awkwardness in writing notes to another’s text, and the sacrifice of independent judgment is in itself an evil; nor will it be considered unseemly presumption in a far inferior workman, if with better tools he hopes in some respects to improve upon his model. Moreover I was encouraged by the promise of assistance from my friends the Rev. B. F. Westcott and the Rev. F. J. A. Hort, who are engaged in a joint recension of the Greek Testament and have revised the text of this epistle for my use. Though I have ventured to differ from them in some passages and hold myself finally responsible in all, I am greatly indebted to them for their aid.

The authorities for the various readings are not given except in a few passages, where the variations are important enough to form the subject of a detached note. They may be obtained from Tischendorf or any of the well-known critical editions.
Here and there, where the text may be considered fairly doubtful,
I have either offered an alternative reading below or enclosed a word possibly interpolated in brackets; but these are for the most part unimportant and do not materially affect the sense.

In the explanatory notes such interpretations only are discussed as seemed at all events possibly right, or are generically received, or possess some historical interest. By confining myself to these, I wished to secure more space for matters of greater importance. For the same reason, in cases of disputed interpretations the authorities ranged on either side are not given, except where, as in the case of the fathers, some interest

¹ The part containing the Epistle to the Galatians has since appeared (1869).

attaches to individual opinions. Nor again have I generally quoted the authorities for the views adopted or for the illustrations and references incorporated in my notes, when these are to be found in previous commentaries or in any common book of reference. I have sometimes however departed from this rule for a special reason, as for instance where it was best to give the exact words of a previous writer.

As the plan of this work thus excludes special acknowledgments in the notes, I am anxious to state generally my obligations to others.

What I owe to the fathers of the fourth and fifth centuries will appear very plainly in the notes and in the appendix on the patristic commentators. After these, my obligations are greatest to English and German writers of the last few years. The period from the fifth century to the Reformation was an entire blank as regards any progress made in the interpretation of this epistle. And from that time to the present century, though single commentators of great merit have appeared at intervals, Calvin for instance in the sixteenth century, Grotius in the seventeenth, and Bengel in the eighteenth, there has been no such marked development of interpretational criticism as we have seen in our own time. The value of Luther's work stands apart from and in some respects higher than its merits as a commentary.

To more recent critics therefore I am chiefly indebted. Among my own countrymen I wish to acknowledge my obligations chiefly to Professor Jowett who has made the habits of thought in the Apostolic age his special study, and to Bishop Ellicott who has subjected the Apostle's language to a minute and careful scrutiny. Besides these I have consulted with advantage the portions relating to this epistle in the general commentaries of Dean Alford and Dr Wordsworth. Among German writers I am indebted especially to the tact and scholarship of Meyer and to the conscientious labours of Wieseler. Ewald is always instructive; but my acknowledgments are due more to the History of this truly great biblical scholar than to his edition of St Paul's Epistles. Roman Catholic theology is well represented in the devout and intelligent commentary of Windischmann: and the Tübingen school has furnished an able and learned expositor in Hilgenfeld. I have found both these commentators useful though in a widely different way. Besides the writers already mentioned I have constantly consulted Winer, Olshausen, De Wette, and Schott; and to all of these, to the first especially, I am indebted.

I need scarcely add that my obligations to these various writers differ widely in kind. Nor will it be necessary to guard against the inference that the extent of these obligations is a measure of my general agreement with the opinions of the writers. He who succeeds signally in one branch of biblical criticism or interpretation will often fail as signally in another. I do not feel called upon to point out what seem to me to be the faults of writers to whom I am most largely indebted, and I have certainly no wish to blunt the edge of my acknowledgments by doing so.

Besides commentaries, great use has been made of the common aids to the study of the language of the Greek Testament. The works to which I am most indebted in matters of grammar will appear from the frequent references in the notes. The third English edition of Winer (Edinburgh, 1861) has been used. I have also availed myself constantly of the well-known collections of illustrative parallels by Wetstein, Schöttgen, Grinfield, and others; of indices to the later classical writers and earlier fathers; of the Concordances to the Septuagint and New Testament; and of the more important Greek Lexicons, especially Hase and Dindorf's edition of Stephanus.

My thanks are due for valuable suggestions and corrections to the Rev. F. J. A. Hort, late Fellow of Trinity College, and to W. A. Wright, Esq., Librarian of Trinity College; and also to other personal friends who have kindly assisted me in correcting the proof-sheets.

1 The references to Winer have since been altered and adapted to Moulton's Translation, Edinburgh, 1870.
Though I have taken pains to be accurate, experience gained in the progress of the work has made me keenly alive to a constant liability to error; and I shall therefore esteem any corrections as a favour. I should wish moreover to adopt the language of a wise theologian, whose tone and temper I would gladly take for my model, and to 'claim a right to retract any opinion which improvement in reasoning and knowledge may at any time show me is groundless' (Hey's Lectures on the Articles).

While it has been my object to make this commentary generally complete, I have paid special attention to everything relating to St Paul's personal history and his intercourse with the Apostles and Church of the Circumcision. It is this feature in the Epistle to the Galatians which has given it an overwhelming interest in recent theological controversy. Though circumstances have for the moment concentrated the attention of Englishmen on the Old Testament Scriptures, the questions which have been raised on this Epistle are intrinsically far more important, because they touch the vital parts of Christianity. If the primitive Gospel was, as some have represented it, merely one of many phases of Judaism, if those cherished beliefs which have been the life and light of many generations were afterthoughts, progressive accretions, having no foundation in the Person and Teaching of Christ, then indeed St Paul's preaching was vain and our faith is vain also. I feel very confident that the historical views of the Tübingen school are too extravagant to obtain any wide or lasting hold over the minds of men. But even in extreme cases mere denunciation may be unjust and is certainly unavailing. Moreover, for our own sakes we should try and discover the element of truth which underlies even the greatest exaggerations of able men, and correct our impressions thereby.

'A number there are,' says Hooker, 'who think they cannot admire, as they ought, the power of the Word of God, if in things divine they should attribute any force to man's reason.' The circumstances which called forth this remark contrast strangely with the main controversies of the present day; but the caution is equally needed. The abnegation of reason is not the evidence of faith but the confession of despair. Reason and reverence are natural allies, though untoward circumstances may sometimes interpose and divorce them.

Any one who has attempted to comment on St Paul's Epistles must feel on laying down his task how far he has fallen short even of his own poor ideal. Luther himself expresses his shame that his 'so barren and simple commentaries should be set forth upon so worthy an Apostle and elect vessel of God.' Yet no man had a higher claim to a hearing on such a subject; for no man was better fitted by the sympathy of like experiences to appreciate the character and teaching of St Paul. One who possesses no such qualifications is entitled to feel and to express still deeper misgivings.

Trinity College,

February 18, 1865.
CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION.

I. The Galatian People ........................................... 1—17
II. The Churches of Galatia .................................... 18—35
III. The Date of the Epistle .................................... 36—56
IV. Genuineness of the Epistle ............................... 57—62
V. Character and Contents of the Epistle ............... 63—68

TEXT AND NOTES.

i. I—i. 24 .................................................................. 71—86
   St Paul's sojourn in Arabia .................................... 87—90
   St Paul's first visit to Jerusalem .......................... 91, 92
   The name and office of an Apostle ....................... 92—101

ii. I—ii. 21 .......................................................... 102—120
   Various readings in ii. 5 ...................................... 121—123
   The later visit of St Paul to Jerusalem ................. 123—128
   Patristic accounts of the collision at Antioch ....... 128—132

iii. I—iii. 29 .......................................................... 133—151
   The interpretation of Deut. xxii. 23 ................. 152—154
   The words denoting 'Faith' ................................. 154—158
   The faith of Abraham ........................................ 158—164
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iv. I—v. I</td>
<td>165—185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St Paul's infirmity in the flesh</td>
<td>186—191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The various readings in iv. 25</td>
<td>192, 193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The meaning of Hagar in iv. 25</td>
<td>193—198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philo's Allegory of Hagar and Sarah</td>
<td>198—200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The various readings in v. 1</td>
<td>200—202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>v. 2—vi. 18</td>
<td>203—226</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patristic Commentaries on this Epistle</td>
<td>227—236</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DISSERTATIONS.

I. Were the Galatians Celts or Teutons? .......................... 239—251
II. The Brethren of the Lord ........................................ 252—291
III. St Paul and the Three .......................................... 292—374

INDEX.......................................................... 375—384
THE GALATIAN PEOPLE.

WHEN St Paul carried the Gospel into Galatia, he was thrown for the first time among an alien people differing widely in character and habits from the surrounding nations. A race whose home was in the far West, they had been torn from their parent rock by some great social convulsion, and after drifting over wide tracts of country, had settled down at length on a strange soil in the very heart of Asia Minor. Without attempting here to establish the Celtic affinities of this boulder people by the fossil remains of its language and institutions, or to trace the path of its migration by the scores imprinted on its passage across the continent of Europe, it will yet be useful, by way of introduction to St Paul's Epistle, to sketch as briefly as possible its previous history and actual condition. There is a certain distinctness of feature in the portrait which the Apostle has left of his Galatian converts. It is clear at once that he is dealing with a type of character strongly contrasted for instance with the vicious refinements of the dissolute and polished Corinthians, perhaps the truest surviving representatives of ancient Greece, or again with the dreamy speculative mysticism which disfigured the half-oriental Churches of Ephesus and Colossæ. We may expect to have light thrown upon the broad features of national character which thus confront us, by the circumstances of the descent and previous history of the race, while at the same time such a sketch will prepare the way for the solution... of some questions of interest, which start up in connexion with this epistle.

The great subdivision of the human family which at the dawn of European history occupied a large portion of the continent west of the Rhine with the outlying islands, and which modern philologers have agreed to call Celtic, was known to the classical writers of antiquity by three several names, Celtæ, Galatæ, and Galli. Of these, Celtæ, which is the most ancient, being found in the earliest Greek historians Hecataeus and Herodotus, was probably introduced into the Greek language by the colonists of Marseilles, who were first brought in contact with this race. The term Galatæ is of late introduction, occurring first in Timæus, a writer of the third century B.C. This latter form was generally adopted by the Greeks when their knowledge was extended by more direct and frequent intercourse with these barbarians, whether in their earlier home in the West or in their later settlement in Asia Minor. Either it was intended as a more exact representation of the same barbarian sound, or, as seems more probable, the two are diverging but closely allied forms of the same word, derived by the Greeks from different branches of the Celtic race with which at different times they came in contact. On the other hand, the Romans generally designated

---

1 On these terms see Diefenbach Celtica II. p. 6 sq., Ukert Geogr. der Griech. u. Röm. Th. II. Abth. 2, p. 183 sq., Zeuss die Deutschen u. die Nachbarstämmle p. 6 sq., Thierry Histoire des Gaulois I. p. 28.
3 Diod. v. 32, quoted in note 5.
4 Timæus Fragm. 37, ed. Müller. Pausanias says (i. 3. 5) ὃσε δὲ πότε αὐτὸς καλεῖται Γαλατάς ἀξευκίςει: Κέλτοι γὰρ κατὰ τὰ σφίς τὸ ᾠχαίον καὶ παρὰ τῶν ἄλλων οὐκομάδεν. See also the passages in Diefenbach Celt. II. p. 8.
5 This seems the most probable inference from the confused notices in ancient writers. The most important passage is Diod. v. 32, τοῦτο γὰρ ὑπὲρ Μασσαλίαν κατοικοῦντας ὡς τῷ μεσογείῳ καὶ τοὺς παρὰ τὰς Ἀλπεῖς ἐπὶ δὲ τὸς ἐπὶ τάδε τῶν Πυρρηλών ὄρων Κέλτοις ὄνομάζοντες τοῖς δὲ ὑπὲρ ταύτης τῆς Κελτικῆς ἐστι τὰ πρὸς ὅστοις νεοτότα μέρη, παρὰ τοῖς ὁκεανοῖς καὶ τοῦ ἕρκυον ὄρος καθισμένοις καὶ πάντας τοὺς ἐξῆς μέχρι τῆς Ξυβίας, Γαλάται προσαγορεύοντες κ.τ.λ. See also Strabo iv. p. 189, and other passages cited in Ukert II. 2, p. 197 sq., Diefenbach Celt. II. p. 10 sq. At all events it seems certain that the Gauls in the neighbourhood of Marseilles called themselves Celtæ.
this people Galli. Whether this word exhibits the same root as Celtæ and Galatæ, omitting however the Celtic suffix\(^1\), or whether some other account of its origin is more probable, it is needless to enquire. The term Galli is sometimes adopted by later Greek writers, but, as a general rule, until some time after the Christian era they prefer Galatæ, whether speaking of the people of Gaul properly so called or of the Asiatic colony\(^2\). The Romans in turn sometimes borrow Galatæ from

\(^1\) See Zeuss Gramm. Celt. p. 758.

\(^2\) Owing to the bearing of this fact, which has not been sufficiently noticed, on such passages as 2 Tim. iv. 10, I have thought it worth while to collect the following particulars. (1) Before the Christian era, and for two centuries afterwards, the form Galatia (Galatea) is almost universally used by Greek writers to the exclusion of Gallia (Galli), when they do not employ Celtice (Celtæ). It occurs on the Monumentum Anocyranum (Boeckh Corp. Inscr. iii. pp. 89, 90) erected by Augustus in the capital of Asiatic Gaul, where to avoid confusion the other form would naturally have been preferred, if it had been in use. It is current in Polybius, Diodorus, Strabo, Josephus, Plutarch, Appian, Pausanias, and Dion Cassius. It appears also in Athen. p. 333 ν, Clem. Alex. Strom. i. p. 359 (Potter), and Orig. c. Cels. p. 336 Β. Even Eeliam (Nat. An. xvii. 19, referring however to an earlier writer) when speaking of the Asiatic people is obliged to distinguish them as Γαλατας των ἑων. On the other hand St Basil (Op. i. p. 28, Garnier) describes the European Gauls as τῶν ἐκείρην Γαλάτας καὶ Κελτῶν. In Boeckh C. I. no. 9764 the Asiatic country is called μικρὰ Γαλατία, 'Little Gaul.' (2) The first instance of Gallia (Galli) which I have found in any Greek author is in Epictetus (or rather Arrian), Dissert. ii. 20. 17, ἐκεῖπρ τῶν Γαλλῶν ἡ μακα καὶ δ ὄνος (probably not before A.D. 100). It occurs indeed in the present text of Dioscorides (i. 92, ἀτὸ Γαλλίας καὶ Τύρρηνιας), perhaps an earlier writer, but the reading is suspicious, since immediately afterwards he has ἀτὸ Γαλατίας τῆς πρὸς ταῖς Αλπεων. Later transcribers were sorely tempted to substitute the form with which they were most familiar, as is done in 2 Tim. iv. 10 in several mss. See below, p. 31, note 1. The substitution is so natural that it is sometimes erroneously made where the eastern country is plainly meant: e.g. Pseudo-Doroth. Chron. Pasch. ii. p. 136, ed. Dind. The form Γαλλία occurs again in the Ep. of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons (Eusob. v. 1) a.d. 177, and in Theophili. ad Autol. ii. 32 τὰς καλουμένας Γαλλίας. It is also common in Herodian. (3) In the 4th and 5th centuries the form 'Gallia' had to a very great extent displaced Galatia. See Agatham. ii. 4, p. 37, τῶν Γαλλῶν ἀν πρότερον Γαλατίας ἔλεγον, and Theod. Mops. op. 2 Tim. iv. 10, τὰς νῦν καλουμένας Γαλλίας· ἀντως γάρ (i.e. Γαλατίαν) αὖτας τάντας ἀκάλους ἀτ ταλαίω. Accordingly Athanasius (Απολ. c. Arian. § i, pp. 97, 98) in the same passage uses Γαλατία of Asiatic Gaul, Γαλλία of the European provinces. At a much earlier date than this Galen says (xv. p. 80, Kuhn), καλοὺς γοὺς αὐτῶν ἐνια μὲν Γαλατάς ἐνια δὲ Γαλλοῖς, συνηθέστερον δὲ τὰ τῶν Κελτῶν δομα, but he must be referring in the first two classes to the usage of the Greek and Roman writers respectively.
Celtic migrations.

The rare and fitful glimpses which we obtain of the Celtic peoples in the early twilight of history reveal the same restless, fickle temperament, so familiar to us in St Paul's epistle. They appear in a ferment of busy turmoil and ceaseless migration. They are already in possession of considerable tracts of country to the south and east of their proper limits. They have overflowed the barrier of the Alps and poured into Northern Italy. They have crossed the Rhine and established themselves here and there in that vague and ill-defined region known to the ancients as the Hercynian forest and on the banks of the Danube. It is possible that some of these were fragments sundered from the original mass of the Celtic people, and dropped on the way as they migrated westward from the common home of the Aryan races in central Asia: but more probable and more in accordance with tradition is the view that their course being obstructed by the ocean, they had retraced their steps and turned towards the East again. At all events,

See similar notices in Strabo iv. p. 195, Appian Bell. Hist. § 1. The form Гαλλία of European Gaul still continued to be used occasionally, when Гαλλία had usurped its place. It is found for instance in Julian Epist. lxxiii, and in Libanius frequently: comp. Cureton Corp. Ign. p. 351. Ammianus (xv. 9) can still say, 'Galatas dictos, ita enim Gallos sermo Graecus appellat.' Even later writers, who use Гαλλία of the Roman provinces of Gaul, nevertheless seem to prefer Гαλλαί when speaking of the western country as a whole, e.g. Ioann. Lydus Ostent. pp. 52, 54 (Wachsmuth), Hierocl. Synecd. app. p. 313 (Parthey).

1 e.g. in Cesar Bell. Gall. i. 1. See on the main subject of the preceding paragraph a good paper by M. D'Arbois de Jubainville, Les Celtes, Les Galates; Les Gaulois, from the Revue Archéologique, Paris 1875.

2 For the migrations of the Celts see the well-known work of Thierry Histoire des Gaulois (4th ed. 1857), or Contzen Wanderungen der Kelten (Leipz. 1861). They are considered more in their philosophical aspect in Diefenbach's Celtica, and in Prichard's Celtic Nations edited by Latham. The article 'Galli' by Baumstark in Pauly's Real-Encyclopädie is a careful abstract of all that as history emerges into broad daylight, the tide of Celtic migration is seen rolling ever eastward. In the beginning of the fourth century before Christ a lateral wave sweeps over the Italian peninsula, deluging Rome herself and obliterating the landmarks of her earlier history. Three or four generations later another wave of the advancing tide, again diverted southward, pours into Macedonia and Thessaly, for a time carrying everything before it. The fatal repulse from Delphi, invested by Greek patriotism with a halo of legendary glory, terminated the Celtic invasion of Greece.

The Gaulish settlement in Asia Minor is directly connected with this invasion. A considerable force had detached themselves from the main body, refusing to take part in the expedition. Afterwards reinforced by a remnant of the repulsed army they advanced under the command of the chiefs Leonnorius and Lutarius, and forcing their way through Thrace arrived at the coast of the Hellespont. They did not long remain here, but gladly availing themselves of the first means of transport that came to hand, crossed over to the opposite shores, whose fertility held out a rich promise of booty. Thence they overran the greater part of Asia Minor. They laid the whole continent west of Taurus under tribute, and even the relates to the subject. See also Le Bas Asie Mineure (Paris, 1863).

1 The chief authorities for the history of the Asiatic Gauls are Polybius v. 77, 78, 111, xxi, 16—24, Livy xxxvii, 12 sq., Strabo xii, p. 566 sq., Memnon (Geogr. Min. ed. Müller, ii. p. 535 sq.), Justin xxv, 2 sq., Arrian Syr. 42, Pausanias i. 4, §. See other references in Dieffenbach Celt. ii. p. 250. It formed the main subject of several works no longer extant, the most important of which was the Γαλατίων of Eratosthenes in forty books. The monograph of Wernsdorff, De Republica Galatarum (Nuremb. 1742), to which all later writers are largely indebted, is a storehouse of facts relating to early Galatian history. See also Robiou Histoire des Gaulois d’Orient (1866). The existing monuments of Galatia are described by Texier, Asie Mineure (1839—1849), i. p. 163 sq. An article in the Revue des Deux Mondes (1841), iv. p. 574, by the same writer, contains an account of the actual condition of this country with a summary of its history ancient and modern. See also his smaller book, Asie Mineure (1862), p. 453 sq. More recent is the important work Exploration Archéologique de la Galatie et de la Bithynie etc. by Perrot and Guillaume. The account of the Monumentum Ancyranum in this work is very complete and illustrated by numerous plates. The ancient history of Galatia is also given at length.
Syrian kings, it is said, were forced to submit to these humiliating terms. Alternately, the scourge and the allies of each Asiatic prince in succession, as passion or interest dictated, they for a time indulged their predatory instincts unchecked. At length vengeance overtook them. A series of disasters, culminating in a total defeat inflicted by the Pergamene prince Attalus the First, effectually curbed their power and insolence.

By these successive checks they were compressed within comparatively narrow limits in the interior of Asia Minor. The country to which they were thus confined, the Galatia of history, is a broad strip of land over two hundred miles in length, stretching from north-east to south-west. It was parcelled out among the three tribes, of which the invading Gauls were composed, in the following way. The Trocmi occupied the easternmost portion, bordering on Cappadocia and Pontus, with Tavium or Tavia as their chief town. The Tolistobogii, who were situated to the west on the frontier of Bithynia and Phrygia Epictetus, fixed upon the ancient Pessinus for their capital. The Tectosages settled in the centre between the other two tribes, adopting Ancyra as their seat of government, regarded also as the metropolis of the whole of Galatia.

But though their power was greatly crippled by these disasters, the Gauls still continued to play an important part in the feuds of the Asiatic princes. It was while engaged in these mercenary services that they first came into collision with the terrible might of Rome. A body of Galatian troops fighting on the side of Antiochus at the battle of Magnesia attracted the notice of the Romans, and from that moment their doom was sealed. A single campaign of the Consul Manlius sufficed for the entire subjugation of Galatia.

---

1 Livy xxxviii. 16.
2 The chronology is somewhat uncertain. See Niebuhr K. S. 235. The date given is an approximation.
3 So Strabo xii. p. 567, Pliny H. N. v. 42, in accordance with ancient authorities generally and confirmed by the inscriptions, Boeckh iii. nos. 4010, 4011, 4085. Memnon is therefore in error (c. 19), when he assigns the chief towns differently. The names of the three tribes are variously written (see Contzen, p. 221), but the orthography adopted in the text is the best supported.
THE GALATIAN PEOPLE.

From that time forward they lived as peaceably as their restless spirit allowed them under Roman patronage. No humiliating conditions however were imposed upon them. They were permitted to retain their independence, and continued to be governed by their own princes. The conquerors even granted accessions of territory from time to time to those Galatian sovereigns who had been faithful to their allegiance. It was not the policy of the Romans to crush a race which had acted and might still act as a powerful check on its neighbours, thus preserving the balance of power or rather of weakness among the peoples of Asia Minor. At length, after more than a century and a half of native rule, on the death of Amyntas one of their princes, Galatia was formed by Augustus into a Roman province.

The limits of the province are not unimportant in their bearing on some questions relating to the early history of the Gospel. It corresponded roughly to the kingdom of Amyntas, though some districts of the latter were assigned to a different government. Thus Galatia, as a Roman province, would include, besides the country properly so called, Lycaonia, Isauria, the south-eastern district of Phrygia, and a portion of Pisidia.

Lycaonia is especially mentioned as belonging to it, and there is evidence that the cities of Derbe and Lystra in particular were included within its boundaries. When the province was formed, the three chief towns of Galatia proper, Ancyra, Pessinus, and Tavium, took the name of Sebaste or Augusta, being distinguished from each other by the surnames of the respective tribes to which they belonged.

---

2 The Lystreni are included by Pliny among the Galatian peoples, H. N. v.

Thus when the writers of the Roman period, St Paul and St Luke for instance, speak of Galatia, the question arises whether they refer to the comparatively limited area of Galatia proper, or to the more extensive Roman province. The former is the popular usage of the term, while the latter has a more formal and official character.

Attention has hitherto been directed solely to the barbarian settlers in this region. These however did not form by any means the whole population of the district. The Galatians, whom Manlius subdued by the arms of Rome, and St Paul by the sword of the Spirit, were a very mixed race. The substratum of society consisted of the original inhabitants of the invaded country, chiefly Phrygians, of whose language not much is known, but whose strongly marked religious system has a prominent place in ancient history. The upper layer was composed of the Gaulish conquerors: while scattered irregularly through the social mass were Greek settlers, many of whom doubtless had followed the successors of Alexander thither and were already in the country when the Gauls took possession of it. To the country thus peopled the Romans, ignoring the old Phrygian population, gave the name of Gallogræcia. At the time when Manlius invaded it, the victorious Gauls had not amalgamated with their Phrygian subjects; and the Roman consul on opening his campaign was met by a troop of the Phrygian priests of Cybele, who clad in the robes of their order and chanting a wild strain of prophecy declared to him that the goddess approved of the war, and would make him

---

42. That Derbe also belonged to Galatia may be inferred from Strabo xii. p. 569. See Böttger Beiträge, Suppl. P. 26.

1 Σεβαστή Τεκτονάγων, Ζ. Τολυτο-βωγίων, Ζ. Τρόκμων. See Becker Röm.

Alterth. iii. 1. p. 156.

2 It might be inferred from the inscription, Boeckh iii. p. 82, Τουλιον Σεονήρου τοῦ πρῶτου τῶν Ἑλλήνων, that the Greeks in Galatia were recognised as a distinct class even under the Romans.
THE GALATIAN PEOPLE.

master of the country. The great work of the Roman conquest was the fusion of the dominant with the conquered race—the result chiefly, it would appear, of that natural process by which all minor distinctions are levelled in the presence of a superior power. From this time forward the amalgamation began, and it was not long before the Gauls adopted even the religion of their Phrygian subjects.

The Galatia of Manlius then was peopled by a mixed race of Phrygians, Gauls, and Greeks. But before St Paul visited the country two new elements had been added to this already heterogeneous population. The establishment of the province must have drawn thither a considerable number of Romans, not very widely spread in all probability, but gathered about the centres of government, either holding official positions themselves, or connected more or less directly with those who did. From the prominence of the ruling race in the Galatian monuments we might even infer that the whole nation had been romanized. Such an impression however would certainly be incorrect. I cannot find in St Paul's epistle any distinct trace of the influence, or even of the presence, of the masters of the world, though the flaunting inscriptions of the Sebasteum still proclaim the devotion of the Galatian people to the worship of Augustus and Rome.

More important is it to remark on the large influx of Jews which must have invaded Galatia in the interval. Antiochus

1 Polyb. xxii. 20, Livy xxxviii. 18.
2 A Brogitarus is mentioned as priest of the mother of the gods at Pessinus; Cicero de Arusp. Resp. 28, pro Sext. 26. A Dyteutus son of Adiatorix held the same office in the temple of the goddess worshipped at Comana, Strabo xii. p. 558. Other instances are given in Thierry i. p. 411, Parrot Expl. Arch. p. 185.
3 Boeckh Corp. Inscrip. iii. pp. 73—115.
4 The direct connexion of the Galatians with Jewish history is very slight.

In 2 Macc. viii. 20 there is an obscure allusion to an engagement with them in Babylonia. In 1 Macc. viii. 2 it is said that Judas Maccabæus ‘heard of the wars of the Romans and the brave deeds which they did among the Galatians (or Gauls) and how they subdued them and laid them under tribute’: but whether we suppose the enumeration of the Roman triumphs to proceed in geographical or chronological order, the reference is probably to the Western Gauls, either chiefly or solely, since the successes of the Romans in Spain are Their commercial instincts, the Great had settled two thousand Jewish families in Lydia and Phrygia; and even if we suppose that these settlements did not extend to Galatia properly so called, the Jewish colonists must in course of time have overflowed into a neighbouring country which possessed so many attractions for them. Those commercial instincts, which achieved a wide renown in the neighbouring Phoenician race, and which in the Jews themselves made rapid progress during the palmy days of their national life under Solomon, had begun to develop afresh. The innate energy of the race sought this new outlet, now that their national hopes were crushed and their political existence was well-nigh extinct. The country of Galatia afforded great facilities for commercial enterprise. With fertile plains rich in agricultural produce, with extensive pastures for flocks, with a temperate climate and copious rivers, it abounded in all those resources out of which a commerce is created. It was moreover conveniently situated for mercantile transactions, being traversed by a great high road between the East and the shores of the Ægean, along which caravans were constantly passing, and among its towns it numbered not a few which are mentioned as great centres of commerce. We read especially of a considerable traffic in cloth mentioned in the following verse, their victories over Philip and Perseus in the 5th, and the defeat of Antiochus not till the 6th verse. The same uncertainty hangs over the incident in Joseph. Ant. xv. 7. 3, Bell. Jud. i. 20. 3, where we read that Augustus gave to Herod as his body-guard 400 Galatians (or Gauls) who had belonged to Cleopatra.

1 Joseph. Ant. xii. 3. 4.

9 An anonymous geographer (Geogr. Min. Müller, ii. p. 521) describes Galatia as 'provincia optima, aibi sufficiens.' Other ancient writers also speak of the natural advantages of this country; see Wernsdorff p. 199 sq. A modern traveller writes as follows: 'Malgré tant de ravages et de guerres désastreuses, la Galatie, par la fertilité de son sol et la richesse de ses produits agricoles, est encore une des provinces les plus heureuses de l'Asie Mineure.' And again: 'Malgré tous ses malheurs, la ville moderne d'Angora est une des plus peuplées de l'Asie Mineure. Elle doit la prospérité relative dont elle n'a cessé de jouir à son heureuse situation, à un climat admirablement sain, à un sol fertile, et surtout à ses innombrables troupeaux de chèvres, etc.' Texier, Revue des Deux Mondes, l. o. pp. 597, 602.

3 Strato, xii. p. 567, especially mentions Tavium and Pessinus, describing the latter as ἡμιωρέων τῶν ταύτη μέγα- στον. Livy, xxxviii. 18, calls Gordium 'celebre et frequens emporium.'
good; but whether these were of home or foreign manufacture we are not expressly told. With these attractions it is not difficult to explain the vast increase of the Jewish population in Galatia, and it is a significant fact that in the generation before St Paul Augustus directed a decree granting especial privileges to the Jews to be inscribed in his temple at Ancyra, the Galatian metropolis, doubtless because this was a principal seat of the dispersion in these parts of Asia Minor. Other testimony to the same effect is afforded by the inscriptions found in Galatia, which present here and there Jewish names and symbols amidst a strange confusion of Phrygian and Celtic, Roman and Greek. At the time of St Paul they probably boasted a large number of proselytes and may even have infused a beneficial leaven into the religion of the mass of the heathen population. Some accidental points of resemblance in the Mosaic ritual may perhaps have secured for the inspired teaching of the Old Testament a welcome which would have been denied to its lofty theology and pure code of morals.

1 Müller's Geogr. Min. 12. 13. negotiatur plurimam vestem. It is interesting to find that at the present day a very large trade is carried on at Angora, the ancient Ancyra, in the fabric manufactured from the fine hair of the peculiar breed of goats reared in the neighbourhood. See Hamilton Asia Minor, 1. p. 418, Texier, 1. c. p. 602 sq., and especially Ritter's Erdkunde xvii. p. 505. It is to this probably that the ancient geographer refers.

2 Joseph. Antiq. xvi. 6. 2. The influence of Judaism on St Paul's converts here does not derive the same illustration from the statistics of the existing population as it does in some other places, Thessalonica for instance, where the Jews are said to form at least one half of the inhabitants. In 1836 Hamilton was informed that out of about 11,000 houses in Ancyra only 150 were Jewish, the majority of the population being Turks or Catholic Armenians, Asia Minor, 1. p. 419.

3 See Boeckh Corp. Inscr. Vol. iii. P. xviii. In no. 4129 the name Ἕσαῦ occurs with a symbol which Boeckh conjectures to be the seven-branched candlestick. We have also ἅγνυνον 4045, Σάντανος 4074, Ματαρᾶς 4088, Ὀδεὺς 4092. Ἀκλας or Ἀκλας a name commonly borne by Jews in these parts occurs several times. It is possible however that some of these may be Christian; nor is it always easy to pronounce on the Hebrew origin of a name in the confusion of nations which these inscriptions exhibit.

4 Pausanias (vii. 17. 5) mentions that the people of Pessinus abstained from swine's flesh (ἵνων ὀβεξ ἄπτωμεν), a statement which has given rise to much discussion. See Wernsdorff p. 324 sq. Some have attributed this abstinence to Jewish influence, but the aversion to swine's flesh was common to several Eastern peoples. Instances are given.
Still with all this foreign admixture, it was the Celtic blood which gave its distinctive colour to the Galatian character and separated them by so broad a line even from their near neighbours. To this cause must be attributed that marked contrast in religious temperament which distinguished St Paul's disciples in Galatia from the Christian converts of Colossæ, though educated in the same Phrygian worship and subjected to the same Jewish influences. The tough vitality of the Celtic character maintained itself in Asia comparatively unimpaired among Phrygians and Greeks, as it has done in our own islands among Saxons and Danes and Normans, retaining its individuality of type after the lapse of ages and under conditions the most adverse.

A very striking instance of the permanence of Celtic institutions is the retention of their language by these Gauls of Asia Minor. More than six centuries after their original settlement in this distant land, a language might be heard on the banks of the Sangarius and the Halys, which though slightly corrupted was the same in all essential respects with that spoken in the district watered by the Moselle and the Rhine. St Jerome, who had himself visited both the Gaul of the West and the Gaul of Asia Minor, illustrates the relation of the two forms of speech by the connexion existing between the language of the Phœnicians and their African colonies, or between the different dialects of Latin.

---

1 Modern travellers have seen, or imagined they saw, in the physical features of the modern inhabitants of Galatia traces of their Celtic origin. So Texier, l. c. p. 598, 'Sans chercher à se faire illusion, on reconnaît quelquefois, surtout parmi les pasteurs, des types qui se rapportent merveilleusement à certaines races de nos provinces de France. On voit plus de cheveux blonds en Galatie qu'en aucun autre royaume de l'Asie Mineure; les têtes carrées et les yeux bleus rappellent le caractère des populations de l'ouest de la France.'

2 Hieron. in Epist. ad Gal. lib. ii. pref. 'Galatas excepto sermone Graeco, quo omnis Oriens loquitur, propriam linguam eandem pene habere quam Treveros, nee referre si aliquia exinde corruperint, quum et Afri Phœnicium linguam nonnulla ex parte mutaverint, et ipsa Latinitas et regionibus quotidie mutetur et tempore' (viii. P. l. p. 439, ed. Vallarsi). By 'excepto sermone Graeco' he means that they spoke Greek in common with the rest of the
THE GALATIAN PEOPLE.

With the knowledge of this remarkable fact, it will not be thought idle to look for traces of the Celtic character in the Galatians of St Paul’s Epistle, for in general the character of a nation even outlives its language. No doubt it had undergone many changes. They were no longer that fierce hardy race with which Rome and Greece successively had grappled in a struggle of life and death. After centuries of intercourse with Greeks and Phrygians, with the latter especially who were reputed among the most effeminate and worthless of Asiatics, the ancient valour of the Gauls must have been largely diluted. Like the Celts of Western Europe, they had gradually deteriorated under the enervating influence of a premature or forced civilisation. Nevertheless beneath the surface the Celtic character remains still the same, whether manifested in the rude and fiery barbarians who were crushed by the arms of Cesar, or the impetuous and fickle converts who call down the indignant rebuke of the Apostle of the Gentiles.

St Paul’s language indeed will suggest many coincidences, which perhaps we may be tempted to press unduly. His denunciation of ‘drunkenness and revellings’, falling in with the taunts of ancient writers, will appear to point to a darling sin of the Celtic people. His condemnation of the niggardly East, as well as Celtic. Thierry (i. p. 415) strangely mistakes the meaning, ‘les Galates étaient les seuls, entre tous les peuples asiatiques, qui ne se servissent point de la langue grecque.’ It is probable that they understood St Paul’s epistle as well as if it had been written in their original tongue. None of the Galatian inscriptions are in the Celtic language. The people of Ancyra were perhaps ‘trilingues’ like the Celts of Marseilles.

1 Livy, xxxviii. 17, represents Manlius as saying ‘Et illis majoribus nostris cum haud dubii Gallis in terra sua genitis res erat. Hi jam degeneres sunt, mixti et Gallograeci vere, quod appellantur,’ This language is probably an anachronism in the mouth of Manlius, but it was doubtless true when Livy wrote and when St Paul preached. On the degeneracy of the Western Gauls, see Caesar Bell. Gall. vi. 24, Tac. Ann. xi. 18, Agric. ii, Germ. 28.

Minor coincidences in St Paul’s epistle.

2 Gal. v. 21.

3 Diod. Sic. v. 26 κατ’ ὑπέρβολήν τῶν εἰδαγόμενων ύπὸ τῶν ἐμφόρων ὁδὸν ἀκρατών ἐμφοροῦνται καὶ διὰ τὴν ἐπίθυμαν λάθρω λύχνων τῷ ποτῷ καὶ μεθυσθέντες εἰς ὑπὸν ἡ μανίωθες διαθέσεις τρέπονται κ.τ.λ.; Epictet. Dissert. ii. 20. 17, referred to in the note p. 3. Compare also the jest, ‘Gallos post haec dilutius esse poturos,’ quoted from Cicero by Ammian. Mare. xv. 12, and the account Ammianus himself broader features of resemblance.

The main features of the Gaulish character are traced with great distinctness by the Roman writers. Quickness of apprehension, promptitude in action, great impressibility, an eager craving after knowledge, this is the brighter aspect of the Celtic character. Inconstant and quarrelsome, treacherous in their dealings, incapable of sustained effort, easily disheartened by failure, such they appear when viewed on their darker side. It is curious to note the same eager inquisitive temper revealing itself under widely different circumstances, at opposite limits both of time and space, in their early barbarism in the West and their worn-out civilisation in the East. The great Roman captain relates... how the Gauls would gather about any merchant or traveller who came in their way, detaining him even against his will and eagerly pressing him for news. A late Greek rhetorician commends the Galatians as more keen and quicker of apprehension than the genuine Greeks, adding that the moment they catch sight of a philosopher, they cling to the skirts of his cloak, as the steel does to the magnet. It is chiefly however on the more forbidding features of their character that contemporary writers dwell. Fickleness is the term used to express their temperament. This instability of character was the great difficulty against which Cæsar had to contend in his dealings with the Gaul. He complains that they all with scarcely an exception are impelled by the desire of change. Nor did they show more constancy in the discharge of their religious, than of their social obligations. The hearty zeal with which they embraced the Apostle’s teaching followed by their rapid apostasy is only an instance out of many of the reckless facility with which they adopted and discarded one religious system after another.

To St Paul, who had had much bitter experience of hollow professions and fickle purposes, this extraordinary levity was yet a matter of unfeigned surprise. ‘I marvel,’ he says, ‘that ye are changing so quickly.’ He looked upon it as some strange fascination. ‘Ye senseless Gauls, who did bewitch you?’ The language in which Roman writers speak of the martial courage of the Gauls, impetuous at the first onset but rapidly melting in the heat of the fray, well describes the short-lived

1 Cæsar Bell. Gall. iv. 5.
2 Themistius Or. xxiii. p. 299 A (referred to by Wetstein on Gal. i. 6) ὁ δὲ ἄνδρα ἵππος ὁ δὲ οἶκος καὶ γυνὴν καὶ εὐμαθέστερον τῶν ἄνω Ἑλλήνων καὶ τριβῶνοι παραφανέντος ἐκκρεμάνται εὐθέως ἄστερ τῆς λίθου τὰ αἰθήρια.
4 Bell. Gall. iv. 5 ‘Infirmitatem Galorum veritus quod sunt in consiliis capiendis mobiles et novis plurumque rebus student, nihil his committendum existimavit.’ Comp. Motley United Netherlands iii. p. 326, ‘As has already been depicted in these pages, the Celtic element had been more apt to receive than consistent to retain the generous impression which had once been stamped on all the Netherlands.’
6 Ib. iii. 10 ‘Quum intelligeret omnes fere Gallos novis rebus studere.’
7 Gal. i. 6.
8 Gal. iii. 1 ὁ ἄνδρον Παλαιστηρίου, τῆς ὁμοῦ ἐβάσκανεν;
9 Livy x. 28 ‘Gallorum quidem etiam prowess of these converts in the warfare of the Christian Church.

2. Equally important, in its relation to St Paul’s epistle, is the type of religious worship which seems to have pervaded the Celtic nations. The Gauls are described as a superstitious people given over to ritual observances. Nor is it perhaps a mere accident that the only Asiatic Gaul of whom history affords more than a passing glimpse, Deiotarus the client of Cicero, in his extravagant devotion to augury fully bears out the character ascribed to the parent race.

The coloured in which contemporary writers have painted the religion of the primitive Gauls are dark and terrible enough. A gross superstition, appealing to the senses and the passions rather than to the heart and mind, enforcing rites of unexampled cruelty and demanding a slavish obedience to priestly authority, such is the picture with which we are familiar. It is unnecessary here to enquire how far the religious philosophy of the Druids involved a more spiritual creed. The Druids were an exclusive caste with an esoteric doctrine, and it is with the popular worship that we are concerned. The point to be observed is that an outward material passionate religion had grown up among the Gauls, as their own creation, answering to some peculiar features of their character. Settled among the Phrygians they with their wonted facility adopted the religion of the subject people. The worship of Cybele with its wild ceremonial and hideous mutilations would naturally be attractive to the Gaulish mind. Its external rites were similar enough in their general character to those of the primitive Celtic religion to commend it to a people who had found satis-corpora intolerantissima laboris atque aetatis fuisse; primumque eorum praelia plus quam virorum, postrema minus quam feminarum esse. Comp. Florus ii. 4. To the same effect Caesar B. G. iii. 19, and Polyb. ii. 35.

1 Caesar’s words are, ‘Natio est omnis Gallorum admodum dedita religio-nibus,’ Bell. Gall. vi. 16; comp. Diod. Sic. v. 27.

2 Cicero de Div. i. 15, ii. 36, 37.

3 The nobler aspect of the Druidical system has been exaggerated. See the remarks of M. de Pressensé, Trois Premiers Siècles, 2me série, t. p. 52.
faction in the latter. And though we may suppose that the mystic element in the Phrygian worship, which appealed so powerfully to the Graeco-Asiatic, awoke no corresponding echo in the Gaul, still there was enough in the outward ritual with its passionate orgies to allure them. Then the Gospel was offered to them and the energy of the Apostle’s preaching took and infecting their hearts by storm. But the old leaven still remained. The pure and spiritual teaching of Christianity soon ceased to satisfy them. Their religious temperament, fostered by long habit, prompted them to seek a system more external and ritualistic. ‘Having begun in the Spirit, they would be made perfect in the flesh.’ Such is the language of the Apostle rebuking this unnatural violation of the law of progress. At a later period in the history of the Church we find the Galatians still hankering after new forms of Christianity in the same spirit of ceaseless innovation, still looking for some ‘other gospel’ which might better satisfy their cravings after a more passionate worship.

1 Compare the language of a modern historian describing the western race in a much later age; Motley Dutch Republic iii. p. 26 ‘The stronger infusion of the Celtic element, which from the earliest ages had always been so keenly alive to the more sensuous and splendid manifestations of the devotional principle.’

2 Gal. iii. 3.
II.

THE CHURCHES OF GALATIA.

IN what sense do the sacred writers use the word Galatia? Has it an ethnographical or a political meaning? In other words, does it signify the comparatively small district occupied by the Gauls, Galatia properly so called, or the much larger territory included in the Roman province of the name? This question must be answered before attempting to give an account of the Galatian Churches.

Important consequences flow from the assumption that the term covers the wider area. In that case it will comprise not only the towns of Derbe and Lystra, but also, it would seem, Iconium and the Pisidian Antioch; and we shall then have in the narrative of St Luke a full and detailed account of the founding of the Galatian Churches. Moreover the favourite disciple and most constant companion of the Apostle, Timotheus, was on this showing a Galatian; and through him St Paul's communications with these Churches would be more or less close to the end of his life. It must be confessed too, that this view has much to recommend it at first sight. The Apostle's account of his hearty and enthusiastic welcome by the Galatians, as an angel of God, will have its counterpart in the impulsive warmth of the barbarians at Lystra, who would have sacrificed to him, imagining that 'the Gods had come down in the likeness of men.' His references to 'the temptations in the flesh,' and 'the marks of the Lord Jesus' branded on his body, are then illustrated, or thought to be illustrated, by the persecutions and sufferings that 'came unto him at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra.' The progress of Judaizing tendencies among the Galatians is then accounted for by the presence of a large Jewish element such as the history describes in these Churches of Lycaonia and Pisidia.

1 The warmest advocates of this view are Böttger Beiträge i. p. 28 sq., iii. p. 1 sq., and Renan Saint Paul p. 51, etc. See more on this subject in Colossians p. 24 sq.

4 Acts xvi. 1.

Without stopping however to sift these supposed coincidences, or insisting on the chronological and historical difficulties which this view creates, there are many reasons which make it probable that the Galatia of St Paul and St Luke is not the Roman province of that name, but the land of the Gauls. By writers speaking familiarly of the scenes in which they had themselves taken part, the term would naturally be used in its popular rather than in its formal and official sense. It would scarcely be more strange to speak of Pesth and Pressburg, of Venice and Verona, as 'the Austrian cities,' than to entitle the Christian brotherhoods of Derbe and Lystra, Iconium and Antioch, 'the Churches of Galatia.' Again, analogy is strongly in favour of the popular use of the term. Mysia, Phrygia, Pisidia, are all 'geographical expressions' destitute of any political significance; and as they occur in the same parts of the narrative with Galatia, it seems fair to infer that the latter is similarly used. The direct transition for instance, which we find from Galatia to Phrygia, is only explicable if the two are kindred terms, both alike being used in a popular way. Moreover, St Luke distinctly calls Lystra and Derbe 'cities of

1 Acts xiv. 11.
2 Gal. iv. 14, vi. 17.
3 2 Tim. iii. 11.
4 Acts xiii. 14, 43, 45, xiv. 1, xvi. 3.
5 On the other hand in 1 Peter i. 1, where the enumeration seems to proceed by provinces, Galatia is probably used in its political sense. This is not unnatural in one who was writing from a distance, and perhaps had never visited the district.
6 The case of 'Asia,' however is an exception. The foundation of this province dating very far back, its official name had to a great extent superseded the local designations of the districts which it comprised. Hence Asia in the New Testament is always Proconsular Asia.
7 Acts xiv. 24, xvi. 6—8, xviii. 23.
Lycaonia', while he no less distinctly assigns Antioch to Pisidia; a convincing proof that in the language of the day they were not regarded as Galatian towns. Lastly, the expression used in the Acts of St Paul's visit to these parts, 'the Phrygian and Galatian country,' shows that the district intended was not Lycaonia and Pisidia, but some region which might be said to belong either to Phrygia or Galatia, or the parts of each contiguous to the other.

It is most probable therefore that we should search for the Churches of Galatia within narrower limits. In the absence of all direct testimony, we may conjecture that it was at Ancyra, now the capital of the Roman province as formerly of the Gaulish settlement, 'the most illustrious metropolis,' as it is styled in formal documents; at Pessinus, under the shadow of Mount Dindymus, the cradle of the worship of the great goddess, and one of the principal commercial towns of the district; at Tavium, at once a strong fortress and a great emporium, situated at the point of convergence of several important roads; perhaps also at Juliopolis, the ancient Gordium, formerly the capital of Phrygia, almost equidistant from the three seas, and from its central position a busy mart; at these, or some of these places, that St Paul founded the earliest 'Churches of Galatia.' The ecclesiastical geography of Galatia two or three centuries later is no safe guide in settling questions relating to the apostolic age, but it is worth while to

1 Acts xiv. 6.
4 Boeckh Corp. Inscr. no. 4015 ἀμυρότατας μητρόπολεως Αγκύλας. It is frequently styled the 'metropolis' in inscriptions and on coins.
5 Strabo xii. p. 567.
6 Strabo l. c. See Hamilton's Asia Minor p. 395. Perhaps however Tavium lay too much to the eastward of St Paul's route, which would take him more directly to the western parts of Galatia.
THE CHURCHES OF GALATIA.

observe that these are among the earliest episcopal sees on record in this country.

In Galatia the Gospel would find itself in conflict with two distinct types of worship, which then divided the allegiance of civilised heathendom. At Pessinus the service of Cybele, the most widely revered of all pagan deities, represented, perhaps more adequately than any other service, the genuine spirit of the old popular religion. At Ancyra the pile dedicated to the divinities of Augustus and Rome was one of the earliest and most striking embodiments of the new political worship which imperial statecraft had devised to secure the respect of its subject peoples. We should gladly have learnt how the great Apostle advocated the cause of the truth against either form of error. Our curiosity however is here disappointed. It is strange that while we have more or less acquaintance with all the other important Churches of St Paul's founding, with Corinth and Ephesus, with Philippi and Thessalonica, not a single name of a person or place, scarcely a single incident of any kind, connected with the Apostle's preaching in Galatia, should be preserved in either the history or the epistle. The reticence of the Apostle himself indeed may be partly accounted for by the circumstances of the Galatian Church. The same delicacy, which has concealed from us the name of the Corinthian offender, may have led him to avoid all special allusions in addressing a community to which he wrote in a strain of the severest censure. Yet even the slight knowledge we do possess of the early Galatian Church is gathered from the epistle, with scarcely any aid from the history. Can it be that the historian gladly drew a veil over the infancy of a Church which swerved so soon and so widely from the purity of the Gospel?

St Luke mentions two visits to Galatia, but beyond the bare fact he adds nothing to our knowledge. The first occasion was during the Apostle's second missionary journey, probably in the year 51 or 52. The second visit took place a few years later, perhaps in the year 54, in the course of his third missionary journey, and immediately before his long residence in Ephesus. The epistle contains allusions, as will be seen, to both visits; and combining these two sources of information, we arrive at the following scanty facts.

1 Le Quien Oriens Christ. 1. p. 456 sq. 2 Acts xvi. 6.

First visit, A.D. 51 or 52.

1. After the Apostolic congress St Paul starting from Antioch with Silas revisited the churches he had founded in Syria, Cilicia, and Lycaonia. At Lystra they fell in with Timotheus, who also accompanied them on their journey. Hitherto the Apostle had been travelling over old ground. He now entered upon a new mission-field, 'the region of Phrygia and Galatia.' The form of the Greek expression implies that Phrygia and Galatia here are not to be regarded as separate districts. The country which was now evangelized might be called indifferently Phrygia or Galatia. It was in fact the land originally inhabited by Phrygians, but subsequently occupied by Gauls: or so far as he travelled beyond the limits of the Gallic settlement, it was still in the neighbouring parts of Phrygia that he preached, which might fairly be included under one general expression.

St Paul does not appear to have had any intention of preaching the Gospel here. He was perhaps anxious at once to bear his message to the more important and promising district of Proconsular Asia. But he was detained by a return

1 Acts xviii. 23.
2 Acts xvi. 40—xvi. 5.
3 Acts xvi. 6 διήλθον δὲ τὴν Φρυγίαν καὶ [τὴν] Γαλατίαν χῶραν. The second τὴν of the received reading ought to be omitted with the best MSS, in which case Φρυγίαν becomes an adjective. This variety of reading has escaped the notice of commentators, though it solves more than one difficulty. On the occasion of the second visit the words are (xviii. 23), διερχόμενος καθεξῆς τὴν Γαλατίαν χῶραν καὶ Φρυγίαν. The general direction of St Paul's route on both occasions was rather westward than eastward, and this is expressed in the second passage by naming Galatia before Phrygia, but it is quite consistent with the expression in the first, where the two districts are not separated. If we retain the received reading, we must suppose that St Paul went from west to east on the first occasion, and from east to west on the second.

4 Colossians would thus lie beyond the scene of the Apostle's labours, and the passage correctly read does not present even a seeming contradiction to Col. i. 4, 6, 7, ii. 1. See on the whole subject Colossians p. 23 sq.

5 I see no reason for departing from the strictly grammatical interpretation of Gal. iv. 13, δὲ ἀδόνεια τῆς σαρκίς.

6 Acts xvi. 6.
of his old malady, 'the thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan sent to buffet him', some sharp and violent attack, it would appear, which humiliated him and prostrated his physical strength. To this the Galatians owed their knowledge of Christ. Though a homeless stricken wanderer might seem but a feeble advocate of a cause so momentous, yet it was the divine order that in the preaching of the Gospel strength should be made perfect in weakness. The zeal of the preacher and the enthusiasm of the hearers triumphed over all impediments. 'They did not despise nor loathe the temptation in his flesh. They received him as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. They would have plucked out their very eyes, if they could, and have given them to him.' Such was the impression left on his heart by their first affectionate welcome, painfully embittered by contrast with their later apostasy.

It can scarcely have been any predisposing religious sympathy which attracted them so powerfully, though so transiently, to the Gospel. They may indeed have held the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, which is said to have formed part of the Druidical teaching in European Gaul. It is possible too that there lingered, even in Galatia, the old Celtic conviction, so cruelly expressed in their barbarous sacrifices, that only by man's blood can man be redeemed. But with these doubtful exceptions, the Gospel, as a message of mercy and a spiritual faith, stood in direct contrast to the gross and material religions in which the race had been nurtured, whether the cruel ritualism of their old Celtic creed, or the frightful orgies of their adopted worship of the mother of the gods. Yet though the whole spirit of Christianity was so alien to their habits of thought, we may well imagine how the fervour of the Apostle's preaching may have fired their religious enthusiasm. The very image under which he describes his work brings

1 2 Cor. xii. 7. 2 Gal. iv. 14, 15. 3 They believed also in its transmigration. See Caesar Bell. Gall. vi. 14, Diod. Sic. v. 28. 4 Bell. Gall. vi. 16 'Pro vita hominis nisi hominis vita reddatur, non posse alter decrem immortalum numen placari arbitrantur.'
24 THE CHURCHES OF GALATIA.

vividly before us the energy and force with which he delivered his message. He placarded Christ crucified before their eyes⁴, arresting the gaze of the spiritual loiterer, and riveting it on this proclamation of his Sovereign. If we picture to ourselves the Apostle as he appeared before the Galatians, a friendless outcast, writhing under the tortures of a painful malady, yet instant in season and out of season, by turns denouncing and entreating, appealing to the agonies of a crucified Saviour, perhaps also, as at Lystra, enforcing this appeal by some striking miracle, we shall be at no loss to conceive how the fervid temperament of the Gaul might have been aroused, while yet only the surface of his spiritual consciousness was ruffled. For the time indeed all seemed to be going on well. "Ye were running bravely," says the Apostle⁵, alluding to his favourite image of the foot-race. But the very eagerness with which they had embraced the Gospel was in itself a dangerous symptom. A material so easily moulded soon loses the impression it has taken. The passionate current of their Celtic blood, which flowed in this direction now, might only too easily be diverted into a fresh channel by some new religious impulse. Their reception of the Gospel was not built on a deeply-rooted conviction of its truth, or a genuine appreciation of its spiritual power.

This visit to Galatia, we may suppose, was not very protracted. Having been detained by illness, he would be anxious to continue his journey as soon as he was convalescent. He was pressing forward under a higher guidance towards a new field of missionary labour in the hitherto unexplored continent of Europe.

2. An interval of nearly three years must have elapsed before his second visit. He was now on his third missionary journey; and according to his wont, before entering upon a new field of labour, his first care was to revisit and 'confirm' the churches he had already founded. This brought him to 'the Galatian country and Phrygia.' From the language used in describing this visit we may infer that not a few congregations had been established in Galatia. 'He went through the district in order, confirming all the disciples.'

---

¹ Gal. iii. 1, προημάτῳ. See the note. ² Gal. v. 7.

Of the second visit to Galatia even less is known than of the former. It would seem however that some unhealthy symptoms had already appeared, threatening the purity of the Gospel. At all events certain expressions in the epistle, which are most naturally referred to this visit, imply that cause for uneasiness had even then arisen. He was constrained to address his converts in language of solemn warning. He charged them to hold accursed any one who perverted the Gospel as he had taught it. Writing to them afterwards, he contrasts the hearty welcome of his first visit with his cold reception on this occasion, attributing their estrangement to the freedom with which he denounced their errors. 'Have I become your enemy;' he asks, 'because I told you the truth?'

The epistle was written, as I hope to show, about three or four years after the second visit, but in the meanwhile St Paul doubtless kept up his intercourse with the Galatian Churches by messengers or otherwise. A large portion of the intervening time was spent at Ephesus, whence communication with Galatia would be easily maintained. An incidental allusion in the First Epistle to the Corinthians throws light on this subject. It there appears that St Paul appealed to the Churches of Galatia, as he did also to those of Macedonia and Achaia, to contribute towards the relief of their poorer brethren in Palestine, who were suffering from a severe famine. By communication thus maintained St Paul was made acquainted with the growing corruption of the Galatian Churches from the spread of Judaizing errors.

The avidity with which these errors were caught up implies some previous acquaintance with Jewish history and some habituation to Jewish modes of thought. The same inference

---

1 Acts xviii. 23. 4 Gal. iv. 13—16. See the notes.
2 Gal. v. 21. 5 1 Cor. xvi. 1—6.
3 Gal. i. 9.
may be drawn from the frequent and minute references in the epistle to the Old Testament, assuming no inconsiderable knowledge of the sacred writings on the part of his converts. It has been shown already that there was in Galatia a large population of Jews to whom this influence may be traced.

The Apostle had probably selected as centres of his mission those places especially where he would find a sufficient body of Jewish residents to form the nucleus of a Christian Church.
It was almost as much a matter of missionary convenience, as of religious obligation, to offer the Gospel 'to the Jew first and then to the Gentile.' They were the keepers of the sacred archives, and the natural referees in all that related to the history and traditions of the race. To them therefore he must of necessity appeal. In almost every instance where a detailed account is given in the Apostolic history of the foundation of a Church, we find St Paul introducing himself to his fellow-countrymen first, the time the sabbath-day, the place the synagogue, or, where there was no synagogue, the humbler proseucha. Thus in the very act of planting a Christian Church, the Apostle himself planted the germs of bigotry and disaffectation.

Not however that the Gospel seems to have spread widely among the Jews in Galatia, for St Paul's own language shows that the great mass at least of his converts were Gentiles, and the analogy of other churches points to the same result. But Jewish influences spread far beyond the range of Jewish circles.
The dalliance with this 'foreign superstition,' which excited the indignation of the short-sighted moralists of Rome, was certainly

1 See above, p. 9 sq.
2 Rom. i. 16, ii. 9, 10.
3 Gal. iv. 8 'Then not knowing God, ye did service to them which by nature are no gods.' See also Gal. iii.
29, v. 2, vi. 12, and the notes on i. 14 ἐν τῷ γένει μου, ii. 5 πῶς ἡμᾶς. It has been assumed that St Peter, as the Apostle of the Circumcision, must have written to Jewish Christians, and that therefore, as his epistles are addressed to the Galatians among others, there was a large number of converts from Judaism in the Churches of Galatia.
His own language however shows that he is writing chiefly to Gentiles (1 Pet. ii.
9, 10) and that therefore the διασπορὰ of the opening salutation is the spiritual dispersion. Comp. 1 Pet. ii. 11, 12.
not less rife in the provinces than in the metropolis. Many a man, who had not cast off his heathen religion, and perhaps had no intention of casting it off, was yet directly or indirectly acquainted with the customs and creed of the Jews, and possibly had some knowledge of the writings of the lawgiver and the prophets. Still there were doubtless some Jewish converts in the Galatian Church. These would be a link of communication with the brethren of Palestine, and a conducting medium by which Jewish practices were transmitted to their Gentile fellow-Christians.

For whatever reason, the Judaism of the Galatians was much more decided than we find in any other Gentile Church. The infection was both sudden and virulent. They were checked all at once in the gallant race for the prize. Their gaze was averted by some strange fascination from the proclamation of Christ crucified. Such are the images under which the Apostle describes their apostasy. It was a Judaism of the sharp Pharisaic type, unclouded or unrelieved by any haze of Essene mysticism, such as prevailed a few years later in the neighbouring Colossian Church. The necessity of circumcision was strongly insisted upon. Great stress was laid on the observance of 'days and months and seasons and years.' In short, nothing less than submission to the whole ceremonial law seems to have been contemplated by the innovators. At all events, this was the logical consequence of the adoption of the initiatory rite.

This position could only be maintained by impugning the credit of St Paul. By some means or other his authority must be set aside, and an easy method suggested itself. They represented him as no true Apostle. He had not been one of the Lord's personal followers, he had derived his knowledge of the Gospel at second hand. It was therefore to the mother

1 See the note on vi. 13, where the various readings of περιτετμημένοι and of περιτετμυμένοι have some bearing on this point.
2 Gal. v. 7.
3 Gal. iii. 1.
4 Gal. v. 2, 11, vi. 12, 13.
5 Gal. iv. 10.
6 Gal. iii. 2, iv. 21, v. 4, 18.
7 Gal. v. 3.
Church of Jerusalem that all questions must be referred, to the great Apostles of the Circumcision especially, the 'pillars of the Church,' to James in the forefront as the Lord's brother, to Peter who had received a special commission from his Master, to John the most intimate of His personal friends. This disparaging criticism of his opponents St Paul has in view from first to last in the Epistle to the Galatians. He commences by asserting in the strongest terms his immediate divine commission as an Apostle 'not of men neither by man,' and this assertion he emphatically reiterates. He gives in the body of the letter a minute historical account of his intercourse with the Apostles of the Circumcision, showing his entire independence of them. He closes, as he had begun, with a defence of his office and commission. 'Henceforth,' he exclaims indignantly, 'let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.' He felt that there was a heartless mockery in the denial of his Apostleship, when he had been marked as the servant of Christ for ever by the cruel brand of persecution.

But the attacks of his enemies did not stop here. They charged him with inconsistency in his own conduct. He too, it was represented, had been known to preach that circumcision which he so strenuously opposed. It was convenient to him, they insinuated, to repudiate his convictions now, in order to ingratiate himself with the Gentiles. There must have been doubtless many passages in the life of one who held it a sacred duty to become all things to all men, especially to become as

---

1 The participles τοῖς δοκοῦσιν (ii. 2), τῶν δοκοῦντων εἶναι τι, οἱ δοκοῦντες (ii. 6), οἱ δοκοῦντες στίλα τὸν εἶναι (ii. 9), ought probably to be translated as presents, referring to the exclusive importance which the Judaizers in Galatia attached to the Apostles of the Circumcision. See the notes.
2 Gal. i. 1.
3 Gal. i. 11, 12.
4 Gal. i. 15—ii. 21.
5 Gal. vi. 17.
6 Gal. v. 11. See Lechler Apost. 11 Nachapost. Zeit. (ed. 2), p. 384. The case of Titus (Gal. ii. 3), however we explain it, seems to be introduced in order to meet this charge.
7 See the notes on Gal. i. 10, 'Do I now persuade men?' 'Do I seek to please men?' and on ii. 3, v. 2, 11.
a Jew to the Jews, to which bigoted or unscrupulous adversaries might give this colour. Such for instance was the circumcision of Timothy; such again was the sanction given to Jewish usages during his last visit to Jerusalem, when at the instigation of James he defrayed the expenses of those who had taken Nazarite vows. To concessions like these, I imagine, continued throughout his life, and not, as some have thought, to any earlier stage of the Apostle's teaching, when his Christian education was not yet matured, and some remnants of Judaism still hung about him (for of such a stage there is no evidence), are we to look for the grounds on which his opponents charged him with inconsistency.

The instigators of this rebellion against St Paul's authority and teaching seem not to have been Galatian residents. His leading antagonists were most probably emissaries from the mother Church of Jerusalem, either abusing a commission actually received from the Apostles of the Circumcision, or assuming an authority which had never been conferred upon them. The parallel case of the Corinthian Church, where communications between the Judaic party and the Christians of Palestine are more clearly traced, suggests this solution, and it is confirmed by the Epistle to the Galatians itself. When St Paul refers to the dissimulation at Antioch occasioned by the arrival of 'certain who came from James,' we can scarcely resist the impression that he is holding up the mirror of the past to the Galatians, and that there was sufficient resemblance between the two cases to point the application. Moreover, the vague allusions to these opponents scattered through the epistle seem to apply rather to disturbances caused by a small and compact body of foreign intruders, than to errors springing up silently and spontaneously within the Galatian Church itself. They are the tares sown designedly by the enemy in the night time, and not the weeds which grow up promiscuously as the natural product of the soil. 'A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump'. 'There be some that trouble you.' It would even seem that there was a ringleader among the Judaizing teachers, marked out either by his superior position or his greater activity: 'He that troubleth you shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be.'

1 I Cor. ix. 20, 22.
2 Acts xvi. 3.
4 Gal. ii. 12.

But howsoever they were disseminated, these errors found in Galatia a congenial soil. The corruption took the direction which might have been expected from the religious education of the people. A passionate and striking ritualism expressing itself in bodily mortifications of the most terrible kind had been supplanted by the simple spiritual teaching of the Gospel. For a time the pure morality and lofty sanctions of the new faith appealed not in vain to their higher instincts, but they soon began to yearn after a creed which suited their material cravings better, and was more allied to the system they had abandoned. This end they attained by overlaying the simplicity of the Gospel with Judaic observances. This new phase of their religious life is ascribed by St Paul himself to the temper which their old heathen education had fostered. It was a return to the 'weak and beggarly elements' which they had outgrown, a renewed subjection to the 'yoke of bondage' which they had thrown off in Christ. They had escaped from one ritualistic system only to bow before another. The innate failing of a race 'excessive in its devotion to external observances' was here reasserting itself.

To check these errors, which were already spreading fast, the Apostle wrote his Epistle to the Galatians. What effect his remonstrance had upon them can only be conjectured, for from this time forward the Galatian Church may be said to disappear from the Apostolic history. If we could be sure that the mission of Crescens, mentioned in the latest of St Paul's epistles, refers to the Asiatic settlement, there would be some ground for assuming that the Apostle maintained a friendly intercourse with his Galatian converts to the close of his life; but it is at least as likely that the mother country of the Gauls is there meant. Neither from the epistles of St Peter can any facts be elicited; for as they are addressed to all the great Churches of Asia Minor alike, no inference can be drawn as to the condition of the Galatian Church in particular. In the absence of all information, we would gladly believe that here, as at Corinth, the Apostle's rebuke was successful, that his authority was restored, the offenders were denounced, and the whole Church, overwhelmed with shame, returned to its allegiance. The cases however are not parallel. The severity of tone is more sustained in this instance, the personal appeals are fewer, the remonstrances more indignant and less affectionate. One ray of hope indeed seems to break through the dark cloud, but we must not build too much on a single expression of confidence, dictated it may be by a generous and politic charity which 'believeth all things.'

It is not idle, as it might seem at first sight, to follow the

1 2 Tim. iv. 10. 'Galatia' in this passage was traditionally interpreted of European Gaul. It is explained thus by Euseb. H. E. iii. 4, Epiph. adv. Haeres. li. 11, p. 433, Jerome (?) Op. ii. p. 960 (ed. Vallarsi), and by Theodore of Mopsuestia and Theodoret commenting on the passage. It is so taken also by those MSS which read Γαλλίαν for Γαλατίαν, for the former reading may be regarded as a gloss. The Churches of Vienne and Mayence both claimed Crescens as their founder. The passage in the Apost. Const. vii. 45 Κρήσκε ὑδὲ κατὰ Γαλατίαν ἐκκλησιῶν perhaps points to Asiatic Gaul, but is ambiguous. Later writers made Crescens visit both the European and the Asiatic country. A curious coincidence of names occurs in Boeckh Inschr. no. 3888 Κρήσκεντα ἐκτροπον Λουγδούνου Γαλλίας. I attribute some weight to the tradition in favour of Western Gaul, because it is not the prima facie view. Supposing St Paul to have meant this, he would almost certainly have used Γαλατίαν and not Γαλλίαν; see the note, p. 3; and to the authorities there quoted add Theodoret on 2 Tim. iv. 10, τὰς Γαλλίας ὥστω ἐκάλεσον· ὅτω γὰρ ἐκκλησίαν πάλαι· οὕτω δὲ καὶ νῦν αὐτὰς ὑμᾶς ἔνορμάζων αὐτὰς ἐκείνοις πατέρες. A passage in the Monumentum Ancyranum (Boeckh Inschr. no. 4040) presents a coincidence with 2 Tim. iv. 10, in the juxta-position of Galatia (i.e. European Gaul) and Dalmatia, εἰς Ἐσπανίας καὶ Γαλατίας καὶ παρὰ Δαλματίων.

2 Gal. v. 10.
stream of history beyond the horizon of the Apostolic age. The fragmentary notices of its subsequent career reflect some light on the temper and disposition of the Galatian Church in St Paul's day. To Catholic writers of a later date indeed the failings of its infancy seemed to be so faithfully reproduced in its mature age, that they invested the Apostle's rebuke with a prophetic import. Asia Minor was the nursery of heresy, and of all the Asiatic Churches it was nowhere so rife as in Galatia. The Galatian capital was the stronghold of the Montanist revival, which lingered on for more than two centuries, splitting into diverse sects, each distinguished by some fantastic gesture or minute ritual observance. Here too were to be found

---

3 Hieron. I. c. p. 430 'Sic et mecum qui vidit Anycram metropolin Galatiae civitatem, quotnuncusque schismatibus dilacerata sit, quot dogmata varietibus constuprata. Omitto Cataphrygas, Ophitas, Borboritas, et Manichaeos; nota enim jam haec humanae calamitatis vocabula sunt. Quis unquam Passalorynchitas et Ascodrobi et Artotyritas et caetera magis portenta quam nomina in aliqua parte Romani orbis audivit?' The Passalorynchites and Artotyrites were off-shoots of Montanism, the one so called from their placing the forefinger on the nose when praying, the other from their offering bread and cheese at the Eucharist: Epiph. Haeres. xlvi. 14 sq., p. 416 sq., Philastr. Haeres. lxxiv, lxxvi. In the word Ascodrobi there is perhaps some corruption. Theodoret, Haeret. Fab. i. 19, speaks of the Ascodrobi or Ascodrupitae, as a Marcosian (Gnostic) sect. Epiphanius, I.c., mentions Ascodrupitae as a barbarous equivalent to Passalorynychitas. Jerome however seems to have had in view the sect called Ascodrupitae by Philastrius, Haeres. lxxv. The account of Philastrius well exhibits the general temper of Galatian heresy: ‘Alii sunt Ascodrupitae in Galatia, qui utrem inflatum ponunt et cooperiunt in sua ecclesia et circumuent eum insanientes potibus et bacchantes, sicut pagani Libero patri... Et cum suis cœcitatibus propter inservire, alieni modis omnibus Christianae salutis reperintur, cum apostolus dejeiciat justificationem illam Judaicae carnis et vanitatem.’ After all allowance made for the exaggerations of orthodox writers, the orgiastic character of the worship of these sects is very apparent. The apostasy of St Paul’s converts is still further illustrated by Philastrius’ account of the Quartodecimani, lxxvii; ‘Alia est haeresis quae adserit cum Judaicis debere fieri pascha. Isti in Galatia et Syria et Phrygia commorantur, et Hierosolymis; et cum Judaicos sequuntur, similis cum eis errore depercut.’
THE CHURCHES OF GALATIA.

Ophites, Manichæans, sectarianists of all kinds. Hence during the great controversies of the fourth century issued two successive bishops, who disturbed the peace of the Church, swerving or seeming to swerve from Catholic truth in opposite directions, the one on the side of Sabellian, the other of Arian error. A Christian father of this period denounces 'the folly of the Galatians, who abound in many impious denominations.' A harsher critic, likewise a contemporary, affirms that whole villages in Galatia were depopulated by the Christians in their intestine quarrels.

From these painful scenes of discord it is a relief to turn to a nobler contest in which the Galatian Christians bore their part gallantly. A sketch of their final struggle with and victory over heathendom will fitly close this account of the first preaching of the Gospel among them.

The Galatian Churches furnished their quota to the army of martyrs in the Diocletian persecution, and the oldest existing church in the capital still bears the name of its bishop Clement, who perished during this reign of terror. The struggle over

1 Marcellus and Basilius; Le Quien Oriens Christianus i. p. 458. Eusebius wrote two elaborate treatises against Marcellus, which are extant. On the other hand, his orthodoxy was defended at one time by several of his Catholic contemporaries, but his reputation suffered from the more decided Sabellianism of his pupil the heresiarch Photinus, likewise a Galatian. Basilius presided at the semi-Arian Synod of Ancyra, held in 358. See Hefele Conciliengesch. i. p. 655.

2 Greg. Naz. Orat. xxii. (t. p. 422 a ed. Ben.) Ἡ Γαλατία τοῦ πλουσίου τῶν ἐν τολμώτις ἀπολέσων ἀνθρώπων, is a painful comment on St. Paul’s warning, Gal. v. 15, ‘If ye bite and devour one another, take heed ye be not consumed one of another.' Julian, however, at no time an unprejudiced witness, has here a direct interest in exaggerating these horrors, as he is contrasting the mutual intolerance of the Christians with his own forbearance.

3 The Emperor Julian’s language (Epist. 53, speaking of Galatia and certain neighbouring districts) ἄρδην ἀνατραπήρα τερόθελας κώμας, is a painful comment on St. Paul’s warning, Gal. v. 15, ‘If ye bite and devour one another, take heed ye be not consumed one of another.' Julian, however, at no time an unprejudiced witness, has here a direct interest in exaggerating these horrors, as he is contrasting the mutual intolerance of the Christians with his own forbearance.

and peace restored, a famous council was held at Ancyra, a court-martial of the Church, for the purpose of restoring discipline and pronouncing upon those who had faltered or deserted in the combat. When the contest was renewed under Julian, the forces of paganism were concentrated upon Galatia, as a key to the heathen position, in one of their last desperate struggles to retrieve the day. The once popular worship of the mother of the gods, which issuing from Pessinus had spread throughout the Greek and Roman world, was a fit rallying point for the broken ranks of heathendom. In this part of the field, as at Antioch, Julian appeared in person. He stimulated the zeal of the heathen worshippers by his own example, visiting the ancient shrine of Cybele, and offering costly gifts and sacrifices there. He distributed special largesses among the poor who attended at the temples. He wrote a scolding letter to the pontiff of Galatia, rebuking the priests for their careless living, and promising aid to Pessinus on condition that they took more pains to propitiate the goddess. The Christians met these measures for the most part in an attitude of fierce defiance. At Ancyra one Basil, a presbyter of the church, fearlessly braving the imperial anger, won for himself a martyr's crown. Going about from place to place, he denounced all participation in the polluting rites of heathen sacrifice, and warned his Christian brethren against bartering their hopes of heaven for such transitory honours as an earthly monarch could confer. At length brought before the provincial governor, he was tortured, condemned, and put to death. At Pessinus

1 About the year 314; Hefele Conciliengesch. i. p. 188. See the note on Gal. v. 20.
2 Ammian. xxii. 9, Liban. Or. xii, i. p. 398, xvii. i. p. 513 (Reiske).
3 Julian Epist. 49 Ἰερακεῖον ἀρχιερέτου Γαλατίων, preserved in Sozom. v. 16. The 'high priest' is mentioned in the Galatian inscriptions, Boeckh nos. 4016, 4020, 4026. Julian seems to have taken the worship of the mother of the gods under his special protection. An elaborate oration of his (Orat. 3) is devoted to this subject. Comp. Gregor. Naz. i. p. 109 (ed. Ben.).
4 Sozom. v. 11. The Acts of the Martyrdom of St Basil of Ancyra (Ruinart Acta Mart. Sinc. p. 510) are less exaggerated than most, and perhaps entitled to respect.
another zealous Christian, entering the temple, openly insulted the mother of the gods and tore down the altar. Summoned before Julian, he appeared in the imperial presence with an air of triumph, and even derided the remonstrances which the emperor addressed to him. This attempt to galvanize the expiring form of heathen devotion in Galatia seems to have borne little fruit. With the emperor's departure paganism relapsed into its former torpor. And not long after in the presence of Jovian, the Christian successor of the apostate, who halted at Ancyra on his way to assume the imperial purple, the Galatian churches had an assurance of the final triumph of the truth.

1 Gregor. Naz. Orat. v. i. p. 175 A. Gregory at the same time mentions another Christian—apparently in Galatia, though this is not stated—whose bold defiance was visited with extreme tortures. One or other of these may be that Busiris, of whom Sozomen (I.e.) speaks as a Christian confessor at Ancyra under Julian.

2 Ammian. xxv. 10.
III.

THE DATE OF THE EPISTLE.

Absence of direct evidence.

It has been already noticed that the epistle itself contains singularly few details of St Paul's intercourse with the Churches of Galatia, and that the narrative of St Luke is confined to the bare statement of the fact of his preaching there. Owing to this twofold silence, there is a paucity of direct evidence bearing on the date of the epistle. A few scattered notices, somewhat vague in themselves and leading only to approximate results, are all that we can collect: and the burden of the proof rests in consequence on an examination of the style of the letter, and of the lines of thought and feeling which may be traced in it. With this wide field open for conjecture, there has naturally been great diversity of opinion. The Epistle to the Galatians has been placed by different critics both the earliest and the latest of St Paul's writings, and almost every intermediate position has at one time or the other been assigned to it. The patristic writers are for the most part divided between two views. Some of these, as Victorinus¹ and Primasius, suppose

Diversity of opinion.

¹ Mai Script. Vet. Coll. vol. iii. Victorinus, who wrote about A.D. 360, mentions this as an opinion entertained by others, so that it dates farther back. 'Epistola ad Galatas missa dicitur ab apostolo ab Epheso civitate.' I suspect it was first started by Origen. In the Canon of Marcion (Tertull. adv. Marc. v. 2, Epiphan. Haer. xlii. p. 350) the Epistle to the Galatians stood first, but I cannot think that his order was chronological. At all events, supposing it to be so, the fact of his placing the Epistles to the Thessalonians after the Romans diminishes the respect which would otherwise be felt for the opinion of a writer so ancient. Tertullian's language however clearly points to a different principle of arrangement in Marcion's Canon: 'Principalem adversus Judaismum epistolam nos quoque confitemur, quae Galatas docet.' He placed it to have been written from Ephesus. Others, among whom are Eusebius of Emesa, Jerome, Theodoret, and Euthalius, date it from Rome, in accordance with the subscription found in some MSS and in the two Syriac and the Coptic versions. Of these two opinions, the former was doubtless a critical inference from the statement in the Acts that St Paul visited Ephesus immediately after leaving Galatia, combined with his own mention of the suddenness of the Galatian apostasy; the latter is founded on some fancied allusions in the epistle to his bonds. The former view has been adopted by the vast majority of recent critics, who agree in dating the epistle during the three years of St Paul's residence in the capital of Asia (A.D. 54—57), differing however in placing it earlier or later in this period, according as they lay greater or less stress on the particular expression 'ye are so soon changing.'
THE DATE OF THE EPISTLE.

Before stating my reasons for departing from this view, I shall give a brief summary of the events of the period, which this epistle in the forefront as the most decided in its antagonism to Judaism. At the same time where no such motive interposed, and where the connexion was obvious, as in the Epistles to the Colossians and Philemon (on the juxtaposition of which Wieseler lays some stress, as establishing the principle of a chronological arrangement in Marcion's Canon Chron. p. 230), he would naturally follow the chronological order. Volkmar (Credner Neutest. Kanon, p. 399) accepts the interpretation of Tertullian which I have given, but denies the accuracy of his statement. The author of the Muratorian fragment (c. A.D. 170) seems to give as the chronological order, Corinthians, Galatians, Romans (see Tregelles Can. Murat. p. 42), which corresponds with the view I have adopted; but his language is very obscure, and his statements, at least on some points, are obviously inaccurate.

1 So Florus Lugdun. and Claudius Altissiod, who copy the words of Prisiasius. Chrysostom (Prooem. ad Rom.) says merely that the Galatians was written before the Romans, but does not define the time or place of writing. Theophylact (Argum. ad Rom.) repeats Chrysostom.

2 About 350 A.D. Cramer Caten. ad Gal. iv. 20; 'He was a prisoner and in confinement at the time.' This comment is ascribed simply to 'Eusebius' in the Catena, but the person intended is doubtless the bishop of Emesa, whose commentary on the Galatians is mentioned by Jerome (Comm. in Ep. ad Gal. Lib. 1. Praef.). He naturally represents the tradition of the Syrian Churches.

3 As may be inferred from his commentary on Gal. iv. 20, vi. 11, 17 (VII. pp. 468, 529, 534), Philom. 1 (VII. p. 747).

4 Praef. ad Rom.

5 Acts xviii. 23, xix. 1.

6 Gal. i. 6.

7 Gal. iv. 20, vi. 17.
THE DATE OF THE EPISTLE.

it will be necessary to bear in mind, in order to follow the course of the argument.

Sojourn at Ephesus.

St Paul's long sojourn at Ephesus is now drawing to a close. His labours there have been crowned with no ordinary success. 'The word of God prevailed and grew mightily.' So we read in the historian's narrative. He says nothing of persecutions. But we must draw no hasty conclusions from this silence. For the same historian records how the Apostle, in his farewell to the Ephesian elders a year later, speaking of his labours among them, reminded them of his 'many tears and temptations, which befell him by the lying in wait of the Jews.' In his own epistles St Paul speaks in stronger language of the persecutions of this time. He compares his sufferings to those of the condemned slave, thrown to the beasts in the amphitheatre, and struggling for life and death—angels and men witnessing the spectacle. The Apostles, he says, were made as the filth of the world, as the offscouring of all things.

It was now the spring of the year fifty-seven, and he contemplated leaving Ephesus after Whitsuntide. Friends had arrived from Corinth and drawn a fearful picture of the feuds and irregularities that prevailed there. He at once despatched a letter to the Corinthians, reprobating their dissensions and exhorting them to acquit themselves of guilt by the punishment of a flagrant offender. But he was not satisfied with merely writing: he sent also trusty messengers, who might smooth difficulties, by explaining by word of mouth much that was necessarily omitted in the letter. Titus was one of these: and he awaited his return in great anxiety, as he had misgivings of the reception of his letter at Corinth. And now a tumult broke out at Ephesus. The opposition to the Gospel came to a head. His companions were seized and violently hurried before the people. He himself was with difficulty persuaded to shelter himself by concealment till the storm was over. The storm

1 Acts xix. 20.
3 1 Cor. iv. 9, xv. 32.
4 1 Cor. iv. 13.
5 1 Cor. xvi. 8.
6 1 Cor. xvi. 11, 2 Cor. xii. 18.
passed, but the sky was still lowering. It was evident that his presence at Ephesus could now be of little use, and might only exasperate the enemies of the Gospel. Besides the time was near, perhaps had already arrived, when he had intended under any circumstances to turn his steps westward. So he left Ephesus. But Titus had not yet come, and his anxiety for the Church at Corinth pressed heavily upon him. He hastened to Troas, hoping to meet Titus there. 'A door was opened' to him at Troas. But Titus came not. He was oppressed at once with a sense of loneliness and an ever growing anxiety for the Corinthian Church. He could no longer bear the suspense. He left Troas and crossed over to Macedonia. Still Titus came not. Still the agony of suspense, the sense of loneliness remained. Time only increased his suffering. Every day brought fresh troubles; gloomy tidings poured in from all sides; church after church added to his anxiety. Nor had persecution ceased. The marks of violence imprinted on his body about this time remained long after—perhaps never left him. Probably too his constitutional complaint visited him once more—the thorn in the flesh to which he alludes in his letter to the Corinthians—the weakness which years before had detained him in Galatia. He seemed to be spared no suffering either of body or mind. There were fightings without and fears within. At length Titus arrived. This was the first gleam of sunshine. The tidings from Corinth were far more cheerful than he had hoped. His mind was relieved. He wrote off at once to the Corinthians, expressing his joy at their penitence, and recommending mercy towards the offender. The crisis was now over. He breathed freely once more. From this time his troubles seem gradually to have abated. A single verse in the sacred historian conveys all we know beyond this point of his sojourn in Macedonia. 'He went over those parts,' we are told, 'and exhorted the people in many words.' From thence he visited Greece, where

1 Acts xix. 21—41, xx. 1.
2 2 Cor. ii. 12, 13.
3 2 Cor. xi. 28.
4 Gal. vi. 17.
5 2 Cor. vii. 5—16.
6 Acts xx. 2.
he remained three months. While at Corinth he wrote the Epistle to the Romans. These are almost all the particulars known of his movements at this period. Of persecutions and sufferings we read nothing: and so far we are left in the dark. But when we contrast the more tranquil and hopeful tone of the Roman Epistle, interrupted occasionally by an outburst of triumphant thanksgiving, with the tumultuous conflict of feeling which appears in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, we can scarcely avoid the inference, that the severity of his trials had abated in the interval, and that he was at length enjoying a season of comparative repose.

It will be seen then that according to the generally received opinion, which dates this epistle from Ephesus, the chronological order of the letters of the period will be Galatians, 1 Corinthians, 2 Corinthians, Romans, the Epistle to the Galatians preceding the First Epistle to the Corinthians by an interval of a few months according to some, of nearly three years according to others. On the other hand, I cannot but think that there are weighty reasons, which more than counterbalance any arguments alleged in favour of this opinion, for interposing it between the Second to the Corinthians and the Romans. In this case it will have been written from Macedonia or Achaia, in the winter or spring of the years 57, 58 A.D. I shall proceed to state the successive steps of the argument by which this result is arrived at.

1. A few scattered historical notices more or less distinct must be put in evidence first, as fixing the date of the epistle later than the events to which they refer. These notices are twofold, referring partly to St Paul's communications with the Apostles of the circumcision, partly to his intercourse with the Galatian Church.

(i) In the opening chapters St Paul mentions two distinct visits to Jerusalem. For reasons which will be given elsewhere, it seems necessary to identify the second of these with the third recorded in the Acts, during which the Apostolic

\[1 \text{Gal. i. 18, ii. 1.}\]
Council was held. The epistle moreover alludes to an interview with St Peter at Antioch, in language which seems to imply that it took place after, and probably soon after, their conference at Jerusalem. If so, it must have occurred during St Paul’s stay at Antioch, recorded in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts. On the most probable system of chronology these events took place in the year 51, before which date therefore the epistle cannot have been written.

(ii) The epistle apparently contains an allusion to two separate visits of St Paul to Galatia. ‘Ye know,’ says the Apostle, ‘that through infirmity of the flesh, I preached to you before, and...ye received me as an angel of God...What then...have I become your enemy by telling you the truth?’ He is here contrasting his reception on the two occasions, on the second of which he fears he may have incurred their enmity by his plain-speaking. If this interpretation be correct, the two Galatian visits thus alluded to must be the same two which are recorded in the Acts. The epistle therefore must be later than the second of these, which took place in 54 A.D.

Thus we have established the earliest possible date of the epistle, as a starting point. On the other hand an incidental expression has been rigorously pressed to show that it cannot have been written much after this date. ‘I marvel,’ says St Paul, ‘that ye are so soon, or so fast, changing from Him that called you to another Gospel.’ It is necessary to estimate the exact value of this expression.

The generally received view, which fixes the writing of the epistle at Ephesus, is founded on two assumptions with regard to this expression, both of which seem to me erroneous. First, wrongly explained. It is supposed that in speaking of the rapidity of the change St Paul dates from his last visit to Galatia, ‘so soon after I left you.’ This however seems at variance with the context. The Apostle is reproaching his converts with their fickleness.

---

1 Gal. ii. 11. 2 Acts xv. 30–40. 3 Gal. iv. 13–16. See the notes. 4 Acts xvi. 6, xviii. 23. 5 Gal. i. 6. See the note on ἑαυτός ταύτας.
'They have so soon deserted their Christian profession, so soon taken up with another Gospel.' Here the point of time from which he reckons is obviously the time of their conversion, not the time of his second visit. His surprise is not that they have so lightly forgotten his latest instructions, but that they have so easily tired of their newly obtained liberty in Christ. 'I marvel,' he says, 'that ye are so soon changing from Him that called you.' Whatever interval therefore is implied by 'so soon,' it must reckon from their first knowledge of the Gospel, i.e. from A.D. 51. Secondly, it is insisted that the period cannot be extended beyond a few months, or at the outside two or three years. But quickness and slowness are relative terms. The rapidity of a change is measured by the importance of the interests at stake. A period of five or ten years would be a brief term of existence for a constitution or a dynasty. A people which threw off its allegiance to either within so short a time might well be called fickle. And if so, I cannot think it strange that the Apostle, speaking of truths destined to outlive the life of kingdoms and of nations, should complain that his converts had so soon deserted from the faith, even though a whole decade of years might have passed since they were first brought to the knowledge of Christ. So long a period however is not required on any probable hypothesis as to the date of the epistle; and therefore this expression, which has been so strongly insisted upon, seems to contribute little or nothing towards the solution of the problem.1

2. On the other hand the argument from the style and character of the epistle is one of great importance. It may now be regarded as a generally recognised fact that St. Paul's epistles fall chronologically into four groups, separated from

---

1 The problem of the date of the Galatian Epistle, as it is generally conceived, may be stated thus: Given on the one hand the expression 'so soon,' tending towards an earlier date, and on the other the resemblance to the Epistle to the Romans tending towards a later, to find the resultant. I think that the former consideration may be eliminated, as will be seen from the text, while at the same time some further conditions which have been overlooked must be taken into account.
one another by an interval of five years roughly speaking, and distinguished also by their internal character. The second of these groups comprises (exclusively of the Galatians) the Epistles to the Corinthians and Romans, written at the close of the third missionary journey, in the years 57 and 58. Now it appears that while the Epistle to the Galatians possesses no special features in common with the epistles of the preceding or succeeding groups, either in style, matter, or general tone and treatment, it is most closely allied in all these respects to the epistles of the third missionary journey. It was a season of severe conflict with St Paul, both mental and bodily, and the traces of this conflict are stamped indelibly on the epistles written during this period. They exhibit an unwonted tension of feeling, a fiery energy of expression, which we do not find in anything like the same degree in either the earlier or the later epistles. They are marked by a vast profusion of quotations from the Old Testament, by a frequent use of interrogation, by great variety and abruptness of expression, by words and images not found elsewhere, or found very rarely, in St Paul. They have also their own doctrinal features distinguishing them from the other groups—due for the most part to the phase which the antagonism to the Gospel assumed at this time. Justification by faith, the contrast of law and grace, the relation of Jew and Gentile, the liberty of the Gospel—these and kindred topics are dwelt upon at greater length and with intense earnestness.
All these characteristic features the letter to the Galatians shares in an eminent degree, so much so indeed, that it may be considered the typical epistle of the group; and by those who have made St Paul's style their study the conviction arising from this resemblance will probably be felt so strongly, that nothing but the most direct and positive evidence could overcome it.

3. It seems to follow then that some place must be found for the Galatian Epistle in the group which comprises the Epistles to the Corinthians and Romans. We have next to enquire whether there is sufficient evidence for determining its exact position in this group. I think this question can be answered with some degree of probability.

Pursuing the examination further we find that the resemblance is closest to the Second Epistle to the Corinthians and the Epistle to the Romans.

In the case of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, the similarity consists not so much in words and arguments as in tone and feeling. "In both there is the same sensitiveness in the Apostle to the behaviour of his converts to himself, the same earnestness about the points of difference, the same remembrance of his 'infirmity' while he was yet with them, the same consciousness of the precarious basis on which his own authority rested in the existing state of the two Churches. In both there is a greater display of his own feelings than in any other portion of his writings, a deeper contrast of inward exaltation and outward suffering, more of personal entreaty, a greater readiness to impart himself." If it were necessary to add anything to this just and appreciative criticism, the Apostle's tone in dealing with his antagonists would supply an instructive field for comparison. Both epistles exhibit the same combination of protest and concession in combating the exclusive rights claimed for the elder Apostles, the same vehement condemnation of the false teachers guarded by the same careful suppression of names, the same strong assertion of his Apostolic office tempered with the same depreciation of his own personal merits.

Besides this general resemblance, which must be felt in order to be appreciated, a few special affinities may be pointed out. For instance the expression 'Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us'; has a close parallel in the allied epistle, 'He made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we, etc.' The image, 'Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap,' is reproduced in almost the same words,

---

1 Jowett, i. p. 196, 1st ed. It is interesting to find that the resemblance between the two epistles was observed by a writer as early as Theodore of Mopsuestia, Spicil. Solesm. i. p. 50.
2 Gal. iii. 13.
3 2 Cor. v. 21.
4 Gal. vi. 7.
THE DATE OF THE EPISTLE.

'He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly.' Again, the two epistles have in common the peculiar phrases, 'another gospel,' 'a new creature,' 'zealously affect you,' 'persuade men.' And other instances might be brought. On these special coincidences however I do not lay any great stress.

The resemblance to the Epistle to the Romans is much more striking and definite. Setting aside the personal matter and the practical lessons, and excepting here and there a digressive illustration, almost every thought and argument in the Epistle to the Galatians may be matched from the other epistle. The following table of parallels will show how remarkable this coincidence is. In the first instance I have taken an almost continuous passage, in order better to exhibit the nature of this resemblance.

Galatians.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Verse (Gal.)</th>
<th>Verse (Rom.)</th>
<th>Parallel Passages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>iii. 6.</td>
<td>iv. 3.</td>
<td>What saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii. 7.</td>
<td>iv. 10, 11.</td>
<td>How then was it accounted? in uncircumcision... that he might be the father of all them that believe.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii. 8.</td>
<td>iv. 17.</td>
<td>As it is written, 'I have made thee a father of many nations.' iv. 18. 'So shall thy seed be.'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii. 9.</td>
<td>iv. 23.</td>
<td>It was not written for his sake alone... but for us also to whom it shall be accounted, who believe, etc. Comp. iv. 12.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iii. 10.</td>
<td>iv. 15.</td>
<td>Because the law worketh wrath.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1 2 Cor. ix. 6.
2 Gal. i. 6, 2 Cor. xi. 4; Gal. vi. 15.
2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. iv. 17, 2 Cor. xi. 2; Gal. i. 10, 2 Cor. v. 11.
3 Compare Gal. i. 9, v. 21, with 2 Cor. xiii. 2, and Gal. iii. 3 with 2 Cor. viii. 6. Again, the expressions ἀπο­ρείαςκείων, κακῶς, κυρῆ, τοῦναντίον, φοβοῦ­μαι μὴ ἄπαξ, and the metaphor κατεσθίειν, are peculiar to these epistles; and this list is probably not complete. On the other hand, the Galatian Epistle presents a few special coincidences with 1 Corinthians, the most remarkable being the proverb, 'A little leaven etc.,' occurring 1 Cor. v. 6, Gal. v. 9.
Galatians.

iii. 11. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God it is evident, for

'The just shall live by faith.'

iii. 12. And the law is not of faith: but 'The man that doeth them shall live in them.'

iii. 13, 14. [From this curse Christ ransomed us.]

iii. 15—18. [Neither can the law interpose] to make the promise of none effect: for if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it (καθωρωμα) to Abraham by promise.

iii. 19—21. [But the law was temporary and ineffective: for]

iii. 22. The scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

iii. 23—26. [We are now free from the tutelage of the law and are sons of God through Christ.]

iii. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.

iii. 28. [There is no distinction of race or caste or sex.]

iii. 29. If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

iv. 1—5. [We have been hitherto in the position of an heir still in his minority. Christ's death has recovered us our right.]

iv. 5, 6, 7. That we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath Romans.

iii. 21. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets.

i. 17. As it is written, 'The just shall live by faith.'

x. 5. Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law: that 'The man that doeth them shall live in them.'

[iv. 23, 24. The same thought expressed in other language.]

iv. 13, 14, 16. For the promise that he should he the heir of the world was not made to Abraham through the law...for if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect...therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace (χάρις).

[Comp. Rom. viii. 3, 4.]

xi. 32. God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. iii. 9, 10. They are all under sin, as it is written. Comp. iii. 25; v. 20, 21.

[The same thought illustrated differently. Rom. vii. 1—3.]

vi. 3. As many of us as have been baptized into Christ.

ix. 8. The children of the promise are counted for the seed. (See the passage cited next.)

viii. 14—17. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have Galatians.

sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.—

(2) ii. 16. For 'by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified (Ps. cxliii. 2).'

In both passages the quotation is oblique: in both the clause 'by the works of the law' is inserted by way of explanation: in both 'flesh' is substituted for 'living man' (πᾶσα σάρκι for πᾶς ζῶν of the LXX, which agrees also with the Hebrew): and in both the application of the text is the same.

Galatians.

(3) ii. 19. For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live to God.

ii. 20. I am crucified with Christ. Comp. v. 24, vi. 14.

Nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.

(4) iv. 23, 28. He of the free-woman was by promise...we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

(5) v. 14. All the law is fulfilled in one word, namely, (ἐν τῷ), Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

(6) v. 16. Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

v. 17. For the flesh lusteth

Romans.

not received the spirit of bond-age again to fear, but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ.

iii. 20. For 'by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified before him.'
THE DATE OF THE EPISODE.

Galatians.

Parallel passages.

against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other.

So that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

v. 18. But if ye be led of the spirit, ye are not under the law.

(7) vi. 2. Bear ye one another's burdens.

Romans.

in my members, warring against the law of my mind...with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin.

vii. 15. What I would, that I do not, but what I hate, that I do. Comp. vv. 19, 20.

viii. 2. The law of the spirit of life...hath made me free from the law of sin and death. Comp. vii. 6.

xv. 1. We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak.

It will be unnecessary to add many words on a similarity so great as these passages exhibit. Observe only that it is manifold and various. Sometimes it is found in a train of argument more or less extended, and certainly not obvious: sometimes in close verbal coincidences where the language and thoughts are unusual, or where a quotation is freely given, and where the coincidence therefore was less to be expected: sometimes in the same application of a text, and the same comment upon it, where that application and comment have no obvious reference to the main subject of discussion. There is no parallel to this close resemblance in St Paul's Epistles, except in the case of the letters to the Colossians and Ephesians. Those letters were written about the same time and sent by the same messenger; and I cannot but think that we should be doing violence to historic probability by separating the Epistles to the Galatians and Romans from each other by an interval of more than a few months, though in this instance the similarity is not quite so great as in the other.

1 In the above extracts I have only altered the English version where our translators have given different renderings for the same Greek word. Besides these broader coincidences, the following words and phrases are peculiar to the two Epistles: βαστάζω, δουλεῖα, τέλει-θερδά, Ἰς, κατὰ διαθήματον λέγω (ἀνθρώ-πων λέγω), κατάρα καταράσθαι, κώμαι, μακαρισμός, μέθη, οἵ τα τουώτα πράσ-σωτες, ἀφελέτης, παραβάτης, παρ' ὃ, τί ἔτι; τί λέγει ἡ γραφή;
THE DATE OF THE EPISTLE.

But the comparison advances us yet another stage towards the solution of our problem. There can be no reasonable doubt which of the two epistles contains the earlier expression of the thoughts common to both. The Epistle to the Galatians stands in relation to the Roman letter, as the rough model to the finished statue; or rather, if I may press the metaphor without misapprehension, it is the first study of a single figure, which is worked into a group in the latter writing. To the Galatians the Apostle flashes out in indignant remonstrance the first eager thoughts kindled by his zeal for the Gospel striking suddenly against a stubborn form of Judaism. To the Romans he writes at leisure, under no pressure of circumstances, in the face of no direct antagonism, explaining, completing, extending the teaching of the earlier letter, by giving it a double edge directed against Jew and Gentile alike. The matter, which in the one epistle is personal and fragmentary, elicited by the special needs of an individual church, is in the other generalised and arranged so as to form a comprehensive and systematic treatise. Very few critics of name have assigned a priority of date to the Roman Epistle.

Thus connected by striking affinities with these two epistles, the letter to the Galatians seems naturally to claim an intermediate position, as a chronological link between them. Its claim, I think, is well illustrated, if it is not vindicated, by a comparison of the lists of sins in the three epistles, with which I shall close this attempt to trace their common features.

2 CORINTHIANS.

Strife, emulation, wraths, factions, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults ...... uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness. xii. 20, 21.

GALATIANS.

Fornications, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, strife, emulations, wraths, factions, seditions, heresies, envies, murders, drunkenesses, revellings, and such like. v. 19—21.

ROMANS.

Unrighteousness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, etc., i. 29, 30; in revellings and drunkennesses, in chamberings and wantonnesses, in strife and emulation. xiii. 13.

But if on the other hand this sequence is altered by inter-GAL.
posing the letters to the Corinthians between those to the Galatians and Romans, the dislocation is felt at once. It then becomes difficult to explain how the same thoughts, argued out in the same way and expressed in similar language, should appear in the Galatian and reappear in the Roman Epistle, while in two letters written in the interval they have no place at all, or at least do not lie on the surface. I cannot but think that the truths which were so deeply impressed on the Apostle's mind, and on which he dwelt with such characteristic energy on two different occasions, must have forced themselves into prominence in any letter written meanwhile.

4. Again, if it is found that the order here maintained accords best with the history of St. Paul's personal sufferings at this period, so far as we can decipher it, as well as with the progress of his controversy with the Judaizers, such an accordance will not be without its value. I shall take these two points in order.

(i) In the First Epistle to the Corinthians he alludes to his sufferings for the Gospel more than once. He refers to them in one passage at some length\(^1\), to point a contrast between the humiliation of the teacher and the exaltation of the taught. He speaks of himself as suffering every privation, as treated with every kind of contempt. And he alludes once and again to these afflictions, as witnesses to the immortality of man. ‘If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable\(^2\).’ ‘Why stand we in jeopardy every hour? I protest I die daily. If I fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not\(^3\)?’ But the mention of them is only occasional; it does not colour the whole epistle. In the Second Epistle the case is very different. Here it is the one topic from beginning to end. His physical sufferings have increased meanwhile: and to them have been added mental agonies far more severe. Tribulation and comfort—strength and weakness—glorying and humiliation—alternate throughout the epistle'. But though the whole letter is one outpouring of affliction, yet we feel that the worst is already past. The first ray of sunshine has pierced the gloom. The penitence of the Corinthian Church has made him 'exceeding joyful in all his tribulation'. We are not surprised therefore, when, after the lapse of a few months, we find the Apostle writing in a strain of less impassioned sorrow. In the Epistle to the Romans persecution is sometimes mentioned, but in the more tranquil tone of one recalling past experiences, when the conflict is already over and the victory won.

\(^1\) 1 Cor. iv. 9—13.  \(^2\) 1 Cor. xv. 19.  \(^3\) 1 Cor. xv. 30—32.

In the Epistle to the Galatians again he says but little of his own sufferings. He is too absorbed in the momentous question at issue to speak much of himself. Yet once or twice the subject is introduced. A sentence at the close of the letter especially shows how it occupies his thoughts, even when all mention of it is repressed. After adding in his own handwriting a few sentences of earnest remonstrance, he sums up with these words, 'From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.' It is his final appeal, before which all opposition and controversy must give way. Does not this seem like the language of one, who has lately passed through a fiery trial, and who, looking back upon it in the first moment of abatement, while the recollection is still fresh upon him, sees in his late struggles a new consecration to a life of self-denial, and an additional seal set upon his Apostolic authority? In other words, does it not seem to follow naturally after the tumult of affliction, which bursts out in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians?

Perhaps this passage too, in connexion with the events of the year preceding, may serve to throw light on one or two otherwise obscure hints in this epistle. 'If I still preach circumcision, why am I then persecuted?' 'If I were still pleasing men, I should not have been a servant of Christ'.

\[1 \text{ 2 Cor. i. } 3-10, \text{ iv. 7-11, iv. 16—} \]
\[\text{v. 4, vi. 4—10, vii. 4—7, xi. 23—28, xii. 7—10, 12.} \]
\[2 \text{ 2 Cor. vii. 4—2.} \]
\[3 \text{ Gal. v. 11.} \]
\[4 \text{ Gal. i. 10.} \]
May we not connect these expressions with the words, ‘Henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus’? These sufferings marked a crisis in his spiritual life, an epoch to date from. In the permanent injuries then inflicted upon him, he delighted to see the tokens of his service to his Lord, the signs of ownership, as it were, branded on him. Henceforth Jesus was his Master, henceforth he was the slave of Christ, in a fuller sense than he had been hitherto. It is at least remarkable, that in the epistle which follows next upon this, he designates himself ‘a slave of Jesus Christ,’ a title there adopted for the first time.

(ii) The same result which is thus obtained from an examination of St Paul’s personal history, seems to follow also from the progress of his controversy with his Judaizing opponents.

In the Epistle to the Corinthians the controversy has not yet assumed a very definite shape. He scarcely once meets his opponents on doctrinal ground. He is occupied in maintaining his personal authority against those who strove to undermine it, resting their claims, in some cases at least, on a more intimate connexion with the Lord. Doubtless doctrinal error would be the next step, and this the Apostle foresaw. But hitherto he speaks with some reserve on this point, not knowing the exact position which his antagonist would take up. The heresy combated in the Galatian Epistle is much more matured. The personal antagonism remains as before, while the doctrinal opposition has assumed a distinct and threatening form.

For how different is St Paul’s language in the two cases. He tells both Churches indeed in almost the same words, that

1 Gal. vi. 17.
2 It is related of George Herbert that when he was inducted into the cure of Bemerton he said to a friend, ‘I beseech God that my humble and charitable life may so win upon others as to bring glory to my Jesus, whom I have this day taken to be my Master and Governor; and I am so proud of His service, that I will always call Him Jesus my Master,’ etc. ‘And,’ adds his biographer, ‘he seems to rejoice in that word Jesus, and say that the adding these words my Master to it, and the often repetition of them, seemed to perfume his mind,’ etc. I. Walton’s Life of Herbert.
3 Rom. i. 1.
THE DATE OF THE EPISODE.

'circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing', but then his practical comment in the two cases presents a striking contrast. To the Corinthians he says; 'Is any man called being circumcised? let him not be uncircumcised; Is any called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised': to the Galatians; 'Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised Christ shall profit you nothing; and again I testify, etc.' In the one epistle he is dealing with a hypothetical case; he speaks as if to guard against future error. In the other he is wrestling with an actual evil present in its most virulent form. If circumcision is but one point, it at least contains all implicitly: 'Every man that is circumcised is a debtor to do the whole law.'

Corresponding to this advance on the part of his antagonists we find a growing fulness in St Paul's exposition of those doctrines with which the errors of the Judaizers were in direct conflict. Such is the case with his account of the temporary purpose of the law, especially in its negative effect as 'multiplying sin.' In the Corinthian Epistles the subject is dismissed with a casual sentence, pregnant with meaning indeed, but standing quite alone. 'The strength of sin is the law.' In the Galatian letter it is the one prominent topic. So again with its correlative, the doctrine of justification by faith. This doctrine is incidentally alluded to more than once in the letter to Corinth. In one passage especially it appears prominently; 'God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses to them: for He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness (δικαιοσύνη) of God.' Here the doctrine is stated clearly enough, but there is no approach to the fulness with which it is set forth in the Galatian Epistle. The illustration, the antithesis, the aphorism, the scriptural sanction, are missing.

1 1 Cor. vii. 19, Gal. v. 6, vi. 15.
2 1 Cor. vii. 18.
3 Gal. v. 2.
4 1 Cor. xv. 56.

5 1 Cor. i. 30, iv. 4, vi. 11, 2 Cor. iii. 9.
6 2 Cor. v. 19—21.
It is not the language which St Paul would have used, had the doctrines been as virtually denied in the Corinthian as they were in the Galatian Church.

5. Lastly, the chronology adopted explains one or two allusions in the Epistle to the Galatians which otherwise it is difficult to account for.

(i) The sixth chapter commences with the exhortation, 'Brethren, though a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted.' There is something peculiarly earnest in the abruptness with which this command is introduced. There is a marked tenderness in the appeal to their brotherhood which prefaces it. An undercurrent of deep feeling is evident here. It is as though some care weighed on the Apostle's mind. Now if we suppose the Galatian Epistle to have been written after the Second to the Corinthians, we have at once an adequate explanation of this. A grievous offence had been committed in the Christian community at Corinth. In his first Epistle to the Church there, St Paul had appealed to the brotherhood to punish the guilty person. The appeal had not only been answered, but answered with so much promptness, that it was necessary to intercede for the offender. He commended their indignation, their zeal, their revenge; they had approved themselves clear in the matter; and now they must forgive and comfort their erring brother, lest he be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow. It was the recollection of this circumstance that dictated the injunction in the Galatian Epistle. The Galatians were proverbially passionate and fickle. If a reaction came, it might be attended, as at Corinth, with undue severity towards the delinquents. The epistle therefore was probably written while the event at Corinth was fresh on St Paul's mind—perhaps immediately after he had despatched Titus and the Second Epistle, and was still in suspense as to the issue—perhaps after he had himself arrived at Corinth, and witnessed too evident signs of over-severity.

1 2 Cor. vii. 11. 2 2 Cor. ii. 7.
(ii) A little later on another passage occurs, in which the vehemence of St Paul’s language is quite unintelligible at first sight. ‘Be not deceived,’ he says, ‘God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap...Let us do good unto all men.’ The admonition is thrown into a general form, but it has evidently a special application in the Apostle’s own mind.

An allusion in the First Epistle to the Corinthians supplies the key to the difficulty. ‘As I gave orders to the Churches of Galatia, even so do ye.’ He had solicited their alms for the suffering brethren of Judæa. The messenger, who had brought him word of the spread of Judaism among the Galatians, had also, I suppose, reported unfavourably of their liberality. They had not responded heartily to his appeal. He reproves them in consequence for their backwardness: but he wishes to give them more time, and therefore refrains from prejudging the case.

For the reasons given above I have been led to place the Galatian Epistle after the letters to Corinth. They certainly do not amount to a demonstration, but every historical question must be decided by striking a balance between conflicting probabilities; and it seems to me that the arguments here advanced, however imperfect, will hold their ground against those which are alleged in favour of the earlier date. In the interval then between the writing of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians and that to the Romans, the Galatian letter ought probably to be placed. Beyond this I will not venture to define the time; only suggesting that the greeting from ‘all the brethren which are with me’ seems naturally to apply to the little band of his fellow-travellers, and to hint that the letter was not despatched from any of the great churches of Macedonia or from Corinth. It may have been written on the journey between Macedonia and Achaia. And it is not improbable that it was during St Paul’s residence in Macedonia, about the time when the Second Epistle to the Corinthians was written, that

1 Gal. vi. 7—10.
2 1 Cor. xvi. 1.
3 Gal. i. 2.
St Paul received news of the falling away of his Galatian converts, so that they were prominent in his mind, when he numbered among his daily anxieties 'the care of all the churches'. If so, he would despatch his letter to the Galatians as soon after as a suitable bearer could be found.

---

1 2 Cor. xi. 28.
2 This investigation of the date of the Galatian Epistle is taken from a paper which I published in the Journal of Class. and Sacr. Philol. vol. iii. p. 289, altered in parts. The view here maintained had also been advocated by Conybeare and Howson (ii. p. 165, ed. 2), and by Bleek (Einf. in das N. T. pp. 418, 419); but otherwise it had not found much favour. Since the appearance of my first edition it appears to have gained ground.
IV.

GENUINENESS OF THE EPISTLE.

The Epistle to the Galatians has escaped unchallenged amid the sweeping proscriptions of recent criticism. Its every sentence so completely reflects the life and character of the Apostle of the Gentiles that its genuineness has not been seriously questioned.

Any laboured discussion of this subject would therefore be out of place. Yet it will be worth while to point to a single instance, as showing the sort of testimony which may be elicited from the epistle itself.

The account of St Paul's relations with the Apostles of the Circumcision has a double edge, as an evidential weapon. On the one hand, as an exhibition of the working of the Apostle's mind, it lies far beyond the reach of a forger in an age singularly unskilled in the analysis and representation of the finer shades of character. The suppressed conflict of feeling, the intermingling of strong protest and courteous reserve, the alternation of respectful concession and uncompromising rebuke—the grammar being meanwhile dislocated and the incidents obscured in this struggle of opposing thoughts—such a combination of features reflects one mind alone, and can have proceeded but from one author. On the other hand, looking at the passage as a narrative of events, it seems wholly impossible that the conceptions of a later age should have taken this form. The incidents are too fragmentary and indirect, they are almost smothered in the expression of the writer’s feelings, there is altogether a want of system in the narrative wholly unlike the story of a romancer. Nor indeed would it serve any conceivable purpose which a forger might be supposed to entertain. The Gnostic, who wished to advance his antipathy to Judaism under cover of St Paul’s name, would have avoided any expression of deference to the Apostles of the Circumcision. The Ebionite would have shrunk with loathing from any seeming depreciation of the cherished customs or the acknowledged leaders of his race, as the tone of the author of the Clementines shows¹. The Catholic writer, forging with a view to ‘conciliation,’ would be more unlikely than either to invent such a narrative, anxious as he would be to avoid any appearance of conflict between the two great teachers of the Church. The very unevenness of the incidents is the surest token of their authenticity.

1 One exception is recorded, which may serve to point a moral.
GENUINENESS OF THE EPISTLE.

On the other hand, the external evidence, though not very considerable, is perhaps as great as might be expected from the paucity of early Christian literature, and the nature of the few writings still extant.

1. The Apostolic Fathers in whose ears the echoes of the Apostle’s voice still lingered, while blending his thoughts almost insensibly with their own, were less likely to quote directly from his written remains. Allusions and indirect citations are not wanting.

Clement’s words (§ 2) ‘His sufferings were before your eyes’ with the implied rebuke may perhaps be a faint reflection of Gal. iii. 1.

In the second so-called Epistle ascribed to Clement (§ 2), which though not genuine is a very early work, Is. liv. 1 is quoted and applied as in Gal. iv. 27.

The seven genuine Epistles of Ignatius contain several coincidences with this epistle.

Polye. § 1, ‘Bear all men, as the Lord beareth thee...Bear the ailments of all men,’ resembles Gal. vi. 2. (See however Matth. viii. 17, Rom. xv. 1.)

Romans § 7, ‘My passion is crucified,’ recalls Gal. v. 24, vi. 14.

¹ See p. 61.
GENUINENESS OF THE EPISTLE.

Philad. § 1, of the commission of the bishop, ‘not of himself or through men but in the love of the Lord Jesus Christ’ is an obvious reflexion of Gal. 1. 1.

Romans § 2, ‘I would not have you to be men-pleasers, but to please God,’ resembles Gal. i. 10.

Ephes. § 18, ‘The Cross a stumblingblock’ may be a reminiscence of Gal. ii. 21.

In Ephes. § 16 the expression ‘shall not inherit the kingdom of God’ is probably derived from Gal. v. 21.

Compare also

Trull. § 10 with Gal. ii. 21.
Magnes. § 5 with Gal. v. 6.
Magnes. § 8 with Gal. v. 4.

POLYCARP more than once adopts the language of this epistle;
c. 3 ‘Builted up unto the faith given you, “which is the mother of us all,”’ from Gal. iv. 26.
c. 5 ‘Knowing then that’ “God is not mocked,” we ought, etc.’ from Gal. vi. 7.
c. 6 ‘Zealous in what is good,’ may be taken from Gal. iv. 18; comp. Tit. ii. 14, 1 Pet. iii. 13 (v. l.).
c. 12 ‘Qui credituri sunt in Dominum nostrum et Deum Jesum Christum et in ipsius patrem, qui resuscitavit sum a mortuis,’ resembles Gal. i. 1; comp. Rom. iv. 24.

2. The Miscellaneous Writings of the Subapostolic Age present one or two vague resemblances on which no stress can be laid.

BARNABAS. A passage in the epistle bearing his name, c. 19, ‘Thou shalt communicate in all things with thy neighbour,’ reflects Gal. vi. 6.

HERMAS (c. 140 A.D.) Sim. ix. 13 has ‘They that have believed in God through His Son and put on these spirits.’ Comp. Gal. iii. 26, 27.

3. The Epistle to the Galatians is found in all the known Canons of Scripture proceeding from the Catholic Church in the Canons of Scripture or in any other extant writing, they seem in force and point so far above the level of Polycarp’s own manner, that I can scarcely doubt that he is quoting the language of one greater than himself. They ring almost like a sentence of St Paul.

1 The expression ‘knowing that’ (εἰδότες ἐστιν) in Polycarp seems to be a form of citation. In c. 1 it introduces a passage from Ephes. ii. 8, in c. 4 one from 1 Tim. vi. 7. It occurs once again in c. 6, ‘knowing that we all are debtors of sin.’ Though these words are not found either in the Canonical scriptures or in any other extant writing, they seem in force and point so far above the level of Polycarp’s own manner, that I can scarcely doubt that he is quoting the language of one greater than himself. They ring almost like a sentence of St Paul.
second century. It is contained in the Syriac and Old Latin versions, completed, it would appear, some time before the close of the century. It is distinctly recognised also in the Canon of the Muratorian Fragment (probably not later than 170 A.D.).

4. The Apologists, writing for unbelievers, naturally avoided direct quotations from the sacred writers, which would carry no weight of authority with those they addressed. Their testimony therefore is indirect.

The Epistle to Diognetus, c. 4, has the expression, 'The observance (παρατήρησιν) of months and of days,' derived apparently from Gal. iv. 10, 'Ye observe (παρατηρεῖτε) days and months etc.' In another passage, cc. 8, 9, the writer reproduces many of the thoughts of the Epistles to the Galatians and Romans.

Justin Martyr seems certainly to have known this epistle1. In the Dial. c. Tryph. cc. 95, 96, he quotes consecutively the two passages, 'Cursed is every one that continueth not, etc.' (Deut. xxvii. 26), and 'Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree' (Deut. xxxi. 23), and applies them as they are applied in Gal. iii. 10, 13. Moreover, he introduces the first in language closely resembling that of St Paul, 'Every race of men will be found under a curse (κατάραν) according to the law of Moses'; and cites both passages exactly as St Paul cites them, though they differ both from the Hebrew and the LXX2. Again in the Apol. i. 53, Justin applies Isaiah liv. 1, 'Rejoice, thou barren, etc.' (Gal. iv. 27). See the notes on iii. 10, 13, 28, iv. 27.

Melito in a passage in the 'Oration to Antoninus,' lately discovered in a Syriac translation3, uses language closely resembling Gal. iv. 8, 9.

1 In c. 5 of the Orat. ad Graecos, often ascribed to Justin and generally assigned to the second century, there are two indirect quotations from this epistle, iv. 12 and v. 20, 21. A recension of this treatise however, discovered of late years in a Syriac translation (Cureton's Spicil. Syr. p. 61), bears the name of Ambrose, by whom probably is meant the friend and pupil of Origen.

2 In Deut. xxvii. 26, δὲ οὐκ ἐμμ. ἐν πᾶσιν τοῖς γεγραμμένοις ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ τὸν χάμον τοῦ τ. αὐτά, for the lxx (which is nearer to the Hebrew) πᾶς ὀ ἄνθρωπος δοτὶ οὐκ ἐμμ. ἐν πᾶσιν τοῖς λόγοις τοῦ ν. τοῦ τοῦ τ. αὐτοῦ: in Deut. xxxi. 23, Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς, where the lxx, following the Hebrew, has Κατακαταράτως ὑπὸ Θεοῦ πᾶς.

GENUINENESS OF THE EPISTLE.

5. The evidence of Heretical writers, while it is more direct, is also more important, as showing how widely the epistle was received. Most of the references quoted below seem to belong to the first half of the century.

The Ophites appear to have made great use of this epistle. Several direct quotations from it were found in their writings; e.g. Gal. iv. 26, see Hippol. Haeres. v. 7, p. 106; Gal. iv. 27, see Hippol. v. 8, p. 114; Gal. iii. 28, vi. 15, see Hippol. v. 7, p. 99.

Justin, the Gnostic, alludes to Gal. v. 17: Hippol. v. 26, p. 155.

The Valentinians made use of it, Iren. i. 3. 5. A comment on Gal. vi. 14 is given by Irenæus from their writings, apparently from the works of Ptolemaeus.

Marcion included it in his Canon and attached great importance to it. See p. 36, note 1. Comp. also the note on iii. 19.

Tatian recognised it, quoting vi. 8 in support of his ascetic views: Hieron. Comm. ad Gal. ad loc.

6. Neither is the testimony of Adversaries of the second century wanting to the authenticity of this epistle.

Celsus, writing against the Christians, says contemptuously, 'Men who differ so widely among themselves and inveigh against each other most shamefully in their quarrels, may all be heard using the words (λέγοντων τῷ) "The world is crucified unto me and I unto the world."' (Gal. vi. 14.) 'This is the only sentence,' adds Origen, 'that Celsus seems to have recollected from Paul' (Orig. c. Cels. v. 64).

The Ebionite Author of the Clementine Homilies, writing in a spirit of bitter hostility to St Paul, who is covertly attacked in the person of Simon Magus, represents St Peter addressing Simon thus, 'Thou hast confronted and withstood me (,evavrios ἀνθένηκας μοί). If thou hast not been an adversary, thou wouldest not have calumniated and reviled my preaching...If thou callest me condemned (κατεγνωσμένον), thou accusest God...'

p. 9); but this may be accidental, as there is no other recognition of St Paul in the work. In another document of the same collection (p. 56) there is seemingly a reference to Gal. vi. 17. See also Clem. Hom. ix. 1.

1 See the Latin of Iren. i. 8. 5 ad fin., and comp. Westcott Canon, p. 304 (ed. 4).

2 To this list should be added Theodotus, Exc. ap. Clem. Alex. c. 53, p. 982 (Potter), where Gal. iii. 19, 20 is quoted: but the date and authorship of these excerpts are uncertain.
who revealed Christ to me': Hom. xvii. 19. See Gal. ii. 11, to which the allusion is obvious, and from which even the expressions are taken. Again, where Simon is accused of 'allegorizing the words of the law to suit his own purpose' (ii. 22), we can hardly mistake the reference to Gal. iv. 21 sq. In a third passage also St Peter maintaining the observance (παρατήρησιν) complains that 'One who had learnt from the tradition of Moses, blaming the people for their sins, contemptuously called them
Other resemblances, noted in Lagarde's edition (p. 31), are less striking: viii. 4 to Gal. i. 6; xviii. 21 to Gal. i. 8; viii. 18 (δι' αγγέλου νόμος φρίσθη) to Gal. iii. 19; ix. 1 to Gal. iv. 8. See more on this subject in the dissertation on 'St Paul and the Three' at the end of this volume.

7. Of Apocryphal Acts relating to St Paul one extant work at least seems to date from the second century:

Acts of Paul and Thecla § 40 (apparently the work referred to by Tertullian, de Baptism. § 17). The sentence, 'For he that wrought with thee unto the Gospel wrought with me also unto baptism,' is moulded on Gal. ii. 8.

8. Owing to the nature of the earliest Christian writings, the testimony hitherto brought forward has been for the most part indirect. As soon as a strictly Theological literature springs up in the Church, we find the epistle at once quoted distinctly and by name. This is the case with the writers of the close of the second century, Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria and Tertullian. From their position as representatives of widely separate branches of the Church, and their manner of quotation, which shows that the writings thus cited were recognised and authoritative, the importance of their testimony is much greater than might be inferred from their comparatively late date.

1 In compiling this account of the external evidence in favour of the epistle I have made use of Lardner's Credibility, of Kirchhofer's Quellensammlung, and especially of Westcott's History of the Canon. I have however gone over the ground independently, and added to the references.
V.

CHARACTER AND CONTENTS OF THE EPISTLE.

In discussing the relation of this epistle to the contemporaneous letters, I have dwelt on those features which it shares in common with them. It remains to point out some characteristics which are peculiarly its own.

1. The Epistle to the Galatians is especially distinguished among St Paul's letters by its unity of purpose. The Galatian apostasy in its double aspect, as a denial of his own authority and a repudiation of the doctrine of grace, is never lost sight of from beginning to end. The opening salutation broaches this twofold subject. The name 'Paul' has no sooner passed from his lips, than he at once launches into it. The long historical explanation which succeeds is instinct with this motive in all its details. The body of the letter, the doctrinal argument, is wholly occupied with it. The practical exhortations which follow all or nearly all flow from it, either as cautions against a rebound to the opposite extreme, or as suggesting the true rule of life of which the Galatians were following the counterfeit. Lastly, in the postscript he again brings it prominently forward. The two closing sentences reflect the twofold aspect of the one purpose, which has run through the letter. 'Henceforth let no man trouble me. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.' Thus his last words echo his first: 'Paul an Apostle not from men'; 'God who called you in the grace of Christ.'

1 Ewald Paulus, p. 55, 'Kein anderes schreiben ist so sehr wie dieses aus einem gedanken entsprungen, und keines ergiesst sich wie dieses in einem mächtig stürmischen aber unaufhalt- samen und ununterbrochenen strome.'

In this respect it contrasts strongly with the two letters to Corinth with which it possesses so many features in common. Like the First Epistle to the Corinthians, it was written with an immediate purpose to correct actual errors. But the difference is striking. The factions at Corinth were manifold, the irregularities were irregularities of detail not founded on any one broad principle of error, and the epistle necessarily reflects this varied character. Like the Second Epistle to the Corinthians again, it is a complete reflection of the Apostle's inner life. Yet the contrast is not less marked than before. In the one epistle he pours out his feelings without restraint, recurring to his own experiences, his own sorrows, freely and without any definite purpose. In the other the mention of himself is always subordinated to the purpose of the letter; however tumultuous may be the workings of his soul, they are all forced into this one channel. He never speaks of himself but to enforce the authority of his office or the liberty of the Gospel.

2. The sustained severity of this epistle is an equally characteristic feature with its unity of purpose. The Galatians are not addressed as the 'saints in Christ,' 'the faithful brethren.' The Apostle has no congratulations, no word of praise, for this apostate Church. Even on the Corinthians, in spite of all their shortcomings, he could lavish expressions of commendation and love. But the case is different here. The charity which 'hopeth against hope' seems to be strained to the utmost. For this once only the pervading type of his epistles is abandoned in the omission of the opening thanksgiving. The argument is interrupted every now and then by an outburst of indignant remonstrance. He is dealing with a thoughtless half-barbarous people. They have erred like children, and must be chastised like children. Rebuke may prevail where reason will be powerless.

The body of the letter seems to have been written by an amanuensis, but the final sentences were in the Apostle's own handwriting. It was his wont to add a few words at the close of his epistles, either to vouch for their authorship, or to impress some truth more strongly on his readers. Here the urgency of the case leads him to do more. In a few eager rugged sentences he gives an epitome of the contents of the epistle. These sentences are condensed beyond the ordinary compression of the Apostle's style. The language almost bursts with the surcharge of feeling. The very forms of the letters too bear witness to his intense earnestness. He writes in large bold characters to arrest the eye and rivet the mind. He has been accused of vacillation. There has been no want of firmness in the tone of the letter, and there shall be none in the handwriting. No man can henceforth question or misapprehend the Apostle's meaning.

A rough analysis of the epistle separates it into three sections of two chapters each, the first couplet (i, ii) containing the personal or narrative portion, the second (iii, iv) the argumentative or doctrinal, and the third (v, vi) the hortatory or practical. It will be borne in mind however, that in a writer like St Paul any systematic arrangement must be more or less artificial, especially where, as in the present instance, he is stirred by deep feelings and writes under the pressure of an urgent necessity. The main breaks however, occurring at the end of the second and fourth chapters, suggest this threefold division; and though narrative, argument, and exhortation, are to some extent blended together, each portion retains for the most part its own characteristic form.

The following is a more exact analysis of the contents of the epistle.

I. PERSONAL, chiefly in the form of a narrative. Analysis of the epistle.

1. The salutation and ascription of praise so worded as to introduce the main subject of the letter (i. 1—5).

2. The Apostle rebukes the Galatians for their apostasy, denounces the false teachers, and declares the eternal truth of the Gospel which he preached (i. 6—10).

1 Gal. vi. 11—18. See the notes on πηλικος γράμμασιν εγραφα.
3. This Gospel came directly from God.
   (i) He received it by special revelation (i. 11, 12).
   (ii) His previous education indeed could not have led up to it, for he was brought up in principles directly opposed to the liberty of the Gospel (i. 13, 14).
   (iii) Nor could he have learnt it from the Apostles of the Circumcision, for he kept aloof from them for some time after his conversion (i. 15—17).
   (iv) And when at last he visited Jerusalem, his intercourse with them was neither close nor protracted, and he returned without being known even by sight to the mass of the believers (i. 18—24).
   (v) He visited Jerusalem again, it is true, after a lapse of years, but he carefully maintained his independence. He associated with the Apostles on terms of friendly equality. He owed nothing to them (ii. 1—10).
   (vi) Nay more: at Antioch he rebuked Peter for his inconsistency. By yielding to pressure from the ritualists, Peter was substituting law for grace, and so denying the fundamental principle of the Gospel (ii. 11—21).

II. DOCTRINAL, mostly argumentative.

1. The Galatians are stultifying themselves. They are substituting the flesh for the Spirit, the works of the law for the obedience of faith, forgetting the experience of the past and violating the order of progress (iii. 1—5).
2. Yet Abraham was justified by faith, and so must it be with the true children of Abraham (iii. 6—9).
3. The law, on the contrary, so far from justifying, did but condemn, and from this condemnation Christ rescued us (iii. 10—14).
4. Thus He fulfilled the promise given to Abraham, which being prior to the law could not be annulled by it (iii. 15—18).
5. If so, what was the purpose of the law? (iii. 19).
   (i) It was an inferior dispensation, given as a witness against sin, a badge of a state of bondage, not as contrary to, but as preparing for, the Gospel (iii. 19—23).
   (ii) And so through the law we are educated for the freedom of the Gospel (iii. 24—29).
(iii) Thus under the law we were in our nonage, but now we are our own masters (iv. 1—7).
(iv) Yet to this state of tutelage the Galatians are bent on returning (iv. 8—11).

At this point the argument is broken off, while the Apostle reverts to his personal relations with his converts, and reprobrates the conduct of the false teachers (iv. 12—20).

6. The law indeed bears witness against itself. The relation of the two covenants of law and of grace, with the triumph of the latter, are typified by the history of Hagar and Sarah. The son of the bondwoman must give place to the son of the free (iv. 21—31).

"We are the children of the free." This word 'free' is the link of connexion with the third part of the epistle.

III. HORTATORY. Practical applications.

1. Hold fast by this freedom, which your false teachers are endangering (v. 1—12).

2. But do not let it degenerate into license. Love is the fulfilment of the law. Walk in the Spirit, and the Spirit will save you from licentiousness, as it saves you from formalism, both being carnal. Your course is plain. The works of the Spirit are easily distinguished from the works of the flesh (v. 13—26).

3. Let me add two special injunctions:

(i) Show forbearance and brotherly sympathy (vi. 1—5).
(ii) Give liberally (vi. 6—10).

Conclusion in the Apostle's own handwriting (vi. 11).

4. Once more: beware of the Judaizers, for they are insincere. I declare to you the true principles of the Gospel. Peace be to those who so walk (vi. 12—16).

5. Let no man deny my authority, for I bear the brand of Jesus my Master (vi. 17).

6. Farewell in Christ (vi. 18).

The armory of this epistle has furnished their keenest weapons to the combatants in the two greatest controversies which in modern times have agitated the Christian Church; the one a struggle for liberty within the camp, the other a war of defence against assailants from without; the one vitally affecting the doctrine, the other the evidences of the Gospel.
When Luther commenced his attack on the corruptions of the mediæval Church, he chose this epistle as his most efficient engine in overthrowing the mass of error which time had piled on the simple foundations of the Gospel. His commentary on the Galatians was written and rewritten. It cost him more labour, and was more highly esteemed by him, than any of his works. If age has diminished its value as an aid to the study of St Paul, it still remains and ever will remain a speaking monument of the mind of the reformer and the principles of the reformation.

Once again, in the present day, this epistle has been thrust into prominence by those who deny the divine origin of the Gospel. In this latter controversy however it is no longer to its doctrinal features, but to its historical notices, that attention is chiefly directed. 'The earliest form of Christianity,' it is argued, 'was a modified Judaism. The distinctive features of the system current under this name were added by St Paul. There was an irreconcilable opposition between the Apostle of the Gentiles and the Apostles of the Jews, a personal feud between the teachers themselves and a direct antagonism between their doctrines. After a long struggle St Paul prevailed, and Christianity—our Christianity—was the result.' The Epistle to the Galatians affords at once the ground for, and the refutation of, this view. It affords the ground, for it discovers the mutual jealousy and suspicions of the Jew and Gentile converts. It affords the refutation, for it shows the true relations existing between St Paul and the Twelve. It presents not indeed a colourless uniformity of feeling and opinion, but a far higher and more instructive harmony, the general agreement amidst some lesser differences and some human failings, of men animated by the same divine Spirit and working together for the same hallowed purpose, fit inmates of that Father's house in which are many mansions.

1 'The Epistle to the Galatians,' said Luther, 'is my epistle; I have betrothed myself to it: it is my wife.' See Seckendorf de Lutheran. L. i. § lxxxv. p. 139.
ΠΡΟΣ ΓΑΛΑΤΑΣ.
WHY SEEK YE THE LIVING AMONG THE DEAD?

The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
And God fulfilth Himself in many ways.
The two threads which run through this epistle—the defence of the Apostle’s own authority, and the maintenance of the doctrine of grace—are knotted together in the opening salutation. By expanding his official title into a statement of his direct commission from God (ver. 1), St Paul meets the personal attack of his opponents; by dwelling on the work of redemption in connexion with the name of Christ (ver. 4), he protests against their doctrinal errors. See the introduction, p. 63.

‘Paul an Apostle, whose authority does not flow from any human source, and whose office was not conferred through any human mediation, but through Jesus Christ, yea through God the Father Himself who raised Him from the dead—together with all the brethren in my company—to the Churches of Galatia. Grace the fountain of all good things, and peace the crown of all blessings, be unto you from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for our sins that He might rescue us from the tyranny of this present age with all its sins and miseries, according to the will of our God and Father, whose is the glory throughout all the ages. Amen.’

1—5. The first preposition denotes the fountain-head whence the Apostle’s authority springs, the second the channel through which it is conveyed. Thus in the first clause he distinguishes himself from the false apostles, who did not derive their commission from God at all; in the second he ranks himself with the Twelve, who were commissioned directly from God. The prepositions therefore retain their proper sense. ἀπό, as distinguished from ἀπ’ ἀπόστολος ἐν καὶ Θεοῦ πατρός, ἀλλὰ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ πατρός, uses consistently in the New Testament to denote the means or instrument, especially as describing either (1) the operations of our Lord, as the Word of God, e.g. 1 Cor. viii. 6 εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ ὑμῶν τὰ πάντα, or (2) the human agency employed in carrying out the divine purpose, e.g. 1 Cor. iii. 5 διάκονοι δι’ ὑμᾶς ἐπιστεύσατε. The change of preposition (‘of,’ ‘by’) in this passage carries with it the change of number also (‘men,’ ‘man’). Titles and offices which emanate from a body of men will be conferred by their single representative. The acts of the Senate took effect through the prince, those of the Sanhedrin through the high-priest. The transition to the singular moreover, independently of its own fitness, would suggest itself in anticipation of the clause διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which was to follow.

ἀλλὰ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] To what event does the Apostle here refer? When did he receive his commission from Christ Himself? In 1 Cor. ix. 1, he speaks of his having ‘seen the Lord Jesus,’ as a token of his apostleship; and this seems naturally to refer to the appearance on the way to Damascus, Acts ix. 3 sq. From this point of time therefore his commission dated.
It was essentially this revelation of our Lord which set him apart for his high office, though the outward investiture may have taken place through human agency at a later date: see Acts ix. 15-17, xiii. 2, 3. The intervention of the prophets and Church of Antioch may perhaps have given a colouring to the false representation that he was an 'Apostle of men.' See p. 98.

Cal
It might be expected that the first preposition (από) would have been resumed here, as more appropriate. It is incorrect, however, to say that διά is loosely used; for if there be any laxity of expression, it is rather in the connexion of the sentences than in the use of the prepositions. At the same time the Apostle's language, as it stands, is more forcible. By including both clauses under the same preposition, he expresses with greater emphasis the directness of his divine commission. The channel of his authority (διά) coincides with its source (ἀπό). The point of the sentence would have been blunted by inserting ἀπό. Nor indeed is the extension of διά to the second clause a violation of its strict meaning, which is observed perhaps with greater precision in the New Testament than elsewhere, owing to its recognised function, as describing the mediatorial office of the Son. Ἀπό, though by far the most common, is not the only preposition which may be used in speaking of the Father. He is the beginning, middle, and end of all His works (ἐκ αὐτοῦ καὶ διὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐστὶ αὐτῶν, Rom. xi. 36), and may therefore be regarded as the instrument, no less than the source, in the fulfilment of His own purposes.

This mode of expression will be adopted especially, where the writer is speaking of God's manifestation of Himself in some special act, as here in the raising of Jesus from the dead. Comp. iv. 7, 1 Cor. i. 9, and see Winer, Gramm. § xlvii. p. 473 sq. Marcion (Hieron. ad l.) cut the knot by omitting καὶ Θεοῦ ἀπόστολος, and apparently reading εὐαγγέλιον for αὐτόν.

Here the Apostle's words are 'By Jesus Christ and God the Father': immediately after he writes 'From God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ.' The one expression supplements the other: 'Thou, Father, in Me, and I in Thee' (John xvii. 21).

tοῦ ἐγείραντος αὐτοῦ ἐκ νεκρῶν 'who raised Him from the dead.' This expression occurs elsewhere with a more general reference to Christian faith or Christian life: Rom. iv. 24, viii. 11; comp. 1 Cor. xiv. 15. Here it has a special bearing on St Paul's apostleship, as the context shows. 'I was commissioned by the risen and glorified Lord: I am in all respects an Apostle, a qualified witness of His resurrection, and a signal instance of His power.'

2. οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ πάντες ἀδελφοί] 'all the brethren who are with me.' Probably the small band of his fellow-travellers is meant. See Phil. iv. 21, where he distinguishes 'the brethren who are with him' from 'all the saints,' i.e. from the resident members of the Church of Rome from which he is writing. For the bearing of this phrase on the date of the epistle, see p. 55. This company perhaps included Timothy (2 Cor. i. 1) and Erastus (Acts xix. 22). He may also at this time have been rejoined by Titus with the two brethren from Corinth (2 Cor. viii. 16-24), and may have had with him besides some of those who accompanied him afterwards on his return to Asia, as Tychicus and Trophimus.
for instance (Acts xx. 4, 5), if indeed they are not to be identified with the two brethren already mentioned.

The patristic writers, followed by several modern commentators, see in this expression a desire on the part of the Apostle to fortify his teaching by the sanction of others: "Faciens eis pudorem, quod contra omnes sentiunt," says Victorinus. Such a motive seems alien to the whole spirit of this epistle, in which all human authority is set aside. The Apostle in fact dismisses the mention of his companions as rapidly as possible in one general expression. He then returns to the singular, "I marvel," which he retains throughout the epistle. Paul's authority has been challenged, and Paul alone answers the challenge.

On this form of salutation see the notes 1 Thess. i. 1.

The reading of the received text, τοῦ ἀμαρτιῶν, is emphatic: 'with all its evils.' Comp. Arist. Eth. Nic. i. 13 καὶ γὰρ τὰ γάναθα ἀνθρώπων ἐξητούμενα καὶ τὴν εὐθαυσίαν ἀνθρώπων, Polit. ii. 9 τῶν γ' ἀδικημάτων ἐκουσίων τὰ πλείστα συμβαίνει κ.τ.λ. The reading of the received text, τοῦ
The author of the Clementines, who was certainly acquainted with this epistle (see p. 61), seems to have St Paul's expression in mind, Epist. Clem. 1, επὶ τοῦ ένεστώτος σωμάτως τόν έσόμενον αὐτόν δώκα εἰς τοὺς αἰώνας τῶν αἰώνων. Αμήν.

σωμάτως, is grammatically simpler, but less forcible.

If so, he appears to have interpreted the words 'from the foundation of the world' as referring them as events after interpolation). If so, he appears to have suggested. Comp. Polyb. viii. 38. 5 τοῦ ένεστώτα βασιλείας.

πάτρος πρίν ήμών 5 ώ ή δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰώνας τῶν αἰώνων. Αμήν.

Paul's expression in mind, becomes thus.

εἰς τὸν κόσμον ημῶν, elsewhere ἡμᾶς, as opposed to the other world, the world of eternity, ἡμῶν Καιρὸς Luke xx. 35, ἡμῶν ἡ χρόνιμος Luke viii. 20, ἡμῶν μέλλων Hebr. vi. 5, and often in the plural, τίς ἡμῶν, τίς ἡμῶν, and τίς ἡμῶν simply. This age, this world, is under the spiritual conception.

other passages however ἐνεστώτα is plainly 'present' as opposed to μέλλοντα 'future,' Rom. viii. 38, 1 Cor. iii. 22 (comp. Heb. ix. 9), in accordance with the sense it bears in the language of grammar, where ὁ χρόνος ὁ ἐνεστώς is 'the present tense.' Comp. Philo de Plant. Noe ii. § 27, p. 346 ἡ τριμεροῦς χρόνον, δι εἰς τὸν παρεληθήθηκα καὶ ἐνεστώτα καὶ μέλλοντα τέμνεσθαι πέφυκεν. Even in passages where it seems at first sight to have the sense 'impending, soon to come,' as in 1 Cor. vii. 26 διὰ τὴν ἐνεστώσαν αἰῶναν, 2 Thess. ii. 2 ἐνεστηκέν ὡς ἡμέρα, its proper meaning is more appropriate.

κατὰ τὸ θέλημα] 'by the will of God' and not by our own merits. St Paul is still insisting on the dispensation of grace impugned by the false teachers. Compare τὸν κάλεσμας, ver. 6.

πάτρος ήμῶν] Comp. Phil. iv. 20. Does ἡμῶν refer to Θεὸν as well as πατρός, 'Our God and Father'? On the whole this seems probable; for the article, not being necessary before Θεὸν, seems to be added to bind the two clauses together and connect both with ἡμῶν. The same construction is justified in the case of the similar expression, ὁ Θεὸς καὶ πατήρ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (2 Cor. i. 3, Ephes. i. 3), by John xx. 17, 'I ascend to my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.' See Fritzsche on Rom. iii. p. 233. In ver. 1 the word 'Father' refers especially though not solely to Christ, in ver. 4 to mankind, while in ver. 3 it seems to be used absolutely.

5. Speaking of the mercy of God, as shown in man's redemption through the death of Christ, the Apostle bursts out in an ascription of praise, 'Infinitis beneficis infinita gloria debetur,' says Pelagius. For similar outbursts of thanksgiving see Rom. vii. 25, ix. 5, xi. 36, 2 Cor. ix. 15, Ephes. iii. 20.
I. 6] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

6 Θαυμάζω ὑπὸ οὕτως ταχέως μετατίθεσθε ἀπὸ τοῦ καλέσαντος ὑμᾶς ἐν χάριτι Χριστοῦ εἰς ἑτέρου εὐαγ-

η δόξα] 'the glory, which is pre-eminent, the glory which belongs to him': comp. Joh. xvii. 5. The article is almost universally found with δόξα in these doxologies. Contrast with this the absence of the article in Rom. ii. 10, 1 Cor. xi. 15. It is probable therefore that we should supply τοῦ in such cases rather than ἐστί. It is an affirmation rather than a wish. Glory is the essential attribute of God. See I Pet. iv. 11 η δόξα, and the doxology added to the Lord's prayer, Matt. vi. 13.

εἰς τοὺς ἀλαῶν τοὺς ἀλῶνον] 'for endless ages;' opposed to the present finite and transitory age (ver. 4). Compare Ephes. ii. 2, 7, where this opposition is brought out more strongly.

6—9. An indignant expression of surprise takes the place of the usual thanksgiving for the faith of his converts. This is the sole instance where St Paul omits to express his thankfulness in addressing any church. See the introduction, p. 64.

'I marvel that ye are so ready to revolt from God who called you, so reckless in abandoning the dispensation of grace for a different gospel. A different gospel, did I say? Nay, it is not another. There cannot be two gospels. Only certain men are shaking your allegiance, attempting to pervert the Gospel of Christ. A vain attempt, for the Gospel perverted is no Gospel at all. Yea, though we ourselves or an angel from heaven (were it possible) should preach to you any other gospel than that which we have preached hitherto, let him be accursed. I have said this before, and I repeat it now. If any man preaches to you any other gospel than that which ye were taught by us, let him be accursed.'

6. οὕτως ταχέως] 'so quickly.' If by 'so quickly' we understand 'so soon,' it must mean 'so soon after your conversion,' as the words following show. For the bearing of this expression on the date of the epistle see p. 41. It is possible however that ταχέως here may signify 'readily,' 'rashly,' i.e. quickly after the opportunity is offered, a sense which the present tense (μετατίθεσθ) would facilitate. See 1 Tim. v. 22 χείρας ταχέως μηδεὶς ἐπιτίθει, 2 Thess. ii. 2 εἰς τὸ μὴ ταχέως σαλευθήμα. In this case there will be no reference to any independent point of time.

μετατίθεσθε] 'are turning renegades;' the middle voice, as may be seen from the passages quoted below. Μετατίθεσθαι is used (1) of desertion or revolt, i.e. of military or political defection, as in Polyb. xxvi. 2. 6 ταχέως καὶ τοὺς παλασμένους μετατίθεσθαι πρὸς τὴν Ρωμαίων ἀφεσιν, and frequently (2) of a change in religion, philosophy, or morals, 1 Kings xxi. 25 ὥς μετέβηκεν αὐτὸν ἤεξάβηλ ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ, Iamb. Protrept. c. 17 μετατίθεσθαι ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀπλήσατος καὶ ἀκολόσωτος ἕχοντας βίου ἐπὶ τὸν κοσμόν. Dionysius of Heraclea, who from being a Stoic became an Epicurean, was called μετατίθεμενος, 'turncoat' (ἀντικρὺς ἀποδεῖ τὸν τὴς ἀρετῆς χαίτων ἀνδρά μεταμφίασα Athen. vii. p. 281 b). The word is frequently used however of 'conversion' in a good sense, as in Justin Apol. π. pp. 83 b, 91 d, etc.

τοῦ καλέσαντος ὑμᾶς ἐν χάριτι] 'Him who called you in grace.' St Paul here states the distinctive features of the true Gospel which the Galatians had set aside: first, as regards its source, that conversion comes of God ('Him that called you') and not of themselves; and secondly, as regards the instrument, that it is a covenant of grace, not of works. For the omission of Θεοῦ, see the note on i. 15.
76

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

γέλιον, ἵνα οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο, εἰ μὴ τινὲς εἰσίν οἱ ταράσσοντες ὑμᾶς καὶ θέλοντες μεταστρέψαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον

Χριστόυ] is generally omitted in the Latin authorities, while some others read Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, and even Θεοῦ. All these may possibly have been glosses to explain τοῦ καλέσαντος. Certainly the passage seems to gain in force by the omission. The implied antithesis between the true gospel of grace and the false gospel of works thus stands out in bolder relief: comp. Ephes. ii. 8 τῇ χάριτι ἐστε σωσιμένοι. It is found however in the best MSS. and is supported by such passages as Acts xv. 11, διὰ τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ πιστεύομεν σωθίμαι. If retained, it must be taken after χάριτι, and not with τοῦ καλέσαντος as in the Peschito, for ὁ καλέσας in St Paul’s language is always the Father.

6, 7. εἰς ἑτέρων εὐαγγ., κ.τ.λ.] 'to a second, a different gospel, which is not another.' This is not an admission in favour of the false teachers, as though they taught the one Gospel, however perverted (comp. Phil. i. 15, 18). Such a concession would be quite alien to the spirit of this passage. 'It is not another gospel,' the Apostle says, 'for there cannot be two gospels, and as it is not the same, it is no gospel at all.' The relative ὁ cannot without grossness be referred to anything else but ἑτέρων εὐαγγέλιον.

ἑτέρων] implies a difference of kind, which is not involved in ἄλλο. The primary distinction between the words appears to be, that ἄλλος is another as 'one besides,' ἑτέρος another as 'one of two.' The fundamental sense of ἑτέρος is most clearly marked in its compounds, as ἑτέροφθαλμος, 'one-eyed.' Thus ἄλλος adds, while ἑτέρος distinguishes. Now when our attention is confined to two objects, we naturally compare and contrast them; hence ἑτέρος gets to signify 'unlike, opposite,' as Xen. Cyrop. viii. 3. 8 ἵνα μου κατηγορήσῃς εἰσιν διακόνω, ἑτέροι μοι χρήση διακόνω, i.e. 'changed,' where ἄλλο could not stand. In Exod. i. 8 ἄνστι τῇ βασιλείᾳ ἑτέρος εἶπ· Αἰγυπτίων, it is a translation of νέων 'novus'; and the idea of difference is frequently prominent in the word as used in the LXX. Thus while ἄλλος is generally confined to a negation of identity, ἑτέρος sometimes implies the negation of resemblance. See 2 Cor. xi. 4, where the two words are used appropriately, as they are here. In many cases however they will be interchangeable: comp. Matt. xi. 3 with Luke vii. 20. Hesychius explains ἑτέρον ἄλλον ὡς ἄλλοιον ἢ ἐν τοῖς διοικ. ἢ ἀντιτέρον, νέων, διετέρον.

7. εἰ μὴ τινὲς, κ.τ.λ.] 'Only in this sense is it another gospel, in that it is an attempt to pervert the one true Gospel.' Εἰ μὴ seems always to retain, at least in this stage of the language, its proper exceptive sense, and is not simply opposite, though it frequently approaches nearly to ἄλλα; see the note on i. 19. Here the following ἑτέρωτες, which is slightly emphatic ('attempting to, though without success'), justifies the exception taken by εἰ μὴ. τινὲς εἰσίν οἱ ταράσσοντες a somewhat unusual construction for οἱ ταράσσοντες. It occurs however even in classical writers, e.g. Soph. Οἰ. Ed. Col. 1023 ἄλλοι γὰρ οἱ σπεύδωτες, Lysias pro Arist. bon. § 57 εἰσὶ δὲ τινὲς οἱ πρωαναλίκιοι τοις (the latter passage is quoted with others by Winer, § xviii. p. 136), and more commonly in the New Testament, e.g. Col. ii. 8 βλέπετε μὴ τις ἔσται ὁ συλλογωγόν, Luke xviii. 9. See the note on iii. 21. For τινὲς applied by St Paul to his adversaries, see ii. 12, 1 Cor. iv. 18, 2 Cor. iii. 1, x. 2. Other interpretations of this clause have been proposed, all of which seem to do violence either to the sense or the grammar.
I. 8, 9] EPISODE TO THE GALATIANS.

τοῦ Χριστοῦ. ἡμεῖς ἠγγελος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ εὐαγγελίζηται [ὑμῖν] παρ᾽ ὑμῖν ἐνηγγελίσαμεθα ὑμῖν, ἀνάθεμα ἐστώ. ὑς προειρήκαμεν καὶ ἀρτὶ πάλιν ταράσσοντες] not 'troubling your minds,' but 'raising seditions among you, shaking your allegiance,' a continuation of the metaphor of μετατρέψητε. The phrase ταράσσειν τῷ πόλιν is commonly used of factions, e.g. Aristoph. Eq. 863. See the note on v. 10. μετατρέψει] properly, 'to reverse, to change to the opposite,' and so stronger than διαστρέψας, which is simply 'to distort,' 'wrench': comp. Arist. Rhet. i. 15 καὶ τὸ τοῦ ξενοφάνους μετατρέψαντα φασίν κ.τ.λ. What was the idea prominent in the Apostle's mind when he called this heresy a 'reversal' of the Gospel may be gathered from iii. 3.

τοῦ Χριστοῦ] On the genitive see the notes on 1 Thess. ii. 2.

8, 9. The difference of moods in these two verses is to be noticed. In the former, a pure hypothesis is put forward, in itself highly improbable (ἐνηγγελίζηται): in the latter, a fact which had actually occurred, and was occurring (ἐνηγγελίσαμεθα).

καὶ ἐὰν preserves its proper sense of 'etiamsi,' as distinguished from ἐὰν καὶ 'etsi.' See Hermann Viger p. 832, Jelf Gramm. § 861. In other words, it introduces a highly improbable supposition. With this passage contrast the meaning of ἐὰν καὶ as it occurs in vi. 1, ἐὰν καὶ προλημφῇ.

ἡμεῖς] 'we.' St Paul seems never to use the plural when speaking of himself alone. Here it would include those who had been his colleagues in preaching to the Galatians, such as Silas and Timothy. The latter especially would be referred to, as he seems to have been with the Apostle on both visits to Galatia, and was probably in his company when this letter was written. See the note on i. 2.

ὑμῖν] is doubtful, being found both before and after εὐαγγελίζηται in different texts, and in some omitted entirely.

παρ᾽] On the interpretation of these words a controversy on 'tradition' has been made to hinge, Protestant writers advocating the sense of 'besides' for παρά. Roman Catholics that of ' contrary to.' The context is the best guide to the meaning of the preposition. St Paul is here asserting the oneness, the integrity of his Gospel. It will not brook any rival. It will not suffer any foreign admixture. The idea of 'contrariety' therefore is alien to the general bearing of the passage, though independently of the context the preposition might well have this meaning.

ἀνάθεμα] is the common (Hellenistic), ἀνάθημα the classical (Attic) form. See Lobeck Phryn. pp. 249, 445, Paralip. p. 417. But though originally the same, the two forms gradually diverged in meaning; ἀνάθημα getting to signify ' devoted ' in a good, and ἀνάθεμα in a bad sense. See Trench. N. T. Synon. § v. p. 14; Fritzsche on Rom. ix. 3. This is a common phenomenon in all languages, e.g. in English 'cant,' 'chant,' 'human,' ' humane,' 'human,' with other examples given in Trench Study of Words, p. 156; see also Max Muller's Science of Language, 2nd ser. p. 262 sq. Such divergences of meaning are generally to be traced to the different sources from which the varying forms are derived. In the present instance the distinction seems to have arisen from the fact that the sense 'an accursed thing' would be derived chiefly through the Hellenist writers of the lxx, the sense ' an offering ' mostly. through classical authors. The distinction of meaning however is only general, not universal. Pseudo-Justin, Quaest. et resp. 121 (p. 190, Otto), assigns both meanings to ἀνάθεμα, as Theodoret (on Rom. ix. 3) does to ἀνάθημα. 'Ἀνάθημα occurs only once in the New Testament, Luke xxi. 5, and there in the sense of 'an offering,' in accordance with the distinction given above.

It is doubted whether ἀνάθεμα here means 'excommunicated' or 'accursed'; i.e. whether it refers to ecclesiastical censure or spiritual condition. The latter alone seems tenable; for (1) it is the LXX. translation of the Hebrew דָּבָר, e.g. Josh. vii. 1, 12. This word is used in the Old Testament of a person or thing set apart and devoted to destruction, because hateful to God. Hence in a spiritual application it denotes the state of one who is alienated from God by sin. But on the other hand it seems never to signify 'excommunicated,' a sense which is not found till much later than the Christian era. (2) In no passage is the sense of ecclesiastical censure very appropriate to ἀνάθεμα, like the corresponding דָּבָר, underwent a change of meaning, getting to signify 'excommunicated,' and this is the common patristic sense of the word. It was not unnatural therefore, that the fathers should attempt to force upon St Paul the ecclesiastical sense with which they were most familiar, as Theodoret does for instance, on 1 Cor. xvi. 22, explaining ἀνάθεμα ἐστω by ἀλλότριος ἐστω τοῦ κοινοῦ σώματος τῆς ἐκκλησίας.

9. ὡς προειρήκαμεν] 'as we have told you before,' probably on the occasion of his second visit, when he already discerned unhealthy symptoms in the Galatian Church. See p. 25. The distinction between the singular (λέγω) where St Paul is writing in his own person, and the plural (προειρήκαμεν) where he is speaking of the joint labours of himself and his colleagues, is to be observed. See the note on ἦμεις ver. 8.

καὶ ἀρτι πάλιν] 'so now again.' ἀρτι here denotes strictly present, as opposed to past time—a late use of the word. See Lobeck Phryn. p. 18 sq.

πάλιν] 'again,' is not to be referred, as it is taken by some, to the preceding verse, in the sense 'I repeat what I have just said.' Against this interpretation two objections lie: (1) St Paul in that case would have used the singular προειρήκαμεν (which indeed is found in some texts), as throughout the epistle he writes in his own person alone; and (2) The words καὶ ἀρτι mark some greater distinction of time than this interpretation would allow.

ὑμᾶς ἐναγγέλιζεται] In classical writers this verb takes only a dative of the person, in later Greek it has differently a dative or an accusative. See Lobeck Phryn. p. 266 sq. and Ellicott on 1 Thess. iii. 6.

10. 'Let him be accursed, I say. What, does my boldness startle you? Is this, I ask, the language of a time-server? Will any say now that, careless of winning the favour of God, I seek to conciliate men, to ingratiate myself with men? If I had been content thus to compromise, I should have been spared all the sufferings, as I should have been denied all the privileges, of a servant of Christ.'
time before his conversion. ‘Conciliation’ is no fit term to apply to the fierce bigotry of Saul, the persecutor of the Church of Christ. The errors of his early career are the offsprings of blind zeal, and not of worldly policy (1 Tim. i. 13). The explanation is doubtless to be found in the charges of inconsistency brought against him by the Judaizers. They had misrepresented certain acts of his past life, and branded him as a temporiser. There shall be no doubt about his language now. He had formerly, they said, preached the Mosaic law, because forsooth he had become as a Jew to the Jews. Let them judge now whether he would make concessions to conciliate those who had a leaning towards Judaism.
This yap has therefore no connexion with the τον of ver. 9. The suppressed allusion to the Judaizers also explains the particle
‘I speak
thus strongly, for my language shall not be misconstrued, shall wear no semblance of compromise.’

ανθρωπός; πείθω ἣ τῶν Θεῶν] ‘do I concur, make friends of men or of God?’ Though the idea of persuasion is not strictly applicable in the case of God (comp. 2 Cor. v. 11, ανθρώπως πείθεις, Θεῶς δὲ πεφανερωμέθα), yet πείθω is fitly extended to the second clause in reference to the language of his enemies. ‘You charge me with a policy of conciliation. Yes; I conciliate God.’ ‘De humano usu sumpnum est,’ says Jeroma. On the article Bengel pointedly remarks: ‘ανθρώπος, homines; hoc sine articulo: at mox τῶν Θεῶν, Deum cum articulo.
Dei solius habenda est ratio.’ See also the note on iv. 31.

ανθρώπως ἀδέσκειν] So i Thess. ii. 4;
comp. ανθρωπόταξις, Ephes. vi. 6, Col.
iii. 22 (with the note).

ζητεῖ ‘still.’ After what? ‘After all that has befallen me: after all the experiences I have had.’ Compare the ζητεῖ of v. 11. Both passages find an explanation in vi. 17; ‘Henceforth let no man trouble me.’ See the introduction, p. 51. The ζητεῖ does not imply that St Paul ever had been a time-server. It is equivalent to, ‘at this stage,’ ‘at this late date.’ The insertion of γάρ after εἰ in the received text is one of the many attempts of transcribers to smooth down the ruggedness of St Paul’s style.

Χριστοῦ δούλος οὐκ ἂν ἦμεν] ‘I should not have been a servant of Christ,’ perhaps with an indirect reference to the marks of persecution which he bore on his body (τὰ στυγ-ματα τού Ιησοῦ, vi. 17); ‘I should not have been branded as His slave,
I should not have suffered for Him.’
Comp. v. 11, ‘If I yet preach circumcision, why am I yet persecuted?’

II. 12. ‘I assure you, brethren, the Gospel you were taught by me is not of human devising. I did not myself receive it from man, but from Jesus Christ. I did not learn it, as one learns a lesson, by painful study.
It flashed upon me, as a revelation
from Jesus Christ.’

II. Γνωρίζω υἱῶν] ‘I declare to you’ introduces some statement on which the Apostle lays special emphasis, 1 Cor. xii. 3, xv. 1, 2 Cor. viii.
1. (Compare the similar phrase, ‘I would not have you ignorant.’) Both this phrase and the following, καὶ ανθρώπου, are confined to the epistles of this chronological group.

The best authorities are nearly equally divided between δὲ and γάρ.
The former, resuming the subject which has been interrupted by his defence of himself, is more after the Apostle's manner, while the latter would seem the obvious connecting particle to transcribers. On the other hand δέ may possibly have been substituted for -περι here, because it is found with γνωρίζω (γνωρευ) in 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2 Cor. viii. 1.

11. οὖν δέ γὰρ ἐγὼ παρὰ ἀνθρώπου παρέλαβον αὐτὸ οὕτε ἐδιδάχθην, ἀλλὰ δὲ ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Ἡκούσατε γὰρ τὴν ἐμὴν ἀναστροφὴν ποτὲ ἐν τῷ Ἰου-

12. οὖν δέ ἐδιδάχθην.

The present tense is used instead of the imperfect to show the permanence and unchangeableness of his Gospel. See ii. 2.

κατὰ ἀνθρώπου] 'after any human fashion or standard.' See on iii. 15.

12. οὖν δέ γὰρ ἐγὼ] 'For to go a step farther back, neither did I myself receive it from man.' The force of the particle οὖν is best sought for in the context. οὖν δέ ἐγὼ παρέλαβον answers to τὸ εἰσαγελῶσθαι ὑπὲ ἐμὸν οὐκ ἔστω, as παρὰ ἀνθρώπου answers to κατὰ ἀνθρώπου. Others explain it 'I as little as the Twelve,' 'I in whom perhaps it might have been expected': but such interpretations are not reflected in the context.

παρὰ ἀνθρώπου παρέλαβον] The idea in the preposition is sufficiently wide to include both the ἀπὸ and ἐκ of ver. 1. I do not think the distinction given by Winer § xivii. p. 463, and others, between λαμβάνειν παρὰ Κύριον and λαμβάνειν ἀπὸ Κύριον (1 Cor. xi. 23), as denoting respectively direct and indirect communication, can be insisted upon. It is true, that while ἀπὸ contemplates only the giver, παρὰ in a manner connects the giver with the receiver, denoting the passage from the one to the other, but the links of the chain between the two may be numerous, and in all cases where the idea of transmission is prominent παρὰ will be used in preference to ἀπὸ, be the communication direct or indirect; so Phil. iv. 18 ἐξέγειμον παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου τὰ παράμοια: comp. Plat. Symp. 202 e. The verb παραλαμβάνειν may be used either of the ultimate receiver or of any intermediate agent, provided that the idea of transmission be retained; i.e. it may be either (1) to receive as transmitted to oneself, 2 Thess. iii. 6, or (2) to receive so as to transmit to others. In this latter sense it is used of the Apostles, who receiving the Gospel directly from the Lord passed it to others. See 1 Cor. xi. 23, xv. 1, 3, and compare παραγγελία.

οὗτε ἐδιδάχθην] The authorities being nearly equally divided between οὖτε and οὖν, I have with some hesitation retained the former in the text, as being the less regular collocation (οὖν δὲ...οὗτε), and therefore more likely to be altered. In this case another οUSART is to be understood before παρέλαβον, the δὲ of οὖν having reference to the former sentence. See Winer § iv. 6, p. 617, and esp. A. Buttmann p. 315.

ἐδιδάχθην is added to explain and enforce παρὰ ἀνθρώπου παρέλαβον, and thus to bring out the contrast with δὲ ἀποκαλύψεως: 'I received it not by instruction from man but by revelation from Christ.' For a somewhat similar contrast see Cic. pro Mil. c. 4. 'Est enim haec, judices, non scripta sed nata lex; quam non didicimus, accepimus, legimus, verum ex natura ipsa arripuimus, haussimus, expressimus.'

13, 14. 'My early education is a proof that I did not receive the Gospel from man. I was brought up in a rigid school of ritualism, directly opposed to the liberty of the Gospel. I was from age and temper a staunch adherent of the principles of that school. Acting upon them, I relentlessly persecuted the Christian brotherhood. No human agency therefore could have brought about the change. It required a direct interposition from God.'

13. ἠκούσατε ἡμῖν ψωλ. 'ye heard,' I told you, when I was with you.' The history of his past career as a persecutor formed part of his preaching: see Acts xxii. 2—21, xxvi. 4—23, i Cor. xv. 8—10: comp. Phil. iii. 6, I Tim. i. 13. The A.V., 'ye have heard,' gives a wrong meaning.

ἀναστροφὴν ποτὲ [for the more usual ποτὲ ἀναστροφὴν, as ver. 23 ὁ διώκων ἡμᾶς ποτὲ. Similar displacements of words, which would ordinarily come between the article and substantive, are frequent in the New Testament. See on i Thess. i. 1; and Winer § xx. p. 169 sq.

'Ιουδαίσμῳ [ἀποκατάστασις διασπορᾶς]. The word does not in itself imply any diaparagement. Comp. 2 Macc. ii. 21 τὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ 'Ιουδαίσμου φιλοτίμως ἀνδραγαθήσαν, xiv. 38 σώμα καὶ ψυχὴν ὑπὲρ τοῦ 'Ιουδαίσμου παραβεβλημένος, and 'Ιουδαίες Gal. ii. 14. Though perhaps originally coined by the heathen and, as used by them, conveying some shadow of contempt, it would, when neutralised among the Jews themselves, lose this idea and even become a title of honour. The case of Χριστιανός, likewise a term of reproach in the first instance, is a parallel.

14. Though perhaps originally coined by the heathen and, as used by them, conveying some shadow of contempt, it would, when neutralised among the Jews themselves, lose this idea and even become a title of honour. The case of Χριστιανός, likewise a term of reproach in the first instance, is a parallel.

GAL.
these extreme partizans, forming into a separate sect under Judas of Galilee, took the name of 'zealots' par excellence, and distinguished themselves by their furious opposition to the Romans: Joseph. Antig. xviii. 1. 1, 6. See Ewald Gesch. des Volkes Is. v. p. 25 sq. p. 322, VI. p. 340.

'tων παρικῶν μου παραδόσεων' 'of the traditions handed down from my fathers?' It is doubtful whether the law of Moses is included in this expression. In Josephus τὰ ἐκ παραδόσεως τῶν πατέρων (Antig. xiii. 10, 6), ἡ πατρία παράδοσις (ib. 16, 2), are the Pharisaic traditions, as distinguished from the written law. See also Matth. xv. 2, 3, 6, Mark vii. 3, 5, 8, 9, 13. These passages seem to show that the word παραδόσεις, which might in itself include equally well the written law, signified in the mouth of a Jew the traditional interpretations and additions (afterwards embodied in the Mishna), as distinguished from the text on which they were founded and which they professed to supplement.

15-17. 'Then came my conversion. It was the work of God's grace. It was foreordained, before I had any separate existence. It was not therefore due to any merits of my own, it did not spring from any principles of my own. The revelation of His Son in me, the call to preach to the Gentiles, were acts of His good pleasure. Thus converted, I took no counsel of human advisers. I did not betake myself to the elder Apostles, as I might naturally have done. I secluded myself in Arabia, and, when I emerged from my retirement, instead of going to Jerusalem, I returned to Damascus.'

15. ὁ ἀφορίσας] 'who set me apart, devoted me to a special purpose': Rom. i. ὁ ἀφορίσας ἐκ εὐαγγελίων ἔοι. See also Acts xiii. 2 ἀφορίσατε δὴ μοι κ.τ.λ. The words ὁ ἔοι of the received text are to be struck out as a gloss, though a correct one. Similar omissions are frequent in St Paul; see i. 6, ii. 8, iii. 5, v. 8, Rom. viii. 11, Phil. i. 6, i Thess. v. 24.

Observe how words are accumulated to tell upon the one point on which he is insisting—the sole agency of God as distinct from his own efforts: εὐδόκησεν, ἀφορίσας, ἐκ κολιας μητρὸς μου, καλέσας, χάριτος αὐτοῦ.

ἐκ κολιας μητρὸς μου] 'from before my birth, before I had any impulses, any principles of my own.' For the expression see Judges xvi. 17 ἀγίος Ἱερών έγό εἰμι ἢ κολιας μητρὸς μου, Is. xlv. 2, 24, xliii. 1, 5 ὁ πλάσας με ἐκ κολιας δοῦλον ἐστώ, Psalm lxix. 6 ἐκ κολιας μητρὸς μου σὺ μου εἰ σκέπασίς, and frequently in the lxix. The preposition seems to be merely temporal. The Δ. V., 'who separated me from my mother's womb,' obscures, if it does not misinterpret, the sense.

καλέσας διὰ τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ] See the note on i. 6.

16. Three separate stages in the history of the Apostle's consecration to his ministry seem to be mentioned here. First, the predestination to his high office, which dated from before his birth (ὁ ἀφορίσας με κ.τ.λ.); Secondly, the conversion and call to the Apostleship, which took place on the way to Damascus, Acts ix. 3 sq (καλέσας διὰ τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ); and Thirdly, the entering upon his ministry in fulfilment of this call, Acts ix. 20 sq. xiii. 2, 3 (ἀποκαλύψαι ἐν ἐμοί ἵνα εὐαγγελίζωμαι).

The distinction of these three stages seems well marked; and if so, this dotermines the meaning of ἐν ἐμοί. It does not speak of a revelation made inwardly to himself, but of a revelation made through him to others. The preposition ἐν is used in preference to τῷ, because St Paul was not only the instrument in preaching the Gospel, but also in his own person bore the strongest testimony to its power. He constantly places his conversion in this light; see ver. 24 ἐν ἐμοί Ἄγγελος Ἰησοῦς διὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 1 Tim. i. 16 διὰ τοῦ ἡλείου ἵνα ἐν ἐμοί πρῶτον ἐνείληση Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς τὴν ἀπαναμέτρητα μακροθυμίαν πρὸς ὑποτεθον τῶν μελλόντων πιστευόντων κ.τ.λ., 2 Cor. xiii. 3 τοῦ ἐν ἐμοί λαλούσως Χριστῷ, Phil. i. 30. The rendering of ἐν ἐμοί 'within me,' i.e. 'in my heart,' seems neither to suit the context so well, nor to be so natural in itself.

ἐνθεώς οὐ προσαναθέμεν τῇ κλ.] 'forthwith, instead of conferring with flesh and blood, etc., I departed to Arabia.' Ου ἀναφιέσαι see the note ii. 2. In the double compound προσαναθέμενς the idea of communication or consultation is stronger. The use of the word in heathen writers indirectly illustrates its sense here. It is employed especially of consulting soothsayers, and the like, as in Chrysippus (in Suidas, s.v. νεστώς) προσαναθέμεν διὰμορφότητι, Diod. Sic. xvii. 116 τοῖς μάρτυρις προσαναθέμενοι περὶ τοῦ σημείου. Comp. Lucian Ημ. Trag. § 1 (Π. p. 642). ἐμοί προσαναθήκα, λάβε μὲ σύμβουλον πόνως. See the note ii. 6.

For σαρκὶ καὶ αἷμα compare our Lord's words to St Peter, Matt. xvi. 17 'Flesh and blood did not reveal it unto thee.'

17. ἀνῆλθον] 'I came up.' This verb and ἀναβαινόν are used especially of visiting Jerusalem, situated in the high lands of Palestine, as κατέρχετο, καταβαίνον, are of leaving it. See Luke x. 30, Acts xi. 27, xii. 19, xv. 1, 2, xxi. 15, xxv. 1, 6, 7, and especially Acts xviii. 22, xxiv. 1. In the two last passages ἀναβαίνον and καταβαίνον are used absolutely without any mention of Jerusalem, this being implied in the expressions 'going up,' 'going down.' Here the various reading ἀνῆλθον has great claims to a place in the text. Both words occur in the context and it is difficult to say in favour of which reading the possible confusion of transcribers may more justly be urged. Perhaps however it is improbable that St Paul should have written ἀνῆλθον twice consecutively, as the repetition makes the sentence run awkwardly; though in Rom. viii. 15, 1 Cor. ii. 13, Heb. xii. 18, 22, something of the kind occurs.

τοῖς πρὸ ἐμοὶ ἀποστόλοις] 'those who were Apostles before me,' possibly including others besides the Twelve, especially James. See below, p. 95, note 4. For the expression compare Rom. xvi. 7, σὺν τοῖς ἐν οἴκοις ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστολοῖς οί καὶ πρὸ ἐμοὶ γέγοναν ἐν Χριστῷ, where however the construction is doubtful.

 eius Δαμασκοῦ] A danger which threatened St Paul's life on this occasion seems to have left a deep impression on his mind, and is mentioned by him in another epistle, nearly contemporaneous with this, 2 Cor. xi. 32.

18–24. 'Not till three years were past did I go up to Jerusalem. My object in doing so was to confer with Cephas. But I did not remain with him more than a fortnight; and of all the other Apostles I saw only James the Lord's brother. As in the sight of God, I declare to you that every word I write is true. Then I went to the distant regions of Syria and Cilicia. Thus I was personally unknown to the Christian brotherhood in Judæa. They had only heard that their former persecutor was now preaching the very faith which before he had attempted to destroy; and they glorified God for my conversion.'

18. μετὰ τρία ἐτη. From what point of time are these three years reckoned? Probably from the great epoch of his life, from his conversion. The 'straightway' of ver. 16 leads to this conclusion; 'At first I conferred not with flesh and blood, it was only after the lapse of three years that I went to Jerusalem.'

'Ἰεροσόλυμα' is generally a neuter plural. In Matt. ii. 3 however we have πάντα Ἰεροσόλυμα. See A. Butt-

'Ισταρῆσαι Κηφᾶν' 'to visit Cephas.' Ἰσταρῆσαι is somewhat emphatic: 'A word used,' says Chrysostom, 'by those who go to see great and famous cities.' It is generally said of things and places; less commonly, as here, of persons: comp. Joseph. Bell. Jud. vi. 1. 8 ἀνήρ ἄν ἐγὼ κατ' ἑκάστων ἰσταρῆσαι τῶν πόλεων, and Clem. Hom. viii. 1, etc. St Peter is mentioned by St Paul only in this epistle and i Corinthians. Κηφᾶν is the right reading here, though there is respectable authority for Πέτρου. If the existing authorities are to be trusted, St Paul seems to have used the Aramaic and Greek names indifferently. Allowance ought to be made however for the tendency to substitute the more usual Πέτρος for the less common Κηφᾶς, e.g. here and ii. 9, 11, 14. In the Peshito Version Cephas, as the Aramaic name, is not unnaturally adopted throughout this epistle.

δεκαπέντε] A later form for the more classical πεντεκαίδεκα. This and the analogous forms of numerals occur frequently in the MSS of Greek authors of the post-classical age, but in many cases are doubtless due to the transcribers writing out the words at length, where they had only the numeral letters before them. The frequent occurrence of these forms however in the Tabulae Heracleenses is a decisive testimony to their use, at least in some dialects, much before the Christian era. They are found often in the lxx.

St Paul's visit on this occasion was abruptly terminated. He left on account of a plot against his life (Acts ix. 29) and in pursuance of a vision (Acts xxii. 17—21).
I. 20—22] EPISODE TO THE GALATIANS. 85

'Ιάκωβον τον ἀδελφὸν τοῦ Κυρίου. 20 ἀς ἐγράφω ὑμῖν, ἰδοὺ ἐνόπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ ὁτι οὐ ψεύδομαι. 21 ἐπειτα ἤλθον εἰς τὰ κλίματα τῆς Συρίας καὶ τῆς Κιλίκίας. 22 ἢμν ἤ ei μή, from which it cannot be separated without harshness, and ἐπέραν carries τῶν ἐποτέλων with it. It seems then that St James is here called an Apostle, though it does not therefore follow that he was one of the Twelve (see the detached note, p. 93). The plural in the corresponding account Acts ix. 27, 'He brought (Paul) to the Apostles,' is also in favour of this sense, but this argument must not be pressed.

20. ἰδοὺ ἐνόπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ] A form of asseveration equivalent to 'I call you to witness,' and so followed by στ. See 2 Tim, ii. 14, iv, 1 διαμαρτύρεσθαι ἐνόπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. For ἰδοὺ elsewhere in the New Testament is an interjection or adverb, never a verb, so that there is an objection to making it govern στ. here. Perhaps however the occurrence of ὀστελατ in the LXX, Ps. cxix. 159, Lam. i. 20, may justify such a construction here. The strength of St Paul's language is to be explained by the unscrupulous calumnies cast upon him by his enemies. See the note 1 Thess. v. 27.

21. In the corresponding narrative of St Luke it is related that the brethren at Jerusalem, discovering the plot against St Paul's life, 'took him down to Caesarea and despatched him to Tarsus' (Acts ix. 30); and later on, that Barnabas went to Tarsus and sought out Saul, and having found him brought him to Antioch, where they taught for a whole year before returning to Jerusalem (xi. 25—30). The Caesarea mentioned there is doubtless Stratonis, and not Philippi, as some maintain. Not only was this the more probable route for him to take, but St Luke's language requires it; for (1) The words κατήγαγον, ἐκατέ−

tελαν, imply a seaport and an embarkation: and (2) Caesarea, without any addition to distinguish it, is always the principal city of the name. It appears therefore that St Luke represents St Paul as sailing from Caesarea on his way to Tarsus; and comparing this account with the notice here, we must suppose either (1) That St Paul did not go direct to Tarsus but visited Syria on the way; or (2) That he visited Syria from Tarsus, and after preaching there returned again to Tarsus where he was found by Barnabas; St Luke having, on either of these hypotheses, omitted to record this visit to Syria; or (3) That St Paul's words here 'Syria and Cilicia' are not intended to describe the order in which he visited the two countries. This last is the most probable supposition. Cilicia has geographically a greater affinity with Syria than with Asia Minor. See Conybeare and Howson, 1, p. 130. The less important country is here named after the more important. 'Cilicia,' says Ewald, 'was constantly little better than an appendage of Syria,' Gesch. des V. Ir., 11. p. 406. At this time however it was under a separate administration. The words τὰ κλίματα seem to show that 'Syria and Cilicia' are here mentioned under one general expression, and not as two distinct districts.

τὰ κλίματα] Rom. xv. 23, 2 Cor. xi. 10. A comparatively late word, see Lobeck Paral, p. 418. It is found in Pseudo-Aristot. de Mundo c. x, and several times in Polybius.

22. ἢμν ἀγαθομένος κ.τ.λ.] 'I remained personally unknown.' A strong form of the imperfect, as ἐκατέ− ories ἦσαν 'they kept hearing' (ver. 23); see Winer, 8 xiv, 5, p. 437 sq.

αγνοούμενος τῷ προσώπῳ ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Ἰουδαίας ταῖς ἐν Χριστῷ, ἡμῶν δὲ ἀκούοντες ἦσαν ὅτι ὁ διώκων ἡμᾶς ποτὲ νῦν εὑρηκειταί τὴν πίστιν ἡν ποτε ἐπορθεί, καὶ ἐδοξάζεν ἐν ἐμοὶ τὸν Θεόν.

So it is used frequently in introducing a quotation, e.g. Gal. iii. 10.

'Ο διώκων ἡμᾶς ποτὲ] 'Our persecutor of former times'; δ διώκων being used as a substantive, i.e. without reference to time, as Matt. xxvii. 40 ὁ καταλύων τὸν ναὸν: see Winer, § xlv. 7, p. 444. On the position of ποτὲ, see the note on ver. 13.

τὴν πίστιν] It is a striking proof of the large space occupied by 'faith' in the mind of the infant Church, that it should so soon have passed into a synonym for the Gospel. See Acts vi. 7. Here its meaning seems to hover between the Gospel and the Church. For the various senses of πίστις, see the notes on iii. 23, vi. 10, and the detached note on the term 'faith.'

24. ἐν ἐμοὶ] See the note ver. 16, and comp. Is. xlix. 3 δοῦλος μου ἐστὶν Ἰσραήλ καὶ ἐν σοὶ ἐνδοξάσασθαιμοι. 'He does not say;' adds Chrysostom, 'they marvelled at me, they praised me, they were struck with admiration of me, but he attributes all to grace. They glorified God, he says, in me.'
A veil of thick darkness hangs over St Paul's visit to Arabia. Of the scenes among which he moved, of the thoughts and occupations which engaged him while there, of all the circumstances of a crisis which must have shaped the whole tenour of his after life, absolutely nothing is known. 'Immediately,' says St Paul, 'I went away into Arabia.' The historian passes over the incident without a mention. It is a mysterious pause, a moment of suspense in the Apostle's history, a breathless calm which ushers in the tumultuous storm of his active missionary life.

Yet it may be useful to review the speculations to which this incident has given rise, even though we cannot hope to arrive at any definite result; for, if such a review bears no other fruit, it will at least bring out more clearly the significance of the incident itself.

Of the place of the Apostle's sojourn various opinions have been held. Arabia is a vague term, and affords scope for much conjecture.

1. The Arabic translator1, whose language gives him a fictitious claim to a hearing on such a point, renders the passage 'Immediately I went to El Belka.' In like manner in Gal. iv. 25 he translates, 'This Hagar is Mount Sinai in El Belka, and is contiguous to Jerusalem.' Now the only district, so far as I can discover, which bears or has borne the name of El Belka, is the region lying to the east and north-east of the Dead Sea.2 If so, how are we to account for this translation of 'Apafia by El Belka? That the same rendering of the word in both passages arose from the translator's connecting them together in some way, can scarcely be doubted. Was his starting-point then a misapprehension of the meaning of ἀπαφα in the second passage, which he renders 'is contiguous to,' and arguing from this, did he suppose that part of Arabia to be meant in both passages, which was nearest to Jerusalem? Or on the other hand, did he start from some tradition of St Paul's preaching in 'El Belka,' and having thus defined from the first passage the meaning of Arabia, did he apply it to the second passage also? But in any case how could he talk of Mount Sinai in 'El Belka'? Was this ignorance of geography? or must we resort to the improbable supposition that some wandering Arab tribe, which gave its name to the country in the neighbourhood of the Dead Sea, at one time occupied the region about Sinai? At all events the tradition here preserved about St Paul, if it be a tradition, is of little worth, as the translator seems to have lived at a comparatively late date.4

1 The Arabic version of the Polyglott, which was made directly from the Greek. The translator not unfrequently gives geographical comments. See Hug Einleit. § six, p. 431. The other Arabic version, the Erpenian, translated from the Syriac, retains 'Arabia.'
2 See Burckhardt Trav. in Syria App. iii, Ritter Erdkunde xi. p. 426
3 Stanley's Sinai and Palestine pp. 95, 319.
4 For this rendering however he might plead the authority of several ancient commentators. See the notes on iv. 25.
4 Hug l. c. states that the translator has unexpectedly revealed his country by his rendering of Acts ii. 10,
2. Arabia, in the widest use of the term, might extend to the gates of Damascus, and even include that city itself. 'You cannot any of you deny,' says Justin, arguing against his Jew as to the interpretation of a passage in one of the prophets, 'that Damascus belongs and did belong to Arabia, though now it has been assigned to Syrophrenicia.' Thus no very distant journey would be necessary to reach Arabia. A retirement in the immediate neighbourhood of Damascus would suffice, and such a visit, especially if it were brief, might well be passed over by the historian as a merely temporary interruption of the Apostle's long residence in that city, which was unknown to him, or which knowing, he did not care to record. Into these wild regions then, beyond the sway of Roman dominion, beyond the reach of civilization, far away from all his old haunts and associations, it is thought that the Apostle plunged himself in the first tumult of his newly-acquired experiences.

This explanation however is open to objection. It gives to 'Arabia' an extension, which at all events seems not to have been common, and which even the passage of Justin shows to have required some sort of justification. It separates the Arabia of the first chapter from the Arabia of the fourth. And lastly, it deprives this visit of a significance which, on a more probable hypothesis, it possesses in relation to this crisis of St Paul's life.

3. For if we suppose that the Apostle at this critical moment betook himself to the Sinaitic peninsula, the scene of the giving of the law, then his visit to Arabia becomes full of meaning. He was attracted thither by a spirit akin to that which formerly had driven Elijah to the same region. Standing on the threshold of the new covenant, he was anxious to look upon the birthplace of the old: that dwelling for a while in seclusion in the presence of 'the mount that burned with fire,' he might ponder over the transient glories of the 'ministration of death,' and apprehend its real purpose in relation to the more glorious covenant which was now to supplant it. Here, surrounded by the children of the desert, the descendants of Hagar the bondwoman, he read the true meaning and power of the law. In the rugged and barren region, whence it issued, he saw a fit type of that bleak desolation which it created and was intended to create in the soul of man. In the midst of such scenes and associations, his spirit was attuned to harmony with his divine mission, and fitted to receive fresh 'visions and revelations of the Lord.' Thus in the wilderness of Sinai, as on the Mount of the transfiguration, the three dispensations met in one. Here Moses had received the tables of the law amid fire and tempest and thick darkness. Here again Elijah, the typical prophet, listened to the voice of God, and sped forth refreshed on his mission of righteousness. And here lastly, in the fulness of time, St Paul, the greatest preacher of Him of whom both the law and the prophets spoke, was strengthened and sanctified for his great work, was taught the breadth as well as the depth of the riches of God's wisdom, and transformed from the champion of a bigoted and narrow tradition into the large-hearted Apostle of the Gentiles.

What was the length of this sojourn we can only conjecture. The interval between his conversion and his first visit to Jerusalem, St Paul here states to have been three years. The notices of time in St Luke are vague, but not contradictory to this statement. From Damascus St Paul tells us he went away into Arabia, whence he returned to Damascus. St Luke represents him as preaching actively in this city after his conversion, not mentioning and apparently not aware of any interruption, though his narrative is not inconsistent with such. It seems probable then that St Paul’s visit to Arabia took place early in this period before he

1 A stronger argument for St Paul’s visit to Sinai might be drawn from his reference to Hagar, the supposed Arabic name of Sinai (Gal. iv. 25), which he was not likely to have heard anywhere but on the spot: comp. Stanley Sinai and Palestine p. 50. But the reading and the interpretation are highly doubtful. See the notes there.

2 The significance of Sinai, as the holy place of inspiration, will be felt by readers of Tancred.

3 The notices of time in the narrative of the Acts are these: He remained with the disciples in Damascus some days (ἡμέρας πανάς) and straightway (ἐκθέως) he began to preach (ἐκθέω) ... and Saul was the more strengthened ... and when many days (ἡμέρας ἑκατον) were accomplishing (ἐπικρατοῦσα) the Jews took counsel to slay him, in consequence of which he left and went to Jerusalem (ix. 20—26). Ἡμέρας ἑκατον is an indefinite period in St Luke, which may vary according to circumstances; Acts ix. 43, x, xviii. 18, xxvii. 7. Certainly the idea connected with ἑκατον in his language is that of largeness rather than smallness; comp. Luke vii. 12, Acts xx. 37 (ἡμέρας ἐκάθεν). In the LXX it is frequently employed to translate ἠδεί ‘mighty,’ e.g. Ruth i. 20, 21. Again the wide use of the Hebrew שָׁם, which St Luke is copying, allows of almost any extension of time. Hence πολλαὶ ἡμέραι in the LXX denotes any indefinite period however long; Gen. xxxvii. 34, 2 Sam. xiv. 2, 1 Kings iii. 11 (‘a long life’). Even Demosthenes, de Cor. p. 258, can speak of the interval between the battles of Halicarnassus and Corinth as ὁ πολλαὶ ἡμέραι, though they were fought in different years and many important occurrences happened in the mean time. The difference between the vague ‘many days’ of the Acts and the definite ‘three years’ of the Epistle is such as might be expected from the circumstances of the two writers.
commenced his active labours. 'Immediately,' he says, 'instead of conferring with flesh and blood, I went into Arabia.' The silence of the historian is best accounted for on the supposition that the sojourn there was short; but as St Luke’s companionship with the Apostle commenced at a much later date, no great stress must be laid on the omission. Yet on the other hand there is no reason for supposing it of long duration. It was probably brief—brief enough not to occupy any considerable space in the Apostle’s history, and yet not too brief to serve the purpose it was intended to serve.

For can we doubt that by this journey he sought seclusion from the outer world, that his desire was to commune with God and his own soul amid these hallowed scenes, and thus to gather strength in solitude for his active labours? His own language implies this; ‘I conferred not with flesh and blood, but departed into Arabia.’ The fathers for the most part take a different view of this incident. They imagine the Apostle hurrying forth into the wilds of Arabia, burning to impart to others the glad tidings which had so suddenly burst upon himself. ‘See how fervent was his soul,’ exclaims Chrysostom, ‘he was eager to occupy lands yet untilled; he forthwith attacked a barbarous and savage people, choosing a life of conflict and much toil.’ This comment strikes a false note. Far different at such a crisis must have been the spirit of him, whose life henceforth was at least as conspicuous for patient wisdom and large sympathies, as for intense self-devotion. He retired for a while, we may suppose, that

Separate from the world, his breast Might duly take and strongly keep
The print of Heaven?

And what place more fit for this retirement than that holy ground,

‘Where all around, on mountain, sand, and sky,
God’s chariot wheels have left distinctest trace’?

It must in this case be placed before the notice of his active preaching, ix. 20 καὶ εὐθύς, κ.τ.λ. Some have put it later and seen an indirect allusion to it in the expression μὴλαλον ἁθεω-ναμον, ver. 21; but there is no trace of a chronological notice in these words, and such an allusion is scarcely natural.

Similarly also Victorinus, Hilary, Theodore Mops., Theodoret, Primasius, and the Ecumenian commentator. Some of the Latin fathers might have been helped to this view by a curious blunder arising out of the Latin translation ‘non acquievi carni et sanguini,’ ‘I did not rest in flesh and blood,’ which Victorinus explains, ‘Omnino laboravi carnaliiter,’ adding ‘Caro enim et sanguis homo exterior totus est.’ Tertullian however, de Resurr. Carn. c. 50, quotes the passage, ‘Statim non retulerit ad carnem et sanguinem,’ explaining it, ‘id est ad circumcisionem, id est ad Judaismum.’ Jerome supposes that St Paul preached in Arabia, but that his preaching was unsuccessful. His comment is curious. Why, he asks, is this visit to Arabia, of which we know nothing, which seems to have ended in nothing, recorded at all? It is an allegory from which we must extract a deep meaning. Arabia is the Old Testament. In the law and the prophets St Paul sought Christ, and having found Him there, he returned to Damascus, ‘hoc est ad sanguinem et passionem Christi.’ So fortified, he went to Jerusalem, ‘locum visionis et pacis.’ This interpretation is doubtless borrowed from Origen.

Christian Year, 13th Sunday after Trinity, said of Moses.

Christian Year, 9th Sunday after Trinity, said of Elijah.
St Paul's first visit to Jerusalem.

The visit to Jerusalem mentioned at the close of the first chapter of this epistle is doubtless the same with that recorded in the ninth chapter of the Acts

The same event narrated by St Paul and St Luke.

Whatever difficulties seem to stand in the way of our identifying them, the fact that in each narrative this is stated to have been St Paul's first appearance in Jerusalem since his conversion and to have followed after a sojourn in Damascus, must be considered conclusive. Nor indeed is there any inconsistency in the two narratives. Though they contain but few incidents in common, they for the most part run parallel with each other; and even in particulars in which there is no coincidence, there is at least no direct contradiction. On the other hand the aspect of events but under presented in the two accounts is confessedly different. And this will almost always be the case in two independent narratives. In the case of St Paul and St Luke this divergence is due to two causes:

First. The different position of the two writers, the one deriving his information at second-hand, the other an eyewitness and an actor in the scenes which he describes. In such cases the one narrator will present rather the external view of events, while the other dwells on their inner history, on those relations especially which have influenced his own character and subsequent actions: the former will frequently give broad and general statements of facts, where the latter is precise and definite.

Secondly. The different objects of the two writers. The one sets himself to give a continuous historical account; the other introduces incidents by way of allusion rather than of narrative, singling out those especially which bear on the subject in hand. In the particular instance before us, it is important to observe this divergence of purpose. St Luke dwells on the change which had come over Saul, transforming the persecutor of the Gospel into the champion of the Gospel. St Paul asserts his own independence, maintaining that his intercourse with the leaders and the Church of the Circumcision had been slight. The standing-point of the historian is determined by the progress of events, that of the Apostle by the features of the controversy. Thus occupying different positions, they naturally lay stress each on a different class of facts, for the most part opposite to, though not inconsistent with, each other.

The narratives may best be compared by considering the incidents under two heads;

1. St Paul's intercourse with the Apostles. The narrative of the Acts relates that when St Paul visited Jerusalem he was regarded with suspicion by the disciples; that Barnabas introduced him to 'the Apostles,' relating the circumstances of his conversion and his zeal for the Gospel when converted; and that after this he moved about freely in their company. These are just the incidents which would strike the external observer as important. On the other hand St Paul says nothing of Barnabas. His relations with Barnabas had no bearing on the subject in hand, his obligations to the Apostles of the Circumcision. In all that relates to that subject he is precise and definite, where the author of the Acts is vague and general. He states the exact time of his sojourn, fifteen days. He mentions by name the members of the apostolate whom alone he saw—Peter in whose house he resided, and James to whom as head of the Church of Jerusalem he would naturally pay a visit. This is sufficient to explain the account of his ‘going in and out’ with the Apostles in the Acts, though the language of the historian is not what would have been used by one so accurately informed as the Apostle himself. It is probable that the other Apostles were absent on some mission, similar to that of Peter to Lydda and Joppa which is recorded just after (ix. 32—43); for there were at this time numberless churches scattered throughout ‘Judaea and Galilee and Samaria’ (ix. 31), which needed supervision.

1 ix. 26—30. Compare St Paul's later reference to this residence at Jerusalem, Acts xxii. 17—21.

2. St Paul’s intercourse with the Jewish Church at large. At first sight there appears to be a wide difference between the two accounts. St Luke tells of his attempting to ‘join himself to the disciples,’ of his ‘going in and out,’ of his ‘speaking boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus and disputing,’ while St Paul himself states that ‘he was unknown by face unto the churches of Judaea.’ Yet on examining the narratives more closely this discrepancy is reduced to very narrow limits. St Luke confines his sojourn especially to Jerusalem, and his preaching to a small section of unbelievers, not the genuine Jews but the Hellenists. He relates moreover that St Paul’s visit terminated abruptly, owing to a plot against his life, and that he was hurried off to Cæsarea, whence he forthwith embarked. To a majority therefore of the Christians at Jerusalem he might, to the Churches of Judaea at large he must, have been personally unknown. But though the two accounts are not contradictory, the impression left by St Luke’s narrative needs correcting by the more precise and authentic statement of St Paul.

The name and office of an Apostle.

The word ἀπόστολος in the first instance is an adjective signifying ‘despatched’ or ‘sent forth.’ Applied to a person, it denotes more than ἀγγέλος. The ‘Apostle’ is not only the messenger, but the delegate of the person who sends him. He is entrusted with a mission, has powers conferred upon him. Beyond this, the classical usage of the term gives no

1 ix. 28. The restrictions εν [or ἐν] Ἰερουσαλήμ and πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνους are the more noticeable, in that they interfere with the leading feature of St Luke’s narrative, the publicity of Saul’s conversion.

2 ix. 29. Compare Acts xxii. 18, ‘Make haste and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem.’

3 It occurs of a person in Herod. i. 21, v. 38. With this exception, no instances are given in the Lexicons of its use by classical authors even of a late date with any other but the Attic meaning; nor have I succeeded in finding any myself, though Hesychius explains ἀπόστολος: στρατηγός κατὰ πλοῖον πεινώμενος. This is probably an instance where aid towards understanding the meaning of the Christian apostolate. Its special sense denoting 'a naval expedition, a fleet despatched on foreign service,' seems to have entirely superseded every other meaning in the Attic dialect; and in the classical Greek of a later period also, except in this sense, the word appears to be of very rare occurrence.

A little more light, and yet not much more, is thrown on the subject by the use of the term among the Jews. It occurs but once in the LXX, in 1 Kings xiv. 6, as a translation of ἀποστάσεως, where it has the general sense of a messenger, though with reference to a commission from God. With the later Jews however, and it would appear also with the Jews of the Christian era, the word was in common use. It was the title borne by those who were despatched from the mother city by the rulers of the race on any foreign mission, especially such as were charged with collecting the tribute paid to the temple service. After the destruction of Jerusalem the 'Apostles' formed a sort of council about the Jewish patriarch, assisting him in his deliberations at home, and executing his orders abroad. Thus in the Attic usage has ruled the literary language, the word having meanwhile preserved in the common dialect the sense which it has in Herodotus and which reappears in the LXX and New Testament and in the official language of the Jews. See the notes on κατηγορίαν, vi. 6; πτυρόσθαι, Phil. i. 28; γνωσμός, Phil. ii. 14.

1 It was also used by Symmachus to translate γνωσμός in Is. xviii. 2: see below. The word ἀποστάσεως occurs in a few passages in the LXX, and ἀποστάσις is the common translation of τύχας. Justin therefore (Dial. c. Tryph. c. 75, p. 300 ν) is so far justified in saying that the prophets are called apostles, ἀποστάσις τοῦ θεοῦ λέγονται οἱ ἀγγέλεις τὰ παρ᾽ αὐτοῦ ἀποστάτηκεν πρὸς ἐθνὸς κ.τ.λ., the true Apostles were referred to in contrast with the false. See Procopius in Esaiam, i.e. and Eusebius, i.e. The LXX version is entirely wrong and the comment worthless in itself, but it affords a valuable illustration of St Paul's references to the 'false apostles,' and especially to the commendatory letters, 2 Cor. iii. 1. See also Jerome, Comm. ad Gal. i. 1, 'Usque hodie a patriarchia Judæorum apostolos mitti etc.'

2 Such for instance as the bearers of the instructions contemplated in Acts xxvii. 21, οὗτε γράμματα πέρι σοῦ ἐδέξαμεν ἀπὸ τῆς ἱουδαίας οὗτε παραγόντως τις τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἀγγέλεοι. Eusebius (Montf. Coll. Nov. ii. 425), evidently thinking on this passage, says: ἀποστάσεως δὲ εἰσαγον, ὅπως ἐστὶν ἱουδαίας ὑνομίας τοῦ ἐγκυκλία γράμματα παρὰ τῶν ἀρχιστῶν αὐτῶν ἐπικοινωνεῖν. The passage in Isaiah xviii. 1, 2, which is read in the LXX, Oυά...ἀποστάσεως ἐν θαλάσσῃ διήμαρτε καὶ ἐπιστόλας μετὰ σιδήρων τῷ ἱερεῖ, and in which for διήμαρτε Symmachus had ἀποστάσεως, was interpreted to refer to these 'apostles' of the Jews who instigated the people against the Christians; and some even thought that in the words following, περιε下沉εῖν γὰρ ἄγγελοι κούφοι πρὸς οἶκον κ.τ.λ., the true Apostles were referred to in contrast with the false. See Procopius in Ēsaiam, i.e. and Eusebius, i.e. The LXX version is entirely wrong and the comment worthless in itself, but it affords a valuable illustration of St Paul's references to the 'false apostles,' and especially to the commendatory letters, 2 Cor. iii. 1. See also Jerome, Comm. ad Gal. i. 1, 'Usque hodie a patriarchia Judæorum apostolos mitti etc.'

3 See Cod. Theodos. xvi. Tit. viii. 14, 'Superstitionis indignae est, ut archisynagogi sive presbyteri Judæorum vel quos ipsi apostolos vocant, qui ad exigendum aurum atque argentum a patriarcha certo tempore diriguntur etc.,' with the learned comment of J. Gothofred. The collection of this tribute was called ἀποστολή, Julian Epist. 25 τὴν λεγομένην παρ᾽ ἑαυτῷ ἀποστολήν κωλύθητι.

4 See the important passage in Ephesians, Haer. xxx. p. 128, τῶν παρ᾽ αὐτῶν ἀβυσσικῶν ἀνδρῶν ἑωράθημεν ἅν, εἰοτ ἄν ὠντος μετὰ τῶν πατριάρχην ἀπό-designating His immediate and most favoured disciples 'Apostles,' our Lord was not introducing a new term 1 but adopting one which from its current usage would suggest to His hearers the idea of a highly responsible mission 2.

At the first institution of the office the Apostles were twelve in number. According to the prevailing view this limit was strictly observed, an exception however being made in the case of St Paul. Nay so far has the idea of this restriction of number been carried by some, that they hold the election of Matthias to have been a hasty and ill- advised act, and to have been subsequently reversed by an interposition of God, St Paul being substituted in his place 3. It is needless to say that the narrative of St Luke does not betray the faintest trace of such a reversal. And with regard to the general question, it will I think appear, that neither the Canonical Scriptures nor the early Christian writings afford sufficient ground for any such limitation of the apostolate.

In the Gospels the word 'Apostle' is of comparatively rare occurrence. Those, whom it is customary with us to designate especially 'the Apostles,' are most often entitled either generally 'the disciples' or more definitely 'the Twelve.' Where the word does occur, it is not so used as to lend any countenance to the idea that it is in any way restricted to the Twelve. In St Matthew it is found once only, and there it is carefully defined, 'the twelve Apostles' (x. 2). In St Mark again it occurs in one passage alone, where it has a special reference to the act of sending them forth (vi. 30, ol ἀποστόλου, compare ἀποστέλλει, ver. 7). In St John likewise it appears once only, and there in its general sense of a messenger, a delegate, without any direct reference to the Twelve (xiii. 16). St Luke uses the word more frequently, and indeed states explicitly that our Lord gave this name to the Twelve 4, and in his Gospel it is a common designation for them. But, if we are disposed to infer from this that the title was in any way restricted to them, we are checked by remembering that the same evangelist elsewhere extends it to others—not to Paul only, but to Barnabas also 5.

1 There is no direct evidence indeed that the term was in use among the Jews before the destruction of Jerusalem: but it is highly improbable that they should have adopted it from the Christians, if it had not been current among them before; and moreover Christian writers speak of this Jewish apostolate, as an old institution which still lingered on.

2 Our Lord Himself is so styled Hebr. iii. 1, 'The apostle and high priest of our profession'; the best comment on which expression is Joh. xvii. 18; 'As thou hast sent (ἀπέστειλας) me into the world, even so have I also sent (ἀπέστειλα) them into the world.' Comp. Justin Apol. i. c. 63, pp. 95 D, 96 C.

3 See Schaff History of the Apostolic Church, p. 194.

5 Acts xiv. 4, 14. The word ἀπόστολος occurs 79 times in the New Testament, and of these 68 instances are in St Luke and St Paul. ἀποστολή occurs four times only, thrice in St Paul and once in St Luke.
In the account of the foundation of the apostolate then, and in the language used in the Gospels of the Twelve, there is no hint that the number was intended to be so limited. It is true that twelve is a typical number, but so is seven also. And if the first creation of the diaconate was not intended to be final as regards numbers, neither is there any reason to assume this of the first creation of the apostolate. The qualification for and the nature of the office in the latter case necessarily imposed a severer limit than in the former, but otherwise they stand on the same footing with respect to an increase in their numbers. The Twelve were primarily the Apostles of the Circumcision, the representatives of the twelve tribes. The extension of the Church to the Gentiles might be accompanied by an extension of the apostolate. How far this extension was carried, it may be a question to consider; but the case of St Paul clearly shows that the original number was broken in upon. In the figurative language of the Apocalypse indeed the typical number twelve still remains. But this is only in accordance with the whole imagery of the book, which is essentially Jewish. The Church there bears the name of Jerusalem. The elect are sealed from the twelve tribes, twelve thousand from each. It would be as unreasonable to interpret the restriction literally in the one case, as in the other. The ‘twelve Apostles of the Lamb’ in the figurative language of St John represent the apostolate, perhaps the general body of Christian pastors, as the elect of the twelve tribes represent the elect of Christendom.

And as a matter of fact we do not find the term Apostle restricted to the Twelve with only the exception of St Paul. St Paul himself seems in one passage to distinguish between ‘the Twelve’ and ‘all the Apostles,’ as if the latter were the more comprehensive term (1 Cor. xv. 5, 7). It appears both there and in other places that James the Lord’s brother was Apostles besides the Twelve.

2 Rev. xxi. 14 ‘And the walls of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.’

3 Those instances are here disregarded, where the term is used in the sense of an apostle or delegate of a church, e.g. the brethren (2 Cor. viii. 23 ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν) and Epaphroditus (Phil. ii. 25 ἵμαρτων δὲ ἀπόστολοι). Such persons are not spoken of as apostles of Christ. Yet this free use of the term seems to show that it had not such a rigid and precise application as is generally supposed.

4 In 1 Cor. xv. 7, ‘After that he was seen of James, then of all the apostles,’ St Paul certainly appears to include James among the Apostles. See also the note on Gal. i. 19, where he is apparently so entitled. In 1 Cor. ix. 5, ὡς καὶ οἱ λοικοὶ ἀπόστολοι καὶ οἱ δεκαδεκατὸι τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ Κηφᾶ, it seems probable that St Paul is singling out certain Apostles in ‘the brethren of the Lord’ as well as in ‘Cephas,’ whether we suppose λοικοῖ to be used in distinction to the persons thus specified, or to Paul and Barnabas who are mentioned just after. Still it is a question which of the ‘brethren of the Lord’ are meant. Jude is said to have been married (Euseb. H. E. iii. 20), but he seems to disclaim for himself the title of an Apostle (Jude 17, 18). Whether Hegesippus (Euseb. H. E. ii. 23) considered...
EPISODE TO THE GALATIANS.

is styled an Apostle. On the most natural interpretation of a passage in the Epistle to the Romans, Andronicus and Junias, two Christians otherwise unknown to us, are called distinguished members of the apostolate, language which indirectly implies a very considerable extension of the term. In I Thess. ii. 6 again, where in reference to his visit to Thessalonica he speaks of the disinterested labours of himself and his colleagues, adding 'though we might have been burthensome to you, being Apostles of Christ,' it is probable that under this term he includes Silvanus, who had laboured with him in Thessalonica and whose name appears in the superscription of the letter.

Barnabas. But, if some uncertainty hangs over all the instances hitherto given, the apostleship of Barnabas is beyond question. St Luke records his consecration to the office as taking place at the same time with and in the same manner as St Paul's (Acts xiii. 2, 3). In his account of their missionary labours again, he names them together as 'Apostles,' even mentioning Barnabas first (Acts xiv. 4, 14). St Paul himself also in two different

James as an Apostle or not, may be questioned; his words are, Διαδέχεται δὲ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μετὰ τῶν ἀποστόλων ὁ ἄδελφός τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰάκωβος (comp. Acts v. 29). The Clementines seem certain to exclude him, as do also the Apost. Const, viii. 46. See below note 5, p. 100.

1 Rom. xvi. 7 'Ἀσπάσασθε Ἀνδρόνικον καὶ Ἰούνιαν τοὺς συγγενεῖς μου καὶ συναγμαλώτους μου, οἵτινες εἶναι ἐπισκόπους εἰς τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, οἷς καὶ τῷ ἐμῷ γέγονεν ἐν Χριστῷ.' Except to escape the difficulty involved in such an extension of the apostolate, I do not think the words οἵτινες εἶναι ἐπισκόπους εἰς τοῖς ἀποστόλοις would have been generally rendered, 'who are highly esteemed by the Apostles.' The Greek fathers took the more natural interpretation. Origen says, 'Possihle est et illud intellegi quod fortassis ex illis septuaginta duobus qui et ipsi apostoli nominati sunt, fuerint.' Chrysostom still more decisively, τὸ ἀποστόλου εἶναι μέγα' τὸ δὲ ἐν τούτοις ἐπισκόπους εἶναι, ἐνόπλον ἡλικίαν ἐγκαθιδρύσας, and similarly Theodoret. In this case 'Ιουνίας (or 'Ιούνιαν) is probably a man's name, Junias contracted from Juneanus, as it is taken by Origen (on Rom. xvi. 21, T. iv. p. 592 ν, and especially on xvi. 39, ib. p. 686 ν) and by several modern critics. Chrysostom however, in spite of his interpretation, considers that it is a woman's name: βαζαλ, πόση τῆς γυναικός ταῦτης ἡ φιλοσοφία, ὡς καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων ἐξισθήματα προσχωρήσας.

2 Not Timothy, though Timothy also had been with him at Thessalonica, and his name, like that of Silvanus, is joined to the Apostle's own in the opening salutation. But Timothy is distinctly excluded from the apostolate in 2 Cor. i. 1, Col. i. 1, 'Paul an Apostle and Timothy the brother'; and elsewhere, when St Paul links Timothy's name with his own, he drops the title of Apostle, e.g. Phil. i. 1 'Paul and Timotheus, servants of Jesus Christ.' In 1 Cor. iv. 9, 'I think that God hath set forth us the Apostles last etc.,' he might seem to include Apollos, who is mentioned just before, ver. 6. But Apollos is distinctly excluded from the apostolate by one who was a contemporary and probably knew him. Clement of Rome, § 47, speaking of the dissensions of the Corinthians in St Paul's time, says, προσκλήθησαν ἄποστολοι μεμαρτυρημένοι (i.e. St Peter and St Paul) καὶ άδρα δεδοκιμασμένος παρ' αὑτοῖς (Apollos). If therefore there is a reference in 1 Cor. iv. 9 to any individual person besides St Paul (which seems doubtful), I suppose it to be again to Silvanus, who had assisted him in laying the foundation of the Corinthian Church (2 Cor. i. 19). For the circumstance which disqualified Apollos and Timotheus from being Apostles, see below, p. 98.
EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

The epistles hold similar language. In the Galatian letter he speaks of Barnabas as associated with himself in the Apostleship of the Gentiles (ii. 9); in the First to the Corinthians he claims for his fellow-labourer all the privileges of an Apostle, as one who like himself holds the office of an Apostle and is doing the work of an Apostle (ix. 5, 6). If therefore St Paul has held a larger place than Barnabas in the gratitude and veneration of the Church of all ages, this is due not to any superiority of rank or office, but to the ascendancy of his personal gifts, a more intense energy and self-devotion, wider and deeper sympathies, a firmer intellectual grasp, a larger measure of the Spirit of Christ

It may be added also, that only by such an extension of the office could any footing be found for the pretensions of the false apostles (2 Cor. xi. 13, REV. II. 2). Had the number been definitely restricted, the claims of these interlopers would have been self-condemned.

But if the term is so extended, can we determine the limit to its extension? This will depend on the answer given to such questions as these: What was the nature of the call? What were the necessary qualifications for the office? What position did it confer? What were the duties attached to it?

The facts gathered from the New Testament are insufficient to supply a decisive answer to these questions; but they enable us to draw roughly the line, by which the apostolate was bounded.

(i) The Apostles comprised the first order in the Church (1 Cor. xii. Rank of an 28, 29, Ephes. iv. 11). They are sometimes mentioned in connexion with Apostle, the prophets of the Old dispensation, sometimes with the prophets of the New. It is in the latter sense, that the Church is said to be built 'on the foundation of the Apostles and prophets.' The two orders seem to have been closely allied to each other in the nature of their spiritual gifts, though the Apostle was superior in rank and had administrative functions which were wanting to the prophet.

(ii) In an important passage (1 Cor. ix. 1, 2) where St Paul is maintaining his authority against gainsayers and advancing proofs of his Apostleship, he asks 'Have I not seen the Lord Jesus Christ?' Are not ye our work in the Lord?' It would appear then;

First, that the having seen Christ was a necessary condition of the (1) Quali-

---

1 In the printed texts of Clem. Rec. i. 60 Barnabas is identified with Matthias, and thus made an Apostle, without extending the number beyond twelve; 'Post quem Barnabas qui et Matthias qui in locum Judae subrogatus est apostolus.' But the correct reading is doubtless 'Bar-sabas,' which is found in the ms in Trinity College Library at Cambridge, as well as in several mentioned by Cotelier. Thus the account is a confused version of the incident in the Acts. The Syriac translation strangely enough has 'Bar-

3 Ephes. ii. 20, iii. 5. That the 'prophets' in these passages are to be so understood, appears (1) from the order, the Apostles being named before the prophets; (2) from the expression in Ephes. iii. 5, έστω διακαλεθη τοις άγιοις άποστολοις αυτων καλ προφήταις. It is in this same epistle also (iv. 11) that the prophets are directly mentioned as the next order to the Apostles in the Christian Church.
fication for apostolic office. It may be urged indeed that St Paul is here taking the ground of his Judaizing opponents, who affected to lay great stress on personal intercourse with the Lord, and argues that even on their own showing he is not wanting in the qualifications for the Apostleship. This is true. But independently of St Paul’s language here, there is every reason for assuming that this was an indispensable condition (Luke xxiv.
48, Acts i. 8). An Apostle must necessarily have been an eye-witness of the resurrection. He must be able to testify from direct knowledge to this fundamental fact of the faith. The two candidates for the vacant place of Judas were selected because they possessed this qualification of personal intercourse with the Saviour, and it is directly stated that the appointment is made in order to furnish ‘a witness of His resurrection’ (Acts i. 21-23). This knowledge, which was before lacking to St Paul, was supplied by a miraculous interposition, so as to qualify him for the office.
All the others, who are called or seem to be called Apostles in the New Testament, may well have satisfied this condition. Andronicus and Junias were certainly among the earliest disciples (Rom. xvi. 7), and may have seen the Lord, if not while His earthly ministry lasted, at all events during the forty days after the resurrection. Barnabas was a well-known and zealous believer in the first days of the Christian Church (Acts iv. 36), and is reported to have been one of the Seventy. James and the other brethren of the Lord were at least so far qualified. Silas also, who was a leading man in the Church of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 22), might well have enjoyed this privilege.

On the other hand, it is not probable that this qualification was possessed either by Apollos or by Timothy, who were both comparatively late converts, and lived far away from the scenes of our Lord’s ministry, the one at Alexandria (Acts xviii. 24), the other at Lystra (Acts xvi. 1, 2).
And to these, as has been pointed out, the name of an Apostle is indirectly denied, though from their prominent position in the Church and the energy and success of their missionary labours, they of all men, after St Paul and the Twelve, might seem to lay claim to this honourable title.

But though it was necessary that an Apostle should have been an eyewitness of the Lord’s resurrection, it does not follow that the actual call to the Apostleship should come from an outward personal communication with our Lord, in the manner in which the Twelve were called. With Matthias it certainly was not so. The commission in his case was received through the medium of the Church. Even St Paul himself seems to have been invested with this highest office of the Church in the same way. His conversion indeed may be said in some sense to have been his call to the Apostleship. But the actual investiture, the completion of his call, as may be gathered from St Luke’s narrative, took place some years later at Antioch (Acts xiii. 2). It was then at length that he, together with Barnabas, was set apart by the Spirit acting through the Church, for the work to which God had destined him, and for which he had been qualified by the appearance on the way to Damascus. Hitherto both alike are styled only ‘prophets.’ From this point onward both alike are ‘Apostles.’

But secondly, in the passage already referred to, St Paul lays much more stress on his possessing the powers of an Apostle, as a token of the truthfulness of his claims. 'If I be not an Apostle to others,' he says to the Corinthians, 'at least I am to you.' Their conversion was the seal of an Apostle (1 Cor. ix. 2). In another passage he speaks in like manner of his having wrought the signs of an Apostle among them (2 Cor. xii. 12). The signs, which he contemplates in these passages, our modern conceptions would lead us to separate into two classes. The one of these includes moral and spiritual gifts—patience, self-denial, effective preaching; the other comprises such powers as we call supernatural, 'signs, wonders, and mighty deeds.' St Paul himself however does not so distinguish them, but with more of reverence regards them rather as different manifestations of 'one and the self-same Spirit.'

But essential as was the possession of these gifts of the Spirit to establish the claims of an Apostle, they seem to have been possessed at least in some degree by all the higher ministers of the Church, and therefore do not afford any distinctive test, by which we are enabled to fix the limits of the Apostleship.

Such then is the evidence yielded by the notices in the New Testament—evidence which, if somewhat vague in itself, is sufficient to discountenance the limitation of the Apostleship in the manner generally conceived.

And such for the most part is the tendency of the notices found in the Christian writers of the ages immediately following. They use the term indeed vaguely and inconsistently, sometimes in a narrower, sometimes in a wider sense, than the New Testament writings would seem to warrant; but on the whole the impression is left from their language, that no very rigid limitation of the office was present to their minds.

The allusions in the writings of the Apostolic fathers are for the most part too general to build any inference upon. They all look upon themselves as distinct from the Apostles. Several of them include St Paul by name in the Apostolate. Clement moreover speaks of the Apostles as having been sent forth by Christ himself (§ 42), and in another passage he obviously excludes Apollos from the number. More important however, as showing the elasticity of the term, is a passage in Hermas, where he represents the 'Apostles and teachers' under one head as forty in number, selecting this doubtless as a typical number in accordance with the figurative character of his work.

Writers of the subsequent ages are more obviously lax in their use of and the title. At a very early date we find it applied to the Seventy, without however placing them on the same level with the Twelve. This application

2 § 47. See above, note 2, p. 96. Eusebius, iii. 39, infers that Papias distinguished Aristion and John the Presbyter, who had been personal disciples of the Lord, from the Apostles. This may be so; but from his language as quoted it can only be safely gathered that he distinguished them from the Twelve.
3 Hermas Sim. ix. 15, 16: comp. Vis. iii. 5, Sim. ix. 25. The data with regard to the age of Hermas are (1) that he was a contemporary of Clement (Vis. ii. 4); and (2) that his work was written while his brother Pius was bishop of Rome (circ. 140), Fragn. Murat. in Routh Rel. Sacr. 1. p. 396. He cannot therefore have been the Hermas mentioned by St Paul (Rom. xvi. 14), as several ancient writers suppose.
occurs even in Irenæus and Tertullian, the earliest extant writers who dwell on this or kindred subjects. About the same time Clement of Alexandria not only calls Barnabas an Apostle, but confers the title on Clement of Rome also. Philip the Evangelist is so styled occasionally; but in some instances at least he has been confused with Philip, one of the Twelve. Origen discusses the term as capable of a very wide application; and Eusebius, accounting for St Paul's expression (I Cor. xv. 7), speaks of 'numberless apostles' besides the Twelve.

Nor will it weigh as an argument on the other side, that many writers speak of the Twelve as the founders of the Church, or argue on the typical significance of this number in the Apostolate: for some of those, who hold this language most strongly, elsewhere use the term Apostle in a very extended application; and the rest either distinctly acknowledge the Apostolic office of St Paul, or indirectly recognise his authority by quoting from his writings or endorsing his teaching.

1 Iren. ii. 21, i; Tertull. adv. Marc. iv. 24, 'Aldegit et alios septuaginta apostolos super duodecim,' referring for an illustration of the numbers to Exod. xv. 27, 'And they came to Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and three-score and ten palm-trees.' See also Origen quoted above, p. 96. In the Gospel the Seventy are not indeed called 'Apostles,' but the verb ἀποστελέω is applied to them, and they are spoken of as 'seventy others' (Luke x. 1), in reference to the mission of the Twelve. In the Ancient Syriac Documents, edited by Cureton, this extension is distinctly and repeatedly given to the term; e.g. p. 3, 'Thaddæus the Apostle one of the Seventy'; p. 34, 'Addæus the Apostle one of the seventy-two Apostles.'

2 For Barnabas see Strom. ii. p. 445. 447 (ed. Potter); for Clement of Rome, Strom. iv. p. 609. Elsewhere Clement calls Barnabas ἀπόστολος, adding that he was one of the Seventy, Strom. ii. p. 489.

3 See Colossians, p. 45 sq. In the Apost. Const. (vi. 7) he is called Φίλιππος δ ἱωσάποστολος ἡμῶν.

5 H. E. i. 12 εἴθ' ὡς παρὰ τοῦτού τινα καὶ μένοι τῶν δώδεκα πλείστων δυον ὑπαρχόντων ἀποστόλων, ὅσοι καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ Ἐωνᾶς ἦν, προσθήκας λέγων 'Επειτα δόθη τοι ἀποστόλου πᾶσα. Comp. Theodoret on 1 Cor. xii. 28. There is however no authority for the statement of the latter, 1 Tim. iii. 1, that the order afterwards called bishops were formerly called apostles. See Philippians, p. 193 sq.

Certain early commentators on Isaiah xvii. 6 saw a reference to fourteen Apostles, making up the number by including Paul and Barnabas, or Paul and James the Lord's brother: see Euseb. in Is. xvii. 6, and Hieron. in Is. pp. 194, 280, ed. Vallarsi. The Apost. Const. (viii. 46) recognise thirteen, including St Paul and excluding St James. Of really early writings the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions alone seem to restrict the number to twelve. This restriction served the purpose of the writers, enabling them to exclude St Paul. At the same time the exclusion of St James is compensated by assigning to him the title of 'bishop of bishops.'

The passages referred to are, I think, sufficient to show that ancient writers for the most part allowed themselves very considerable latitude in the use of the title. Lower down than this it is unnecessary to follow the stream of authority. The traditions of later ages are too distant to reflect any light on the usage of Apostolic times.
II. 1, 2. ‘An interval of fourteen years elapsed. During the whole of this time I had no intercourse with the Apostles of the Circumcision. Then I paid another visit to Jerusalem. My companion was Barnabas, who has laboured so zealously among the Gentiles, whose name is so closely identified with the cause of the Gentiles. With him I took Titus also, himself a Gentile. And here again I acted not in obedience to any human adviser. A direct revelation from God prompted me to this journey.’

Διὰ δὲ δεκατεσσάρων ἐτῶν οὔτων πάλιν ἀνέβην εἰς Ἰεροσόλυμα μετὰ Βαρνάβα, συνπαραλαβὼν καὶ Τιτον. ἀνέβην δὲ κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, καὶ ἀνεβήμην αὐτοῖς

II. 1. ‘Arrived at Jerusalem, I set forth the principles of the Gospel, as I had preached it and still preach it to the Gentiles—the doctrine of grace, the freedom from the ceremonial law. This explanation I gave in a private conference with the leading Apostles of the Circumcision. In this I had one object in view; that the Gospel might have free course among the Gentiles, that my past and present labours might not be thwarted by opposition or misunderstanding.’

The middle ἀναγινώσκειν has the sense ‘to relate with a view to consulting,’ ‘to refer,’ as 2 Mace. iii. 9; see also Acts xxv. 14, τῷ βασιλείῳ ἀνθίζον τὰ κατὰ τῶν Παύλου, where the idea of consultation is brought out very clearly in the context, vv. 20, 26. ‘Inter conferentes,’ says Jerome here, ‘aequalitas est; inter docentem et discentem minor est ille, qui discit.’ See the notes on προσαναγινώσκειν, i. 16, ii. 6.
II. 2] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 103

tō εὐαγγελίων ὁ κηρύσσω ἐν τοῖς ἐθνεσιν, κατ' ἰδίαν dē τοῖς δοκοῦσιν, μὴ πῶς εἰς κενὸν τρέχω ἢ ἔδραμον.

ὁ κηρύσσω] 'I preach,' not εὐφράσθον, 'I preached,' for his Gospel had not changed. See the note on σικέστω, i. 11.

κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς δοκοῦσι] 'but in private to those of repute.' The foregoing autoi is best referred to the Christians of Jerusalem generally, as implied from ἵσταμαι, i. 1. If so, this clause, which follows, is inserted not to exclude a public conference, but to emphasize his private consultations. These private communications probably preceded the general congress, which occupies the prominent place in St Luke's narrative (Acts xv. 6 sqq) and seems to be alluded to in the Acts, though not very distinctly, in the words (xv. 4), 'They declared what things God had done with them.' The private consultation was a wise precaution to avoid misunderstanding: the public conference was a matter of necessity to obtain a recognition of the freedom of the Gentile Churches.

toῖς δοκοῦσι] 'the men of repute, of position.' See Eur. Hec. 294 λόγος γὰρ ἐκ τῶν ἄδοξων ὑπὸ καὶ τῶν δοκοῦσιν, with Pflugk's note; Herod. 897 εὐπροσώπου ἱδέη αὐτοῦ πάροι ὑπὸ δοκοῦσιν. Herodian vi. 1 τὴς συγκλήτου βουλῆς τοὺς δοκοῦσαν καὶ ἡλίκια σεμνοστάτους κ.τ.λ. The expression itself therefore is a term of honour, and conveys no shadow of depreciation. So far as it is coloured with any tinge of disparagement here, this is due (1) to the repetition of the word δοκοῦσι, (2) to the addition of στόλοι εἶναι, εὐφαί τί, the latter especially, and (3) to the contrast implied in the whole passage, between the estimation in which they were held and the actual services they rendered to him. On the other hand, it will be seen (1) That this disparagement is relative, not absolute; a negation of the exclusive claims urged for them by the Judaizing party, not a negation of their Apostolic rank and worth; (2) That the passage itself contains direct evidence of mutual respect and recognition between St Paul and the Twelve (vv. 8, 9, 10).

On the tense of τοῖς δοκοῦσι see the note on ver. 6.

μὴ πῶς εἰς κενὸν τρέχω κ.τ.λ.] 'lest I might be running, or had run, to no purpose.' The kindred passage 1 Thess. iii. 5, μὴ πῶς ἐπιτρέπετο ὅπως ὁ περάζων καὶ εἰς κενὸν γίνηται ὁ κόσμος ἡμῶν, seems to show that τρέχω is here the subjunctive rather than the indicative, this being moreover the more likely mood in itself. See the note there. The use of the subjunctive (τρέχω) here, rather than the optative (τρέχομαι), is in accordance with the spirit of the later Greek, which prefers the more direct mode of speech in all such cases. In the New Testament the optative seems never to occur with particles of design etc.; see Winer § xii. p. 360. In the second clause the change of mood from the subjunctive (τρέχω) to the indicative (ἔδραμον) is rendered necessary by the change of tense, since the consequences of the past were no longer contingent but inevitable: comp iv. 11. τρέχω] is a reference to St Paul's favourite metaphor of the stadium; see v. 7 and the note there. For the expression εἰς κενὸν τρέχων comp. Phil. ii. 16, where, as here, it refers to his missionary career.

But what is the drift of the passage? Is it a natural expression of misgiving on the part of St Paul, who was not altogether satisfied with the soundness of his teaching, until he had consulted with the Apostles of the Circumcision? So Tertullian takes it, adv. Marc. i. 20, v. 3, and esp. iv. 2. This is perhaps the prima facie sense of the passage, slightly favoured by οὐδὲν προσάνεβητο, ver. 6. But on the other hand such an admission would be so entirely alien to the spirit of the passage, so destructive of St Paul's whole argument, and so unlikely under the circumstances, that this interpretation must be abandoned. The words therefore must be taken to express his fear lest the Judaic Christians, by insisting on the Mosaic ritual, might thwart his past and present endeavours to establish a Church on a liberal basis. By conferring with them, and more especially with the Apostles of the Circumcision, he might not only quiet such lurking anxiety (μυθαι) as he felt, but also, if there were any lack of unanimity, win them over to his views.

3. St Paul is here distracted between the fear of saying too much and the fear of saying too little. He must maintain his own independence, and yet he must not compromise the position of the Twelve. How can he justify himself without seeming to condemn them? There is need of plain speaking and there is need of reserve. In this conflict of opposing aims and feelings the sense of the passage is well-nigh lost. The meaning of individual expressions is obscure. The thread of the sentence is broken, picked up, and again broken. From this shipwreck of grammar it is even difficult to extricate the main incident, on which the whole controversy hinges. Was Titus circumcised or was he not? This is not only a reasonable question, but a question which thoughtful writers have answered in different ways. On the whole, the following reasons seem to decide for the negative.

(1) The incident is apparently brought forward to show that St Paul had throughout contended for the liberty of the Gentiles; that he had not, as his enemies insinuated, at one time conceded the question of circumcision. It is introduced by way of evidence, not of apology. (2) It is difficult to reconcile the view that Titus was circumcised with individual expressions in the passage. St Paul could scarcely say 'we yielded no not for an hour' in the same breath in which he confessed to this most important of all concessions: he could hardly claim for such an act the merit of preserving 'the truth of the Gospel,' i.e. the liberty of the Gentile Christians, which it was most calculated to compromise. In order to maintain that view, it is necessary to lay undue stress on the words ήναγκάσθη, and ταύτα γι' αυτῷ, which from their position seem quite unemphatic: as if the former signified that the circumcision of Titus was an act of grace, not of compulsion; and the latter, that the Apostle in yielding was not doing homage to superior authority.

(3) Taking into account the narrative in the Acts, both the occasion and the person were most inopportune for such a concession. There was an agitation among the Judaizers to force the rite of circumcision on the Gentile converts. Paul and Barnabas had gone up from Antioch in order to protect them from this imposition. They were accompanied by certain representatives of the Gentile Church, of whom Titus was one. No act could be conceived more fatal to the interests of St Paul's clients at such a moment, or less likely to have been permitted by him. Accordingly the vast majority of early writers take the view that Titus was not circumcised, even though in many instances they adopted a reading (the omission of οὓς οὐδὲ in ver. 5) most unfavourable to this conclusion. See p. 122.

St Paul is here indirectly meeting a charge brought against him. Shortly before he visited Galatia the first time, he had caused Timothy to be circumcised (Acts xvi. 3). This fact, which can scarcely have been unknown to the Galatians, for Timothy accompanied him on his visit, may have afforded a handle to the calumnies of his enemies. There was a time, they said, when he himself insisted on circumcision. Comp. v. 11 and the note on i. 10. By stating how he acted in the case of Titus, who was truly a Gentile, he rebuffs this assertion.

3—5. 'But while I held conferences with the Apostles of the Circumcision, I did not yield to the clamours of the disciples of the Circumcision. An incident which occurred will show this. Titus, as a Gentile who was intimately acquainted with me, was singled out as a mark for their bigotry. An attempt was made to have him circumcised. Concession was even urged upon me in high quarters, as a measure of prudence to disarm opposition. The agitators, who headed the movement, were no true brethren, no loyal soldiers of Christ. They were spies who had made their way into the camp of the Gospel under false colours and were striving to undermine our liberty in Christ, to reduce us again to a state of bondage. I did not for a moment yield to this pressure. I would not so compromise the integrity of the Gospel, the freedom of the Gentile Churches.'

In ἔλλην all idea of nationality is lost: comp. Mark vii. 26 Ἔλληνις Συροφωνίσσα (or Σύρα Φωνίσσα) τῷ γίνεται. Thus the Peshito sacrificing the letter to the spirit frequently translates ἔλλην 'an Aramaean,' e.g. here and iii. 28. See Colossians, p. 390. ἣναγκάζη] 'was compelled,' though the pressure was extreme. This pressure doubtless came from the more bigoted Judaizers, the converted Pharisees mentioned in Acts xv. 5.

4. What part was taken in the dispute by the Apostles of the Circumcision? This question, which forces itself upon us at this stage of St Paul's narrative, is not easily answered. On the whole it seems probable that they recommended St Paul to yield the point, as a charitable concession to the prejudices of the Jewish converts: but convinced at length by his representations, that such a concession at such a time would be fatal, they withdrew their counsel and gave him their support. Such an account of the transaction seems to accord alike with the known facts and with the probabilities of the case. It is consistent with the timid conduct of Peter at Antioch shortly after (Gal. ii. 11), and with the politic advice of James at a later date (Acts xxvii. 5). It was the natural consequence of their position, which led them to regard tenderly the scruples of the Jewish converts. It supplies probable antecedents to the events of the Apostolic congress. And lastly, it best explains St Paul's language here. The sensible undercurrent of feeling, the broken grammar of the sentence, the obvious stop of particular phrases, all convey the impression, that though the final victory was complete, it was not attained without a struggle, in which St Paul maintained at one time almost single-handed the cause of Gentile freedom.

\[ \text{dià đe τοὺς παρεισάκτους κ.τ.λ.} \] 'But to satisfy, to disarm, the false brethren, the traitorous spies of the Gospel'—At this point the connexion of the sentence is snapped, and we are left to conjecture as to the conclusion. It seems as if St Paul intended to add, 'the leading Apostles urged me to yield.' But instead of this a long parenthesis interposes, in the course of which the main proposition of the sentence is lost sight of. It is again resumed in a different form, 'from those then who were held in repute,' ver. 6. Then again it disappears in another parenthesis. Once more it is taken up and completed, transformed by this time into a general statement, 'well, they of reputation added nothing to me in conference.' The counsels of the Apostles of the Circumcision are the hidden rock on which the grammar of the sentence is wrecked. So Winer, § lxiii. p. 711 sq. But as Titus would not have been circumcised under any circumstances, the refusal to yield could scarcely be attributed to the pressure from the false brethren. If either of these explanations were adopted, St Paul's meaning must be: 'To the scruples of the weaker brethren I would have conceded the point, but the teaching of the false brethren made concession impossible.' So in fact Augustine takes it, de Mendacl. § 8 (vi p. 424, ed. Ben.).

\[ \text{παρεισάκτους, παρεισήλθου \} \] The metaphor is that of spies or traitors introducing themselves by stealth into the enemy's camp, as in Jude 4 παρεισέδωσαν γὰρ τινὲς ἄνδρους. See Plut. Popl. 17 ἐπίδουλοιν δὲ τῶν Ποραιών ἀνέλει παρεισήλθεν εἰς τὸ στρατάτευον, Polyb. i. 7. 3. ii. 55. 3. For παρεισάγειν see 2 Pet. ii. 1. The adjective occurs in Strabo, xvii. p. 794. παρείσακτος ἐπικληθείς Πτολεμαῖος. The camp thus stealthily entered is the Christian Church. Pharisees at heart, these traitors assume the name and garb of believers.

\[ \text{κατασκοπήσαμεν} \] 'to act as spies on.' κατασκοπεῖν generally signifies 'to examine carefully,' the form κατασκοπεῖν being most frequently used where the notion of treachery is prominent. For instances of the sense in the text however see 2 Sam. x. 3, 1 Chron. xix. 3.

\[ \text{καταδολῶσαμεν} \] 'reduce to abject slavery.' The reading of the received text, καταδολῶσαμεν, is a correction of some classicist, introduced for two reasons: (1) To substitute the middle voice, which is more common in classical writers; the transcriber not seeing that the sense here requires the active; 'enslave not to themselves, but to an external power, the law of Moses.' (2) To restore the usual classical government of ἵνα with the conjunctive. 'ἵνα however is found several times in the New Testament with the indicative future, and sometimes even with the indicative present, as in iv. 17: see Winer, § xli. p. 360 sq. This, though not a classical usage, is justified by similar constructions of διαμείνῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς: ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν δοκοῦντων εἶναι τί ὅποιον ποτὲ ἦσαν, οὐδὲν

5. οὗτος οὖν κ.τ.λ.] 'to whom we,' Paul and Barnabas, who were sent to Jerusalem to plead the cause of the Gentile Christians, 'yielded no not for an hour.' For the omission of οὗτος in some texts see the detached note, p. 122.

τῇ ὑποταγῇ] 'by the submission which was required of us,' or possibly 'the submission with which we are taunted,' as in 2 Cor. i. 17 μὴ ἄρα τῇ ἐλαφρίᾳ ἐχθρασάμεν;

ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῦ εὐαγγελίου] 'the truth of the Gospel;' i.e. the Gospel in its integrity. This expression in St Paul's language denotes the doctrine of grace, the maintenance of Christian liberty, as opposed to the false teaching of the Judaizers. See ii. 14, and comp. Col. i. 5, 6, where the same idea seems to be indirectly involved.

διαμείνῃ πρὸς υμᾶς] 'may abide with you,' the Gentile Churches. See the introduction, p. 26. The idea of firm possession is enforced by the compound verb, by the past tense, and by the proposition.

6—9. 'The elder Apostles, I say, who are so highly esteemed, whose authority you so exclusively uphold—for myself, I care not that they once knew Christ in the flesh: God does not so judge men; He measures them not by the outward advantages they have had, not by the rank they hold, but by what they are, by what they think and do—well, these highly esteemed leaders taught me nothing new; they had no fault to find with me. On the contrary, they received me as their equal, they recognised my mission. They saw that God had entrusted to me the duty of preaching to the Circumcision, as He had entrusted to Peter that of preaching to the Circumcision. This was manifest from the results. My Apostleship had been sealed by my work. God had wrought by me among the Gentiles, not less than He had wrought by Peter among the Jews. This token of His grace bestowed upon me was fully recognised by James and Cephas and John, who are held in such high esteem, as pillars of the Church. They welcomed myself and Barnabas as fellow-labourers, and exchanged pledges of friendship with us. It was agreed that we should go to the Gentiles and they to the Jews.'

Much force is lost in the A. V. by translating of δοκοῦντες throughout this passage as a past tense instead of a present. St Paul is speaking not of the esteem in which the leading Apostles of the Circumcision were held by the Christians of Jerusalem at the time of the conferences, but of the esteem in which they are held, while he is writing, by his Galatian converts. The mistake seems to have arisen from following the Vulgate 'qui videbantur.' The Old Latin apparently had the present in most recensions, though not consistently in all four places. Of the older English Versions, Tyndale's alone translates by a present in this verse, and the Genevan in verse 9.

τῶν δοκοῦντων εἶναι τί] 'those who are looked up to as authorities.' The expression is sometimes used in a depreciatory way, as in Plat. Apol. 41 εἰς τὸν δοκοῦντα τί εἶναι μηδὲν ὄντες, Κυλιδ. 303 ο τῶν πολλῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ τῶν мои диафереи, πρόσωπων Θεός ἀνθρώπου οὐ λαμβάνει: ἐμοὶ γὰρ οἱ δοκοῦντες οὐδὲν προσανέθεντο, ἦλατα τούναντιον ἵδοντες ὅτι πεπίστευμι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς ἀκροβυστίας καθὼς Πέτρος τῆς περιτομῆς, ὅ γὰρ

σεμών ή καὶ δοκοῦντων τι εἶναι οὐδὲν ὁμίν μὲλεὶ, Gorg. 472 A εὔοτε γὰρ ἔκαν καὶ καταφένευσαρτηρηθεὶς τις ὑπὸ πολλῶν καὶ δοκοῦντων εἶναι τι, and passages from later writers quoted in Wetstein: comp. Gal. vi. 3 εἰ γὰρ δοκεῖ τις εἶναι τι μυρίν ὑπ', and Ignat. Polyc. 3. The exact shade of meaning which it bears must always be determined by the context. Here it is depreciatory, not indeed of the Twelve themselves, but of the extravagant and exclusive claims set up for them by the Judaizers. Thus it is nearly an equivalent to οἱ ὑπερήφανοι ἀπόστολοι of 2 Cor. xi. 5, xii. 11.

ὅποιοι ποτὲ ἦσαν] Does ὅποιοὶ ποτὲ here mean 'qualescunque,' or has ποτὲ its proper temporal sense 'in times past'? In a classical writer we should decide for the former: in St Paul the latter seems more probable, as ποτὲ never occurs with the meaning 'cuncte' in the New Testament, and accordingly it is rendered in the Latin versions 'aliquando.' This decides the import of the whole phrase. It does not mean 'what reputation they enjoyed,' but 'what was their position, what were their advantages in former times,' referring to their personal intercourse with the Lord. The 'knowing Christ after the flesh' (2 Cor. v. 16) is in itself valueless in the sight of God. The same reproach is conveyed by the words here, as in 2 Cor. x. 7 τὰ κατὰ πρόσωπον βλέπετε. πρόσωπον λαμβάνει] A translation of the Hebrew נושא פנים which signifies properly 'to accept the face' (Gesenius Thes. p. 916, s. v. פנים), or perhaps better, 'to raise the face' of another (opposed to שבע פנים 'to make the countenance fall,' e.g. Job xxix. 24; comp. Gen. iv. 5), and hence 'to receive kindly,' 'to look favourably upon one.' In the Old Testament accordingly it is a neutral expression involving no subsidiary idea of partiality, and is much oftener found in a good than in a bad sense. When it becomes an independent Greek phrase however, the bad sense attaches to it, owing to the secondary meaning of πρόσωπον as 'a mask,' so that πρόσω­πον λαμβάνει signifies 'to regard the external circumstances of a man,' his rank, wealth, etc., as opposed to his real intrinsic character. Thus in the New Testament it has always a bad sense. Hence a new set of words, προσωπολήμπτης, προσωπολήμπτεύειν, etc. which appear to occur there for the first time.

Θεός ἀνθρώπων] The natural order is altered for two reasons; (1) To give Θεός an emphatic position, and (2) To keep the contrasted words Θεός ἀνθ­ρώπων together.

ἐμοὶ γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] The sentence, which was begun in ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν δοκοῦντων εἶναι τι and then broken off by the parenthesis, is here resumed, but in a different form, 'well, to me those of reputation communicated nothing.' See the note on ver. 4. Otherwise the γὰρ may be attached to ὅποιοὶ ποτὲ ἦσαν οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρει, the parenthesis running back into the main proposition of the sentence, 'whatever position they once held makes no matter to me: for to me they communicated nothing': Winer § lxiii. p. 711 sq. But the interposition of the words πρόσωπον Θ. ἀνθρ. οὐ λαμβ. is an objection to this construction.

προσανέθεντο] 'communicated,' see the note on i. 16. Προσανατεθείσα is 'to communicate, to impart,' whether for the purpose of giving or of obtaining instruction. In this passage the former meaning prevails, in i. 16 the latter. The context here decides its sense: 'they imparted no fresh knowledge to me, they saw nothing defective or incorrect in my teaching; but on the contrary, they heartily recognised my mission.'

7. πεπιστευμαι τὸ εὐαγγ. 'I have been entrusted with the Gospel,' a common construction in St Paul: see the note on 1 Thess. ii. 4. The perfect here, implying a permanent commission, contrasts with the aorist in Rom. iii. 2.

8. τὸ εὐαγ. τῆς ἀκροβυστίας denotes a distinction of sphere and not a difference of type: see Tertul. Praescr. Haer. 23 'Inter se distributionem officii ordinaverunt, non separationem evangelii, nee ut aliud alter sed ut aliis alter praedicarent.'

9. Of the two words ἰδὼντες and γνώντες, the former describes the apprehension of the outward tokens of his commission, as evinced by his successful labours; the latter the conviction arrived at in consequence that the grace of God was with him; see iv. 8, 9. 'Ἰάκωβος καὶ Κηφᾶς καὶ Ἰωάννης' The best supported and doubtless the right reading. The variation Πέτρος καὶ Ἰάκωβος καὶ Ἰωάννης arose from the desire of maintaining the precedence of St Peter. On the other hand the correct text presents two coincidences with the narrative of the Acts, which deserve notice. First. In i. 19 James is styled the Lord's brother, while here and in ver. 12 this designation is dropped. St Luke's narrative explains this omission. In the interval between St Paul's two visits James the son of Zebedee had been put to death. No term of distinction therefore was now needed, as there was no likelihood of confusion, James the son of Alphæus though an Apostle not holding any very prominent rank. Second. The relative positions here assigned to Peter and James accord exactly with the account in the Acts. When St Paul is speaking of the missionary office of the Church at large, St Peter holds the foremost place (ver. 7, 8); when he refers to a special act of the Church of Jerusalem, St James is mentioned first (ver. 9). See Acts xii. 17, xv. 13, xxii. 18.

στύλοι] 'pillars.' A natural metaphor occurring now and then in classical writers (e.g. Eur. Iph. T. 57 στύλων γὰρ οἰκῶν εἰς πάιδες ἁρών), and Esch. Agam. 827), but commonly used by the Jews in speaking of the great teachers of the law. See the examples given in Schöttgen: comp. Clem. Hom. xviii. 14 ἠτὰ στύλου ὑπάρχαντας κόμης, said of the patriarchs. So in Clem. Rom. § 5 the Apostles Peter and Paul are called oi μέγιστοι καὶ δικαίωται στύλοι; comp. Iren. iv. 21. 3. In this metaphor the Ionic forms in the New Testament: the Church is regarded as the house or temple of God; as Rev. iii. 12 ποιήσω αὐτῶν στόλον ἐν τῷ ναῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ μου; comp. 1 Tim. iii. 15. The accent of στόλος is doubtful. On the one hand the v is universally long in poetry even of a late date (see Rost u. Palm, Griesch. Wörterb. s. v., and comp. Orac. Sib. iii. 250, 251). On the other, the authority of the oldest accents in the MSS. and the quantity of the Latin ‘stylus,’ are in favour of στύλος. The latter not improbably represents the common pronunciation of the Apostolic age. See Lipsius Gramm. Unters. p. 43.

In the patriarchal times the outward gesture was lost sight of in this expression, as appears from the fact that the plural δεξίας δῶναι, δεξίας λαμβάνειν, is often used of a single person; 1 Macc. xi. 50, 62, xiii. 50. As a symbol of contract or friendship this does not appear prominently in the Old Testament (Ezr. x. 19, and perhaps 2 Kings x. 15; see below on κοινωνίας), nor is it especially Jewish. In the patriarchal times the outward gesture which confirmed an oath was different, Gen. xxiv. 2. The giving the right hand however was a recognised pledge of fidelity with other Eastern nations, with the Persians especially (Corn. Nep. Dat. c. 10 ‘fideiunctio de ea re more Persarum dextra dedisset,’ Diod. xvi. 43 ἦτο δὲ η ἀπὸ αὐτῆς δεξιοτάτη παρά τοῖς Περσαίς, comp. Justin xi. 15, 13); and from Persian influence the symbol and the phrase may have become more common among the Jews. Even Josephus (Ant. xviii. 9. 3) speaks of this not as a Jewish practice, but as μέγιστον παρά πάσιν τοῖς ἑκείνῃ βαρβάροις παράδειγμα τοῦ ἑαυτῶν τῶν ὑμῶν, in reference to Artabanes the Parthian king. Where personal communication was inconvenient, it was customary to send images of right hands clasped, as a token of friendship: Xen. Anab. ii. 4. 1 δεξιάς παρὰ βασιλέως φέρουσε, Ages. 3. 4; comp. Tacit. Hist. i. 54, ii. 8.

κοινωνίας] of ‘fellowship,’ not a superfluous addition, for ‘to give the hand’ (ν τίνι) in the language of the Old Testament, like the Latin ‘do manum,’ generally signifies ‘to surrender,’ e.g. Lament. v. 6, 2 Chron. xxx. 8; see Gesen. Thes. p. 566.

ἐν ἡμία] The ellipsis of the verb occurs in St Paul under various conditions. A foregoing ἐν is one of these; see 1 Cor. i. 31, 2 Cor. viii. 13, Rom. iv. 16: comp. 2 Cor. viii. 11.

10. ‘Henceforth our spheres of labour were to be separate. One reservation however was made. They asked me to continue, as I had done hitherto, to provide for the wants of the poor brethren of Judea. Independently of their request, it was my own earnest desire.’

μόνον] ‘only they asked us’: comp. Ignat. Rom. 5 μόνον ἐν ἡμῖν. For similar instances of an ellipsis after μόνον, see vi. 12, 2 Thess. ii. 7 μόνον ὁ κατέχων ἄριτ ἐόσ ἐκ μέσου γένηται. The latter passage presents an exact parallel also in the derangement of the order for the sake of emphasis.

Two occasions are recorded, on which St Paul was the bearer of alms from the Gentile converts to the poor of Jerusalem; (1) on his second journey to Jerusalem, Acts xi. 29, 30, some years before the interview of which he is speaking; and (2) on his fifth and last journey, Rom. xv. 26, 27, 1 Cor. xvi. 3, 2 Cor. ix. 1 sq, Acts xxiv. 17, shortly after this letter was written. These facts throw light on the incident.
in the text. His past care for their poor prompted this request of the elder Apostles. His subsequent zeal in the same cause was the answer to their appeal.

'd καί ἐσπούδασα κτλ.] 'this was my own heartfelt desire.' 'I needed no prompting to do this.' The Galatians had personal experience of this zeal, for their own alms had been solicited by St Paul for this very purpose shortly before, 1 Cor. xvi. 1-3. See the introduction, pp. 25, 55.

The transition from the plural (µη µονενωμεν) to the singular (εσπούδασα) is significant. Before St Paul had any opportunity of fulfilling this request, he had parted from Barnabas; Acts xv. 39.

αὐτὸ τόντο] is best taken in opposition with δ, see Winer §xxiii. p. 184 sq; a construction not without example in classical Greek, but more frequent in the LXX and New Testament, inasmuch as it reproduces the common Hebrew idiom: comp. Mark vii. 25, Acts xv. 17, 1 Pet. ii. 24.

11—14. 'At Jerusalem, I owed nothing to the Apostles of the Circumcision. I maintained my independence and my equality. At Antioch I was more than an equal. I openly rebuked the leading Apostle of the Circumcision, for his conduct condemned itself. He had been accustomed to mix freely with the Gentiles, eating at the same table with them. But certain persons arrived from James, and he timidly withdrew himself. He had not courage to face the displeasure of the Jewish converts. The rest were carried away by his example. Even Barnabas, my colleague, and fellow-apostle of the Gentiles, went astray.'

11. 'Οτε δὲ] This occurred probably during the sojourn of Paul and Barnabas at Antioch, immediately after the Apostolic congress (Acts xv. 30—40). The inconsistency which St Peter thus appears to have shown so soon after his championship of Gentile liberty at the congress, is rather in favour of than against this view; for the point of St Paul's rebuke is his inconsistency. But in fact there is scarcely an alternative. An earlier residence at Antioch (Acts xiii. 1—3) is out of the question, for St Paul is plainly narrating events in chronological order. Neither again is it probable that a later occasion (Acts xviii. 23) can be intended; for after the separation of Paul and Barnabas, there is no notice of their meeting again.

To this passage is probably to be attributed the ecclesiastical tradition that St Peter founded the Church of Antioch (Euseb. Chron. A.D. 44). Jerome (ad loc.) states still more definitely that he was bishop of this see first, whence he was translated to Rome. See also Euseb. H. E. iii. 22, 36, Chrysost. Op. iii. p. 70, ed. Ben.

κατεγνωσμένος] not 'reprehensible,' but 'condemned.' His conduct carried its own condemnation with it, as St Paul shows vv. 15 sq: comp. Rom. xiv. 23 ὃ διακρίφθη, εἰς φάγη, κατάκεκριτα, Joh. iii. 18 ὃ μὴ πιστεύω ἠδὲ κέκριται, Barnab. τὸ κεκρίμενον ἠδὲ τὸ θανάτῳ, Joseph. B. J. ii. 8. 6 ἠδὲ γὰρ κατεγνώσθαι φασὶ κτλ. The condemnation is not the verdict of the bystanders, but the verdict of the act itself.

This passage was made the ground of an attack on St Paul in an Ebionite fiction of the second century, where St Peter says to Simon Magus (whose name is used as a mask for St Paul), 'Thou hast withstood me to the face ...If thou callest me condemned, thou accusest God who revealed Christ to me.' See the whole passage Clem. Hom. xvii. 19: comp. p. 61, and the notes on ii. 13, iv. 16, 24.
II2

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. [IL 13

τοῦ γὰρ ἐλθεῖν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου μετὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν συνήσθεν· ὅτε δὲ ἦλθον, ὑπέστηλεν καὶ ἀφώριζεν ἐαυτὸν, φοβούμενος τοὺς ἐκ περιτομῆς, καὶ συνυπεκρίθησαν αὐτῷ [καὶ] οἱ λοιποὶ Ἰουδαῖοι, ὡστε καὶ

12. ἐλθεῖν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου] 'certain came from James.' Of these nothing more can safely be inferred than that they belonged to the Church of Jerusalem. It is not improbable however, that they came invested with some powers from James which they abused. Compare the expression in the Apostolic letter (which seems to have been drawn up by him) Acts xv. 24, τινὲς ἐκ ἡμῶν ἐξελθόντες ἐτάφαραν ὑμᾶς...οἷς ὑπεισέλθαμεν, and xv. 1 τινὲς κατελθόντες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας. The terms on which St James stood with believers of this stamp may be gathered from the language in Acts xxii.

συνήσθεν] The Judaizers who troubled the Church at this time are described, Acts xv. 5, as converts belonging to the sect of the Pharisees. The prohibition against eating meat with the impure was one of the leading principles of this sect, Luke xv. 2. As the agape was the recognised bond of brotherhood in the infant Church, this separation struck at the very root of Christian life. St Peter's vision (see especially Acts x. 27, xi. 3) had taught him the worthlessness of these narrow traditions. He had no scruples about living ἐθνικῶς. And when in this instance he separated himself from the Gentiles, he practically dissembled his convictions.

ὁτε δὲ ἦλθον] 'but when they came.' The reading ἦλθεν yields no good sense, whether we refer it to St James with Origen (c. Col. ii. 1 ἠθόντος Ἰακώβου) or to St Peter with other writers. I have given it a place nevertheless, as an alternative reading, on account of the weight of authority in its favour: for though it can scarcely have been the word intended by St Paul, it may possibly be due to an error of the original amanuensis. For a similar instance of a manifestly false reading highly supported and perhaps to be explained in this way, see Phil. ii. 1 ἐν σπλάγχνι καὶ ὁσιωμοί. Such readings are a valuable testimony to the scrupulous exactness of the older transcribers, who thus reproduced the text as they found it, even when clearly incorrect. In this passage the occurrence of the same words ὅτε δὲ ἦλθεν, ver. 11, is the probable cause of the mistake.

ὑπέστηλεν καὶ ἀφώριζεν] 'gradually withdrew and separated himself.' Both verbs govern ἐναυτός: compare Polyb. vii. 17. ὑπέστηλαν ἐναυτούς ὑπὸ τινα προστοκυών ὀφρίων. The words describe forcibly the cautious withdrawal of a timid person who shrinks from observation, ὑπέστηλεν denoting the partial, ἀφώριζεν the complete and final separation. The word ὑποστήλεως is frequently used, as in the passage quoted, in describing strategic operations; and so far as it is metaphorical here, the metaphor seems to be derived from military rather than from nautical matters. Comp. στέλλεσθαι, 2 Thess. iii. 6.

τοὺς ἐκ περιτομῆς] not 'Jews' but 'converts from Judaism,' for this seems to be the force of the preposition: Acts x. 45, xi. 2, Col. iv. 11, Tit. i. 10.

13. οἱ λοιποὶ Ἰουδαῖοι] i.e. the rest of the Jewish converts resident at Antioch, who, like St Peter, had mixed freely with the Gentiles until Barṇābas συναπτήχθη αὐτῶν τῇ ὑποκρίσει. ἦδεν ὅτε ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθοτοῦς πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, εἶπον τῷ Κηφᾷ ἐμπροσθὲν πάντων Εἰ σὺ

the arrival of their brethren from Jerusalem. The observance of Pharisaic practices with the latter was a genuine expression of bigotry, but with the Jews of Antioch and with St Peter it was ὑπόκρισις, the assumption of a part which masked their genuine feelings and made them appear otherwise than they were. The idea at the root of ὑπόκρισις is not a false motive entertained, but a false impression produced. The writer of the epistle prefixed to the Clementines, doubtless alluding to this passage, speaks of some who misrepresented Peter, as though he believed that the law was abolished, 'but did not preach it openly'; Ep. Petr. § 2.

kal Barṇābas] 'even Barnabas my own friend and colleague, who so lately had gone up to protect the interests of the Gentiles against the pressure of the Pharisaic brethren.' It is not impossible that this incident, by producing a temporary feeling of distrust, may have prepared the way for the dissension between Paul and Barnabas which shortly afterwards led to their separation: Acts xv. 39.

From this time forward they never again appear associated together. But on the other hand, whenever St Paul mentions Barnabas, his words imply sympathy and respect. This feeling underlies the language of his complaint here, 'even Barnabas.' In 1 Cor. ix. 6 also he connects Barnabas with himself, as one who had laboured in the same disinterested spirit and had the same claims upon the Gentile converts. Lastly in Col. iv. 10 he commends Mark to the Colossian Church, as being the cousin of Barnabas.

14, I 5. 'Seeing that they had left the straight path and abandoned the true principles of the Gospel, I reproved Cephas publicly. Thou thyself, though born and bred a Jew, dost nevertheless lay aside Jewish customs and livest as the Gentiles. On what plea then dost thou constrain the Gentiles to adopt the institutions of the Jews?'

14. οὐκ ὀρθοτοῦσιν πρὸς κτλ.] i.e. 'they diverge from the straight path of the Gospel truth.' The word ὀρθοτοῦσιν appears not to occur elsewhere, except in later ecclesiastical writers, where its use may be traced to this passage of St Paul. Its classical equivalent is εὐθυποτείχιον. The preposition πρὸς here denotes not the goal to be attained, but the line of direction to be observed: see Winer § xlix. p. 505. For ἀλήθεια τοῦ εὐαγγελίου see the note on ii. 5.

ἐἰπὼν] Were all the concluding verses of the chapter actually spoken by St Paul at the time, or is he adding a comment while narrating the incident afterwards to the Galatians; and if so, where does the text cease and the comment begin? To this question it seems impossible to give a definite answer. St Paul's narrative in fact loses itself in the reflections suggested by it. Text and comment are so blended together that they cannot be separated without violence. The use of the word ἀμαρτωλοί, vv. 15, 17, marks the language of one speaking as a Jew to Jews, and therefore may be regarded as part of the original remonstrance; and yet, though there is no break in the continuity from that point onward, we find at the end of the chapter that St Paul's thoughts and language have drifted away from Peter at Antioch to the Judaizers in Galatia. For similar instances where the direct language of the speaker is intermingled with the after comment of the narrator, see John i. 15-18, where the testimony of the Baptist loses itself in the thoughts of the Evangelist, and Acts i. 16-21, where St Peter's allusion to the death of Judas is interwoven with the after explanations of St Luke.

ιουδαίοι ὑπάρχων] almost equivalent to φύσει 'Ιουδαίοι below; see i. 14. In such cases ὑπάρχων implies a contrast between the original and the after state, e.g. in Phil. ii. 6. Here it is very emphatic; 'If you, born and bred a Jew, discard Jewish customs, how unreasonable to impose them on Gentiles.'

ἐθνικός ἦς i.e. mix freely with the Gentiles and thus of necessity disregard the Jewish law of meats. The present tense describes St Peter's general principles, as acted upon long before at Cæsarea (Acts x. 28), and just lately at Antioch (ver. 12), though at the exact moment when St Paul was speaking, he was living ἱουδαίος and not ἐθνικός.

οὐχ 'Ιουδαίοκος] The best MSS agree in reading the aspirated form οὐχ. For other examples of anomalous aspirates in the Greek Testament see Winer § v. p. 48, and comp. the note on Phil. ii. 23 ἄφιδω. In this particular instance the aspirate may perhaps be accounted for by the γιο with which the Hebrew word (בַּדְמָה) represented by 'Ιουδαίοι commences.

ἀναγκᾷς] i.e. practically oblige them, though such was not his intention. The force of his example, concealing his true principles, became a species of compulsion.

ιουδαίοι ὑπάρχων] 'to adopt Jewish customs,' opposed to ἐθνικός ἦς which in connexion with 'Ιουδαίοι ὑπάρχων is equivalent to ἀληθείς; comp. Esth. viii. 17 καὶ πολλοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν περιστέραν καὶ Ἰουδαίων διὰ τῶν φοβοὺ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, Plut. Vit. Cic. 7 ὑνομεύετι Ἰουδαίες. See the note on 'Ιουδαίσμος, i. 13.

15, 16. 'Only consider our own case. We were born to all the privileges of the Israelite race; we were not sinners, as we proudly call the Gentiles. What then? We saw that the observance of law would not justify any man, that faith in Jesus Christ was the only means of justification. Therefore we turned to a belief in Christ. Thus our Christian profession is itself an acknowledgment that such observances are worthless and void, because, as the Scripture declares, no flesh can be justified by works of law.'

Of many constructions proposed, the simplest and best is to understand the substantive verb in ver. 15, 'We (are) Jews by birth etc.' The δὲ of ver. 16, which is omitted in the received text, is certainly genuine.

15. φύσει Ιουδαίοι] 'Jews by birth, not only not Gentiles, but not even proselytes. We inherited the Jewish religion. Everything was done for us, which race could do.' See especially Phil. iii. 4, 5.
II. 16] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 115

ἀμαρτωλοί] 'sinners.' The word was almost a synonyme for ἠθνὲς in the religious phraseology of the Jews. See 1 Macc. ii. 44, Clem. Hom. xi. 16; and compare Luke vi. 32, 33 with Matt. v. 47, and especially Matt. xxvi. 45 with Luke xviii. 32. Here ἀμαρτωλοί is used in preference to ἡθνὲς, not without a shade of irony, as better enforcing St Paul's argument. See the note on ver. 17.

16. οὖν μὴ] retains its proper meaning, but refers only to τὸ δικαιοφόρον, 'He is not justified from works of law, he is not justified except through faith.' See the note on i. 19.

καὶ ἡμεῖς] 'we ourselves,' notwithstanding our privileges of race. Compare καὶ αὐτοί, ver. 17.

ἐπιστευόμενοι] 'became believers.' See the note on 2 Thess. i. 10. The phrase πιστεύω εἰς or ἐπὶ τινα is peculiarly Christian; see Winer § xxxi. p. 267. The constructions of the IXX are πιστεύω τινι, rarely πιστεύω ἐπὶ τινα or ἐν τίνι, and once only ἐπὶ τινα, Wisd. xii. 2 πιστεύω ἐπὶ Θεόν. The phrase, which occurs in the revised Nicene and other creeds, πιστεύω εἰς ἐκλεσίαν, though an intelligible, is yet a lax expression, the propriety of which was rightly disputed by many of the fathers, who maintained that πιστεύω εἰς should be reserved for belief in God or in Christ. See the passages in Suicer Thesaur. s. v. πιστεύω, and Pearson On the Creed Art. ix.

ἐπὶ πίστεως Χριστοῦ] It seems almost impossible to trace the subtle process which has led to the change of prepositions here. In Rom. iii. 30, on the other hand, an explanation is challenged by the direct opposition of ἐκ πίστεως and διὰ τῆς πίστεως. Both prepositions are used elsewhere by St Paul with δικαιοφόρον, δικαιοσύνη, indifferently; though where very great precision is aimed at, he seems for an obvious reason to prefer διὰ, as in Ephes. ii. 8, 9, Phil. iii. 9 μὴ ἔχων ἐθνὸς δικαιοφόρον τὴν μὲν νόμον ἄλλα τὴν διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ κ.τ.λ., which words present an exact parallel to the former part of this verse, οὐκ εἰς ἐργαν νόμου, ἐὰν μὴ διὰ τῆς πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Faith is strictly speaking only the means, not the source of justification. The one preposition (διὰ) excludes this latter notion, while the other (ἐκ) might imply it. Besides these we meet also with ἐπὶ πίστεως (Phil. iii. 9), but never διὰ πίστιν, 'propter fidem,' which would involve a doctrinal error. Compare the careful language in the Latin of our Article x, 'per fidem, non propter operam.' οὖν] is the best supported, and doubtless the correct reading. The reading of the received text οὖν has probably been imported from the parallel passage, Rom. iii. 20. οὖν εἰς ἐργαν κ.τ.λ.] A quotation from the Old Testament, as appears from the Hebraism οὐ πᾶσα, and from the introductory οὖν. This sentence indeed would be an unmeaning repetition of what has gone before, unless the Apostle were enforcing his own statements by some authoritative declaration. The words are therefore to be regarded as a free citation of Psalm cxliii. 2 οὐ δικαιοφόρησατε ἐναποτιν σου πάν ὄν. For πᾶς ὄν, a 17. Among a vast number of interpretations which have been given of this verse, the following alone deserve consideration.

First: We may regard ἔτεκες διάξονος ἄμαρτιας as a conclusion logically inferred from the premises, supposing them to be granted; 'If in order to be justified in Christ it was necessary to abandon the law, and if the abandonment of the law is sinful, then Christ is made a minister of sin.' In this case ἀρα is preferable to ἄρα.

If the passage is so taken, it is an attack on the premises through the conclusion which is obviously monstrous and untenable. Now the assumptions in the premises are two-fold: (1) 'To be justified in Christ it is necessary to abandon the law,' and (2) 'To abandon the law is to become sinners'; and as we suppose one or other of these attacked, we shall get two distinct meanings for the passage, as follows: (1) It is an attempt of the Judaizing objector to show that the abandonment of the law was wrong, inasmuch as it led to so false an inference: 'To abandon the law is to commit sin; it must therefore be wrong to abandon the law in order to be justified in Christ, for this is to make Christ a minister of sin': or (2) It is an argument on the part of St Paul to show that to abandon the law is not to commit sin; 'It cannot be sinful to abandon the law, because it is necessary to abandon the law in order to be justified in Christ, and thus Christ would be made a minister of sin.'

Of these two interpretations, the latter is adopted by many of the fathers. Yet, if our choice were restricted to one or other, the former would seem preferable, for it retains the sense of ἄμαρτιας ('sinners' from a Jewish point of view), which it had in ver. 15, and is more consistent with the indicative εὑρέθημεν, this proposition being assumed as absolutely true by the Jewish objector. But on the other hand, it forms an awkward introduction to the verse which follows.

It is probable therefore that both should be abandoned in favour of another explanation: For

Secondly: We may regard ἔτεκες διάξονος ἄμαρτιας διάκωνοι as an illogical conclusion deduced from premises in themselves correct; 'Seeing that in order to be justified in Christ it was necessary to abandon our old ground of legal righteousness and to become sinners (i.e. to put ourselves in the position of the heathen), may it not be argued that Christ is thus made a minister of sin?" This interpretation best develops the subtle irony of the context. "We Jews look down upon the Gentiles as sinners: yet we have no help for it but to become sinners like them." It agrees with the indicative form of the verb, and with St Paul's usage of it elsewhere in argumentative passages always negatives a false but plausible inference from premisses taken as granted. And lastly, it paves the way for the words "a,λα,τα τινάς ταῦτα πάλιν οίκοδομῶ, παραβάτην ἐμαυτὸν συνιστάνω." 19 'έγω

18. 'If, after destroying the old law of ordinances, I attempt to build it up again, I condemn myself, I testify to my guilt in the work of destruction.' The pulling down and building up have reference doubtless to the Mosaic law, though expressed as a general maxim (ταύτα). The difficulty however is to trace the connexion in γάρ.

With the interpretation of ver. 17 adopted above, it seems simplest to attach γάρ to μὴ γένοιτο, 'Nay verily, for, so far from Christ being a minister of sin, there is no sin at all in abandoning the law: it is only converted into a sin by returning to the law again.' For this use of γάρ after μὴ γένοιτο comp. Rom. ix. 14, 15, xi. 1. παραβάτην ἐμαυτὸν συνιστάω] 'I make myself out, establish myself, a transgressor.' It will have been seen that much of the force of the passage depends on the sense which the Jews attached to aµ,apTooAor. Having passed on from this to aµ,apTla, St Paul at length throws off the studied ambiguity of aµ,apTooAos ('a non-observer of the law,' and 'a sinner') by substituting the plain term συνιστάω. ἐμαυτὸν συνιστάω is opposed to Χριστὸς ἀµαρτίας διάκονος, though from its position ἐμαυτὸν cannot be very emphatic.

συνιστάω] 'I prove,' like συµβιβάζω, as Rom. iii. 5, v. 8; comp. 2 Cor. iii. 1.

19. Establishing the statement of the foregoing verse: 'For in abandoning the law, I did but follow the leading of the law itself.'

'έγω] Not 'I Paul' as distinguished from others, for instance from the Gentile converts, but 'I Paul, the natural man, the slave of the old covenant.' The emphasis on 'έγω is explained by the following verse, ἐν δὲ οὐκέτι ἔγω κ.τ.λ.
In what sense can one be said through law to have died to law? Of all the answers that have been given to this question, two alone seem to deserve consideration. The law may be said in two different ways to be παραγωγός εἰς Χριστόν. We may regard

I. Its economical purpose. 'The law bore on its face the marks of its transitory character. Its prophecies foretold Christ. Its sacrifices and other typical rites foreshadowed Christ. It was therefore an act of obedience to the law, when Christ came, to take Him as my master in place of the law.' This interpretation, however, though quite in character with St Paul's teaching elsewhere, does not suit the present passage; For (1) The written law—the Old Testament—is always νόμος. At least it seems never to be quoted otherwise. Νόμος without the article is 'law' considered as a principle, exemplified no doubt chiefly and signalily in the Mosaic law, but very much wider than this in its application. In explaining this passage therefore, we must seek for some element in the Mosaic law which it had in common with law generally, instead of dwelling on its special characteristics, as a prophetic and typical dispensation. Moreover, (2) the interpretation thus elicited makes the words διὰ νόμου νόμῳ ἀπέθανον an appeal rather to the reason and intellect, than to the heart and conscience; but the phrases 'living unto God,' 'being crucified with Christ,' and indeed the whole tenour of the passage, point rather to the moral and spiritual change wrought in the believer. Thus we are led to seek the explanation of this expression rather in

II. Its moral effects. The law reveals sin; it also provokes sin; nay, in a certain sense, it may be said to create sin, for 'sin is not reckoned where there is no law' (Rom. v. 13). Thus the law is the strength of sin (1 Cor. xv. 56). At the same time it provides no remedy for the sinner. On the contrary it condemns him hopelessly, for no one can fulfil all the requirements of the law. The law then exercises a double power over those subject to it; it makes them sinners, and it punishes them for being so. What can they do to escape? They have no choice but to throw off the bondage of the law, for the law itself has driven them to this. They find the deliverance, which they seek, in Christ. See Rom. vii. 24, 25, and indeed the whole passage, Rom. v. 20—viii. 11. Thus then they pass through three stages, (1) Prior to the law—sinful, but ignorant of sin; (2) Under the law—sinful, and conscious of sin, yearning after better things; (3) Free from the law—free and justified in Christ. This sequence is clearly stated Rom. v. 20. The second stage (διὰ νόμου) is a necessary preparation for the third (νόμῳ ἀπέθανον). 'Proinde,' says Luther on iii. 19 (the edition of 1519), 'ut remissio propter salutem, ita praevaricatio propter remissionem, ita lex propter transgressionem.'

What the Mosaic ordinances were to the Jews, other codes of precepts and systems of restraints were in an inferior degree and less efficaciously to other nations. They too, like the Jews, had felt the bondage of law in some form or other. See iv. 9, v. 1, and the note on iv. 11.

νόμῳ ἀπέθανον 'I died to law.' For the dative comp. Rom. vi. 2, 11 (τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ), and for the idea of 'dying to the law' Rom. vii. 1—6, esp. ver. 4 καὶ ὡς ἑθανατώθησε τῷ νόμῳ, and ver. 6 καθηρυθμήσειν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου ἀποθα-
20. With Christ I have been crucified at once to the law and to sin. Henceforth I live a new life—yet not I, but Christ liveth it in me. This new life is not a rule of carnal ordinances; it is spiritual, and its motive principle is faith in the Son of God who manifested His love for me by dying for my sake. I cannot then despise God's grace. I cannot stultify Christ's death by clinging still to a justification based upon law.

20. An expansion of the idea in the last verse.

Χριστῷ συνεστάφθομαι] 'I have been crucified with Christ.' A new turn is thus given to the metaphor of death. In the last verse it was the release from past obligations; here it is the annihilation of old sins. The two however are not unconnected. Sin and law loose their hold at the same time. The sense of feebleness, of prostration, to which a man is reduced by the working of the law, the process of dying in fact, is the moral link which unites the two applications of the image: see Rom. vii. 5, 9-11. Thus his death becomes life. Being crucified with Christ, he rises with Christ, and lives to God.

The parallel passage in the Romans best illustrates the different senses given to death. See also, for a similar and characteristic instance of working out a metaphor, the different applications of ἁμρήμα in 1 Thess. v. 2—8.

For the idea of dying with Christ etc., see Rom. vi. 6 ὅ πάλαι ἐκ τοῦ νεότιτος συνεστάφθομαι: comp. Gal. v. 24, vi. 14, Rom. vi. 8, Col. ii. 20, ἅπασιν σὺν Χριστῷ, and Rom. vi. 4, Col. ii. 12, συνταφθήναι. Comp. Ignat. Rom. § 7 ὅ ἐμός ἐρωτῶσιν αὐτῶν. The correlative idea of rising and reigning with Christ is equally common in St Paul.

τό φανερωθεὶς ἐγώ] The order is significant: 'When I speak of living, I do not mean myself, my natural being. I have no longer a separate existence. I am merged in Christ.' See on ἐγώ ver. 19.

οὐκ ὅντος [Not exactly ὅντος ἐκ τοῦ νεότιτος, but ὅ limits and qualifies the idea of life: 'So far as I now live in the flesh, it is a life of faith': comp. Rom. vi. 10 ὅ γὰρ ἀπέθανεν, τῇ ἁμρήμα ἀπέθανεν ἀμάρτασα, ὅ ὅντος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, Plut. Mor. p. 100 F ὅ καθεύθυνεν, τοῦ σώματος ὄντος ἐστὶ καὶ ἀνάπαυσις.

ἔν θρόνον': his new life in Christ, as opposed to his old life before his conversion; not his present life on earth, as opposed to his future life in heaven; for such a contrast is quite foreign to this passage.

εἰς πίστιν] 'in faith,' the atmosphere as it were which he breathes in this his new spiritual life.

The variation of reading here is perplexing. For τοῦ νεότιτος τοῦ Θεοῦ may be pleaded the great preponderance of the older authorities: for τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ, the testimony of a few ancient copies, and the difficulty of conceiving its substitution for the other simpler reading.

μέν...ἐμοῖ] 'loved me, gave Himself for me.' He appropriates to himself, as Chrysostom observes, the love which belongs equally to the whole world. For Christ is indeed the personal friend of each man individually; and is as much to him, as if He had died for him alone.

21. οὐκ ἔστῶ εἰς λα.] 'I do not set at nought the grace of God.' Setting at nought I call it: for, if righteousness might be obtained through law, then Christ's death were superfluous. For ἀθετῶ 'to nullify' see Luke vii. 30, 1 Cor. i. 19: its exact sense here is explained by δωρεάν ἀπέθανεν. 'The grace of God' is manifested in Christ's death. The connexion of γὰρ is with the idea of ἀθετῶ, and may be explained by a supplied clause, as above. δωρεάν not 'in vain,' but 'uselessly, without sufficient cause,' or, as we might say, 'gratuitously,' John xv. 25 ἐμίσησάν με δωρεάν (Ps. xxxiv. 19); comp. LXX of Ps. xxxiv. 7 δωρεάν ἐκρυφάν μου διαθοράν, Hebr. מַעְלָה, where Symmachus had διαναίρως; Exclus. xx. 23.
EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

Various Readings in ii. 5.

The reading which is given in the text, ὥστε ὑπὸς ἀσπαν, is doubtless correct. Two variations however occur, which deserve notice.

1. The omission of ὥστε.

The negative is found in all the Greek uncial mss (i.e. in ΝΑΒCEF GKLP) except D, in which however it is inserted by a later hand, and apparently in all or nearly all the Greek cursive mss. It is expressly mentioned by the Ambrosian Hilary⁴ and by Jerome⁵, as the reading of the Greek copies. It is found also in the Gothic, Memphitic, Thebaic, both Syriac and other versions, and was unquestionably the original reading of the Vulgate, as it appears in all the best manuscripts of this version. It was read moreover by Marcion⁶, Ephraem Syrus, Epiphanius⁷, Chrysostom, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, the Pseudo-Ignatius⁸, and perhaps also by Origen⁹, among the Greeks; and by Ambrose⁷, Augustine⁸, Jerome, Pelagius (in his text, though he comments on the other reading), and Primiasius, among the Latins.

On the other hand, it is omitted in D (both Greek and Latin), and in the Latin of E; and the text is read without it by the translator of Irenæus⁹, by Tertullian¹⁰, Victorinus, the Ambrosian Hilary, Pelagius (in his commentary), and apparently Sulpicius Severus¹¹. We have it moreover on the authority of Jerome¹², of Primiasius¹³, and of Sedulius¹⁴, that the negative was not found in the Latin copies, and the same is implied by the language of the Ambrosian Hilary.

In the face of this testimony, the statement of Victorinus, that it was omitted in some Western or MSS alone. The author of the Old Latin version used one of these. And to the Old Latin version all or nearly all the existing authorities for the omission may be traced. Its absence in the Greek text of D is an exception, unless the charge of Latinising sometimes brought against this

---

(1) The negative. Found in most texts.
Tertullian’s charge against Marcion.

Omission how accounted for.

Ms can be substantiated. Irenæus is also to be accounted for, but in this case the omission may perhaps be ascribed not to the author himself, but to his translator.

A correction however would appear to have been made in that recension which was circulated in North Italy, for the negative is found both in Ambrose and in Augustine, the former of whom used the ‘Itala’ as a matter of course, and the latter by choice.

Tertullian indeed accuses Marcion of interpolating the negative; but no weight attaches to his assertion. The African father, not finding it in his own Latin copy and finding it in Marcion’s recension, caught at what appeared the simplest way of accounting for the variation. He would not stop to consider whether his own copy was correct. It was enough for him that the text with the negative was more favourable to Marcion’s peculiar views than without it. Tertullian makes no appeal to ms or external authority of any kind. He argues solely on grounds of internal evidence.

The omission in the first instance is not easily accounted for. It may have been an oversight. Or possibly the Latin translator, or the transcriber of the ms which he used, intentionally left it out, thinking, as some later critics thought, that the sense of the passage or the veracity of the Apostle required the omission. At all events the expedient of dropping the negative, as a means of simplifying the sense, is characteristic of the Latin copies. For other instances in St Paul see Gal. v. 8, Rom. v. 14, 1 Cor. v. 6, [Col. ii. 18]: comp. Joh. vi. 64, ix. 27.

The omission once made, arguments were not wanting to support it. Tertullian found that the negative vitiated the sense of the passage. He objected to it moreover as at variance with history, which showed that St Paul did yield on occasions, in circumcising Timothy for instance, and in paying the expenses of those who had taken Nazarite vows. The same arguments are brought forward by Victorinus and the Ambrosian Hilary.

With much greater justice Jerome maintains that it is required for the sense. But feeble as were his reasons, doubtless the authority of Tertullian, and the prejudice thus raised against this as the reading of Marcion, were fatal to its reception with many who otherwise would have conformed to the Greek text.

It is not uninteresting to observe how little influence this important various reading has had on the interpretation of the passage. The omission or insertion of οὐδὲ might have been expected to decide for or against the circumcision of Titus. This however is not the case. The Latin Fathers, who left out the negative, generally maintained that he was not circumcised.

Several modern critics, who retain it, hold that he was.

1 De Doctr. Christ. 6. 15.
2 For these references I am indebted to Reiche Comm. Crit. ii. p. 13.
3 ‘Litterae enim hoc indicant quia cessit, et historia factum exclamat.’ The passage is based on Tertullian.
4 So Victorinus and the Ambrosian Hilary. This is also the opinion of Tertullian (adv. Marc. v. 3), if I understand him rightly; though Baur, Paulus p. 122, interprets him differently. The only exception that I have remarked is Pelagius, who however has not the same reading in the text as in the notes.
The relative is omitted in some few texts which retain ὁμιλεῖ, and (z) The retained in some few which want ὁμιλεῖ; but for the most part the two are relative omitted or retained together. Here again the Greek texts are as unanimous as in the former case. The obvious motive of this omission is the improvement of the grammar by the removal of a redundant word.

This assumed necessity of altering the text somehow, in order to correct the grammar, may have been the first step towards the more important omission of the negative.

The later visit of St Paul to Jerusalem.

The later of the two visits to Jerusalem mentioned in the Epistle has the same from the earliest times been identified with the visit recorded in Acts xv. This view is taken by Irenæus 1, the first writer who alludes to the subject; and though it has not escaped unchallenged either in ancient or modern days, the arguments in its favour are sufficiently strong to resist the pressure of objections to which it is fairly exposed 3.

I. In support of this view may be urged the positive argument from the striking coincidence of circumstances, and the negative argument from the difficulty of finding any equally probable solution, or indeed any probable solution at all besides.

(i) The later visit of the Galatian Epistle coincides with the third visit (i) of the Acts, when the so-called Apostolic Council was held, in all the most important features. The geography is the same. In both narratives the communications take place between Jerusalem and Antioch: in both the headquarters of the false brethren are at the former place, their machinations are carried on in the latter: in both the Gentile Apostles go up to Jerusalem apparently from Antioch, and return thence to Antioch again. The time is the same, or at least not inconsistent. St Paul places the event 15 or 16 years after his conversion: St Luke's narrative implies that they

1 Iren. iii. 13. 3 'Si quis igitur diligenter ex Actibus Apostolorum scrutetur tempus de quo scriptum est, Ascendi Hierosolymam, propter prædictam quaestionem, inveni t eos, qui prædicti sunt a Paulo, annos concurrentes etc.' So also apparently Tertullian, adv. Marc. v. 2, 3.

2 This visit is placed after the third in the Acts by Chrysostom, but not further defined. It is identified with the fifth by Epiphanius Haer. xxviii. 4, p. 112. The Chron. Pasch. (t. p. 435 sq. ed. Dind.) places it after the incidents of Acts xiii. 1—3, and before those of Acts xv, thus apparently interpointing it between the second and third visits of the Acts.

3 The view adopted is that of most recent critics. It is well maintained by Schott, De Wette, Conybeare and Howson, Jowett, and others. The arguments in favour of the second visit of the Acts are best stated by Fritzsche Opusc. p. 223 sq. The fourth visit of the Acts finds its ablest champion in Wieseler, Galat. p. 553 sq. The fifth visit has been abandoned by modern critics, as the epistle was clearly written before that time. Some few, e.g. Paley Horae Paulinae ch. v. no. 10, suppose this to be a journey to Jerusalem omitted in the Acts.
took place about the year 51. The persons are the same: Paul and Barnabas appear as the representatives of the Gentile Churches, Cephas and James as the leaders of the Circumcision. The agitators are similarly described in the two accounts: in the Acts, as converted Pharisees who had imported their dogmas into the Christian Church; in the Epistle, as false brethren who attempt to impose the bondage of the law on the Gentile converts. The two Apostles of the Gentiles are represented in both accounts as attended: ‘certain other Gentiles’ (.Logf wipos) are mentioned by St Luke; Titus, a Gentile, is named by St Paul. The subject of dispute is the same; the circumcision of the Gentile converts. The character of the conference is in general the same; a prolonged and hard-fought contest. The result is the same; the exemption of the Gentiles from the enactments of the law, and the recognition of the Apostolic commission of Paul and Barnabas by the leaders of the Jewish Church.

A combination of circumstances so striking is not likely to have occurred twice within a few years.

(ii) Negative. Difficulty of other solutions.

(i) Nor indeed can this visit be identified with any other recorded in St Luke. It has been taken by some for instance for the second visit of the Acts. To this supposition the date alone is fatal. The second visit of the Acts synchronizes, or nearly so, with the persecution and death of Herod, which latter event happened in the year 44. But at least 12 or 13, probably 15 or 16 years, had elapsed since St Paul’s conversion, before he paid the visit in question. And no system of chronology at all probable will admit of so early a date for his conversion as would thus be required. But again, according to the narrative of the Acts St Paul’s Apostolic mission commenced after the second visit, whereas the account in the Epistle

1 This is calculated by a back reckoning of the time spent from the Apostolic Council to the appointment of Festus, the date of which is fixed independently at A.D. 60; see Wieseler Chronol. p. 66 sq.

2 St Luke’s notices are, xv. 2 γενομένης στάσεως καὶ ἄστος διήγησις τῷ Παῦλῳ καὶ τῷ Βαρνάβᾳ πρὸς αὐτούς, at Antioch; xv. 5 ἔφεσθαι δὲ τεῖνες, at Jerusalem before the congress; xv. 7 πολλὰς δὲ τῇ ἡγήσεις γενομένης, at Jerusalem at the congress.

3 The order of events in St Luke’s narrative is as follows; (1) the notice of St Paul’s setting out from Antioch for Jerusalem, xi. 30; (2) the persecution of Herod, the death of James, and the imprisonment and escape of Peter, xii. 1–19; (3) the death of Herod, and the spread of the word, xii. 20–24; (4) St Paul’s business at Jerusalem and his departure thence, xii. 25. The narrative itself suggests the motive of this order, which is not directly chronological. Having mentioned in (1) St Paul’s mission to Jerusalem, the writer is led in (2) to describe the condition of the Church there, καὶ ἐκεῖνον τὸν καρπὸν. This obliges him to pass on to (3) in order to show that God defeated the purposes of man, the persecutor dying ignominiously, and the persecuted Church continuing to flourish. He then resumes the subject of (1) in (4). Thus it may be assumed, I think, that the Church was suffering from Herod’s persecutions when St Paul arrived, but not that Herod was already dead. In other words, the chronological order was probably (2), (1), (4), (3).

4 His career as an Apostle commences with Acts xiii. He had before this held a subordinate place, and his preaching had been confined to Damascus (ix. 22), Jerusalem (ix. 28), and the neighbourhood of Tarsus and Antioch (ix. 30, xi. 25 sq., comp. also Gal. i. 21).
clearly implies that his Apostolic office and labours were well known and recognised before this conference.

Still more serious objections lie against identifying it with any later visit in the Acts—the fourth for instance. It is perhaps a sufficient answer to such a solution, that St Paul’s connexion with Barnabas seems to have ceased before. A more fatal difficulty still would be his silence respecting the third visit, so marked with incidents, and so pregnant with consequences bearing directly on the subject of which he is treating.

II. On the other hand the identification adopted involves various difficulties, which however, when weighed, do not seem sufficient to turn the scale. These difficulties are of two classes:

(i) Discrepancies appearing to exist between the two narratives.

On the whole however the circumstances of the writers and the different purposes of the narrators seem sufficient to explain the divergences, real or apparent, in the two accounts: and the remarks made in comparing the two records of the former visit apply with even more force to this (see p. 91). The alleged discrepancies are these:

(a) In the Acts St Paul is represented as sent to Jerusalem by the Christians of Antioch to settle some disputes which had arisen there; in the Epistle he states that he went up by revelation. Here however there is no contradiction. The historian naturally records the external impulse, which led to the mission: the Apostle himself states his inward motive. ‘What I did,’ he says, ‘I did not owing to circumstances, not as yielding to pressure, not in deference to others, but because the Spirit of God told me it was right.’ The very stress which he lays on this revelation seems to show that other influences were at work.

The following parallel cases suggest how the one motive might supplement the other.

(a) In Acts ix. 29, 30, it is said, ‘They went about to slay him, which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.’ St Paul’s own account of this incident, Acts xxii. 17 sq., is as follows: ‘While I prayed in the temple I was in a trance, and saw him saying unto me, Make haste and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem, for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me, etc.’

(b) In Acts xiii. 2—4 the mission of Paul and Barnabas is attributed both to the Holy Spirit and to the Church of Antioch: ‘The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them; and when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away (ἀπελυσαν). So they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost (ἐκπεμφθέντες ὑπὸ τοῦ ἅγιου πνεύματος) etc.’

(c) Acts xv. 28, ‘It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us.’

(b) St Paul speaks of his communications as made to the Apostles in private: St Luke’s narrative describes a general congress of the Church.

The divergence is due to the different aims of the two writers. St Paul is dwelling on what he owed or did not owe to the Twelve. St Luke describes the results as affecting the interests of the Church at large. St Paul mentions or rather alludes to the private history which led to the public transactions, the secret springs, as it were, which set the machinery in motion. This history can have been but partially known to St Luke, nor did it lie within his province to record it.

But in fact, while each narrative thus presents a different aspect of this chapter of history, each also contains indications that the other aspect was recognised, though not dwelt upon, by the writer. The very form of St Paul's expression, ἄνευ ἡμῶν αὐτός, καὶ ἰδιαν δὲ τοῖς δοκοῦσιν, implies something besides the private conference; the transactions themselves—the dispute about Titus for instance—involves more or less of publicity: the purpose sought to be attained could scarcely be effected in any other way: and the fragmentary character of the Apostle's account leaves ample space for the insertion of other incidents besides those given. On the other hand St Luke alludes in a general way to conferences and discussions preceding the congress (xv. 4, 5, 6): and the speeches there delivered, the measures there proposed, are plainly the result of much wise forethought and patient deliberation on the part of the Apostles.

Again, it is said, the account of St Luke leaves the impression of perfect and unbroken harmony between St Paul and the Twelve; while St Paul's narrative betrays, or seems to betray, signs of dissatisfaction with their counsels. In the Acts the leading Apostles of the Circumcision stand forth as the champions of Gentile liberty: the writer of the Epistle on the other hand implies or appears to imply, that they owed to himself and Barnabas alone their emancipation from the bondage sought to be imposed upon them.

But here again the difficulty diminishes, when we try to picture to ourselves what was likely to have been the course of events. The articles of the so-called Apostolic Council were 'Articles of Peace.' To infringe no principle and yet to quiet opposition, to concede as much as would satisfy the one party and not enough to press heavily on the other—this was the object to be attained. Thus the result was a compromise. Long discussions, many misgivings, some differences of opinion, must have arisen on a question so delicate and yet so momentous; and though the unanimity of the final decision was indeed the prompting of the Holy Ghost, it would be not less contrary to all analogies of the Apostolic history, than to all human experience, to suppose that no error or weakness or prejudice had revealed itself in the process. It would seem moreover, that by the time the congress met, St Paul's work was already done. His large experience gained in contact with the Gentile Churches had told upon the Twelve. If they hesitated at first, as they may have done, they hesitated now no longer. Opinions in favour of liberal measures towards the Gentiles would come with more force from the leading Apostles of the Circumcision. His own voice raised in their cause might only inflame the passions of the bigoted and prejudice the result. So we find that when the council meets, Paul and Barnabas confine themselves to narrating the success of their labours among the Gentiles. As regards the matter under dispute they are entirely passive.
are the direct omissions of St Paul, on the supposition that he is speaking of the visit of Acts xv.

(a) Above all, how comes it, that while enumerating his visits to Jerusalem, St Paul should mention the first and third, and pass over the second recorded in the Acts?

The answer is to be sought in the circumstances under which that visit was paid. The storm of persecution had broken over the Church of Jerusalem. One leading Apostle had been put to death; another rescued by a miracle had fled for his life. At this season of terror and confusion Paul and Barnabas arrived. It is probable that every Christian of rank had retired from the city. No mention is made of the Twelve; the salutations of the Gentile Apostles are received by ’The Elders.’ They arrived charged with alms for the relief of the poor brethren of Judaea. Having deposited these in trustworthy hands, they would depart with all convenient speed. Any lengthened stay might endanger their lives. Nor indeed was there any motive for remaining. Even had St Paul purposed holding conferences with the Apostles or the Church of the Circumcision, at this moment of dire distress it would have been impossible1. Of this visit then, so brief and so hurried, he makes no mention here. His object is not to enumerate his journeys to Jerusalem, but to define his relations with the Twelve; and on these relations it had no bearing.

(b) The omission of all mention of the Apostolic decree is a less considerable difficulty. The purport of the decree itself, and the form of opposition which St Paul encountered in Galatia, sufficiently explain his silence2.

1 St Luke dismisses this visit in a very few words; xi. 30 ἀποστείλατε πρὸς τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους διὰ χειρὸς Βαρ­

2 Παύσα καὶ Σαῦλον, xii. 25 Ἀρωμάς δὲ καὶ Σαῦλος ὑπέστρεψαν εἰς Ἰερουσαλήμ, πληρώσαντες τὴν διακονίαν, συμπαρα­

3 λαβόντες ἱδίαν τῶν ἐπικληθέντας Μάρ­

4 κο. It seems probable then that all the Apostles, perhaps even James, were away. Of Peter this is all but directly stated, xii. 17. This inference accords with an ancient tradition, that twelve years was the limit of time prescribed by our Lord for the Apostles to remain at Jerusalem. It is mentioned by Apollonius (circa A.D. 200, ap. Euseb. H. E. v. 18, ὑ ἐκ παραδόσεως), and by Clem. Alex. Strom. vi, p. 762, ed. Potter. The latter gives, as his authority, the Praedicatio Petri, and quotes the words μετὰ διδάσκα η τὴν ἐξήλθεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον. This carries the tradition back to an early date. On the sequence of events in this portion of the Acts, see above, p. 124, note 3.

2 Paley has some good remarks on this decree, Hor. Paul. ch. v. § 11.
prejudice (Acts xvi. 4). But in the brotherhoods afterwards formed and lying beyond the reach of such influences, no notice was taken of it.
St Paul's instructions for instance to the Corinthians and to the Romans entirely ignore one of its provisions, the prohibition against eating meats offered to idols. He speaks of this as a matter of indifference in itself, only important as it affected each man's conscience.

(2) The object of the decree was to relieve the Gentile Christians from the burden of Jewish observances. It said, 'Concede so much and we will protect you from any further exactions.' The Galatians sought no such protection. They were willing recipients of Judaic rites; and St Paul's object was to show them, not that they need not submit to these burdens against their will, but that they were wrong and sinful in submitting to them.

(3) The power
of
the Apostles of the Circumcision, and the precedence of the mother Church, had been unduly and exclusively exalted by the Judaizers in Galatia at the expense of St Paul's authority. The Epistle to the Galatians is from beginning to end a protest against these exaggerated claims. He refuses to acknowledge any human interference, he takes his stand throughout upon his direct commission from the Lord. By appealing to a decree of a Council held at Jerusalem for sanction on a point on which his own decision as an Apostle was final, he would have made the very concession which his enemies insisted upon.

Patristic accounts of the collision at Antioch.

The conduct of St Peter at Antioch has been a great stumblingblock both in ancient and modern times. It has been thought strange that the very Apostle, to whom was specially vouchsafed the revelation that there is nothing common or unclean, and who only a short time before this meeting at Antioch had declared himself plainly in favour of Gentile liberty, should have acted in a manner so inconsistent with all that had gone before.
Accordingly some have sought to wrest St Paul's language here, and others have denied the accuracy of the narrative in the Acts. But in fact St Peter's character, as it is drawn in the Gospels, explains every difficulty.

1 I Cor. i. 27 sq., Rom. xiv. 2 sq.
This question will be considered more at length in the dissertation on ' St Paul and the Three.'

2 The accounts of this crisis in the Apostolic history given by Neander
Pfanni, i. p. 205 sq., and de Pressensé
Trois Premiers Siècles, 1re série, i. p.
457 sq., seem to me on the whole among the most truthful, preserving a just mean between exaggerations on either side. Other references to important recent works will be given in the notes to the dissertation on ' St Paul and the Three.' Since the 1st dition of this volume was published
I have read the articles of Reuss, La Conférence de Jérusalem, in the Nouvelle 62. Though they contain many things with which I cannot agree, I gladly recognise the spirit of fairness in which they are written.
It is at least no surprise, that he who at one moment declared himself ready to lay down his life for his Lord's sake and even drew his sword in defence of his Master, and the next betrayed Him with a thrice repeated denial, should have acted in this case, as we infer he acted from the combined accounts of St Luke and St Paul. There is the same impulsive courage followed by the same shrinking timidity. And though St Paul's narrative stops short of the last scene in this drama, it would not be rash to conclude that it ended as the other had ended, that the revulsion of feeling was as sudden and complete, and that again he went out and wept bitterly, having denied his Lord in the person of these Gentile converts.

The history of the patristic interpretations of this passage is painfully instructive. The orthodox fathers of the early Church were sore pressed both by heretics and unbelievers. On the one hand Ebionite writers, like the author of the Clementines, made it a ground for a personal attack on St Paul. On the other, extreme Gnostics such as Marcion used it to prove the direct antagonism of Christianity to Judaism as represented by the opposition of the Gentile to the Jewish Apostle. And lastly, Porphyry and other writers availed themselves of the incident as an engine of assault on Christianity itself, impugning the characters of both Apostles in language which the fathers describe as coarse and blasphemous. How were these diverse attacks to be met? Tertullian, arguing against the Marcionites, resisted all temptations to wrest the plain meaning of the passage. Cyprian and Ambrose moreover took it in its obvious sense, and dividing between them the allegiance of subsequent writers.

1. Clement of Alexandria maintained that the Cephas here mentioned (i) was not the Apostle Peter, but one of the seventy disciples bearing the same name. Though the passage itself absolutely excludes such a view, it nevertheless found several adherents, and is mentioned by Eusebius without condemnation. Even in modern times it has been revived\(^2\), but has not been received with any favour.

(ii) Origen. 2. Origen started the theory\(^2\) that the dispute between Peter and Paul was simulated; in other words, being of one mind in the matter, they got up this scene that St Paul might the more effectually condemn the Judaizers through the chief of the Apostles, who, acknowledging the justice of the rebuke, set them an example of submission. Thus he in fact substituted the much graver charge of dishonesty against both Apostles, in order to exculpate the one from the comparatively venial offence of moral cowardice and inconsistency. Nevertheless this view commended itself to a large number of subsequent writers, and for some time may be said to have reigned supreme\(^3\). It was enforced with much perverse ingenuity and and Gregory all show from St Paul’s context how untenable this view is. Claudius Altiss. (ad loc.) simply copies the words of Gregory, and his language must not be taken as evidence of the prevalence of the opinion in his time. Æcumenius however, or a commentator in the Æcumenian Catena, favours this view, which he incorrectly attributes to Eusebius. On the authority of Clement it became customary to insert the name Cephas in the lists of the seventy disciples, e.g. those ascribed to Hippolytus (ed. Fabricius, 1 app. p. 42) and to Dorotheus Tyrrius (printed in Dindorf’s Chron. Pasch. n. p. 120), and that of the Chron. Pasch. (t. p. 400, ed. Dind.).

Other attempts also were made in the same direction. In the Armenian Calendar Cephas is called a disciple of St Paul: Sept. 25, ‘Apollo et Cephae discipolorum Pauli,’ Asseman. Bibl. Orient. iii. p. 648. In the Apostolic Constitutions of the Egyptian Church he is represented as one of the Twelve, but distinguished from Peter (ed. Tatian, p. 2).

\(^1\) By the Jesuit Huardin. See Huardin Op. Sel. (Amst. 1709) p. 920. The treatise is entitled ‘Cepham a Paulo reprehensum Petrum non esse,’ a strange specimen of criticism. It provoked replies from Boileau, Disquisit. Theolog. in Galat. ii. 10, Paris, 1713; Calmet, Dissert. iii. p. 519, Paris, 1720; Deyling, Obs. Sacr. ii. p. 520, Lips. 1737. The first of these I have not seen: the last two might be called satisfactory, if there were any case on the opposite side.

\(^2\) Hieron. Epist. cxii (t. p. 740)

‘Hanc explanationem quamprimus Origenes in decimo Stromateon libro ubi epistolam Pauli ad Galatas interpretatur, et caeteri deinceps interpretes sunt scuti, etc.’ In an extant work however (c. Gels. ii. 1), where Origen alludes to the incident, there is no trace of this interpretation.

\(^3\) See Hieron. 1. c. In this letter, addressed to Augustine, he defends himself by appealing to the authority of previous writers. He also quotes the passage in his preface to the Galatians, where he mentions that in writing his commentary he has made use, besides Origen, of Didymus of Alexandria, of the Laodicene (i.e. Apollinaris), of one Alexander, ‘an ancient heretic’ (see Cave, Hist. Lit. i. p. 101), of Eusebius of Emesa, and of Theodore of Heraclea. Augustine in reply (Hieron. Op. Epist. cxvi, p. 775) understands him to say that the view of Origen was held by all these writers, whom he confesses himself never to have read. In the case of Jerome’s master Didymus however this seems questionable; for in two passages in his extant works he speaks of St Peter’s conduct as an instance of human infirmity, de Trin. ii. 13, p. 168, iii. 19, p. 387. Another of Jerome’s masters also, Gregory Nazianzen, had taken the honest view, attributing St Peter’s error however not to cowardice but to mistaken policy, Carm. ii. p. 522, ed. Caillau, ὃς συντράπες οὐ καλὸς ἤ τοις, ἐλ καὶ τόδ’ ἥσσ’ ὀφελήσειν τὸν λόγον. Unless his text is here mutilated, Gregory’s memory has failed misapplied eloquence by Chrysostom in his exposition of this epistle, and in a separate homily devoted specially to the subject. And about the same time that these discourses were delivered, it found another independent and equally able advocate in Jerome, who maintained it in his commentary on the Galatians with characteristic vigour. The advocacy of Jerome gave rise to a controversy between the two great Latin fathers, which became famous in the history of the Church. Augustine wrote to remonstrate with Jerome. To admit that the two leading Apostles conspired to act a lie, he represented, was in fact to undermine the whole authority of Scripture. He therefore entreated Jerome, like Stesichorus of old, to sing a palinode, adding that the truth of Christendom is incomparably more beautiful than the Helen of Greece, for offending whom the heathen poet had been struck blind. Jerome replied by another classical allusion. Let Augustine beware of provoking a contest, so he hinted, in which the crushing blows of aged Entellus, if once provoked, might prove more than a match for the youth and nimbleness of Dares. In the correspondence which ensued Augustine had much the best of his adversary both in argument and in temper. It closes with a letter from Augustine in which he exposes Jerome's subterfuges and demolishes his appeal to authority. The glory of Augustine's victory however is somewhat tarnished by a feeble attack made at the same time on those noble labours in Biblical criticism which have earned for Jerome the gratitude of after ages.

To this letter of Augustine Jerome seems to have made no reply. His pride had been deeply wounded by the successful assaults of a younger rival, as he regarded Augustine: and a direct confession of wrong could only be expected from a nature more frank and chivalrous than Jerome's. But at a later date he tacitly adopted Augustine's view, and whether from accident or design, in the same writing, though on a different topic, made honourable mention of his former opponent. With this sequel the whole controversy, as well in the nature of the dispute itself, as in the courageous rebuke of the younger father and the humble penitence of the elder, has seemed to some to reflect the original dispute of the Apostles at Antioch, and thus to be a striking illustration of and comment on the text out of which it arose. The great name of Augustine seems to have swayed later writers towards the reasonable view of the incident, and from this time forward the forced explanation of Origen finds but little support. Theodore of Mopsuestia indeed, a contemporary of the two Latin fathers, does not pretend to arbitrate between their opinions, and perhaps not more than this was to be expected from the friend of Chrysostom. And by Greek commentators even of a later date the false interpretation is once and again revived. But in the West the influence of Augustine was more powerful; and it is much to the credit of writers of the Latin Church, that even when directly interested in maintaining the supremacy of St Peter, they for the most part reject this perverted account of the passage, content to draw from it the higher lesson of the paramount claims of truth over respect for rank and office, and to dwell on St Peter's conduct as a noble example of humility in submitting to rebuke from an inferior in age and standing.

writing this, had in mind the tribute of respect paid to St Paul in 2 Pet. iii. 15. Other passages in which Jerome has been thought tacitly to surrender his former view are, adv. Jovin. i. 15 (p. 264), c. Rufin. iii. 8, Comm. in Philem. (vii. p. 755); but the inference is scarcely borne out by the passages themselves. Jerome's change of opinion did not escape Augustine, who alludes to it in a letter to Oceanus, August. Epist. clxxxr. (p. 634, ed. Ben.).

1 e.g. Mohler Gesamm. Schr. p. 18. 2 Primasius (circ. 550), commenting on this epistle, omits to notice the opinion of Origen and Jerome. Strangely enough the commentary of Theodoret (circ. 450) on those verses is wanting in the mss. What view he took cannot with safety be gathered from the extant context. It might be inferred however from another passage of Theodoret, in Ezek. xlvii. 35 (p. 1046, ed. Schulze), that he gave a straightforward explanation of the incident. In the Dial. de S. Trin. i. 24, falsely ascribed to Athanasius (Athan. Op. p. 421, ed. Ben.), this is plainly the case, but the ground for attributing this work to Theodoret is very slender indeed; the probable author being Maximus monachus (circ. 650).

3 It is maintained by one of the commentators in the Oecumenian Catena and by Theophylact. Both these writers would derive their opinions from Chrysostom rather than from Jerome.

III. 1. In the last paragraph of the foregoing chapter St Paul began by speaking of the incident at Antioch, but his thoughts have been working round gradually to the false teachers in Galatia, and have moulded his language accordingly. He is thus led to dwell on the direct antagonism to the Gospel involved in the conduct of the Judaizers, which tacitly assumes that a man may be justified by his own works. It is a practical denial of the efficacy of Christ's death. This thought is intolerable to him, and he bursts out into the indignant remonstrance with which this chapter opens.

'Christ's death in vain! O ye senseless Gauls, what bewitchment is this? I placarded Christ crucified before your eyes. You suffered them to wander from this gracious proclamation of your King. They rested on the withering eye of the sorcerer. They yielded to the fascination and were riveted there. And the life of your souls has been drained out of you by that envious gaze.'

\( \text{\'\varepsilon\beta\alpha\kappa\alpha\nu\varepsilon\nu\}} \) 'fascinated you.' St Paul's metaphor is derived from the popular belief in the power of the evil eye. Comp. Ignat. Rom. § 3 οὐδὲποτε ἐβασκάνατε οὐδεις (or οὐδειν), Wisd. iv. 12 βασκανία γὰρ φαντάσματος ἀμαροὶ τὰ καλὰ, and see especially the discussion in Plutarch, Symp. v. 7, p. 680 ο περὶ τῶν καταβασκάινων λεγομένων καὶ βασκανῶν ἐχειν ὑφαλμόν ἐμπεσόντος λόγου κ.τ.λ. If the derivation of βασκανία now generally adopted (see Bonfey Wurzel. ii. p. 104), from βάζω, βίσκω (φάσκω), be correct, the word originally referred to witchery by spells or incantations ('mala fascinare lingua'); but as it occurs in actual use, it denotes the blighting influence of the evil eye, of which meaning indeed the popular but now exploded derivation (διὰ φάσεως, καίνους Τσετζ.) is an evidence. See Bacon's Essays ix. This belief is not confined to the East or to ancient times, but is common in some countries of Europe even now. In parts of Italy the power of the 'occhio cativo' or 'jettatura' is said to be a deeply rooted popular superstition. On its wide prevalence see the references in Winer's Realwörterb. s. v. Zauberei, and in an article by O. Jahn, über den Aberglauben des bör­sen Blicks etc. in the Verhandl. der Sächs. Gesellsch. 1855, p. 31. The word βασκανία then in this passage involves two ideas; (1) The baleful influence on the recipient, and (2) The envious spirit of the agent. This latter idea is very prominent in the Hebrew יִרְזָע ("envious" or "covetous," e.g. Prov. xxiii. 6, Tobit iv. 16, Ecclus. xiv. 10, and compare the ὑφαλμὸς πουμᾶς of the Gospels); and in the Latin invidio it has swallowed up every other meaning. The false teachers envy the Galatians this liberty in Christ, have an interest in subjecting them again to bondage: see iv. 17, vi. 12, and 2 Cor. xi. 20. This idea however is subordinate to the other, for where βασκανία signifies directly 'to envy,' it generally takes a dative like the Latin 'invidio': see Lobeck Phryn. p. 463. Jerome besides sees in the metaphor here an allusion to the spiritual 'infancy' of the Galatians. It is true indeed that children were regarded as most suscept­ible of βασκανία (διὰ πολλὰν ἕχους εὐπάθειαν καὶ τρόπον τῆς φύσεως, Alex. Aphrod. Probl. Phys. ii. 53; see also the passages in Jahn, p. 39), and such an allusion would be very significant here; but the metaphor must not be overcharged.

βασκανία (for which some copies read βασκανη) is probably the first aorist with ἐπί; see Ignat. l. c. On οἱ καὶ ὀφθαλμοί; 'before whose eyes'; comp. Arist. Ran. 626 ὡσα καὶ κατὰ ὀφθαλμοὺς λέγε. This expression is slightly stronger than πρὸ ὀφθαλμῶν, as bringing out the idea of a confronting.

The words τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι of the received text have no place here, but are added from v. 7.

As the blighting influence passed from the eye of the bewitcher, so also was the eye of the recipient the most direct channel of communication: see esp. Alexand. Aphrod. Prob. Phys. ii. 53 άπειρ ἵπτῃ τινα καὶ φθοροσων ἀκτίνα εξάων ἀπὸ τῆς κόρης αὐτῶν καὶ αὐτὴ εἰςωσά διὰ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν τοῦ φθονουμένου τρέψει τὴν ψυχὴν καὶ τὴν φύσιν κ.τ.λ., Heliod. Ἀθ. iii. 7 διὰ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν τὰ πέδα ταῖς ψυχαῖς εἰσταζόμεναι (these references I owe to Jahn, p. 33); and comp. Ecclus. xviii. 18 δόμεις Βαβυλώνα ἐκτίμη ὀφθαλμοῦς, xiv. 8, Test. xii Patr. Is. 4. To let the eye rest on the sorcerer therefore was to yield to the fascination. This the Galatians had done; 'So deeply had they drunken in That look, those shrunken serpent eyes, That all their features were resigned To this sole image in their mind.'

The verb προεγράφη 'was posted up, placarded.' The verb προεγράφων is capable of two meanings; (1) 'To write beforehand,' as Rom. xv. 4 δοσα γὰρ προεγράφη εἰς τὴν ἡμετέρων διδασκαλίαις ἐγράφη. This sense however is excluded here, as the words κατ᾽ ὀφθαλμοὺς forbid the supposition that the Apostle is here speaking of the predictions of the Old Testament, even if such a sense were otherwise likely. (2) 'To write up in public, to placard.' It is the common word to describe all public notices or proclamations, e.g. Arist. Ap. 450 δ τι δι προεγράφων εἰς τοὺς πλαγιάους; comp. Justin Apol. ii. p. 52 ή εἶν δὲ ὑμεῖς τοῦτο προεγράφητε, ἡμεῖς τοῖς πάσι φανέροι ποιήσομεν. Those would sometimes be notices of a trial or condemnation; comp. Jude 4 οἱ πόλεις προεγράφμενοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα, with Demosth. p. 1151 τοὺς πρωτάνεις προεγράφειν αὐτῷ τὴν κρίσιν ἐπὶ δύο ἡμέρας, Plut. Camill. 9 τῆς δίκης προεγράφην; and this meaning is assigned to the word here by several ancient commentators. The context however seems to require rather the sense 'placarded, publicly announced as a magisterial edict or proclamation.' This placard ought to have kept their eyes from wandering, and so to have acted as a charm (βασικών or προβασικών, Epist. Jer. 69) against all Judaic sorceries. The compound verb προεγράφων seems never to be used of painting, as some take it here.

ἐν ύμῖν is omitted after προεγράφη in deference to the best authorities. It is difficult however to account for its insertion in some early copies, unless it crept in from ver. 5. If retained, it ought probably to be regarded as a redundant expression enforcing the idea of οἱ καὶ ὀφθαλμοί, and to be taken with προεγράφη.

2, 3, 4. 'I have only one question to ask you. The gifts of the Spirit which ye have received, to what do ye owe them? To works performed in bondage to law, or to the willing bearing that comes of faith? What monstrous folly is this then! Will you so violate the divine order of progress? After taking your earliest lessons in the Spirit, do you look to attaining perfection through the flesh? To what purpose then did ye suffer persecution from these carnal teachers of the law? Will ye now
3. ought always to be; even if they were sacrifice may underlie their use here.

'S senseless to reverse the natural and it is possible that the idea of

are employed of religious ceremonials, occur together

of things!'

of Rom. x. 17,

Both of them, the former especially,

and frequently in classical writers,

(111/<rrEla~

For similar appeals to sufferings undergone see Gal. v. 11, i Cor. xv. 32, and comp. i Thess. ii. 14. The history indeed says nothing of persecutions in Galatia, but then it is equally silent on all that relates to the condition of the Galatian Churches: and while the converts to the faith in Pisidia and Lycaonia on the one side (Acts xiv.

2, 5, 19, 22), and in proconsular Asia on the other (2 Cor. i. 3, Acts xix. 23 sq.), were exposed to suffering, it is improbable that the Galatians alone should have escaped. If we suppose, as is most likely, that the Jews were the chief instigators in these persecutions, St Paul’s appeal becomes doubly significant.

On the other hand, ἐπάθετε has been interpreted in a good sense, as if referring to the spiritual blessings of the Galatians: but πάσχεις seems never to be so used in the New Testament; and indeed such a rendering would be harsh anywhere, unless the sense were clearly defined by the context, as it is for instance in Jos. Ant.

iii. 15. ί τίνι υπομόνησα μεν δε πᾶσας παθήσας εξ αὐτοῦ καὶ πηλίκων εὐφρενι­ σιῶν μεταλαβώντες κ.τ.λ.

eikη] 'in vain.' ‘You despise that liberty in Christ for which you then suffered; you listen to those teachers, whom you then resisted even to persecution.’

ei γε καί eikη] 'if it be really in vain.' It is hard to believe this; the Apostle hopes better things of his converts. Εἰ γε leaves a loophole for doubt, and καί widens this, implying an unwillingness to believe on the part of the speaker. Hermann’s distinction (ad Viger. p. 834) that εἰ γε assumes the truth of a proposition while εἰπερ leaves it doubtful, requires modifying before it is applied to the New Testament, where εἰπερ is, if anything, more directly affirmative than εἰγε. The alternative rendering, ‘If it is only in vain and not worse than in vain,’ seems harsh and improbable.

5. The question asked in ver. 2 involved the contrast of faith and works. This contrast suggests two other thoughts; (1) The violation of the law of progress committed by the Galatians (ver. 3); (2) Their folly in stultifying their former sufferings (ver. 4). The question has meanwhile been lost sight of. It is now resumed and the particle οἷς marks its resumption; ‘Well then, as I said, etc.’

ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν] ‘He that supplieth bountifully’; comp. Phil. i. 19 ἐπιχορηγιάς τῷ πνεύματος ἵππου Χριστοῦ. Even the simple word implies more or less of liberality, and the compound ἐπιχορηγεῖν expresses this idea more strongly. See 2 Pet. i. 5 ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει υἱῶν τῆς δρέπαν, and compare the use of the substantive ἐπιχορήγημα in Athen. iv. p. 140 ἐπάκλα μὲν λέγεται ταύτα, διότα οὖν ἐπιχορηγήματα τοῦ συντεταγμένον τοῖς φαινίσασιν ἄκλου, i.e. the luxuries, the superfluities of the meal.

ἐνεργόν δυνάμεις ἐν υἱῶν]. Comp. i Cor. xii. 10 ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων (with vv. 28, 29), Matt. xiv. 2 αἱ δυνάμεις ἐνεργούσιν ἐν αὐτῷ (comp. Mark vi. 14). These passages favour the sense ‘worketh miraculous power in you,’ rather than ‘worketh miracles among you’; and this meaning also accords better with the context: comp. i Cor. xii. 6 καὶ ὁ αὐτὸς Θεὸς ὁ ἐνεργόν τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν. What was the exact nature of these ‘powers,’ whether they were exerted over the physical or the moral world, it is impossible to determine. The limitations implied in 1 Cor. xii. 10, and the general use of δυνάμεις, point rather to the former. It is important to notice how here, as in the Epistle to the Corinthians, St Paul assumes the possession of these extraordinary powers by his converts as an acknowledged fact.

The verb which disappears in the ellipsis is to be supplied from the foregoing participles; ‘does He do so from works etc.’, as in 2 Cor. iii. 11, Rom. xii. 7 sq.

6. The following passage vv. 6—9 was omitted in Marcion’s recension of the epistle, as repugnant to his leading principle of the antagonism between the Old and New Testaments: see Tertull. adv. Marc. v. 3 ‘ostenditur quid supra haeretica industria eraserit, mentionem scilicet Abrahae,’ and Hieron. ad loc.

καθὼς] The answer to the question asked in the former verse is assumed, ‘Surely of faith: and so it was with Abraham.’ Καθὼς, though not a good Attic word, is common in later Greek; see Lobeck Ἀθην. p. 425. ‘Αβραάμ ἐπιστέφετε κ.τ.λ.] from the LXX of Gen. xv. 6. The Hebrew has in the second clause נקֶשֶׁל לְהָבֵשׁ and (He) imputed it to him (for) righteousness.’ It is quoted as in the LXX also in Rom. iv. 3, James ii. 23, Clem. Rom. § 10, Justin Dial. c. Tryph. § 119. The passage is cited also in Barnab. § 13, but too loosely and with too obvious an infusion of St Paul’s language to allow of any inference as to the text used by the writer.

On the use made of this passage by Jewish writers and on the faith of Abraham see p. 158 sq.
III. 8—10] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 137

7. The promise to Abraham, which in the passage of Genesis introduces the words just quoted, is the link of connexion with what follows.

7, 8, 9. 'An offspring, countless as the stars, was promised to Abraham. Abraham believed, and his faith was accepted as righteousness. Who then are these promised sons of Abraham? Those surely who inherit Abraham's faith. Hence the declaration of the scripture that all the Gentiles should be blessed in him. These are the words of foresight discerning that God justifies the Gentiles by faith; for so only could they be blessed in Abraham. We conclude therefore that the faithful and the faithful alone share the blessing with him.'

γνώσκετε, 'ye perceive,' the indicative rather than the imperative. The former mood is perhaps more suited to the argumentative character of the sentence generally, as well as to the special argumentative particle ἵνα, and possibly also to the meaning of the verb γνώσκεν ('to perceive' rather than 'to know'; see the note iv. 8, 9); comp. 1 John ii. 29 εἰς ἐπιστήμην σαρκός δικαιοσύνης, γνώσκετε ἵνα πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὰ ἐν τῆς ἀδικίας γίνεται. On the other hand, for the imperative see Heb. xiii. 23.

οἴ εἰς πίστεως, 'they whose starting-point, whose fundamental principle is faith.' Comp. Rom. ii. 8 οί εἰς ἐρείδεις, Rom. iv. 14 οἱ εἰς νόμον.

8. ἡ γραφή, 'the scripture' personified. This instance stands by itself in the New Testament, the personification elsewhere not going beyond λέγει or εἶπεν, or such expressions as συνέβλεπεν, ver. 22. The attributing 'sight' to the sacred writings is however found in a not uncommon Jewish formula of reference ποίησεν, 'Quid vidit?' see Schöttgen here. On the meaning of γραφή, 'a passage of Scripture,' see the note iii. 22.

δικαίοι] The tense denotes the certainty of God's dealings, the sure accomplishment of His purpose, as if it were actually present: see on 1 Thess. v. 2, and Winer § xi. 2, p. 280.

προευγγελισάτο] The promise to Abraham was an anticipation of the Gospel, not only as announcing the Messiah, but also as involving the doctrine of righteousness by faith.

ἐνελυγμηθώσται κ.τ.λ.] A fusion of the two passages, Gen. xii. 3 καὶ [ἐνελυγμηθήσονται εἰς σοὶ πάσας αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς, and Gen. xviii. 18 καὶ ἐνελυγμηθήσονται εἰς αὐτὸ (Ἀβραὰμ) πάντα τὰ ἔθνη τῆς γῆς, in both of which the LXX agrees with the Hebrew. Comp. Clem. Rom. § 10.

ἐν σοῖ] 'in thee,' as their spiritual progenitor.

10, 11, 12. Having shewn by positive proof that justification is of faith, he strengthens his position by the negative argument derived from the impossibility of maintaining its opposite, justification by law. This negative argument is twofold: First, It is impossible to fulfill the requirements of the law, and the non-fulfilment lays us under a curse (ver. 10): Secondly, Supposing the fulfilment possible, still the spirit of the law is antagonistic to faith, which is elsewhere spoken of as the source of life (vv. 11, 12).

10. On the other hand all who depend on works of law are under a curse. This the Scripture itself declares. It utters an anathema against all who fail to fulfil every single ordinance contained in the book of the law. Again the same truth, that the law does not justify in the sight of God, appears from another Scripture which declares that the just shall live by faith.'

10. δικαιος των ἤργων νόμου εἰσίν] 'those who are of works of law;' whose character is founded on works of law.

ἀποκάρατος κ.τ.λ.] A quotation from Dout. xxvii. 26. The passage is the closing sentence of the curses pronounced on Mount Ebal, and as it were the summary of the whole. The words run in the LXX, ἀποκάρατος πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ὃς οὐκ ἐμείνει ἐν πάσιν τοῖς λόγοις τοῦ νόμου τούτου τοῦ ποιήσας αὐτούς. For τοῖς λόγοις τοῦ νόμου τούτου a slight modification is introduced by St Paul, that the sentence may explain itself. The words πᾶς, πᾶσων, are absent in the Hebrew, though the former is found in the Peshito, and the latter in the Samar. Pentat. Jerome in this passage, referring to the Samaritan reading, attributes the omission to a wilful corruption of the text on the part of the Jews, 'ne viderentur esse sub maledicta.' The charge is of course unfounded, but it is an interesting notice of the state of the text in his day. Justin, Dial. § 95, p. 322 a, quotes the passage exactly in the words of St Paul, though differing from Hebrew, Greek, Syriac, and Samaritan texts, and applies it in the same way: see above, p. 60, and the note on ver. 13.

11. The same proposition proved in another way; δὲ, 'Then again.'

ὁ δικαιος κ.τ.λ.] From Habak. ii. 4, quoted also Rom. i. 17, Heb. x. 38. In the Hebrew the words run, 'Behold, his soul is uplifted (proud, stubborn), it is not right (calm, even); but the just man shall live by his steadfastness (fidelity), הַיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְוּיְיִמְנוּ יִנְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְנְוּיְיִמְn... a spiritual meaning and general application are given to words referring primarily to special external incidents. Another portion of this same prophecy of Habakkuk (i. 5, comp. ii. 5) relating to the Chaldeans is similarly applied in a speech of St Paul, Acts xiii. 41, in which context (ver. 39, avToiv avToiv KpEµ,aµ,evor aµ,apT6s, wrip aµ,apT6s KE<j,a>..}11 TOV aµ,apd µ,aT0S avToii. In Hebrew n~on is both a 'sin' and a 'sin-offering.' Counterparts to these types of the Great Sacrifice are found also among heathen nations, e.g. the Athenians, Arist. Ran. 733, Lysias Anidoc. p. 108 φαρμακων ἀποπεμπείς καὶ ἀλεηθρῶν ἀπαλλάσσεις, and especially the Egyptians, Herod. ii. 39 κεφαλὴ δὲ κείμην (i.e. of the victim) πολλὰ καταρασμένης φέροντες...καταρέονται δὲ τάς λέγουσας τῆς κεφαλῆς, ἵνα τι μέλη ἢ σφίζῃ τοὺς θύσιν ἢ ἄγνωμη τῇ συναπάτῃ κακῶν γενέσθαι, εἰς κεφαλὴν τοῦτην τραπέσαια.

γέγραπται] in Deut. xxi. 23, where the LXX runs κατατηρημένον ὑπὸ Θεοῦ πᾶς κρεμάμενος ἐπὶ ξύλου. The passage is quoted by Justin, Dial. p. 323 c, exactly as by St Paul; see p. 60, and the note on ver. 10. Our Lord had died the death of the worst malefactors: He had undergone that punishment, which under the law tokened the curse of God. So far He had become katarapa. But He was in no literal sense kataraparos v1ro e,oii, and St Paul instinctively omits these words which do not strictly apply, and which, if added, would have required some qualification.

14. 'Thus the law, the great barrier which excluded the Gentiles, is done away in Christ. By its removal the Gentiles are put on a level with us Jews; and, so united, we and they alike receive the promise in the gift of the Spirit through our faith.' The sequence of thought here is exactly the same as in Ephes. ii. 14—18: see also Gal. iv. 5.

As regards the construction, either (1) The two clauses introduced by iva are coordinate, as in 2 Cor. ix. 3, expressing the coincidence in time of the extension of the blessing to the Gentiles and the introduction of the dispensation of the Spirit; or (2) The second clause with iva is attached to the first, expressing the moral dependence of the one on the other. The passage from the Ephesians already referred to favours the latter.

14 φαινεται εις Χιστη.

15-18. 'Brethren, let me draw an illustration from the common dealings of men. Even a human covenant duly confirmed is held sacred and inviolable. It cannot be set aside, it cannot be clogged with new conditions. Much more then a divine covenant. Now the promise of God was not given to Abraham alone, but to his seed. What is meant by 'his seed'? The form of expression denotes unity. It must have its fulfilment in some one person. This person is Christ. Thus it was unfulfilled when the law came. Between the giving of the promise then and the fulfilment of it the law intervened. And coming many hundred years after, it was plainly distinct from the promise, it did not interpret the terms of the promise. Thus the law cannot set aside the promise. Yet this would be done in effect, if the inheritance could only be obtained by obedience to the law; since the promise itself imposed no such condition.'
III. 15] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 141

Inou, tivn epanggelian tou pnevmatos labwmen dia tis pisteos.

15' Adeforoi, kata anbropou legyw. Omos anbropou kekurwmenh diathekhny oudeis atheiei h epidiatassetai.

kata anbropou periuteite, Gal. i. 11, 1 Cor. xv. 32 el kata anbropon ethpromuqes k.t.l., 'If from nothing more than worldly motives I fought with beasts etc.,' where the false interpretation of kata anbropou, 'metaphorically,' has been supported by the mistaken analogy of the passage in our text. For the usage of kata anbropou in profane, authors see the quotations in Wetstein on Rom.

iii. 5.

oim os anbropou] The force is well given in the A. V., 'though it be but a man's covenant,' i.e. kai er anbropon

oueao, oimos k.t.l.; comp. i Cor. xiv. 7

oimos ta dyvxa fowyn didoa, Pausan.
i. 28. i Kilwma...anbtesan toranida oimos boulwstamata. In classical writers this displacement of oimos, so as to connect it with the word or clause to which it applies, appears to occur chiefly, if not solely, with participles, and not as here and i Cor. xiv. 7.

The argument is here an a fortiori argument, as those of our Lord drawn from the affection of a human father (Luke xi. 11 sq) and from the compliance of a human judge (Luke xviii.
i sq). See esp. Heb. vi. 16. The a fortiori character of the reasoning however is dismissed in the single word oimos, except so far as it is picked up again in tov Theo (ver. 17), and does not reappear, as some have thought, in de eton Xristos.

diathekyn] 'a covenant.' This word (frequently in the plural diathekai) in classical writers almost always signifies 'a will, a testament.' There are some few exceptions, however, e.g.

Arist. Ap. 439 hiv mi diathwrai y oide diathekyn eimi. On the other hand in the LXX it is as universally used of a covenant (most frequently as a translation of taud), whether as a stipulation between two parties (suvbhek, 'a covenant' in the strict sense) or as an engagement on the part of one.

Nor in the New Testament is it ever found in any other sense, with one exception. Even in this exceptional case, Heb. ix. 15—17, the sacred writer starts from the sense of a 'covenant,' and glides into that of a 'testament,' to which he is led by two points of analogy, (1) the inheritance conferred by the covenant, and (2) the death of the person making it. 'The disposition in this case,' he says in effect, 'was a testamentary disposition, a will.' In the passage before us, on the other hand, the mere mention of the inheritance (ver. 18) is not sufficient to establish the sense 'a testament,' which is ill suited to the con-§ 11, p. 228 B. Owing partly to the passage in the Epistle to the Hebrews and partly to the influence of the Latin version, which ordinarily rendered the word by 'testamentum' (as here), the idea of a testament connected itself inseparably with diathekyn. As a name for the sacred books, 'testamentum' had not firmly established itself at the close of the second century, and Tertullian frequently uses 'instrumentum' instead; see esp. adv. Marc.
iv. 1, and comp. Kaye's Tertullian
p. 299. The LXX translators and the New Testament writers probably preferred diathekyn to suvbhek when speaking of the divine dispensation, because the former term, like etepge-lia, better expresses the free grace of God. The later Greek translators frequently substituted suvbhek, where the LXX has diathekyn, sometimes perhaps not without a polemical aim.

Virtually the doctrine of the Judaizers was the annulling of the promise (ἀναφέρεσθαι); apparently it was but the imposing new conditions (ἐπιδιάφανες). On either shewing it was a violation of the covenant. The meaning of ἐνδιαθήκης is partially illustrated by ἐπιδιάθηκης, which signifies 'a second will,' Joseph. B. J. ii. 2. 3 ἐνδιαθήκης τὴν διαθήκην εἶναι κυριωτέραν, and § 6, Ant. xvii. 9. 4.

ἐπιγγέλλαια] The plural, for the promise was several times repeated to Abraham: comp. Rom. ix. 4, and esp. Clem. Rom. § 10. A question has been raised as to the particular passage to which St Paul refers. In answering this question it should be observed, (1) That the words must be spoken to Abraham himself, and not to one of the later patriarchs; (2) That καὶ must be part of the quotation. These considerations restrict the reference to Gen. xiii. 15, xvii. 8, either of which passages satisfies these conditions. It is true that in both alike the inheritance spoken of refers primarily to the possession of the land of Canaan, but the spiritual application here is only in accordance with the general analogy of New Testament interpretation. See above on ver. 11.

οἱ λέγοι] seems to be used impersonally, like the Attic φησίν in quoting legal documents, the nominative being lost sight of. If so, we need not enquire whether ὁ Θεὸς or ἡ γραφή is to be understood. Comp. λέγει, Rom. xv. 10, Ephes. iv. 8, v. 14; and φησίν, 1 Cor. vi. 16, 2 Cor. x. 10 (v. 1).

καὶ τοῖς στήμασιν κ.τ.λ. This com-legitimate sense to assign to the seed of Abraham? Doubtless by the seed of Abraham was meant in the first instance the Jewish people, as by the inheritance was meant the land of Canaan; but in accordance with the analogy of Old Testament types and symbols, the term involves two secondary meanings. First; With a true spiritual instinct, though the conception embodied itself at times in strangely grotesque and artificial forms, even the rabbinical writers saw that 'the Christ' was the true seed of Abraham. In Him the race was summed up, as it were. In Him it fulfilled its purpose and became a blessing to the whole earth. Without Him its separate existence as a peculiar people had no meaning. Thus He was not only the representative, but the embodiment of the race. In this way the people of Israel is the type of Christ; and in the New Testament parallels are sought in the career of the one to the life of the other. (See especially the application of Hosea xi. 1 to our Lord in Matt. ii. 15.) In this sense St Paul used the 'seed of Abraham' here. But Secondly; According to the analogy of interpretation of the Old Testament in the New, the spiritual takes the place of the natural; the Israel after the flesh becomes the Israel after the spirit; the Jewish nation denotes the Christian Church. So St Paul interprets the seed of Abraham, Rom. iv. 18, ix. 7, and above, ver. 7.

These two interpretations are not opposed to each other; they are not independent of each other. Without Christ the Christian people have no existence. He is the source of their spiritual life. They are one in Him. By this link St Paul at the close of the chapter (vv. 28, 29) connects together the two senses of the 'seed of Abraham', dwelling once more on the unity of the seed: 'Ye are all one man in Christ; and if ye are part of Christ, then ye are Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise.'

See especially the remarks of Tholuck, Das Alte Test. im Neuen Test. p. 44 sq.

17. τούτω δὲ λέγω] 'Now what I mean, what I wish to say, is this.' The inference has been hitherto only hinted at indirectly; it is now stated plainly. Comp. 1 Cor. i. 12 λέγω δὲ τούτῳ, δὲ ἐκατὸς κ.τ.λ. In both passages the A.V. gives a wrong turn to the expression, translating it, 'this I say.' See also[Clem. Rom.] ii. 8, 12. προκεκυρωμένη] The confirmation spoken of is not an act separate in time and subsequent to the covenant itself. The idea present to St Paul's mind is explained by Heb. vi. 17, 18. εἰς Χριστόν found in the received text after τοῦ Θεου must be struck out as a gloss. The balance of authority is decidedly against it.

τετρακώσια κ.τ.λ.] In the prophetic passage, Gen. xv. 13, the length of the sojourn in Egypt is given in round numbers as 400 years: in the historical statement, Exod. xii. 40 sq., it is defined more exactly as 430 years. The Hebrew text in both passages implies that the residence in Egypt occupied the whole time. In the latter however the LXX inserts words so as to include the sojourn of the patriarchs in Canaan before the migration, thus reducing the actual term of residence in Egypt to about half this period. In the Vat. ms the passage runs, ἃ δὲ καρtriaconta ἐτή γεγονώς νόμος οὐκ ἀκρυοὶ εἰς τὸ κατ-αργῆσαι τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν. ἐν γάρ ἐκ νόμου ἡ κληρονομία, οὐκέτι ἐξ ἐπαγγελίας. τῷ δὲ Ἀβραὰμ οἴκησις τῶν ὕλον Ἰσραήλ ἦν κατάφθειν ἐν γῇ Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ ἐν γῇ Χαναάν ἦν τῆ τετρακισίων τριακοντα πύνε (the last word however being erased). The Alex. MS reads παροίκησις, παρόφθειν, adds after Χαναάν the words αὐτοῦ καὶ

ὁ πατέρες αὐτῶν, so as to bring out the revised chronology more clearly, and omits πύνε. The Samar. Pent. takes the same view, agreeing in its reading with the Alex. MS. This seems in fact to have been the received chronology.
It is adopted not only by St Paul here, but by Josephus Ant. ii. 15. 2, by the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan, and substantially by the Book of Jubilees (Ewald Jahrb. iii. p. 77). On the other hand in St Stephen’s speech (Acts vii.
6), and in Philo (Quis rer. div. her. § 54,
p. 511 Ἐ.), Gen. xv. 13 is referred to,
which extends the sojourn in Egypt over 400 years; and this is the chronology adopted in other passages of Josephus (Ant. ii. 9. 1, B. J. v. 9. 4), who is thus inconsistent with himself. The LXX translators may have inserted the explanatory clause on grounds of internal criticism, or in deference to chronological records to which they had access in Egypt. The difficulties which attend both systems of chronology need not be considered here, as they do not affect St Paul’s argument and cannot have entered into his thoughts.

18. εἰ γὰρ κ.τ.λ. ‘To abrogate and annul the promise I say, for this is the effect of making the inheritance dependent on law.’ The γὰρ justifies the expressions ‘abrogate,’ ‘annul,’ of the previous verses. Νόμος and ἐπαγγελία are used without the article, as describing two opposing principles.

οὐκέτι] is here logical, ‘this being once granted, it is not etc.,’ as Rom.
vii. 17, xi. 6. ‘Εἰς is so used freκεχάρασαι] ‘hath bestowed it (the inheritance) as a free gift.’ The perfect tense marks the permanence of the effects.

19. 20. ‘Had the law then no purpose?’ Yes: but its very purpose, its whole character and history, betray its inferiority to the dispensation of grace. In four points this inferiority is seen. First; Instead of justifying it condemns, instead of giving life it kills: it was added to reveal and multiply transgressions. Secondly; It was but temporary; when the seed came to whom the promise was given, it was annulled. Thirdly; It did not come direct from God to man. There was a double interposition, a twofold mediation, between the giver and the recipient. There were the angels, who administered it as God’s instruments;
there was Moses (or the high-priest) who delivered it to man. Fourthly;
As follows from the idea of mediation,
it was of the nature of a contract, depending for its fulfilment on the observance of its conditions by the two contracting parties. Not so the promise, which, proceeding from the sole fiat of God, is unconditional and unchangeable.’

19. τί οὖν ὁ νόμος;] ‘what then is the law?’ as I Cor. iii. 5 τί οὖν ἐστὶν Ἀπολλός; τί δὲ ἐστὶν Παῦλος; the correct reading. Comp. also Rom. iii. 1.

19. τῶν παραβάσεων χάρων] How is this to be interpreted? Is it (1) ‘To check 16 παραπτωμάτων χάρων ἢ τιμωρία ἐπετα; or is it rather (2) ‘To create transgressions’? for where there is no law
there is no transgression’ (Rom. iv. 15).
Thus law reveals (Rom. iii. 20), provokes (Rom. vii. 7, 13), multiplies (Rom.
v. 20) sin or transgression. The use of χάρω (comp. 1 Joh. iii. 12) is suffi¬ ciently wide to admit either meaning. But the latter is to be preferred here; for (1) The language of the Epistle to the Romans shows this to be St Paul's leading conception of the purposes and functions of the law; and (2) This sense seems to be required by the expressions in the context, 'able to give life' (ver. 21), 'included all under sin' (ver. 22). Comp. ii. 19.

This reading, which is much better supported than the former, expresses more strongly the administrative character of the law; comp. επιδιώκασαν παράκλησιν ετέλειον, ετελείον, ver. 15, and Rom. v. 20 νόμος δὲ παρεισήλθεν ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα.

For the omission of αὕτη see A. Buttmann § 33, p. 198; for the conjunctive, the note on τρέχοντες ii. 2.

τὸ σπέρμα κ.τ.λ. 'the seed to whom the promise has been given,' i.e. Christ, ἐπεξεργαζότας is probably a passive, as 2 Macc. iv. 27.

διάταγεσι δὲ ἁγγελῶν] 'ordered, or administered by the medium of angels.' The first mention of angels in connexion with the giving of the law is in the benediction of Moses, Deut. xxxiii. 2 ἔλεησεν ἡµᾶς τοιούτως, literally, 'and He came from (amidst) myriads of holiness,' i.e. countless angels who attend Him. Some modern commentators (see Knobel in loc.) obliterate the mention of angels by translating, 'He came from the heights of Kadesh,' pointing the word ἐλεησεν with the xxx; but though the parallelism gains by this, the sense thus assigned to ἥλπεσεν is unsupported; and Ewald, Gesch. des V. Isr. ii. 257, still further changes τοιούτως into τοιούτῳ. The xxx render the words σὺν µυρίσας Κάδης, but introduce the angels in the following clause εἰς δεύτερον αὐτοῦ ἁγγελισµὸν μετ' αὐτοῦ, where they must have had a different reading from our present Hebrew text (see Gesen. Thes. p. 358). Aquila, Symmachus, the Targums, and Jewish expositors generally, agree in the common rendering of דְּבַר יְהֹוָה. Other allusions in the New Testament to the angels as administering the law are Acts vii. 53 אַשְׁפֵּרַה τוֹν νόֹמוֹν εἰς διαταγάς ἁγγελῶν (comp. vv. 35, 38), Heb. ii. 2. See also Joseph. Ant. xv. 5. 3 ἡµῶν δὲ τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν δογµάτων καὶ τὰ ὀσίωτα τῶν ἐν τοῖς νόµοις δὲ ἁγγελῶν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ µαθήτων, Philo de Somn. p. 642 m., and the Book of Jubilees c. 1 (Ewald's Jahrb. ii. p. 233, iii. p. 74). The angels who assisted in the giving of the law hold a very important place in the later rabbinical speculations. See the interpretation of Deut. xxxiii. 2 in the Jerusalem Targum, and the passages cited by Gfröre Jahrb. des Heils i. p. 226, p. 357 sq, and by Wetstein here. The theology of the schools having thus enlarged upon the casual notices in the Old Testament, a prominence was given to the mediation of angels, which would render St Paul's allusion the more significant.

In St Stephen's speech (Acts vii. 53), as in the passage of Josephus, the angels are mentioned to glorify the law, being opposed to mere human ministers. Here the motive is different. The interposition of created beings is contrasted with the direct agency of God himself. So also in Heb. ii. 2, where an a fortiori argument is drawn from the superiority of the salvation spoken by the Lord over the word spoken by angels (δὲ ἁγγελῶν). St Paul's contrast here between the directness of the one ministration and the indirectness of the other has a parallel in 2 Cor. iii. 12 sq.
χειρὶ μεσίτου 20 ὀ δὲ μεσίτης ἐνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν, ὡ δὲ Θεὸς εἰς ἔστιν. 21 ὅ ὁ ὑπὸ νόμος κατὰ τῶν ἐπαγγε-

ἐν χειρὶ] A Hebraism or Aramaism, nearly equivalent to did: comp. Acts vii. 35. It is a frequent translation of הָנָן, occurring especially in the expression ἐν χειρὶ Μωϋσῆ, e.g. Num. iv. 37, 41, 45, etc. In Syriac we meet with such phrases as ἵσμα (i.e. ἐν χειρὶ πνεύματος, Acts iv. 25, Pesh.), ἰόνισον (i.e. ἐν χειρὶ πιστεός, Hab. ii. 4, Hexapl.).

μεσίτου] The mediator is Moses. This is his common title in Jewish writers. In the apocryphal ἀνάβασις or ἀνάληψις Moses says to Joshua προεθάνατο μὸ Θεός πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου ἐναι μὲ τῆς διαθήκης αὐτοῦ μεσίτης, Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V. T. i. p. 845. See the rabbinical passages in Wetstein, and Philo Vit. Mosa. iii. 19, p. 160 μ ο μεσίτης καὶ διαλακτής. There would appear to be an allusion to this recognised title of Moses also in Heb. viii. 6 (comp. ix. 15, xii. 24), where our Lord is styled 'a mediator of a better covenant.' Though the word itself does not occur in the Mosiac narrative, the mediatorial functions of Moses appear clearly, e.g. Exod. xx. 19, and Deut. v. 2, 5, Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς υἱῶν διέθετο πρὸς υἱῶν διαθήκην...κάθω εἰσιν οὐ μέσον Κυρίου καὶ υἱῶν εἰς λ. The reference in St Paul seems to be to the first giving of the law: if extended to its after administration, the μεσίτης would then be the high priest; see Philo Mon. ii. 12, p. 230 μ μεθόρον ἀμφοῖν ἐναι διὰ μέσου τῶν ἄνθρωποι ὑπάρχει Θεόν: but this extension does not seem to be contemplated here.

On the other hand Origen (tv. p. 602, ed. Delarue), misled by 1 Tim. ii. 5, understood the mediator of Christ, and, as usual, carried a vast number of later commentators with him. Thus it is taken by Victorinus, Hilary, Jerome, Augustine, and Chrysostom. So also Concil. Antioch. (Routh Rel. Sacr. iii. p. 295), Euseb. Eccl. Th. i. 10. 11, Athan. c. Apoll. i. 12. Much earlier than Origen, Marcion would seem to have entertained this view, Hippol. Haer. vii. 31, p. 254. Basil however clearly showed that Moses was meant, referring to Exod. xx. 19, de Spir. Sanct. xiv. 33 (i. p. 27, Garnier), and it was perhaps owing to his influence that the correct interpretation was reinstated. So Theodore Mops., Theodoret, Gennadius; and comp. Didym. in Ps. pp. 1571, 1665 (Migne). Pelagius gives the alternative.

It will be seen that St Paul's argument here rests in effect on our Lord's divinity as its foundation. Otherwise He would have been a mediator in the same sense in which Moses was a mediator. In another and a higher sense St Paul himself so speaks of our Lord (1 Tim. ii. 5).

20. The number of interpretations of this passage is said to mount up to 250 or 300. Many of these arise out of an error as to the mediator, many more disregard the context, and not a few are quite arbitrary. Without attempting to discuss others which are not open to any of these objections, I shall give that which appears to me the most probable. The meaning of the first clause seems tolerably clear, and the range of possibility with regard to the second is not very great.

ὁ δὲ μεσίτης ἐνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν 'no mediator can be a mediator of one.' The very idea of mediation supposes two persons at least, between whom the mediation is carried on. The law then is of the nature of a contract between two parties, God on the one hand, and the Jewish people on the other. It is only valid so long as both parties fulfil the terms of the contract. It is therefore contingent and not absolute. The definite article with μετήργη expresses the idea, the specific type, as 2 Cor. xii. 12 τὰ σημεία τοῦ ἀποστόλου, Joh. x. 11 ὁ σωμάτιν ὁ καλὸς: see Winer § xviii. p. 132.

ό δὲ Θεὸς εἰς ἱόνιν] 'but God (the giver of the promise) is one.' Unlike the law, the promise is absolute and unconditional. It depends on the sole decree of God. There are not two contracting parties. There is nothing of the nature of a stipulation. The giver is everything, the recipient nothing. Thus the primary sense of "one" here is numerical. The further idea of unchangeableness may perhaps be suggested; but if so, it is rather accidental than inherent. On the other hand this proposition is quite unconnected with the fundamental statement of the Mosaic law, 'The Lord thy God is one God,' though resembling it in form.

21. 'Thus the law differs widely from the promise. But does this difference imply antagonism? Did the law interfere with the promise? Far otherwise. Indeed we might imagine such a law, that it would take the place of the promise, would justify and give life. This was not the effect of the law of Moses.'

tῶν ἐπαγγελίων] The plural. See the note on ver. 16.

νίμος ὁ δυνάμενος] 'a law, such as could.' For the position of the article see note i. 7, and comp. Acts iv. 12.

[ζωοποιήσας] including alike the spiritual life in the present and the glorified life in the future, for in the Apostle's conception the two are blended together and inseparable. The 'inheritance' applies to both. Compare the scriptural use of 'salvation,' 'the kingdom of heaven,' etc.

22, 23. In this metaphor, which describes the position of the Jews before Christ, two ideas are involved. First, that of constraint or oppression. They were brought under the dominion of sin, were locked up in its prison-house, and so were made to feel its power. Secondly, that of watchful care. They were fenced about as a peculiar people, that in due time they might become the depository of the Gospel and the centre of its diffusion. The first idea is prominent in ver. 22, the second appears in ver. 23.

22. 'On the contrary, as the passage of Scripture testifies, the law condemned all alike, yet not finally and irrevocably, but only as leading the way for the dispensation of faith, the fulfilment of the promise.'

συνέκλεισεν ἡ γραφὴ] The Scripture is here represented as doing that which it declares to be done. The passage which St Paul has in mind is probably either Ps. cxliii. 2, quoted above ii. 16, or Deut. xxvii. 26, quoted iii 10. In Rom. iii. 10—18 indeed the Apostle gathers together several passages to this same purport, and it might therefore be supposed that he is alluding here rather to the general tenour of Scripture than to any special text. But the following facts seem to shew that the singular γραφὴ in the N.T. always means a particular passage of Scripture; (1) where the reference is clearly to the sacred writings as a whole, as in the expressions, 'searching the scriptures,' 'learned in the scriptures,' etc., the plural γραφή is universally found, e.g. Acts xvii. 11, xviii. 24, 28. (2) We meet with such expressions as 'another scripture' (Joh. xix. 37), 'this scripture' (Luke iv. 21), 'every scripture' (2 Tim. iii. 16). (3) 'ιπ
23. ὡστε ὦ νόμος παιδαγωγὸς ἡμῶν γέγονεν εἰς Χριστὸν, ἵνα ἡ ἐπαγγελία ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δοθῇ τοῖς πιστεύονσιν. 24. πρὸ τοῦ δὲ ἐλθεῖν τὴν πίστιν, ὑπὸ νόμου ἐφρονοῦμεθα συνκλείομενοι εἰς τὴν μέλλουσαν πίστιν ἀποκαλυφθήναι. 25. Καὶ ἡ δικαιοσύνη ἡ πίστεως ἐν καθαρίᾳ καθ' ἀπειρίαν, instance of the interchange of the first and second persons in 1 Thess. v. 5 πάντες γὰρ ὑμεῖς νῦν ποιεῖσθε ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦς.

26. πάντες γὰρ κ.κ.λ. `for ye all are sons of God by your faith, sons of God in Christ Jesus.' The stress of the sentence lies on πάντες and νῦν; 'all,' Jews and Gentiles alike, those under the law and those without the law; 'sons' (νῦν), claiming therefore the privileges, the liberty of sons, so that the rigorous supervision of the tutor (παιδαγωγὸς) ceases when you cease to be children (παιδεῖς).

νῦν Θεοῦ In St Paul the expressions, 'sons of God,' 'children of God,' mostly convey the idea of liberty, as iv. 6, 7, Rom. viii. 14 sq (see however Phil. ii. 15), in St John of guilelessness and love, e.g. I Joh. iii. 1, 2, 10. In accordance with this distinction St Paul uses νῦν as well as τέκνα, St John τέκνα only.

ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦς] The context shows that these words must be separated from διὰ τῆς πίστεως. They are thrown to the end of the sentence so as to form in a manner a distinct proposition, on which the Apostle enlarges in the following verses: 'You are sons by your union with, your existence in Christ Jesus.'

27. 'In Christ Jesus, I say, for all ye, who were baptized into Christ, did put on Christ': ὑπὲρ introduces the explanation of the foregoing ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦς.

ἐνεδύσασθε] The metaphor has been supposed to be taken from the white garments in which the newly baptized were clothed; see Bingham Christ. Antiq. xi. 11, § 1. It is scarcely probable however that the ceremonial of baptism had become so definitely fixed at this early date, that such an allusion would speak for itself. The metaphor in fact is very common in the LXX, e.g. Job viii. 22 (αὐτοτίτην), xxxi. 14 (δικαιοφόρον), xxxix. 19 (φίλος), Ps. xxxiv. 26 (αὐτοτίτην καὶ δεικτὴν), xiii. i (ἐνυπερπηναν, δύναμιν, iii. i, etc.; comp. ἕγκομβος αὐτών: 1 Pet. v. 5. See also Schöttgen on Rom. xiii. 14. On the other hand in the context of the passage of Justin quoted below (ver. 28) there is apparently an allusion to the baptismal robes.

28, 29. 'In Christ ye are all sons, all free. Every barrier is swept away. No special claims, no special disabilities exist in Him, none can exist. The conventional distinctions of religious caste or of social rank, even the natural distinction of sex, are banished hence. One heart beats in all: one mind guides all: one life is lived by all. Ye are all one man, for ye are members of Christ. And as members of Christ ye are Abraham's seed, ye claim the inheritance by virtue of a promise, which no law can set aside.'

οὐκ ἐν [there is no room for, no place for; negativing not the fact only, but the possibility, as James i. 17 παρ' οὐκ ἐν παραλλαγῇ. The right account of ἐν seems to be given by Winer § xiv. p. 96. It is not a contraction of ἐκστι, but the preposition ἐν, ἐν, strengthened by a more vigorous accent, like ἐν, πάρα, and used with an ellipsis of the substantive verb.

'Ἑλπίς' See the note ii. 3.

ἀπαντες καὶ θῆλυ] The connecting particle is perhaps changed in the third clause, because the distinction now mentioned is different in kind, no longer social but physical. There may be an allusion to Gen. i. 27 ἀπαντες καὶ θῆλυ ἐποίησαν αὐτούς, and if so, this clause will form a climax: 'even the primeval distinction of sex has ceased.' Comp. Col. iii. 11.

Either on this passage, or on some unrecorded saying of our Lord similar in import (comp. Luke xx. 35), may have been founded the mystical language attributed to our Lord in the apocryphal Gospel of the Egyptians ( Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. p. 553, ed. Potter). Being asked by Salome when His kingdom should come, He is reported to have answered, 'When the two shall be one, and the male with the female, neither male nor female.' These obscure words were much discussed in early times and diversely interpreted, e.g. by the Ophites (Hippol. Haer. v. 7), by the Pseudo-Clement of Rome (Epist. 2, § 12), by Cassianus (Clem. Alex. Lc.), and by Theodotus (Clem. Alex. p. 985). Comp. also the remarks of Clement of Alexandria himself, pp. 532, 539 sq, besides the passage first cited. See the note on Clem. Rom.Lc. For another coincidence of St Paul's language with a saying attributed to our Lord, but not found in the Gospels, see 1 Thess. v. 21.

εἰς ἐστὶ 'are one man.' Comp. Ephes. ii. 15 τοῦ διὸ κτήσεν ἐν αὐτῷ εἰς ἐνα καὶ πάντα ἀνθρώπων, and Justin Dial. § 116, p. 344 B οὕτως ἡμεῖς ἦμεν διὰ τοῦ Ἰσχοῦ ὁμόφρατος ὡς οἱ ἀνθρώπως πιστευ­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­­…
ἀρα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ σπέρμα ἐστέ, κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν κληρονόμοι.

'are the property of Christ, are servants of Christ.' The argument turns on the entire identity of the Christian brotherhood with Christ.

ἀρα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ] 'then being one with Christ, ye are Abraham's seed'; for He is that seed of Abraham, to whom the promise was given. See the note on ver. 16.

κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν] emphatic; 'heirs indeed, but heirs by promise, not by law.' See ver. 18.
This passage occupied an important place in the early controversies between the Christians and the Jews. Partly owing to this circumstance, and partly from the ambiguity of the Hebrew, it was variously interpreted and applied.

The words of the original are בַּעֲלֹם הָאֱלֹהִים 'in the sight of God,' for (the) curse of God (is) he that is hanged.' The ambiguity arises out of the construction of the Hebrew, since the case attached to בַּעֲלֹם may denote either the person who pronounces the curse, as Judges ix. 57 (רֹזֵחַ אֵל בְּיָד, and 2 Sam. xvi. 12 (רְוָעֶה in the Q'ri), or the person against whom the curse is pronounced, as Gen. xxvii. 13 (רָעָה מְעֹלָה); in other words, it represents either a subjective or an objective genitive. As we assign one or other sense therefore to the dependent case, we get two distinct interpretations.

(i) LXX and St Paul. 1. 'He that is hanged is accursed in the sight of God.' This is the rendering of the LXX, καινατηραταινος υπο τον Θεου, adopted in substance, it would appear, by St Paul; and seems to have obtained the suffrages of most recent commentators whatever their opinions. It is certainly supported by a more exact parallel (Judges ix. 57) than the alternative rendering, and seems to suit the context better, for the sense will then be, 'Do not let the body hang after sunset; for the hanging body (of a malefactor) defiles the land, since the curse of God rests upon it.'

(ii) Judaic writers. 2. The other rendering is, 'He that hangeth is a contempt of, or reproach or insult to God.' This seems to have been the popular Jewish interpretation (shared therefore by Jewish Christians) at all events from the second century of the Christian era. The passage was so taken by the Jewish or Ebionite translators, Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus. It is explained in this way in the ancient Jewish commentary on Deuteronomy, Siphri2, and in the so-called Targum of Jonathan3. This rendering appeared also in the Ebionite Gospel4. And in one of the earliest Christian apologies, a Jewish interlocutor brought forward this text, quoting it in the form, 'He that hangeth is a reviling of God.'5 It is found more-

1 Aquila and Theodotion rendered it κατάρα Θεοῦ κρέμαμεν; see Field's Hexapla i. p. 304. The rendering of Symmachus, as given in Latin by Jerome, was, 'quia propter blasphemiam Dei suspensus est.'

2 'Qua de causa iste suspeditur? Quis maledixit nominii (Del):' see Ugone. Theol. xv. p. 766.

3 קִלָּעַת אֹרוֹת קִלַּעַת לָעֲלֹם; 'it is contempt before God to hang a man.'

4 At least so I understand the language of Jerome, l.c., 'Haec verba Ebion ille haeresiarches semichristianus et semijudaeus ita interpretatus est, θριφόμενος Θεοῦ κρεμαμενος, id est, quia injuria Dei est suspensus.'

5 Hieron. l.c., 'Memini me in altercatione Iasone et Papisci quae Graeco sermonae conscripta est ita reperiisse, λαοδορα Θεοῦ κρεμαμενος, id est, 'maledictio Dei qui appensus est.' See below, p. 153, note 5.
over in the Peshito Syriac. The same also would seem to be the interpretation adopted in the older Targum, where the passage runs, 'Since for what he sinned before God he was hanged,' but the paraphrastic freedom of this rendering leaves room for some doubt. Though these writers differ widely from each other as to the meaning to be put upon the words, they agree in their rendering so far as to take מַטִּיל as the object, not the subject, of מָלַל.

It may be conjectured that this rendering obtained currency at first owing to the untoward circumstances of the times. Jewish patriots were impaled or crucified as rebels by their masters whether Syrians or Romans. The thought was intolerable that the curse of God should attach to these. The spirit of the passage indeed implies nothing of this kind, but the letter was all powerful in the schools of the day: and a rendering, which not only warded off the reproach but even, if dexterously used, turned it against the persecutor, would be gladly welcomed. An interpretation started in this way would at length become traditional.

But it was especially in controversies with the Christians, as I have mentioned, that the Jews availed themselves of this passage. In whatever way interpreted, it would seem to them equally available for their purpose. The 'offence of the cross' took its stand upon the letter of the lawgiver's language, and counted its position impregnable. Again and again doubtless, as he argued in the synagogues, St Paul must have had these words cast in his teeth, 'accursed of God,' or 'an insult to God,' or 'a blasphemer of God, is he that is hanged on the tree.' More than once the early Christian apologists meet and refute this inference, when writing against the Jews. This is the case with Ariston of Pella, with Justin Martyr, with Tertullian. In Jerome's time the same argument was brought by the Jews against the leading fact on which the faith of a Christian rests; and later literature shows that Christ crucified did not cease to be 'to the Jews a stumblingblock.'

1 'Because whosoever blasphemeth God shall be hanged.'
2 So it may be inferred from a comparison with the translations of Symmachus, of the Peshito, and of the Ebionite Gospel. Otherwise the same meaning might be got from the other rendering, 'accursed of God,' and so 'a sinner in the sight of God.'
3 Thus the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan, after rendering the passage as given above, p. 152, note 3, adds 'unless his sins have occasioned it to him.' It is possible however that this is aimed at Christianity. At all events it presents a curious contrast to the interpretation of the older Targum.
4 See the passages quoted in Schöttgen here. The following is the interpretation of a learned rabbi of our own time: 'L'impiccato è (produce) imprecazione contro Dio (cioè: il lasciare il cadavere esposto lungo tempo alla pubblica vista non può che irritare gli animi, e indurli ad esercitare gli esercizi e le leggi): e (altrettanto) non devi rendere impura la tua terra etc.' Luzzatto Il Pentateuco, Trieste 1858.
5 In the 'Dispute of Jason and Papisceus'; see above, p. 152, note 5, and Routh Rel. Sacr. i. p. 95.
6 Dial. c. Tryph. c. 96, p. 323 c.
8 Hieron, l.c. So too in the work of Evagrius (c. 430 A.D., see Gennad. Vir. Ill. 50) entitled Altercatio inter Theophilum Christianum et Simonem Judaecum, Migne's Patr. Lat. xx. p. 1174 B.
and applied to death by crucifixion.

The passage in Deuteronomy, it is true, does not refer directly to crucifixion as a means of execution, but to impaling bodies after death. It has been said indeed that Philo speaks of the implemement there mentioned as a mode of putting to death, but this seems to be a mistake. Philo says, that Moses would have put such malefactors to death ten thousand times over if it were possible, but not being able to kill them more than once, he adds another penalty, ordering murderers to be gibbeted (γυμνικόν ἄλλην προσκυνῶν τοὺς ἀμέτρητα ἀνάκολοντες ζητούσι). Nor, so far as I am aware, is there any evidence to show that the Jews at the time of the Christian era interpreted the passage of death by crucifixion. Crucifixion was not a Jewish punishment. The evangelist (Joh. xviii. 32) sees a providence in the delivering over of our Lord to the Romans to be put to death, so that He might die in the manner He himself had foretold. It had been employed occasionally in seasons of tumult by their own princes, but was regarded as an act of great atrocity. Even the Roman looked upon crucifixion with abhorrence. To the Jew it was especially hateful, owing in part no doubt to the curse attaching to this ignominious exposure of the body in the passage of Deuteronomy. For though this passage did not contemplate death by crucifixion, the application was quite legitimate. It was the hanging, not the death, that brought ignominy on the sufferer and defilement on the land. Hence the Chaldee paraphrase of Deuteronomy employs the same word (⊂λυκάς) which is used in several places in the Peshito Syriac to describe the crucifixion of our Lord (e.g. Gal iii. 1). Hence also later Jews, speaking of Jesus, called Him by the same name of reproach (דֵיק, 'the gibbeted one'), which they found in the original text of the lawgiver. It was not that they mistook the meaning of the word, but that they considered the two punishments essentially the same. No Jew would have questioned the propriety of St Paul's application of the text to our Lord. The curse pronounced in the law was interpreted and strengthened by the national sentiment.

The words denoting 'Faith.'

The Hebrew יומֵי, the Greek πίστις, the Latin 'fides,' and the English 'faith,' hover between two meanings; trustfulness, the frame of mind which relies on another; and trustworthiness, the frame of mind which can be relied upon. Not only are the two connected together grammati-

---

1 de Spec. Leg. § 28, n. p. 324 M.
3 Cic. Verr. v. 64 'crudelissimum tetricimumque supplicium.'
cally, as active and passive\(^1\) senses of the same word, or logically, as subject and object of the same act; but there is a close moral affinity between them. Fidelity, constancy, firmness, confidence, reliance, trust, belief—these are the links which connect the two extremes, the active with the active meaning of 'faith.' Owing to these combined causes, the two senses will at times be so blended together that they can only be separated by some arbitrary distinction. When the members of the Christian brotherhood, for instance, are called 'the faithful,' \(\text{oî } \pi
olimits
olimits
olimits ,\text{ what is meant by this? Does it imply their constancy, their trustworthiness, or their faith, their belief? In all such cases it is better to accept the latitude, and even the vagueness, of a word or phrase, than to attempt a rigid definition, which after all can be only artificial. And indeed the loss in grammatical precision is often more than compensated by the gain in theological depth. In the case of 'the faithful' for instance, does not the one quality of heart carry the other with it, so that they who are trustful are trusty also\(^2\); they who have faith in God are steadfast and immovable in the path of duty?

The history of the terms for 'faith' in the three sacred languages of Christian theology is instructive from more points of view than one.

1. The Hebrew word signifying 'to believe, to trust,' is the \(\text{Hiphil } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{in the active participle, used as a substantive with the special sense, 'one who supports, nurses, trains a child' (\(\pi
olimits
olimits \text{yw} \gamma
olimits
olimits \gamma
olimits
olimits \), see note, Gal. iii. 24), and in the passive participle 'firm, trustworthy.' The \(\text{Niphal } \pi
olimits
olimits \) accordingly means, 'to be firm, lasting, constant, trusty'; while the \(\text{Hiphil } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{, with which we are more directly concerned, is, 'to hold trustworthy, to rely upon, believe' (taking either a simple accusative or one of the prepositions, or ), and is rendered } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{w in the } \text{LXX, e.g. Gen. xv. 6. But there is in biblical Hebrew no corresponding substantive for 'faith,' the active principle. Its nearest representative is } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{, 'firmness, constancy, trustworthiness.' This word is rendered in the } \text{LXX most frequently by } \alpha
olimits
olimits
olimits
olimits \text{, } \alpha
olimits
olimits \text{ (twenty-four times), or by } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{, } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{, } \alpha
olimits
olimits \text{ (twenty times); once it is translated } \text{ (Exod. xvii. 1), once } \text{ (Ps. xxxvi. 3, where Symm. had } \delta
olimits
olimits \text{, } \alpha
olimits
olimits \text{. It will thus be seen that } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{ properly represents the passive sense of } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{, as indeed the form of the word shows. But it will at times approach near to the active sense; for constancy under temptation or danger with an Israelite could only spring from reliance on Jehovah. And something of this transitional or double sense it has in the passage of Habakkuk ii. 4\(^3\). The latitude of the } \text{translation, } \pi
olimits
olimits \text{, in that passage has helped out this meaning; and in St Paul's application it is brought still more prominently forward.

Thus in its biblical usage the word \(\pi
olimits
olimits \) can scarcely be said ever to have the sense 'belief, trust,' though sometimes approaching towards it.

---

1 Throughout this note I have used the terms 'active' and 'passive' in reference to the act of believing. If referred to the act of persuading they would of course change places.

2 'Qui fortis est, idem est fides,' says Cicero, \(\text{Tusc. iii. 7.}\)

3 See the note on Gal. iii. 11.
The influence of the Greek rendering however doubtless reacted upon the original, and in the rabbinical Hebrew it seems decidedly to have adopted this meaning (see Buxtorf Lex. Rabbin. s. v.). The Aramaic dialects did something towards fixing this sense by an active form, derived from the same root נאמ, but from the conjugation פסֶל (corresponding to the Hebrew היפיפל). Thus in the Chaldee of the Targum of Jonathan, the word denoting the faith of Abraham, Gen. xv. 6, is נאמנ, and the Syriac renders πιστε in the New Testament by the same word δικαιοσύνη.

2. Unlike the Hebrew, the Greek word seems to have started from the active meaning. In its earliest use it is opposed to 'distrust'; Hesiod Op. 342 πίστε δ' ἄρη τοι ὀμός καὶ πιστίαι ἀλεσαν ἄνδρας (comp. Theog. 831 πίστει χρήματ' ἀπόλεσ' πιστίθ' δ' ἐσώσα); and this is perhaps the sense most favoured by analogy. But even if it had not originally the passive sense of faith side by side with the active, it soon acquired this meaning also, e.g. Aisch. Φαν. 276 οὐκ ἄνδρος δρόκος πίστει ἀλλ' δρέων ἀνήρ: and πίστες became a common technical term for a 'proof.' The transition was aided by the indefiniteness of the grammatical form, and such phrases as πίστων ἔξων τινός formed a link of connexion between the two. The English word 'persuasion' will show how easily the one sense may pass into the other. In the same manner πιστός has both meanings, 'trusty,' as Hom. Od. xiv. 147 πιστότατος δὲ αἱ ὦκε, and 'trustful,' as Aisch. Prom. 917 τοὺς πεπαρασίους κτισον πιστός. So also ἀπιστος means both 'incredulous' (Hom. Od. xiv. 150), and 'incredible' (Aisch. Prom. 832).

With this latitude of use these words passed into the language of theology. In the Old Testament, there being no Hebrew equivalent to the active meaning, πιστε has always the passive sense, 'fidelity,' 'constancy,' unless the passage in Habakkuk be regarded as an exception. So again there is no clear instance of πιστός with any but the passive sense.

2 As illustrating this fact, it is worth noticing that the word 'faith' occurs only twice in the Authorised Version of the Old Testament, Deut. xxxii. 20 ('children in whom is no faith,' נאמ where it is plainly passive), and Hab. ii. 4; see note 4.
3 Besides נאמ, it occurs as a rendering of נאמ, נאמ, נאמ, and once as a paraphrase of נאמ, Prov. xv. 28. In all these words the passive sense is evident.
4 ii. 4. The original reading of the lxx is not clear. In the Vat. and Sin. it is ὁ δὲ δικαίως ἐκ πίστεως μου, in the Alex. and others δ δικαίως μου ἐκ πίστεως. In Hebr. ix. 38 τοι (though not without various readings) μου follows δικαίως. Comp. also Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. p. 432, Potter. With these data it is difficult to decide between two solutions; either (1) It may be inferred from the varying position of μου that the word had no place in the original text of the lxx; in this case St Paul (Gal. iii. 11, Rom. i. 17) may have quoted directly from the lxx; or (2) ἐκ πίστεως μου was the original reading, afterwards altered into μου ἐκ πίστεως to remove any ambiguity as to the sense. In this latter case the lxx translators must have read δικαίως 'my faith' (for δικαίως 'his faith,' the present Hebrew text), and perhaps intended their rendering ἐκ πίστεως μου to be understood, 'by faith in me' (see however Rom. iii. 3 τῷ πίστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ). That the Hebrew text was the same in the first and second centuries as at present, may be inferred not only from St Paul's
The usage of the Apocrypha is chiefly valuable as showing how difficult it is to discriminate the two meanings, where there is no Hebrew original to act as a check, and how easily the one runs into the other; e.g. Ecclus. xli. 15 ἐν πίστει αὐτοῦ ἡμιδόθη προφήτης καὶ ἐγνώσθη ἐν πίστει αὐτοῦ πιστὸς ὄρασις; I Macc. ii. 52 Ἀβραὰμ ὦ γάλη ἐν πιεράμῳ εὐρέθη πιστὸς καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαίωσὺν; Ecclus. xlix. 10 ἀπρόσωπον αὐτοῦ ἐν πίστει ἐπίδιον. In these passages the active sense seems to be forcing itself into notice; and the writings of Philo, to which I shall have to refer presently, show that at the time of the Christian era πίστις, 'faith,' 'belief,' had a recognised value as a theological term.

In the New Testament πίστις is found in both its passive and its active sense. On the one hand it is used for constancy, trustworthiness, whether of the immutable purpose of God, Rom. iii. 3 τὴν πίστιν τοῦ θεοῦ καταργήσει, or of good faith, honesty, uprightness in men, Matt. xxiii. 23 ἀφήκατε τὰ βαρύτερα τοῦ νόμου, τὴν κρίσιν καὶ τὸ ἔλεος καὶ τὴν πίστιν (see the note on Gal. v. 22). On the other hand, as 'faith,' 'belief,' it assumes in the teaching of our Lord, enforced and explained by St Paul, the foremost place in the phraseology of Christian doctrine. From this latter sense are derived all those shades of meaning by which it passes from the abstract to the concrete; from faith, the subjective state, to the faith, the object of faith, the Gospel, and sometimes, it would appear, the embodiment of faith, the Church (see Gal. i. 23, iii. 22—26, vi. 10).

All other senses however are exceptional, and πίστις, as a Christian virtue, certainly has the active meaning, 'trust,' 'belief.' But the use of the adjective οἱ πιστοὶ for the Christian brotherhood cannot be assigned rigidly either to the one meaning or the other. Sometimes the context requires the active, as Joh. xx. 27 μη γίνου ἄπιστος ἀλλὰ πιστὸς (comp. Gal. iii. 9), sometimes the passive, as Apoc. ii. 10 γίνον πιστὸς ἄχρι βαθάντων. But when there is no context to serve as a guide, who shall say in which of the two senses the word is used? For the one it may be urged that the passive sense of πιστὸς is in other connexions by far the most common, even in the New Testament; for the other, that its opposite ἄπιστος certainly means an 'unbeliever.' Is not a rigid definition of the sense in such a case groundless and arbitrary? For why should the sacred writers have used with this meaning only or with that a term whose very comprehensiveness was in itself a valuable lesson? For the difficulty of exact definition in similar cases is pointed out in a suggestive essay in Jowett's Epistles of St Paul ii. p. 101 (2nd ed.). With Prof. Jowett's applications of his principles I am far from agreeing in many cases, and I consider his general theory of the looseness of St Paul's language an entire mistake; but as a protest against the tendency of recent criticism to subtle restrictions of meaning, unsupported either by the context or by confirmed usage, this essay seems to me to be highly valuable. The use of οἱ πιστοὶ is an illustration of this difficulty. The expression ὁ ἐναγγελισμὸς τοῦ Χριστοῦ is another. What is meant by 'the Gospel of Christ'? Is it the Gospel which speaks of Christ, or the Gospel which was delivered by Christ,
iii. Latin.

3. It has been seen that the meaning of the Greek πίστις was reflected on its Hebrew original. No less was this meaning infused into its Latin rendering. The verb πίστεω was naturally translated by 'credo,' but this root supplied no substantive corresponding to πίστις, no adjective (for 'credulus' was stamped with a bad meaning) corresponding to πιστός.

Words were therefore borrowed from another source, 'fides,' 'fidelis.' Now 'fides,' as it appears in classical writers up to the time when it is adopted into Christian literature, is not so much 'belief, trust,' as 'fidelity, trustworthiness, credit.' Its connexion in some expressions however led the way toward this active meaning, at the very threshold of which it had already arrived. 1 In the absence therefore of any exact Latin equivalent to the active sense of πίστις, 2 the coincidence of 'fides' with some meanings of the Greek word, and the tendency already manifested to pass into the required sense 'belief, trust,' suggested it as the best rendering. Its introduction into Christian literature at length stamped it with a new image and superscription. In the case of the adjective 'fideles' again, the passive sense was still more marked, but here too there was no alternative, and the original πιστοί was, as we have seen, sufficiently wide to admit it as at all events a partial rendering.

The English terms 'faith, faithful,' derived from the Latin, have inherited the latitude of meaning which marked their ancestry; and it is perhaps a gain that we are able to render πίστις, πιστοί, by comprehensive words which, uniting in themselves the ideas of 'trustfulness' and 'trustworthiness,' of 'Glauben' and 'Treue,' do not arbitrarily restrict the power of the original.

The faith of Abraham.

Results of the fore-search would prove this position untenable. At all events the ordinary sense of 'fides' in classical writers is 'trustworthiness, credit, fidelity to engagements.'

1 The Latin language indeed offered two words of a directly active meaning, 'fidentia' and 'fiducia;' but the former of these seems never to have obtained a firm footing in the language (see Cic. de Inv. ii. 163, 165, Tusc. iv. 80), and the signification of both alike was too pronounced for the sense required. 'Fidentia' does not occur at all in the Latin translations (if the Concordance to the Vulgate is sufficient evidence); 'fiducia' is not uncommon, frequently as a rendering of παρρησία, less often of πεποθητίς, θάρσος, but never of πίστις. Fides, fiducia, occur together in Senec. Ep. 94.
Testament. It is indeed a characteristic token of the difference between going in the two covenants, that under the Law the ‘fear of the Lord’ holds very much the same place as ‘faith in God,’ ‘faith in Christ,’ under the Gospel.

Awe is the prominent idea in the earlier dispensation, trust in the later. At the same time, though the word itself is not found in the Old Testament, the idea is not absent; for indeed a trust in the Infinite and Unseen, subordinating thereto all interests that are finite and transitory, is the very essence of the higher spiritual life.

In Abraham, the father of the chosen race, this attitude of trustfulness was most marked. By faith he left home and kindred, and settled in a strange land: by faith he acted upon God’s promise of a race and an inheritance, though it seemed at variance with all human experience: by faith he offered up his only son, in whom alone that promise could be fulfilled. Thus this one word ‘faith’ sums up the lesson of his whole life. And when, during the long silence of prophecy which separated the close of the Jewish from the birth of the Christian Scriptures, the Hebrews were led to reflect and comment on the records of their race, this feature of their great forefather’s character did not escape notice. The two languages, which having supplanted the Hebrew, had now become the vehicles of theological teaching, both supplied words to express their meaning. In the Greek πίστις, in the Aramaic בטח, the hitherto missing term was first found.

As early as the First Book of Maccabees attention is directed to this lesson: ‘Was not Abraham found faithful in temptation, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness?’ Here however it is touched upon very lightly. But there is, I think, sufficient evidence to show that at the time of the Christian era the passage in Genesis relating to Abraham’s faith had become a standard text in the Jewish schools, variously discussed and commented upon, and that the interest thus concentrated on it prepared the way for the fuller and more spiritual teaching of the Apostles of Christ.

This appears to have been the case in both the great schools of Jewish theology, in the Alexandrian or Græco-Judaic, and the Rabbinical or Jewish proper, under which term we may include the teaching of the Babylonian dispersion as well as of Palestine, for there does not seem to have been any marked difference between the two.

Of the Alexandrian School indeed Philo is almost the sole surviving (i) Alexandrian representative, but he represents it so fully as to leave little to be desired. In Philo’s writings the life and character of Abraham are again and again commented upon. The passage of Genesis (xv. 6), doubly familiar to us from the applications in the New Testament, is quoted or referred to at 1 Acts vii. 2—5, Rom. iv. 16—22, Heb. xi. 8—12, 17—19.

2 1 Macc. ii. 52. Other less distinct references in the Apocrypha to the faith of Abraham are 2 Macc. i. 2, Ecles. xlvii. 19—21. In both passages πιστός occurs, but not πίστις.
3 The history of Abraham is made the direct subject of comment in the works of Philo entitled De Migrat. Abrah. i. p. 436 (Mangey), De Abrah. ii. p. 1, Quaest. in Gen. p. 167 (Aucher), besides being discussed in scattered passages, especially in Quis Rer. Div. Her. i. p. 473, De Mutat. Nom. i. p. 578.
least ten times. Once or twice Philo, like St Paul, comments on the second clause of the verse, the imputation of righteousness to Abraham, but for the most part the coincidence is confined to the remarks on Abraham's faith. Sometimes indeed faith is deposed from its sovereign throne by being co-ordinated with piety, or by being regarded as the reward rather than the source of a godly life. But far more generally it reigns supreme in his theology. It is 'the most perfect of virtues,' 'the queen of virtues.' It is 'the only sure and infallible good, the solace of life, the fulfilment of worthy hopes, barren of evil and fertile in good, the repudiation of the powers of evil, the confession of piety, the inheritance of happiness, the entire amelioration of the soul, which leans for support on Him who is the cause of all things, who is able to do all things, and willeth to do those which are most excellent.' They that 'preserve it sacred and inviolate' have 'dedicated to God their soul, their senses, their reason.' Such was the faith of Abraham, a 'most steadfast and unwavering faith,' in the possession of which he was 'thrice blessed indeed.'

But in order to appreciate the points of divergence from, as well as of coincidence with, the Apostolic teaching in Philo's language and thoughts, it is necessary to remember the general bearing of the history of Abraham in his system. To him it was not a history, but an allegory; or, if a history as well, it was as such of infinitely little importance. The three patriarchs represent the human soul united to God by three different means, Abraham by instruction, Isaac by nature, Jacob by ascetic discipline. Abraham therefore is the type of διδασκαλική ἀρετή, he is the man who arrives at the knowledge of the true God by teaching (xii. 6). And this is the meaning of his successive migrations, from Chaldaea to Charran, from Charran to the promised land. For Chaldaea, the abode of astrology, represents his uninstructed state, when he worships the stars of heaven and sets the material universe in the place of the great First Cause. By the divine monition he departs thence to Charran. What then is Charran?

2 de Migr. Abr. I. p. 436 τις οὖν ἡ κόλα (i.e. which unites him to God); τις; εὐσεβεία δήτου καὶ πίστει.
3 de Migr. Abr. II. p. 412 ἐκ τοῦ φονμενομένου πρὸς ἄλθεσιν, διδασκαλικῇ χρησιμομένη δρατῇ πρὸς τελειωμὸν ἄλθον αἴρεται τῆ ἐπὶ τῶν Θεὸν πίστιν.
5 de Abr. II. p. 39 τῆς βασιλίδα τῶν ἀρετῶν.
6 de Abr. I. c. I am not sure that I have caught the meaning of the words, κακοδαιμονίας ἀπάρνωσις, εὐσεβείας γνώ-

160

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

His migrations.

The story of Abraham an allegory.
The name itself, signifying 'a cave,' supplies the answer: the senses are denoted thereby. He must submit to be instructed by these, and thus to learn by observation the true relations and bearings of the material world. This however is only a half-way house on his journey towards his destined goal. From Charra he must go forward to the land of promise; from the observation on the senses he must advance to the knowledge of the one true invisible God. And the rest of the story must be similarly explained. For what is meant by his leaving home and kindred? Surely nothing else but his detaching himself from the influence of the senses, from the domination of external things. What again by the inheritance and the seed promised to him? The great nation, the numerous progeny, are the countless virtues which this frame of mind engenders: the inheritance is the rich possession of wisdom, the lordship of the spirit over the domain of the senses. And are not its very boundaries significant? The region comprises all that lies between the river of Egypt on the one hand, the symbol of material, and the river Euphrates on the other, the symbol of spiritual blessings.

If as full a record had been preserved of the Rabbinical Schools of Palestine and Babylonia during the Apostolic age, we should probably have found that an equally prominent place was assigned to the faith of Abraham in their teaching also. The interpretation put upon the passage, and the lessons deduced from it, would indeed be widely different; but the importance of the text itself must have been felt even more strongly where the national feeling was more intense. The promise to Abraham, the charter of their existence as a people, was all important to them, and its conditions would be minutely and carefully scanned. In the fourth Book of Esdras, one of the very few Jewish writings which can be attributed with any confidence to the Apostolic age, great stress is laid on faith. In the last days, it is said, 'the land of faith shall be barren' (or 'the land shall be barren of faith,' iii. 2). The seal of eternal life is set on those who 'have treasured up faith' (iv. 13). The wicked are described as 'not having had faith in God's statutes and having neglected His works' (v. 24). Immunity from punishment is promised to the man 'who can escape by his works and by his faith whereby he has believed' (ix. 8). God watches over those 'who have good works and faith in the Most High' (xiii. 31).

There is however other evidence besides. For though the extant works of Rabbinical Judaism are, as written documents and in their present form, for the most part the productions of a later age, there can be little doubt that they embody more ancient traditions, and therefore reflect fairly, though with some exceptions, the Jewish teaching at the Christian era. Thus the importance then attached to faith, and the significance assigned

---

1 de Migr. Abr. l.c. p. 465 τρύγων το τῆς αἰσθήσεως χώρας, comp. de Somn. l.c.
2 de Migr. Abr. l. p. 437.
5 Quaest. in Gen. p. 138 (Aucher).
6 The references are taken from the text as printed in Gfrorer's Prophet. Vet. Pseudepigr.
to Abraham's example, may be inferred from the following passage in the Mechilta. Mechilta on Exodus xiv. 31: 'Great is faith, whereby Israel believed on Him that spake and the world was. For as a reward for Israel's having believed in the Lord, the Holy Spirit dwelt on them...In like manner thou findest that Abraham our father inherited this world and the world to come solely by the merit of faith whereby he believed in the Lord; for it is said, and he believed in the Lord, and He counted it to him for righteousness...Rabbi Nehemiah says: He that taketh unto himself one precept in firm faith, on him the Holy Spirit dwelleth; for so we find in the case of our fathers, that, as a reward for their believing on the Lord, they were deemed worthy that the Holy Spirit should dwell on them...So Abraham solely for the merit of faith, whereby he believed in the Lord, inherited this world and the other...Only as a reward for their faith were the Israelites redeemed out of Egypt, for it is said, And the people believed...What is the cause of David's joy (in Ps. xci. 1)? It is the reward of faith, whereby our fathers believed...So Jeremiah (v. 3), O Lord, thine eyes look upon faith, and Habakkuk (ii. 4), The righteous liveth of his faith...Great is faith'; with more to the same effect. This passage should be taken in connexion with the comment in Siphri on Deut. xi. 13: 'The sacred text means to show that practice depends on doctrine and not doctrine on practice. And so we find too that (God) punishes more severely for doctrine than for practice, as it is said (in Hosea iv. 1), Hear the word of the Lord etc.' Gfröer, to whom I am indebted for these passages, illustrates their bearing by reference to the opinions of later Jewish doctors who maintain that 'as soon as a man has mastered the thirteen heads of the faith, firmly believing therein, he is to be loved and forgiven and treated in all respects as a brother, and though he may have sinned in every possible way, he is indeed an erring Israelite, and is punished accordingly, but still he inherits eternal life.'

It were unwise to overlook the coincidences of language and thought which the contemporaneous teaching of the Jews occasionally presents to the Apostolic writings. The glory of the scriptural revelation does not pale because we find in the best thoughts of men 'broken lights' of its own fuller splendour. Yet on the other hand the resemblance must not be exaggerated. It is possible to repeat the same words and yet to attach to them an entirely different meaning: it is possible even to maintain the same precept, and yet by placing it in another connexion to lead it to an opposite practical issue. In the case before us the divergences are quite as striking as the coincidences.

---

In marked contrast to these earlier comments is the treatment of the text, Gen. xv. 6, by some later Jewish writers. Anxious, it would appear, to cut the ground from under St Paul's inference of 'righteousness by faith,' they interpreted the latter clause, 'And Abraham counted on God's righteousness,' i.e. on His strict fulfilment of His promise. See the references in Beer's Leben Abrahams p. 147; comp. p. 33. Such a rendering is as harsh in itself, as it is devoid of traditional support.

3 Abarbanel Rosh Amanah p. 5 a, Maimonides on Mishna Sanhedr. p. 121 a, referred to in Gfröer Jahrh. des Heils ii. p. 162.
If we look only to the individual man, faith with Philo is substantially the same as faith with St Paul. The lessons drawn from the history of Abraham by the Alexandrian Jew and the Christian Apostle differ very slightly. Faith is the postponement of all present aims and desires, the sacrifice of all material interests, to the Infinite and Unseen. But the philosopher of Alexandria saw no historical bearing in the career of Abraham. As he was severed from the heart of the nation, so the pulses of the national life had ceased to beat in him. The idea of a chosen people retained scarcely the faintest hold on his thoughts. Hence the only lesson which he drew from the patriarch's life had reference to himself. Abraham was but a type, a symbol of the individual man. The promises made to him, the rich inheritance, the numerous progeny, had no fulfilment except in the growth of his own character. The Alexandrian Jew, like the heathen philosopher, was exclusive, isolated, selfish. With him the theocracy of the Old Testament was emptied of all its meaning: the covenant was a matter between God and his own spirit. The idea of a Church did not enter into his reckoning. He appreciated the significance of Abraham's faith, but Abraham's seed was almost meaningless to him.

On the other hand Judaism proper was strong where Alexandrian St Paul Judaism was weak, and weak where it was strong. The oppressive rule of Syrians and Romans had served only to develop and strengthen the national feeling. 'We are Abraham's sons, we have Abraham to our father': such was their religious war-cry, full of meaning to every true Israelite. It was a protest against selfish isolation. It spoke of a corporate life, of national hopes and interests, of an outward community, a common brotherhood, ruled by the same laws and animated by the same feelings. In other words, it kept alive the idea of a Church. This was the point of contact between St Paul's teaching and Rabbinical Judaism. But their agreement does not go much beyond this. With them indeed he upheld the faith of Abraham as an example to Abraham's descendants. But, while they interpreted it as a rigorous observance of outward ordinances, he understood by it a spiritual state, a steadfast reliance on the unseen God. With them too he clung to the fulfilment of the promise, he cherished fondly the privileges of a son of Abraham. But to him the link of brotherhood was no longer the same blood, but the same spirit: they only were Abraham's sons who inherited Abraham's faith.

Thus the coincidences and contrasts of St Paul's doctrine of faith and of Summary, his application of Abraham's history with the teaching of the Jewish doctors are equally instructive. With the Alexandrian school it looked to the growth of the individual man, with the Rabbinical it recognised the claims of the society: with the one it was spiritual, with the other it was historical. On the other hand, it was a protest alike against the selfish, esoteric, individualising spirit of the one, and the narrow, slavish formalism of the other.

This sketch is very far from doing justice to St Paul's doctrine of faith. In order fully to understand its force, or indeed to appreciate its leading conception, it would be necessary to take into account the atoning death and resurrection of Christ as the central object on which that faith is fixed. This however lies apart from the present question, for it has no direct bearing on the lesson drawn from Abraham's example. In a certain sense indeed the Messiah may be said to have been the object of Abraham's faith; for He, as the fulfilment of the promise, must have been dimly discerned by Abraham, as by one 'looking through a glass darkly.' And to this vague presentiment of a future Triumph or Redemption we may perhaps refer our Lord's words (John viii. 56), 'Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day: and he saw it and was glad.' But however this may be, St Paul makes no such application of Abraham's example. He does not once allude to the Christ, as the object of the patriarch's faith.

To return once again to the passages from Jewish writers already cited: they are important in their bearing on the interpretation of the Apostolic writings in yet another point of view. The example of Abraham is quoted both by St Paul and St James; while the deductions which the two Apostles draw from it are at first sight diametrically opposed in terms. 'We conclude that a man is justified by faith apart from \( \chiρίς \) works of law,' says St Paul (Rom. iii. 28). 'A man is justified of works and not of faith only,' are the words of St James (ii. 24). Now, so long as our range of view is confined to the Apostolic writings, it seems scarcely possible to resist the impression that St James is attacking the teaching, if not of St Paul himself, at least of those who exaggerated and perverted it. But when we realise the fact that the passage in Genesis was a common thesis in the schools of the day, that the meaning of faith was variously explained by the disputants, that diverse lessons were drawn from it—then the case is altered. The Gentile Apostle and the Pharisaic Rabbi might both maintain the supremacy of faith as the means of salvation: but faith with St Paul was a very different thing from faith with Maimonides for instance. With the one its prominent idea is a spiritual life, with the other an orthodox creed: with the one the guiding principle is the individual conscience, with the other an external rule of ordinances: with the one faith is allied to liberty, with the other to bondage. Thus it becomes a question, whether St James's protest against reliance on faith alone has any reference, direct or indirect, to St Paul's language and teaching; whether in fact it is not aimed against an entirely different type of religious feeling, against the Pharisaic spirit which rested satisfied with a barren orthodoxy fruitless in works of charity. Whether this is the true bearing of the Epistle of St James or not, must be determined by a close examination of its contents. But inasmuch as the circles of labour of the two Apostles were not likely to intersect, we have at least a prima facie reason for seeking the objects of St James's rebuke elsewhere than in the disciples of St Paul, and the facts collected above destroy the force of any argument founded on the mere coincidence of the examples chosen.

1 This view of the Epistle of St James is taken by Michaelis (vi. p. 332, Marsh's 2nd ed.). It is also adopted by Neander: see especially his Pflanzung p. 567 (4te aufl.). He there refers, in illustration of this Jewish mode of thinking against which he supposes the epistle to be directed, to Justin Dial. c. Tryph. p. 370 δ' οὖν ὅτι ὲμέν ἀπαγάγει διωγμόν καὶ ἀλοι πνεύμα ὄμως ἰδιω (i.e. Judaizing Christians) κατὰ τοῦτον, οὐ λέγοντι δεῖ, καὶ ἀμαρτωλοὶ δεῖ θέων ἐν τῷ θεον κωσμών, οὐ μὴ λογίστην αὐτοῖς Κώρος ἀμαρτίαν: and to the Clem. Hom. iii. 6. Several later writers have maintained the same view. For more on this subject see the Dissertation on 'St Paul and the Three.'
IV. 1—7. In the former paragraph St. Paul starting from the figure of the pedagogue had been led to speak of the sonship of the faithful in Christ. The opening verses of this chapter are an expansion of the same image. The heir in his nonage represents the state of the world before the Gospel. In drawing out the comparison, St. Paul seems to include Gentiles as well as Jews under this ‘tutelage,’ all having more or less been subject to a system of positive ordinances, and so far gone through a disciplinary training. In the image itself however there are two points to be cleared up.

First. Is the father of the heir represented as dead or living? On the one hand individual expressions point to the decease of the father; a very unnatural meaning must otherwise be forced upon the words, ‘heir,’ ‘guardian,’ ‘lord of all.’ On the other hand the metaphor in its application refers to a living Father. The latter consideration must yield to the former. The point of the comparison lies not in the circumstances of the father, but of the son. All metaphors must cease to apply at some point, and the death of the father is the limit here imposed by the nature of the case. Our Father never dies; the inheritance never passes away from Him; yet nevertheless we succeed to the full possession of it.

Secondly. It has been questioned whether St. Paul borrows the imagery here from Roman or from Jewish law, or even, as some maintain, from a special code in force in Galatia. In the absence of very ample information, we may say that, so far as he alludes to any definite form of the law of guardianship, he would naturally refer to the Roman; but, as the terms are not technically exact (e.g. ἱππίως, προ-τέρυμα), he seems to put forward rather the general conception of the office of a guardian, than any definite statute regulating it. His language indeed agrees much better with our simpler modern practice, than with Roman law, which in this respect was artificial and elaborate.

‘I described the law as our tutor. I spoke of our release from its restraints. Let me explain my meaning more fully. An heir during his minority is treated as a servant. Notwithstanding his expectations as the future lord of the property, he is subject to the control of guardians and stewards, until the time of release named in his father’s will arrives. In like manner mankind itself was a minor before Christ’s coming. It was subject, like a child, to the discipline of external ordinances. At length when the time was fully arrived, God sent His own Son into the world, born of a woman as we are, subject to law as we are, that He might redeem and liberate those who are so subject, and that we all might receive our destined adoption as sons. Of this sonship God has given us a token. He sent forth into our hearts the Spirit of His Son, which witnesses in us and cries to Him as to a Father. Plainly then, thou art no more a servant, but a son; and, as a son, thou art also an heir, through the goodness of God.’

I. Ἰένω δὲ] ‘But what I would say is this,’ introducing an expansion or explanation of what has gone before: see v. 16, Rom. xv. 8, and for the more definite τώτο δὲ Ἰένω, Gal. iii. 17 (with the note), 1 Cor. i. 12.

νήπιος] ‘an infant.’ As this does not appear to have been a technical term in Greek, or at least in Attic law (where the distinction is between παις and ἄνηπ), it probably represents the Latin ‘infans.’ If so, its use here, though sufficiently exact for the purposes of the comparison, is not technically precise. The ‘infantia’ of a.
Roman child ended with his seventh year, after which he was competent to perform certain legal acts, but he was not entirely emancipated from a state of tutelage till he entered on his twenty-fifth year, having passed through several intermediate stages. See Savigny Röm. Recht. iii. p. 25 sq. ἄνδρα seems to be here 'a minor' in any stage of his minority. The word is opposed to ἀνήπτυχός, 1 Cor. xiii. 11, Ephes. iv. 13, 14; comp. Dion. Hal. iv. 9, Gruter Inscr. p. 682. 9. See Philo Leg. ad Cat. 4, II. p. 549 νήπιον ἔτι ὅστα κομίδη καὶ χριστανὰ ἐπιτρόπων καὶ διδακτίων καὶ παιδαγώγων.

οὐδὲν διαφέρει δοῦλον] The minor was legally in much the same position as the slave. He could not perform any act, except through his legal representative. This responsible person, the guardian in the case of the minor, the master in the case of the slave, who represented him to the state, and whose sanction was necessary for the validity of any contract undertaken on his behalf, was termed in Attic law κύριος, Meier Att. Proc. p. 450. Prospectively however, though not actually, the minor was κύριος πάντων, which the slave was not.

2. ἐπιτρόπων καὶ οἰκονόμων] 'controllers of his person and property.' The language is intended, as the plurals show, to be as comprehensive as possible. It is therefore vain to search for the exact technical term in Roman law corresponding to each word. The Latin fathers translate them variously; 'curatores et actores' Vict., Hil., Interp. Orig.; 'tutores et actores' Pelag., Hier.; 'procuratores et actores' Aug.; 'tutores et dispensatores' Interp. Theod. Mops. The distinction given in the above translation seems the most probable. The ἐπιτρόποι are the boy's legal representatives, his guardians (whether 'curatores' or 'tutores' in Roman law); the οἰκονόμοι, stewards or bailiffs appointed to manage his household or property. The word ἐπιτρόπος elsewhere in the New Testament, Matt. xx. 8, Luke viii. 3, is 'a steward.' Adopted into the Rabbinical language (אבירוטא) it has a comprehensive meaning, signifying sometimes a guardian, sometimes a steward: see Schöttgen here and on Luke viii. 3.

3. ἡμείς] 'we,' Jews and Gentiles
µίας τοῦ πατρὸς. 3οὗτος καὶ ήμεῖς, ὅτε ήμεν νήπιοι, ὑπὸ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου ήμεν δεδουλωμένοι. 4ὅτε alike, as appears from the whole context. See the note on ver. ii.

tα στοιχεία" 'the elements,' originally 'the letters of the alphabet,' as being set in rows. From this primary sense the word gets two divergent meanings among others, both of which have been assigned to it in this passage; (1) 'The physical elements' (2 Pet. iii. 10, 12, Wisd. vii. 17), as earth, fire, etc. (Hermas Vis. iii. 13), and especially the heavenly bodies: comp. Clem. Hom. x. 9, 25, Justin Apol. ii. p. 44 A τὰ οὐράνια στοιχεῖα, Dial. p. 285 0. They were probably so called chronologically, as the elements of time (Theoph. ad Aut. i. 4 ἡμέρας καὶ σελήνης καὶ στρέφεις στοιχεῖα αὐτῶν εἰσίν, εἰς σημεῖα καί εἰς καυροὺς καί εἰς ἡμέρας καί εἰς ἐναυσούς γεγονότα): (2) 'The alphabet of learning, rudimentary instruction;' as Heb. v. 12.

The former sense is commonly adopted by the fathers, who for the most part explain it of the observance of days and seasons, regulated by the heavenly bodies. So Hilar., Pelag., Chrysost., Theod. Mops., Theodoret; comp. Ep. ad Diog. § 4. Victorinus strangely interprets it of the influence of the stars on the heathen not yet emancipated by Christ; and Augustine supposes that St Paul is referring to the Gentile worship of the physical elements. The two latter interpretations are at all events excluded by ἡμεῖς, which must include Jews. The agreement in favour of this sense of στοιχεῖα may, I think, be attributed to the influence of a passage in the Praedicatio Petri, quoted in Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. (p. 760, Potter), Orig. in Ioann. iv. 22 (iv. p. 226, Delarue), in which the worship of the Jews is classed with that of the heathen; inasmuch as, professing to know God, they were in fact by this observance of days and seasons λατρεύουσες ἄγγελοι καὶ ἄρχαγγελοι, μηδὲ καὶ σελήνῃ.

At all events I can scarcely doubt that this interpretation of στοιχεῖα became current through Origen's influence. It seems to be much more in accordance with the prevailing tone of Alexandrian theology, than with the language and teaching of St Paul. Comp. Philo de Migr. Abr. p. 464 m.

On the other hand a few of the fathers (Jerome, Gennadius, Primasius) adopt the other sense, 'elementary teaching.' This is probably the correct interpretation, both as simpler in itself and as suiting the context better. St Paul seems to be dwelling still on the rudimentary character of the law, as fitted for an earlier stage in the world's history. The expression occurs again in reference to formal ordinances, Col. ii. 8 κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων κατὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, and ii. 20 εἰ ἀπεθάνετο σὺν Χριστῷ ἀπὸ τῶν στοιχείων τοῦ κόσμου, τί ὥς ἔσωσεν ἐν κόσμῳ δογματικῷ; In these passages the words of the context which are emphasized seem to show that a mode of instruction is signified by τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου.

tοῦ κόσμου] 'of the world,' i.e. having reference to material and not to spiritual things, formal and sensuous. The force of τοῦ κόσμου is best explained by the parallel passages already cited, Col. ii. 8, 20. See below, vi. 14.

4. τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ χρόνου] The ideas involved in this expression may be gathered from the context. It was 'the fulness of time.' First; In reference to the Giver. The moment had arrived which God had ordained from the beginning and foretold by His prophets for Messiah's coming. This is implied in the comparison ἡ προθεσμία τοῦ πατρὸς. Secondly; In reference to the recipient. The Gospel was withheld until the world had arrived at mature age: law had worked out its educational purpose and now was su-
The primary reference in all this is plainly to the Mosaic law: but the whole context shows that the Gentile converts of Galatia are also included, and that they too are regarded as having undergone an elementary discipline, up to a certain point analogous to that of the Jews. See the remarks on ver. 11.

πλήρωμα, the complement. On this word see Colossians, p. 257 sq.

ἐξαπέστειλεν, He sent forth from Himself, as His representative: Ξα caelo a sese,’ says Bengel. This word assumes the pre-existence of the Son, but must not be pressed to imply also the unity with the Father, for it is commonly used in later Greek in speaking of any mission.

γενόμενον ἐκ γυναικὸς i.e. taking upon Himself our human nature; comp. Job xiv. 1, Matt. xi. 11. These passages show that the expression must not be taken as referring to the miraculous incarnation. See Basil de Ἐπιρ. Sancti. v. 12.

γενόμενον ὑπὸ νόμου not τοῦ νόμου; for though Christ was born under the Mosaic law, the application of the principle is much wider. See the note on the next verse.

5. The two clauses correspond to those of the foregoing verse in an inverted order by the grammatical figure called chiasm; ‘The Son of God was born a man, that in Him all men might become sons of God; He was born subject to law, that those subject to law might be rescued from bondage.’ At the same time the figure is not arbitrarily employed here, but the inversion arises out of the necessary sequence. The abolition of the law, the rescue from bondage, was a prior condition of the universal sonship of the faithful. See the note on iii. 14.

τοίς ὑπὸ νόμου again not τοῦ νόμου. St Paul refers primarily to the Mosaic law, as at once the highest and most rigorous form of law, but extends the application to all those subject to any system of positive ordinances. We seem to have the same extension, starting from the law of Moses, in i Cor. ix. 20, ἐγενόμην τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ἦς Ἰουδαίοις... τοῖς ὑπὸ νόμου ᾧ ὑπὸ νόμου.

ἐξαγοράσῃ] See the note on iii. 13. ἦς, ἦς] For the repetition of ἦς, and for the general connexion of thought, see the note iii. 14. In this passage it is perhaps best to take the two as independent of each other, inasmuch as the two clauses to which they respectively refer are likewise independent. Comp. Ephes. v. 26, 27.

τῆς υἱοθεσίας] not ‘the sonship,’ but ‘the adoption as sons.’ Υἱοθεσία seems never to have the former sense; see Fritzsche on Rom. viii. 15. Potentially indeed men were sons before Christ’s coming (ver. 1), but actually they were only slaves (ver. 3). His coming conferred upon them the privileges of sons: ‘Adoptionem propterea dicit,’ IV, 6, 7] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

σίαν ἀπολάβωμεν. ὃτι δὲ ἐστε νοι, ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ νοι αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν, κράζον Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ. ἵστε οὐκέτι εἰ δούλοις, ἀλλᾶ says Augustine with true appreciation, 'ut distincte intelligamus unicum Dei filium.' We are sons by grace; He is so by nature.

ἀπολάβωμεν] The exact sense of the preposition will depend on the meaning assigned to πνεῦμα. If πνεῦμα be taken as adoption, ἀπολάβωμεν must signify 'receive as destined for, as promised to us,' or, as Augustine says, 'nec dixit accipiamus, sed recipiamus, ut significaret hoc nos amisisse in Adam, ex quo mortales sumus.' At all events it cannot be equivalent to λάβωμεν. The change to the first person plural marks the universality of the sonship: 'we, those under law and those free from law, alike.'

6. ὅτι ἐστε νοι] 'because ye are sons.' The presence of the Spirit is thus a witness of their sonship. The force of this clause is best explained by the parallel passage, Rom. viii. 15, 16. St Paul seems here to be dwelling on the same idea as in iii. 2. Their reconciliation with God was complete without works of law, the gift of the Spirit being a proof of this. See also Acts x. 44, xi. 15—18, xv. 8.

κράζον] The word denotes earnest and importunate prayer, as in Is. xix. 20; comp. James v. 4.

'Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ] Abba is the Aramaic equivalent to the Greek πατήρ. The combination of the two words seems to have been a liturgical formula. It occurs in Mark xiv. 36 in the mouth of our Lord, and also in Rom. viii. 15, in a passage closely resembling this. The origin of this formula may be explained in two ways. First, It originated with the Hellenistic Jews who would naturally adhere with fondness to the original word consecrated in their prayers by long usage, and add to it the equivalent in the Greek language which they ordinarily spoke. In this case, in the passage of St Mark the words ὁ πατήρ may perhaps be an addition of the Evangelist himself, explaining the Aramaic word after his wont. Secondly, It may have taken its rise among the Jews of Palestine after they had become acquainted with the Greek language. In this case it is simply an expression of importunate entreaty, illustrating the natural mode of emphasizing by repetition of the same idea in different forms. This latter explanation seems simpler, and best explains the expression as coming from our Lord's lips. It is moreover supported by similar instances given in Schöttgen, II. p. 252: e.g. a woman entreating a judge addresses him Ἰσραήλ, the second word being εὐπε, the Greek equivalent to the Aramaic יִשְׂרָאֵל 'my Lord.' For other examples see Rev. ix. 11 ('Απολλόνων, Ἀββαδών), xii. 9, xx. 2 (Σατανᾶς, Διάβολος). Whichever explanation be adopted, this phrase is a speaking testimony to that fusion of Jew and Greek which prepared the way for the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen. Accordingly St Paul in both passages seems to dwell on it with peculiar emphasis, as a type of the union of Jew and Gentile in Christ; comp. iii. 28.

'Ἀββᾶ] In Chaldee ἀββᾶ, in Syriac ἀββᾶ. In the latter dialect it is said to have been pronounced with a double ὁ when applied to a spiritual father, with a single ὁ when used in its first sense: see Bernstein's Lex. s. v. and comp. Hoffmann, Gramm. Syr. l. i., § 17. With the double letter at all events it has passed into the European languages, as an ecclesiastical term, 'abbas,' 'abbot.' The Peshito in rendering Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ can only repeat the word, 'Father our Father,' in all three passages where the expression occurs.

The nominative with the article is here used for an emphatic vocative, as e.g. Luke viii. 54 ἵππας, εἰς τοῦτον. See Winer, § xxix. p. 227. This is a Hebraism; comp. Gesen. Hebrew Gramm. § 107.

7. ὅστε "therefore," in reference to all that has gone before; 'Seeing (1) that this naturally follows when your minority has come to an end; and (2) that you have direct proof of it in the gift of the Spirit, the token of sonship.'

οὐκέτα ἐστιν 'thou art no longer,' now that Christ has come. The appeal is driven home by the successive changes in the mode of address; first, 'we, all Christians, far and wide, Jews and Gentiles alike' (ἀπολαβόμεν, ver. 5); next, 'you, my Galatian converts' (ἐστι, ver. 6); lastly, 'each individual man who hears my words' (ἐι, ver. 7).

eἰ δὲ νῦν, καὶ κληρονόμος] Comp. Rom. viii. 17 εἰ δὲ τάκα, καὶ κληρονόμος. It has been made a question whether St Paul is here drawing his illustrations from Jewish or from Roman law. In answer to this it is perhaps sufficient to say, that so far as he has in view any special form of law, he would naturally refer to the Roman, as most familiar to his readers. And indeed the Roman law of inheritance supplied a much truer illustration of the privileges of the Christian, than the Jewish. By Roman law all the children, whether sons or daughters, inherited alike (comp. iii. 28 οὐκ ἐν ἀρσεν καὶ θῆλυ); by Jewish, the sons inherited unequally, and except in default of male heirs the daughters were excluded; Michaelis Laws of Moses iii. 3, § 1. See a paper of C. F. A. Fritzsch in Fritzsche Opusc. i. p. 143.

διὰ Θεοῦ] 'heir not by virtue of birth, or through merits of your own, but through God who adopted you.' For διὰ see the note on i. 1. This is doubtless the right reading, having the preponderance of authority in its favour. All other variations, including that of the received text, κληρονόμος Θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ, are apparently substitutions of a common expression for one which is unusual and startling.

8—11. 'Nevertheless, in an unfial spirit, ye have subjected yourselves again to bondage, ye would fain submit anew to a weak and beggarly discipline of restraint. And how much less pardonable is this now! For then ye were idolaters from ignorance of God, but now ye have known God, or rather have been known of Him. Ye are scrupulous in your observance of months and seasons and years. Ye terrify me, lest all the toil which I have expended on you should be found vain.'

ἀλλά] 'yet still, in spite of your sonship,' referring not to εὐδουλεύσατε but with which it stands in close proximity, but to the more remote εὐσεβεῖσθαι (ver. 9); comp. Rom. vi. 17 καὶ δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, διὸ ἢτε δοῦλοι, ὑπερκούσατε δὲ ἐκ καρδίας κ.τ.λ. The intervening words (ver. 8) are inserted to prepare the way for ταύτῃ.

τότε μὲν οὐκ εἰδότες] 'Then it was through ignorance of God that ye were subject etc.'; a partial excuse for their former bondage. For the expression εἰδέναι Θεοῦ see i Thess. iv. 5, 2 Thess. i. 8.

τοῖς φύσεις μὴ οὕσων θείοις] 'to those who by nature were not gods,' i.e. μὴ οὕσων θείοις ἀλλὰ δαμασκιοῖς; comp. 1 Cor. x. 20 οἱ θέων [τὰ ἔθη], δαμασκιοῖς καὶ οὐ Θεό θόσων. This is the correct order. On the other hand in the reading of the received text, τοῖς μὴ φύσεις οὕσων θείοις, the negative affects φύσει; i.e. μὴ φύσεις ἀλλὰ λόγω, 'not by na-
IV. 10] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 171

υπὸ Θεοῦ, πῶς ἐπιστρέφετε πάλιν ἐπὶ τὰ ἀσθενή καὶ πτωχὰ στοιχεῖα, οἷς πάλιν ἀνωθεν δουλεύειν θέλετε; ἡμέρας παρατηρεῖσθε καὶ μήνας καὶ καίρους, ἀσθενῆ καὶ πτωχὰ] 'weak,' for they have no power to rescue man from condemnation; 'beggarly,' for they bring no rich endowment of spiritual treasures. For ἀσθενῆ see Rom. viii. 3 τὸ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου (comp. Gal. iii. 21), Heb. vii. 18 τὸ ἀσθενεῖ καὶ ἀνωφελές.

πάλιν ἀνωθεν] a strong expression to describe the completeness of their relapse.

10. ἡμέρας κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Col. ii. 16 ἐν μέρει ἐστίν· ἡ νεομνημία ἡ σαββάτων, which passage explains the expressions here, stopping short however of ἑορταὶ. The ἡμέρας are the days recurring weekly, the sabbaths: μῆνες, the monthly celebrations, the new moons: καιροὶ, the annual festivals, as the passover, pentecost, etc.; ἑορταὶ, the sacred years, as the sabbatical year and the year of jubilee. Comp. Judith viii. 6 χρόνις προσβαθμῶν καὶ σαββάτων καὶ προσομονῶν καὶ νομιμῶν καὶ ἑορτῶν καὶ χαρακτηρίων ὄνομα Ἰσραήλ, Philo de Sept. p. 286 M. ἦν τὴν ἐβδομάδα τιμήσεως κατὰ πάντα χρῶνον ἡμερῶν καὶ μηνῶν καὶ ἑορτῶν κ.τ.λ. For μῆνες in the sense it has here comp. Is. lxvi. 23 καὶ ἐστιν μήν ἐκ μῆνος καὶ σαββάτων ἐκ σαββάτων. On this use of καιρός for an annually recurring season see Mereis p. 214 (Bekker), Ὡρα ἔτους, Ἀντίκοι καιρός ἔτους, Ἑλληρίες: and Hesychius, Ὡρα ἔτους καιρός ἔτους τὸ ἐαρ καὶ τὸ θέρος.

ἑορταῖς] It has been calculated (Wieseler, Chron. Synops. p. 204 sq and here) that the year from autumn 54 to autumn 55 was a sabbatical year; and an inference has been drawn from this as to the date of the epistle. The enumeration however seems to be intended as general and exhaustive, and no special reference can be assumed.

On the Christian observance of days in reference to this prohibition of ἑορταῖς.
kai ebantous; ἵφοβοῦμαι υμᾶς, μή πως εἰκῆ κεκοπίακα εἰς υμᾶς.

Paul see the excellent remarks of Origen, c. Cels. viii. 21—23.

παρατηρεῖν [ye minutely, scrupulously observe], literally 'ye go along with and observe': comp. Ps. cxxix. 3 εὖ διομᾶς παρατηρήσῃς, Joseph. Ant. iii. 5. 5 παρατηρεῖν τὰς ἰδιομίδας, Clem. Hom. xix. 22 ἀμελήσαντες τὴν παρατήρησαν. In this last passage, which enjoins the observance of days ἐκποίησαν ἴμεραι, there is apparently an attack on St Paul; see above, p. 61. There seems to be no authority for assigning to παρατηρεῖν the sense 'wrongly observe,' nor is the analogy of such words as παρακοινώνει sufficiently close to bear it out. Here the middle voice still further enforces the idea of interested, assiduous observance; comp. Luke xiv. 1.

11. κεκοπίακα] the indicative mood, because the speaker suspects that what he fears has actually happened. Herm. on Soph. Aj. 272 says, 'μὴ ἐστὶν veren-tis quidem est sed indicantis simul putare se ita esse ut veretur.' See Winer § lvi. p. 631 sq.

In the above passage St Paul expressively describes the Mosaic law, as a rudimentary teaching, the alphabet, as it were, of moral and spiritual instruction. The child must be taught by definite rules, learnt by rote. The chosen race, like the individual man, has had its period of childhood. During this period, the mode of instruction was tempered to its undeveloped capacities. It was subject to a discipline of absolute precepts, of external ordinances.

It is clear however from the context, that the Apostle is not speaking of the Jewish race alone, but of the heathen world also before Christ—not of the Mosaic law only, but of all forms of law which might be subservient to the same purpose. This appears from his including his Galatian hearers under the same tutelage. Nor is this fact to be explained by supposing them to have passed through a stage of Jewish proselytism on their way to Christianity. St Paul distinctly refers to their previous idolatrous worship (ver. 8), and no less distinctly and emphatically does he describe their adoption of Jewish ritualism, as a return to the weak and beggarly discipline of childhood, from which they had been emancipated when they abandoned that worship.

But how, we may ask, could St Paul class in the same category that divinely ordained law which he elsewhere describes as 'holy and just and good' (Rom. vii. 12), and those degraded heathen systems which he elsewhere reprobates as 'fellowship with devils' (1 Cor. x. 20)? The answer seems to be that the Apostle here regards the higher element in heathen religion as corresponding, however imperfectly, to the lower element in the Mosaic law. For we may consider both the one and the other as made up of two component parts, the spiritual and the ritualistic. Now viewed in their spiritual aspect there is no comparison between the one and the other. In this respect the heathen religions, so far as they added anything of their own to that sense of dependence on God which is innate in man and which they could not entirely crush (Acts xiv. 17, xvii. 23, 27, 28, Rom. i. 19, 20), were wholly bad; they were profligate and soul-deestroying, were the prompting of devils. On the contrary in the Mosaic law the spiritual element was most truly divine. But this does not enter into our reckoning here. For Christianity has appropriated all that was spiritual in its predecessor. The Mosaic dispensation was a foreshadowing, a germ of the Gospel: and thus, when Christ came, its spiritual element was of necessity extinguished or rather absorbed by its successor. Deprived of this, it was a mere mass of lifeless ordinances, differing only in degree, not in kind, from any other ritualistic system.

Thus the ritualistic element alone remains to be considered, and here is the meeting point of Judaism and Heathenism. In Judaism this was as much lower than its spiritual element, as in Heathenism it was higher. Hence the two systems approach within such a distance of each other that they can under certain limitations be classed together. They have at least so much in common that a lapse into Judaism can be regarded as a relapse to the position of unconverted Heathenism. Judaism was a system of bondage like Heathenism. Heathenism had been a disciplinary training like Judaism.

It is a fair inference, I think, from St Paul's language here, that he does place Heathenism in the same category with Judaism in this last respect. Both alike are στοιχεῖα, 'elementary systems of training.' They had at least this in common, that as ritual systems they were made up of precepts and ordinances, and thus were representatives of 'law' as opposed to 'grace,' 'promise,' that is, as opposed to the Gospel. Doubtless in this respect even the highest form of heathen religion was much lower and less efficient than the Mosaic ritual. But still in an imperfect way they might do the same work: they might act as a restraint, which multiplying transgressions and thus begetting and cherishing a conviction of sin prepared the way for the liberty of manhood in Christ.

Thus comparing the two together from the point of view in which St Paul seems to consider them, we get as the component parts of each: Judaism; (1) The spiritual—absolutely good, absorbed in the Gospel; (2) The ritualistic—relatively good, στοιχεῖα: Heathenism; (1) The ritualistic—relatively good, στοιχεῖα; (2) The spiritual—absolutely bad, antagonistic to the Gospel.

If this explanation of St Paul's meaning be correct, it will appear on the one hand that his teaching has nothing in common with Goethe's classification, when he placed Judaism at the head of Ethnic religions. On the other hand it will explain the intense hatred with which the Judaizers, wholly unable to rise above the level of their sectarian prejudices and take a comprehensive view of God's providence, regarded the name and teaching of St Paul.

12—16. 'By our common sympathies, as brethren I appeal to you. I laid aside the privileges, the prejudices of my race: I became a Gentile, even as ye were Gentiles. And now I ask you to make me some return. I ask you to throw off this Judaic bondage, and to be free, as I am free. Do not mistake me; I have no personal complaint; ye did me no wrong. Nay, ye remember, when detained by sickness I preached the Gospel to you, what a hearty welcome ye gave me. My infirmity might well have tempted you to reject my message. It was far otherwise. Ye did not spurn me, did not loathe me; but received me as an angel of God, as Christ Jesus Himself. And what has now become of your felicitations? Are they scattered to the winds? Yet ye did felicitate yourselves then. Yea, I bear you witness, such was your gratitude, ye would have plucked out your very eyes and have given them to me. What then? Have I made you my enemies by telling the truth?'
meaning of the first clause there can be but little doubt; ‘Free yourself from the bondage of ordinances, as I am free.’ Of the second two interpretations deserve to be considered; (1) ‘For I was once in bondage as ye are now,’ i.e. καί ἐγὼ ἡμῖν ἱουδαίος ἀν ὑμῖν ἐγὼ ἱουδαίης. So Eusebius (of Emesa?), Chrysostom, Jerome, and apparently Pseudo-Justin Orat. ad Graec. § 5; see p. 60 note 1: (2) ‘For I abandoned my legal ground of righteousness, I became a Gentile like you,’ i.e. καί ἐγὼ ἔγονόμην Ἐλλην ἦς ἡμῖν ἔγερσε Ἐλληνες; comp. ii. 17, 1 Cor. ix. 21. This latter sense is simpler grammatically, as it understands the same verb which occurs in the former clause, ἐγονόμην, not ἡμῖν. It is also more in character with the intense personal feeling which pervades the passage. The words so taken involve an appeal to the affection and gratitude of the Galatians; ‘I gave up all those time-honoured customs, all those dear associations of race, to become like you. I have lived as a Gentile that I might preach to you Gentiles. Will you then abandon me when I have abandoned all for you?’ This sense is well adapted both to the tender appeal ‘brethren, I beseech you,’ and to the eager explanation which follows ‘ye did me no wrong.’ For the expression compare Thucyd. vi. 102 αὐτῶν ὑπὸ ὑμῶν κύκλων [αὐτῶν] Νικίας διεκάλυσεν ἐπιπλαχγέον ἐν αὐτῶ δὴ ἀσθενείαν ὑπολευκαμένος. Alluding to this afterwards in an impassioned appeal, Nicias might well have said, δὲ ἀσθενείας ἐστασα τὸν κύκλων. At all events this is the only rendering of the words which the grammar admits. No instance has been produced, until a much later date, which would at all justify our explaining υπὸ ὑμῶν as if it were υπὸ ὑμῖν or ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ, as is frequently done. The ambiguity of the Latin ‘per infirmitatem’ gave the Latin fathers a license of interpretation which the original does not allow: Jerome however recognises the proper meaning of the preposition, though wrongly explaining it ‘propter infirmitatem carnis vestrae.’ Of the Greek fathers, Chrysost., Theodoret, and Theod. Mops., slur over the preposition, interpreting the passage however in a way more consonant with the sense ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ. Photius (i.e. Oecum.) is the first, so far as I have noticed, who boldly gives the ungrammatical rendering μετὰ ἀσθενειάς.

13. οὖδέν με ἣδηκοστητ] To these words two different meanings have been assigned; (1) ‘Ye never disobeyed me before; do not disobey me now’: (2) ‘I have no personal ground of complaint.’ The latter seems better adapted to the context. Possibly however the real explanation is hidden under some unknown circumstances to which St Paul alludes; see below on δὲ ἀσθενείας.

14. τὸ ἀσθενείαν τῆς σαρκός... τό πρότερον] ‘on the contrary ye know.’
IV. 15]

THEPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 175

ἐθνησάτε οὐδὲ ἔξεπτύσάτε, ἀλλὰ ὡς ἄγγελον Θεοῦ ἐδέξασθε με, ὡς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 15ποῦ οὖν ὁ μακαρισ-

15. τις οὖν ὁ μακαρισμός.

two visits? Τὸ πρῶτον, which derives a certain emphasis from the article, cannot be simply equivalent to πάλαι, 'some time ago.' It may mean either (1) 'formerly,' with a direct and emphatic reference to some later point of time; comp. Joh. vi. 62, ix. 8, i. Tim. i. 13, or (2) 'on the for-ermer of two occasions.' In the present passage it is difficult to explain the emphasis, if we assign the first of these two meanings to it, so that we to have to fall back upon the second as the probable interpretation. The expression therefore seems to justify the assumption of two visits to Galatia before this letter was written; see pp.
25, 41.

14. τὸν πεπαραγὸν υἱὸν κ.τ.λ.] 'your temptation which was in my flesh,' i.e. St Paul's bodily ailment, which was a trial to the Galatians and which might have led them to reject his preaching. Πεπαραγός, like the corresponding English word 'temptation,' is employed here by a laxity of usage common in all languages for 'the thing which tempts or tries.' On this concrete sense of substantives in -μός, see 11. The apparent harshness of the expression here, 'your temptation ye did not despise nor loathe,' is explained and in some degree relieved by the position of τὸν πεπαραγόν υἱῶν at the beginning of the sentence.
These words are used without a distinct anticipation of what is to follow, the particular sense of the verb to be employed being yet undecided and only suggested afterwards, as the sentence runs on, by the concrete sense which the intervening words ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου have given to πεπαραγόν.

For υἱῶν some texts have μου τὸν, the received reading, others simply τὸν. Considering however that the weight of authority is strongly in favour of υἱῶν (see below, p. 186, note 1) and that the transcribers were under every temptation to soften a harsh and at first sight unintelligible phrase
by altering or omitting the pronoun, this reading ought certainly to be retained. On the other hand, supposing μου to be the original reading, some have accounted for the variation υἱῶν (Reiche, Comm. Crit. ii. p. 54)
by supposing that it was substituted by some scribe who was jealous for the honour of St Paul: but an emendation, which introduced so much confusion in the sense, was not likely to be made. As for τὸν, it seems to be merely the insertion of a classicist.

οὐκ ἔσυνενσάτε οὐδὲ ἔστυσατε

'ye did not treat with contemptuous indifference or with active loathing.'
As ἐστυσαῖν is more usual than ἐττύσαῖν in this metaphorical sense, the latter seems to be preferred here for the sake of the alliteration.

15. ποῦ οὖν ὁ μακαρισμός υἱῶν;]
The reading of the received text differs from this in two points: (1) It inserts ἑν after οὖν. This is certainly to be omitted, as very deficient in authority and perhaps also as giving a wrong sense to the passage. (2) It reads τις for τὸν. On this point there is more difficulty. The weight of direct evidence is certainly in favour of τὸν, but on the other hand it is more probable that τὸν should have been subtituted for τις than conversely; especially as several Greek commentators (Theod. Mops., Theodoret, Severianus) who read τις explain it by τὸν.

If the reading τις be adopted, the choice seems to lie between two out of many interpretations which have been proposed: (1) 'How hollow, how meaningless was your rejoicing' (understanding ἑν); (2) 'What has become of your rejoicing? where has it vanished? (understanding ἐστίν). In the latter sense it would coincide in meaning with τοῦ ὁδὸν ὁ μακαρισμὸς, which can only be taken in one way. This interpretation seems more natural than the former.

ὁ μακαρισμὸς ὑμῶν] 'your felicitation of yourselves,' 'your happiness in my teaching,' as the sense seems to require. ὑμῶν is probably the subjective genitive, though the Galatians were at the same time also the object of the μακαρισμὸς. Others understand by these words either their felicitation of St Paul, or his felicitation of them, but neither of these meanings is so appropriate to the context; not the former,
because the word μακαρισμὸς would ill express their welcoming of him;
not the latter, for St Paul is dwelling on the change of feeling which they themselves had undergone. For μακαρισμὸς, 'beatitudo,' see Rom. iv. 6, 9, and Clem. Rom. § 50.

μαρτυρῶν] 'I bear witness,' see the note on 1 Thess. ii. 12.

ἐὰν δυνατὸν κ.τ.λ.] 'if it had been possible, if you could have benefited me thereby, you would have plucked out your very eyes, would have given me that which is most precious to you.' For καὶ τοῦ ὁφθαλμοῦ compare the Old Testament phrase to 'keep as the apple of one's eye' (e.g.
Ps. xvii. 8), and the references in Wetstein. See below, p. 191, note.

ἐδόκατε] 'ye had given.' The suppression of the condition expresses more vividly their readiness; see Winier § xii. p. 321. The insertion of ἢ in the received text enforces the sense.

16. ὅποτε] 'therefore' ought naturally to be followed by a direct assertion; but shunning this conclusion and hoping against hope, the Apostle substitutes an interrogative; 'Can it be that I have become your enemy?'

ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν] 'your enemy.' It was a term by which the Judaizers of a later age, and perhaps even at this time, designated St Paul; Clem. Hom.
Ep. Petr. § 2 τοῦ ἐχθροῦ ἀνδρόπου ἀνομῶν τινα καὶ φλεαράδη προσηκάμενοι διδασκαλίαν, Clem. Recogn. i. 70:
see p. 61. This quotation suggests that ἀνομος was another of these hostile names which he is parrying in 1
Cor. ix. 21 μὴ ἄνομος Θεοῦ.

ἀληθεύων] probably referring to some warnings given during his second visit. See the introduction
p. 25. Compare the proverb, Ter.
Andr. i. 1. 41, 'obsequium amicos, veritas odium parit.'

17. From speaking of the former interchange of affection between himself and his Galatian converts, he goes on to contrast their relations with the false teachers: 'I once held the first place in your hearts. Now you look upon me as an enemy. Others have supplanted me. Only enquire into their aims. True, they pay court to you: but how hollow, how insincere is their interest in you! Their desire is to shut you out from Christ. Thus you will be driven to pay court to them.'

Ζηλοῦσίν] 'they pay court to.' As ζηλοῦν would seem to have one and the same sense throughout this pas­ tage, its more ordinary meanings with the accusative, as 'to admire, emulate, envy,' must be discarded. It signifies rather 'to busy oneself about, take interest in,' a sense which lies close to the original meaning of ζῆλος, if correctly derived from ζῆλος. See 2 Cor.
xi. 2. ζῆλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς Θεοῦ ζῆλος: so also Plut. Mor. p. 448 οὐτοὶ χρείας τὸ πρῶτον ἐποίησα καὶ ζηλοῦσιν, ὑστερον δὲ
IV. 18, 19] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 177

καλῶς, ἀλλὰ ἐκκλείσαι úμᾶς θέλουσιν, ἵνα αὐτοῦς ξηλοῦτε. 16 καλὸν δὲ ξηλοῦσθαι εν καλῷ πάντοτε, καὶ μὴ μόνον εν τῷ παρεῖναι με πρὸς úμᾶς, 19 τεκνία μου, υὐς

19. τεκνία μου.

καὶ φιλοῦσιν: 1 Cor. xii. 31, xiv. 1, 39, Ezek. xxxix. 25.

ἀλλὰ] is connected not with ξηλοῦσιν, but with οὐ καλῶς: comp. Λεσχ. Eum. 458 ἐφόβους οὗτος οὐ καλῶς, μολὼν ἐσεικὼν, ἀλλὰ μὴν κελαφόρον εἰμὶ μὴτέρα κατέκτα.

ἐκκλείσαι úμᾶς ἵνα, 'to exclude, to debar you.' If it is asked 'from what?', the reply is to be sought in the tendency of the false teaching. By insisting on ceremonial observances, they were in fact shutting out the Galatians from Christ. The idea is the same as in v. 4 ἀλλὰ κελαφόρον ἐμὴ μὴ τέταρα κατέκτα. The reading ἵμας, though it gives a good sense, is almost destitute of authority.

ινα αὐτοῖς ξηλοῦσθε] 'that, having no refuge elsewhere, you may pay court to them.' For the present indicative after ινα comp. 1 Cor. iv. 6 ινα μὴ φυσικά: a usage quite unclassical, but often found in later writers; see Winer § xli. p. 362. The future indicative with ινα is comparatively common, as e.g. ii. 4. The attempt to give ινα with the indicative a local sense (quo in statu), as opposed to a final (e.g. Fritzsche on Matth. p. 836 sq), may mislead, as seeming to assume that there is an essential difference between the local and the final ινα. The final sense is derived from the local, the relation of cause and effect in all languages being expressed by words originally denoting relations in space. Thus the difference of meaning between ινα ποιήτεται and ινα ποιήστη is not in the adverb, which is of constant value, but in the moods.

ξηλοῦσθε δὲ τὰ κρείττον χαράματα is interpolated here in many copies from 1 Cor. xii. 31; comp. iii. 1, note.

18. καλὸν δὲ ξηλοῦσθαι κ.τ.λ.] The number of possible explanations is limited by two considerations: (1) That ξηλοῦσθαι must have the same sense as in the preceding verse, a paronomasia, though frequent in St Paul, being out of place here: (2) That ξηλοῦσθαι must be passive and not middle; a transitive sense of ξηλοῦσθαι, even if it were supported by usage elsewhere, being inexplicable here in the immediate neighbourhood of the active ξηλοῦν.

With these limitations only two interpretations present themselves, which deserve to be considered. First: 'I do not grudge the court which is paid to you. I do not desire a monopoly of serving you. It is well that in my absence your interests should be looked after by others. Only let them do it in a honourable cause.' Secondly: 'I do not complain that they desire your attentions, or you theirs. These things are good in themselves. I myself am not insensible to such attachments. I remember how warm were your feelings towards me, when I was with you. I would they had not grown cold in my absence.' The difference between the two consists mainly in the turn given to μὴ μόνον εν τῷ παρεῖναι με. The objection to the latter sense is, that it supplies too much. But this abrupt and fragmentary mode of expression is characteristic of St Paul when he is deeply moved: and this interpretation suits the general context so much better—especially the tender appeal which immediately follows, 'my little children'—that it is to be preferred to the other.

The reading ζηλοῦσθε, found in the two best mss, is in itself but another of writing the infinitive ἐξομολογοῦμαι, the sounds ε and α being the same. It was however liable to be mistaken for an imperative, and is so translated in the Vulgate.

19. This verse should be taken with the preceding and the punctuation regulated accordingly. It is difficult to explain ἵνα, ver. 20, if ἵνα μένῃ be made the beginning of a new sentence. The connexion of thought seems to be as follows: 'I have a right to ask for constancy in your affections. I have a greater claim on you than these new teachers. They speak but as strangers to strangers; I as a mother to her children with whom she has travailed.' Comp. I Cor. iv. 14, 'Though ye have ten thousand tutors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers.'

τεκνία μον] 'my little children,' a mode of address common in St John, but not found elsewhere in St Paul. This however is no argument for the reading τέκνα in preference to τεκνία, for St Paul does not elsewhere use the vocatives τέκνα, τέκνην, except in Ephes. vi. i, Col. iii. 20, where he could not possibly have had τεκνία, and in 1 Tim. i. 18, 2 Tim. ii. i, where τεκνίον would have been inappropriate. Here the diminutive, expressing both the tenderness of the Apostle and the feebleness of his converts, is more forcible. It is a term at once of affection and rebuke. The reading τεκνα however is very highly supported and may perhaps be correct.

πάλιν οὖν ἦθελον δὲ παρείναι πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἀρτί καὶ ἀλλαξαί τὴν φωνήν μου, ὅτι ἀποροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν.

μορφῳ ἐν ὑμῖν] i.e. 'until you have taken the form of Christ,' as the embryo develops into the child. Compare the similar expression of 'growing up into the full stature of Christ,' Ephes. iv. 13. The words μορφῳ ἐν ὑμῖν have been otherwise explained as a different application of the former metaphor, the Apostle's converts being put no longer in the place of the child, but of the mother. Such inversions of a metaphor are characteristic of St Paul (see the notes 1 Thess. ii. 7, v. 4), but here the explanation is improbable. St Paul would have shrunk instinctively from describing the relation of Christ to the believer by that of the unborn child to its mother, thereby suggesting, however indirectly, the idea of subordination.

For an elaborate application of the metaphor in the text see the Epistle of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons, Euseb. v. i §§ 40, 41, especially the ἱερός ἱεροσόλυμον ἀνακληστὶον καὶ ἀνεκβιώκτων κ.τ.λ.

20. ἦθελον δὲ κ.τ.λ.] 'but, speaking of my presence, I would I had been present with you now.' The δὲ catches up the passing thought of παρείναι (v. 18), before it escapes; comp. 1 Cor. i. 16 διάπτωσα δὲ καὶ τὸν Στεφάνα οἶκον. The connexion of this clause with the previous παρείναι requires that the sentence should be continuous, and that there should be no full stop after πρὸς ὑμᾶς (ver. 18); see the note on ver. 19. All other explanations seem harsh. Δὲ has been connected for instance with the vocative, but there is here no abrupt transition from one person to another, which alone would justify such an expression as τεκνία μον, ἦθελον δὲ.

ἲθελον ας ὑπέχην Rom. ix. 3, ἐδοξωλάμην Acts xxv. 22. The thing is spoken of in itself, prior to and independently of any conditions which might affect its possibility; see Winer § xii. p. 352, and the note Philem. 13.

21. αὔτομοι ἐν ὑμῖν] 'I am perplexed about you, I am at a loss how to deal with you': comp. 2 Cor. vii. 16 ἀπροσπήδητον περάμενον. The idea of inward questioning is expressed more strongly by ἀπορείσθαι than by ἀπορεῖν. It is probably a middle rather than a passive; though ἀπορεῖν is found as a transitive verb in Clem. Hom. i. 11 ἀπορεῖν αὐτὸν περάμενον ὡς βασιλέαν τινα δαμοσκόν, if the text be not corrupt.

22. γραπταὶ] 'it is stated in the scriptures,' introducing a general reference, and not a direct quotation; as in 1 Cor. xv. 45. See Genesis xi. xxx. τῆς παιδικῆς 'the bondmaid'; comp. Gen. xvi. ἡ δὲ αὐτῆς παιδικῆ Ἀιγυπτία, ἡ δεσμή Αγαρ. The word seems to have exclusively the sense of a servant in the New Testament and later Greek; not so in classical writers. See Lobeck Phrym. p. 239 παιδίκη τοῦτο ἐπὶ τῆς θεραπαινής οἱ νῦν τιθέασι, οἱ δ’ ἄρχαν ἐπὶ τῆς νεάνιδος.
23. ἀλλʼ 'but,' i.e. although sons of the same father. The opposition implied in ἀλλʼ is illustrated by Rom. ix. 7 οὐδεὶς ὁτι εἰσίν ἑπόμενα ἀδελφάς, πάντες τέκνα, and ix. 10 ἐξ ἐνὸς κόσμου ἔχουσα.

κατά σάρκα] i.e. 'in the common course of nature.' In some sense Ishmael was also a child of promise (Gen. xvi. 10), but in his case the course of nature was not suspended, as the promise was made after his conception. It must be remembered however that in his choice of words here St Paul regards not only the original history, but the typical application, the Jews being the children of Abraham after the flesh, the Christians his children by the promise.

24. τίμιον] the perfect, 'is recorded as born,' 'is born, as we read': comp. 1 Tim. ii 14 ἐὰν γυνὴ ἐξαναγήθησα ἐν παραβάσει γέγονεν.

ἀλληγορούμενα] The word has two senses: (1) 'To speak in an allegory,' e.g. Joseph. Ant. procvm. 4 τὰ μὲν αἰνιγμοῦντο τοῦ νοοῦτον δεξίως τὰ δὲ ἀλληγοροῦντο κτλ.; (2) 'To treat or interpret as an allegory,' e.g. Philo de Vit. Cont. § 3, π. 475 έπιχειροῦτο γὰρ τοῖς ἱεροῖς γράμμασι φιλοσοφοῦσι τὴν πάτριον φιλοσοφίαν ἀλληγοροῦσι, ἐπειδὴ σύμβολα τὰ τῆς ρήτης ἐρμηνείας νομίζουσι φύσεως ἀποκεκρυμμένης ἐν ὑποκουίᾳ δηλωμένης, Clem. Hom. vi. 18, 20, and frequently: comp. Plut. Op. Mor. p. 363 δ ὁστερ' Ἑλληνες Κρόνον ἀλληγοροῦσι τὸν Χρόνον κτλ. It is possible that St Paul uses the word in this latter sense, referring to some recognised mode of interpretation. Comp. the note on συναστοιχεῖ ver. 25, and see the remarks p. 198.

St Paul uses ἀλληγορία here much in the same sense as he uses τοῦτοι 1 Cor. x. 11 αὐτὰ δὲ τυπικῶς συνεβαίνει, not denying the historical truth of the narrative, but superposing a secondary meaning. By a stricter definition ἀλληγορία and τῶτοι were distinguished as denoting the former a fictitious, the latter a true narrative. See the definition of ἀλληγορία, Herod. Alleg. Hom. 5 ὁ ἄλλα μὲν γύροις τρόποις ἔτηρ δὲ δὲν λέγει σημαίνον. Hence the jealousy of the Antiochene fathers (Chrysostom, Severianus, Theod. Mops.) in explaining that St Paul uses the word καταρχηστικῶς here and does not deny the historical truth of the narrative.

The author of the Clem. Hom. (ii. 22) indirectly attacks this allegory: see the introduction, p. 61.

ἀπὸ μὲν] 'one of them, which was given from Mount Sinai, bearing children unto bondage.' The true antithesis would have been ἔτηρ δὲ, but it melts away in the general fusion of the sentence, vv. 25, 26. For γεννάσα used of a mother, see Luke i. 13: it occurs so in Xen. de Rep. Lac. i. 3, and occasionally elsewhere, especially in later writers.

ὃν γὰρ κτλ.] 'for these women are (represent) two covenants.' Εἰσεὶ 'are' not actually, but mystically or typically: Matt. xiii. 39, xxvi. 26—28, 1 Cor. x. 4. The article before δίο must be omitted.
descended from Hagar. The stress lies on ἰν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ, not on ὅρος, which is unemphatic; or perhaps we should render the words, 'Mount Sinai is in Arabia' (comp. Athan. de Decr. 7, 1. p. 168, for τῷ Σινᾶ ὅροι), as this gives a better sense. The Arabians are called 'sons of Hagar,' Baruch iii. 23: see Ewald Gesch. des V. Isr. 1. p. 418. St Paul's language here is further illustrated by the prominence given to Hagar in the national legends of the Arabs, where she is represented as the lawful wife of Abraham: see d'Herbelot Bibl. Or. s. v. Hagar. The word is preserved also in the name of several Arab tribes, e.g. the Hagarenes or Hagarites of the Old Testament (Ps. lxxiii. 6, Ἰάγαριται, Ἀγαρνοῦ; and 1 Chron. v. 19, Ἰάγαροι, Ἀγαραῖοι, comp. ver. 10), and the Ἀγαραῖος of heathen writers (Eratosth. in Strabo xvi. p. 767), if these be not the same. A place on the Persian gulf is still so called. It is to the Sinaitic peninsula apparently that Hagar flees (Gen. xvi. 7, 14), and possibly some portion of it may have borne her name in St Paul's time; see below, p. 197.

The clause τὸ γὰρ Σινᾶ κ.τ.λ. is parenthetical, and the nominative to συν­στοιχεῖ is μία διαθήκη.

For the various readings in this passage and for different interpretations of the word 'Hagar,' see the detached notes p. 192 sq.

συνστοιχεῖ] 'answers to'; literally, 'belongs to the same row or column with.' In military language συνστοιχία denotes a file, as συλλογία does a rank of soldiers; comp. Polyb. x. 21. 7. The use of this word here is best illustrated by the Pythagorean συνστοιχία of opposing principles (Arist. Eth. N. i. 6, Metaph. i. 5), which stood thus;

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Good,</th>
<th>Bad,</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Finite,</td>
<td>Infinite,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>One,</td>
<td>Many,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permanent,</td>
<td>Changing,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>etc.</td>
<td>etc.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Similar also were the συνστοιχία of grammarians, who so arranged the letters of the alphabet according to the organs of speech (comp. Athen. xi. p. 501 b), or the words derived from the same root according to the ending (Arist. Rhet. i. 7, Top. ii. 9). The allegory in the text then may be represented by συνστοιχία thus:

Hagar, the bondwoman. Sarah, the freewoman.
Ishmael, the child after the flesh. Isaac, the child of promise.
The old covenant. The new covenant.
The earthly Jerusalem. The heavenly Jerusalem.

The old covenant is thus συνστοιχία with the earthly Jerusalem, but ἰν συνστοιχία to the heavenly. It is not improbable that St Paul is alluding to some mode of representation common with Jewish teachers to exhibit this and similar allegories. Strangely enough the fathers with but few exceptions translate συνστοιχεῖ 'borders upon,' 'is contiguous to,' which is scarcely true even in the most forced sense of contiguity.

τῇ νῦν Ἰερουσαλήμ] The metropolis of the Jews is taken to represent the whole race.

δουλεύει γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] 'is in spiritual bondage with her children,' just as Hagar was in social bondage with her child Ishmael. For τῶν τεκνῶν αὐτῆς see Matt. xxiii. 37.

26. ἦν ἄκρο Ἰερουσαλήμ] St Paul here uses an expression familiar to rabbinical teachers, but detaches it from metà tòn tèknon autòs: 26 hè dé ánò 'Ierousalìm, èleutèra èstìn, òtis èstìn mútpir òmòn. 27γέγραπται γάρ, εγράφη ἡ οὖ τικτογῳά, ἡ ἡξὼν καὶ βοήσων those sensuous and material conceptions with which they invested it. See the treatise de Hieros. Coelest. in Schöttgen's Hor. Hebr. i. p. 1205. With them it is an actual city, the exact counterpart of the earthly Jerusalem in its topography and its furniture: with him it is a symbol or image, representing that spiritual city of which the Christian is even now a denizen (Phil. iii. 20). See Heb. xii. 22 'Ierousalìm ἑπορόνως, Rev. iii. 12 καὶ 'Ierousalìm, xxi. 2 ἀγία 'Ierousalìm: comp. Test. xii. Patr. Dan 5, Clem. Rec. i. 51. The contrast between the two scenes, as they appeared to the eye, would enhance, if it did not suggest, the imagery of St Paul here. On the one hand, Mount Sion, of old the joy of the whole earth, now more beautiful than ever in the fresh glories of the Herodian renaissance, glittering in gold and marble (Joseph. B. J. v. 5. 6); on the other, Sinai with its rugged peaks and barren sides, bleak and desolate, the oppressive power of which the Apostle himself had felt during his sojourn there (see p. 89)—these scenes fitly represented the contrast between the glorious hopes of the new covenant and the blank despair of the old. Coump. Heb. xii. 18—22.

The Apostle instinctively prefers the Hebrew form 'Ierousalìm here for the typical city, as elsewhere in this epistle (i. 17, 18; ii. 1) he employs the Graecised form 'Ierousalìm for the actual city. 'Ierousalìm est appellatio Hebraica, originaria et sanctior: 'Ierousalìm, deinceps obvia, Graeca, magis politica,' says Bengel on Rev. xxi. 2, accounting for the usage of St John ('in evangelio 'Ierousalìm, in apocalypsi 'Ierousalìm'), and referring to this passage in illustration. In his other epistles St Paul has always 'Ierousalìm; Rom. xv. 19, 25, 26, 31, i Cor. xvi. 3.

μήτηρ òmòn] 'the mother of us Christians.' St Paul's expression was borrowed and adapted by Polycarp § 3 ὑμίν πίστιν ὑπὲρ ἑτών μήτηρ πάντων ἰδιῶν. From a confusion of this loose quotation with the original text, the word πάντων was early interpolated in St Paul; e.g. in Iren. (interp.) v. 35. 2. This at all events is not an improbable account of the origin of the received reading πάντων; or perhaps πάντων crept in from Rom. iv. 16 δ' ἐστιν πάντων ἰδιῶν.

27. St Paul here illustrates the allegory by reference to a passage in Isaiah liv. 1. This passage in its context is a song of triumph anticipating the deliverance of God's afflicted people Israel from a foreign yoke. Sion has been deserted by her Lord (xlix. 14), and is mourning in her widowhood: she will be restored to favour and become the mother of a large and prosperous people. The image of conjugal union, as representing the relation of Jehovah to His people, is drawn out at some length in the context, see esp. liv. 5, 6. In order moreover fully to understand St Paul's application here, it must be remembered that in another part of the same prophecy (li. 2) God's dealings with Abraham and Sarah are pointed to as a type of His dealings with their descendants. Accordingly Jewish writers connected li. 2 with liv. 1; 'Sterilitas Abrahamae et Sarae figura fuit sterilitatis Sion,' Ir Gibborim fol. 49. 2, quoted in Schöttgen. Here then Sarah — the chosen people — the Church of Christ.

γέγραπται γάρ] from the LXX where some few texts add καὶ τέμπους after βοήσων with the Hebrew. It is quoted as St Paul quotes it in Pseudo-Clem.
28. Ἰσαὰκ ἔπαγγελιας τέκνα ἐστέ. 29. ἄλλος... τέκνα ἐστέν.

Epist. ii. § 2, and Justin, Apol. i. c. 53, p. 88 c, and similarly applied. On the coincidence of Justin's quotations with St Paul's see p. 60, and the notes iii. 10, 13; comp. Semisch Just. Mart. i. p. 258 sq (Eng. Tr.). The Hebrew differs somewhat, as do the other Greek versions (see Jerome and Procopius in Is. l. c.). ἡμεῖς δὲ resuming the main subject, ver. 27 being in a manner parenthetical.

κατὰ Ἰσαὰκ] See Rom. ix. 7—9. The Gentiles were sprung from one 'as good as dead': they had no claims of race or descent. Thus they were sons not κατὰ σάρκα, but, like Isaac, εἶς ἐπαγγελίας.

The reading ἡμεῖς...ἐσμέν, for ἡμεῖς...ἐστί, is very highly supported, but perhaps was a transcriber's correction to conform to ver. 26, 31. The direct appeal of ἡμεῖς is more forcible, and the change of person is characteristic of St Paul; see the note ver. 7.

29. ἐδιδόκειν τὸν κ.τ.λ.] The Hebrew text, Gen. xxii. 9, has simply 'laughing' (יוּנָּה). This single word the LXX expands into ἀλλοῦ ἐκ τοῦ ζωοῦ αὐτῆς. From this it may be conjectured that the verse originally ended [יוּנָּה] pmo (comp. Gen. xxxix. 14, 17), the words in brackets having dropped out owing to the homreoteleuton. At all events the word seems to mean 'mocking, jeering'; 'Lusio illa illius erat,' says Augustine pertinently (Serm. 3). The anger of Sarah, taken in connexion with the occasion, a festival in honour of the weaning of Isaac, seems to require it. Such also would appear to be the force of the rendering in the older Targum, יִרְבָּא. On the other hand the Book of Jubilees paraphrases the passage, 'When Sarah saw that Ishmael was merry and danced and that Abraham also rejoiced greatly thereat, she was jealous etc.' (Ewald's
EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. [IV. 30

But beyond the text itself two circumstances must be taken into account as affecting St Paul's application of it. (1) This incident which is so lightly sketched in the original narrative had been drawn out in detail in later traditions, and thus a prominence was given to it, which would add force to the Apostle's allusion, without his endorsing these traditions himself. For the rabbinical accounts of Ishmael's insolence to his brother see Beer Leben Abraham's, pp. 49, 170. (2) The relations between the two brothers were reproduced in their descendants. The aggressions of the Arab tribes (of the Hagarenes especially, see Ps. lxxxiii. 6, 1 Chron. v. 10, 19) on the Israelites were the antitype to Ishmael's mockery of Isaac. Thus in Ishmael the Apostle may have indirectly contemplated Ishmael's progeny; and he would therefore be appealing to the national history of the Jews in saying 'he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit.' For the conflicts with the Arabs in the time of Herod see esp. Joseph. Ant. xv. 5. 1.

\[οὐδὲς καὶ νῦν\] 'So now the Church of God is persecuted by the children after the flesh.' St Paul's persecutors were at first Jews, afterwards Judaizers; but both alike were 'born after the flesh,' for both alike claimed to inherit the covenant by the performance of certain material carnal ordinances.

\[ἡ γραφή\] Gen. xxi. 10, taken from the LXX which again is a close translation of the Hebrew. At the end of the quotation however St Paul has substituted \[τῆς πατέρας μετὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ τῆς αὐλοθήσας \] for the LXX \[τῆς πατέρας ταύτης μετὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ μου Ἰσαὰκ,\] in order to adapt it to his own context and to save explanation. For instances of adapted quotations, which are frequent, see iii. 10 and Acts vii. 43.

The words are spoken by Sarah to Abraham, but her demand is confirmed by the express command of God, Gen. xxi. 12, 'Hearken unto her voice,' to which the later Targum adds, 'for she is a prophetess.'

\[οὐ μὴ κληρονομήσῃ\] 'shall in no wise inherit'; comp. Joh. viii. 35 ὁ διὸς οὐ μένει ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα κ.τ.λ. The Law and the Gospel cannot co-exist; the Law must disappear before the Gospel. It is scarcely possible to estimate the strength of conviction and depth of prophetic insight which this declaration implies. The Apostle thus confidently sounds the death-knell of Judaism at a time when one-half of Christendom clung to the Mosaic law with a jealous affection little short of frenzy, and while the Judaic party seemed to be growing in influence and was strong enough, even in the Gentile churches of his own founding, to undermine his influence and endanger his life. The truth which to us appears a truism must then have been regarded as a paradox.
IV. 31, V. 1] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

γίορ τις ἐλευθέρας. 3ντις, ἀδελφόι, οὐκ ἐσμὲν παιδίσκης τέκνα, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἐλευθέρας [V] τῆς ἐλευθέρας ἡ ἡμᾶς Χριστὸς ἡ ἐλευθέρωσεν. στήκετε οὐν καὶ μὴ πάλιν ζυγὸ δουλεῖας ἐνέχεσθε.

iv. 31, v. 1. τῆς ἐλευθέρας. τῆς ἐλευθέρας ἡμᾶς κ.τ.λ.

ἡμεῖς δέ, others ἡμεῖς οὖν, others ἀπα or ἀπά οὖν, and one at least entirely omits the connecting particle. The difficulty in δό was evidently felt, but sufficient allowance was not made for St Paul’s freedom in the employment of connecting particles.

οὐ παιδίσκης ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ.] Observe the omission of the article before παιδίσκης; ‘not of any bondwoman’ whether Judaism or some form of heathenism, for there are many (see the note iv. 11), ‘but of the freewoman, the lawful spouse, the Church of Christ, which is one.’ See on i. 10 ἀνθρώ­ pous πείθω ἡ τοῦ Θεοῦ;

V. 1. τῆς ἐλευθέρας [κ.τ.λ.] If this reading be adopted (see the detached note, p. 200), the words are best taken with the preceding sentence. They may then be connected either (1) with τέκνα ἐσμὲν τῆς ἐλευθέρας, ‘we are sons of the free by virtue of the freedom which Christ has given us’; or (2) with τῆς ἐλευθέρας alone, ‘of her who is free with that freedom which Christ etc.’ The latter is perhaps the simpler construction. In either case τῆς ἐλευθέρας κ.τ.λ. serves the purpose of an explanatory note.

If on the other hand we read τῆς ἐλευθέρας ἡμᾶς Χριστὸς ἡ ἐλευθέρωσεν, the force of this detached sentence will be, ‘Did Christ liberate us that we might be slaves? no, but that we might be free.’ Compare v. 13 ἐπ’ ἐλευθερία ἐκλήθητε, and especially John viii. 36 ἐὰν οὖν ὁ υἱὸς ἡμᾶς ἐλευθερώσῃ, οὖν ἐλευθεροῖ ἐστείθε. The abrupt­ness of the sentence, introduced without a connecting particle, has a fair parallel in Ephes. ii. 5 χάριτι ἐστε σωσιμένοι: but the dative, ‘with’ or ‘in’ or ‘for freedom,’ is awkward, in whatever way it is taken; see A. Butt­

mann p. 155.

στήκετε] ‘stand firm, stand up­right, do not bow your necks to the yoke of slavery’; comp. 2 Thess. ii. 15 ἀπα οὖν, ἀδελφοί, στήκετε κ.τ.λ. The form στήκετε appears not to occur earlier than the New Testament, where with two exceptions (Mark iii. 31, xi. 25) it is found only in St Paul.

πάλιν] ‘again.’ Having escaped from the slavery of Heathenism, they would fain bow to the slavery of Judaimism. Compare the similar expres­sions iv. 9 πῶς ἐπιστρέφετε πάλιν, πά­ λιν ἀνωθέν δουλεύειν δέλτετε. For the force of these expressions see the introduction, p. 30, and the note on iv. 11.

In the Second Epistle to the Corinthians (xii. 7) St Paul, after speaking of the abundant revelations vouchsafed to him, adds that 'a thorn' or rather 'a stake' was 'given him in his flesh, a messenger of Satan sent to buffet him,' and thus to check the growth of spiritual pride. In the Epistle to the Galatians again (iv. 13, 14) he reminds his converts how he had 'preached to them through infirmity of the flesh,' commending them at the same time because they 'did not despise nor loathe their temptation in his flesh, but received him as an angel of God, as Christ Jesus.'

In the latter passage there is a variation of reading, which has some bearing on the interpretation. For 'my temptation,' which stands in the received text, the correct reading seems certainly to be 'your temptation,' as I have quoted it.

These passages so closely resemble each other that it is not unnatural to suppose the allusion to be the same in both. If so, the subject seems to have been especially present to St Paul's thoughts at the season when these two epistles were written; for they were written about the same time.

What then was this 'stake in the flesh,' this 'infirmity of the flesh,' which made so deep an impression on his mind?

Diverse answers have been given to this question, shaped in many instances by the circumstances of the interpreters themselves, who saw in the Apostle's temptation a more or less perfect reflexion of the trials which beset their own lives. How far such subjective feelings have influenced the progress of interpretation, will appear from the following list of conjectures, which I have thrown into a rough chronological order.

1. A bodily complaint (tradition). It was some bodily ailment. This, which is the natural account of the incident, is also the first in point of time. A very early tradition defined the complaint; 'per dolorem, ut aiunt, auriculae vel capitis,' says Tertullian de Pudic. § 13. And this statement is copied or confirmed by Jerome (Gal. l. c.), 'Tradunt eum gravissimum capitis dolorem saepe perpessum.' The headache is mentioned also by Pelagius and Primasius (both

2 Of the three readings, τὸν πειρασμῶν μου τὸν ἐν, τὸν πειρασμῶν τὸν ἐν (omitting μου), and τὸν πειρασμῶν ὑμῶν ἐν (omitting τὸν), I have no hesitation in preferring the last; for (1) it is the most difficult of the three; (2) it accounts for the remaining two (see the note on the passage); and (3) it has far higher support than the others in the ancient copies. The Thebaic Version reads τὸν πειρασμῶν μου, as I have ascertained (see Scrivener's Introduction, p. 351, ed. 2). Eusebius of Emesa here (Cramer’s Catena, p. 65) and Origen on Ephes. iii. 14 (Cramer’s Catena, p. 158) have a mixed reading τὸν πειρασμῶν ὑμῶν τὸν ἐν κ.τ.λ. Eusebius is overlooked by Tischendorf.

2 A long list of references to writers who have discussed this question is given in Wolf Cur. Philoi. on 2 Cor. xii. 7. I have to acknowledge my obligations chiefly to Calov. Bibl. Illustr. on 2 Cor. l. c., and Stanley's Corinthians, p. 563 sq (2nd ed.). I have had no opportunity of using Bertholdt Opusc. 134 sq, to which I find frequent references in recent commentaries. on 2 Cor. l. c.). Others seem to have followed a different tradition as to the complaint in question 1; but in some form or other illness was the solution which suggested itself to the earliest writers. This appears to be the idea of Irenæus, the first writer who alludes to the subject, and of Victorinus, the first extant commentator on the Epistle to the Galatians 2.

2. 'Nay, not so,' argued Chrysostom (2 Cor., Gal.), as others probably ii. Persecution (Greek fathers). had argued before him; 'it cannot have been a headache, it cannot have been any physical malady. God would not have delivered over the body of His chosen servant to the power of the devil to be tortured in this way. The Apostle is surely speaking of opposition encountered, of suffering endured from his enemies.' And so for a time, and with a certain class of expositors, the thorn in the flesh assumed the form of persecution, whether from the direct opponents of the Gospel or from the Judaizers within the pale of the Church. This interpretation again was perhaps not uninfluenced by the circumstances of the times. At all events it would find a ready welcome, when the memory of the Diocletian persecution was fresh and when the Church was torn asunder by internal feuds. It appears at least as early as the middle of the fourth century in Eusebius of Emesa (Cramer's Catena, Gal. l. c.) among the Greek, and the Ambrosian Hilary (2 Cor., Gal.) among the Latin fathers. It is adopted also by Augustine (Gal.), by Theodore of Mopsuestia (Gal.), by Theodoret (2 Cor., Gal.), by Photius (I ap. œcum., 2 Cor., Gal.), and by Theophylact (2 Cor., Gal.) 3. Thus it is especially the interpretation of the Greek commentators, though not confined to them.

But in spite of such strong advocacy, this account of St Paul's thorn in the flesh at all events cannot be correct. The passages, which allude to it, point clearly to something inseparable from the Apostle, to some affliction which he himself looked upon and which was looked upon by others as part of himself. Any calamity overtaking him from without fails to explain the intense personal feeling with which his language is charged.

The state of opinion on this subject at the close of the fourth century Jerome.

1 An ancient writer (Cotel. Mon. Eccles. 1. p. 253) says τρεχών ἐποιησάμεθα τὴν ἀφαίρεσιν. συναφέλωμεν αὐτὰς καὶ τὸν ἐν τῇ κεφαλῇ σκόλοπας· κομάσατε γὰρ αὐτὸν ἐπιπλέων ἡμᾶς δύνασθε· τὸ μὲν γὰρ τρέχωμα ἡμῶν ἡ δὲ κατὰ τὸν βλην κόσμον, τιμιάς, δόξας, χρημάτων κτήσεις, κ.τ.λ., on which the editor (p. 756) absurdly enough remarks, 'ex toto contextu suspicari datur a nostro per skolopas animalcula quaecaput pungunt intellecta esse.' The context, if I mistake not, bears out this remark, but Cotelier's conjectural interpretation is treated as a fact by recent writers, and so this is added to the list of traditional accounts of St Paul's complaint. The list is still further swelled by understanding of St Paul the maladies which Nicetas (see below, note 3) attributes to Gregory Nazianzen. Aquinas mentions the opinion, 'quod fuisset a hometer afflictus dolore iliaco' (colic), but I have not noticed it in any earlier writer. On the whole the tradition of the headache (kephalaria) is fairly constant.

2 Iren. v. 3. 1, but his language is obscure. Victorinus says, 'infirmus carnis,' but this again is not free from ambiguity.

3 It was so taken apparently also by Greg. Naz. Orat. xx. (de laud. Basil.) ad fin. (see the note of Nicetas), and by Basil, Reg. Fus. Tract. ad fin. (1. p. 400, Garnier).
may be inferred from the alternative explanations which Jerome offers in his commentary on the Galatians, derived in part from tradition, but partly without doubt conjectural. These are four in number: (1) St Paul's carnal preaching of the Gospel, as addressed to babes; (2) His mean personal appearance; (3) Some bodily malady, traditionally reported as headache; (4) Persecutions endured by him.

3. 'No,' thought the monks and ascetics of a somewhat later date, 'not persecution. It was surely something which we can realise, something which we have experienced in ourselves. Must he not have felt those same carnal longings, by which we have been dogged in our solitude, and which rise up hydra-like with seven-fold force as we smite them down? From these Paul thrice entreated the Lord to be delivered, as we have entreated Him; and was only answered, as we have been answered, by the indirect assurance, My grace is sufficient for thee.' This interpretation does not appear in a very tangible form before the sixth century, but earlier writers had used language which prepared the way for it. Throughout the middle ages it seems to have been very generally received; and Roman Catholic writers have for the most part adopted it. So it is taken by Aquinas, Bellarmine (de Monach. c. 30), Corn. a Lapide, and Estius. Luther is probably correct when he attributes the prevalence of this interpretation to the influence of the Latin version, which renders υπερτύπωσις καρνικής by 'stimulus carnis.'

This account again of St Paul's thorn in the flesh may confidently be set aside. In such a temptation he could not have 'gloried'; nor would this struggle, hidden as it must have been in his own heart, have exposed him to the contempt of others. But indeed from painful trials of this kind we have his own assurance that he was free: 'I would,' he says, 'that all men were even as myself' (1 Cor. vii. 7). 'Ah no,' said Luther, 'he was too hard pressed by the devil to think of such things.'

4. And in turn Luther propounded his own view of the thorn in the

1 Ephraem Syrus (on Gal. iv. 18), a little earlier than Jerome, says 'Either disease of his limbs or temptation from his enemies.'

2 Jerome Epist. xxii (ad Eustoch.) § 5, says: 'Si apostolus vas electionis et separatus in evangelium Christi ob carnis aculeos et incentiva vitiorum reprimit corpus suum, etc.,' quoting Rom. vii. 24, but he makes no reference to either of the passages in St Paul which relate to his 'thorn in the flesh,' and in § 31 of the same letter he says, 'Si aliquis te affixerit dolor, legito, datus est mihi stimulus carnis meae,' evidently explaining it of some bodily pain. The passage in Augustine, Ps. iviii. Serm. ii. (iv. pp. 572, 3), is vague, and need not necessarily refer to this kind of temptation. Pelagius gives, as one interpretation, 'naturalens infirmitatem'; Primasius more definitely, though still only as an alternative explanation, 'alius dicit titillationem carnis stimulam.' Gregory the Great, Mor. viii. c. 29, writes, 'Sic Paulus ad tertium caelum raptus dicitur, paradii pene trans secreta considerat, et tamen ad semetipsum rediens contra carnis bellum laborat, legem aliam in membris sustinet.' Comp. also x. 10. And thus, as time went on, this opinion gained strength, till at length it assumed the coarsest and most revolting form. Com. a Lapide on 2 Cor. xii. 7 almost exalts this interpretation into an article of faith: 'Videtur communis fidelium sensus, qui hinc libidinis tentationem stimulus carnis vocant: vox autem populi est vox dei.'
flesh. He complained that the older churchmen were unable from their trial trials position to appreciate St Paul's meaning, and thus he consciously threw into the interpretation of the passage his own personal experiences. It was certainly not carnal longing, he thought; it was not any bodily malady. It might mean external persecution, as others had maintained, but he inclined more and more to the view that spiritual trials were intended, faint-heartedness in his ministerial duties, temptations to despair or to doubt, blasphemous suggestions of the devil. This view naturally commends itself to the leaders of a new form of religious belief, owing to the difficulties of their position; and spiritual temptation was the account of St Paul's trial in which the reformers generally acquiesced. From them it found its way into Protestant writers of a later date, subject however to some modifications which adapted it to the more equable temper and the more settled opinions of their own day.

Lastly, having thus travelled round the entire circle of possible interpretation, criticism has returned to the point from which it started. Bodily ailment of some kind has been felt by most recent writers to be the only solution which meets all the conditions of the question.

These conditions are as follows: (1) The Apostle speaks of physical pain of a very acute kind; for nothing less can be implied by his metaphor of a stake driven through his flesh. (2) The malady, whatever its nature, was very humiliating to himself, for he speaks of it as a set-off against his spiritual privileges and a check to his spiritual pride. (3) He seems to regard it, as he could not but regard such suffering, as a great trial to his constancy and resolution, a grievous hindrance to the Gospel in itself, a powerful testimony to the Gospel when overcome as he was enabled to overcome it. (4) His suffering was such that he could not conceal it from others. It seems to have attacked him in the course of his public ministrations, so that he feared it might expose him to the contempt and even loathing of his hearers. (5) In the meanness of his personal presence, of which he was so acutely sensible (2 Cor. x. 10), we may perhaps trace the permanent effects of his painful malady. (6) His disease was recurring. We first read of it in connexion with his visions and revelations fourteen years before the Second Epistle to the Corinthians was written. If the two were nearly coincident, as his language seems to imply, he must have had an attack about the year 44, and this, as it would appear, for the first time. Again we hear of it about the year 51 or 52, when he first preached in Galatia. On this occasion at least it would seem to have hung about him for some time. For from Greece he writes to the Thessalonians, that he had desired to visit them more than once, but ‘Satan had hindered him’ (1 Thess. ii. 18), an expression which may perhaps be connected with the ‘messenger of Satan, the thorn in the flesh’ in one of the passages under consideration; and writing afterwards to the Corinthians of this same period of his life, he reminds them that he came among them ‘in infirmity and in fear and in much trembling’ (1 Cor. ii. 3). Lastly, from the twin references to his malady, in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians and in the Epistle to the Galatians, it may be inferred that he had a fresh attack about the years 57, 58, when these letters were written, and to this he may allude in part when he speaks in the former of these epistles of having ‘despaired even of life,’ of having ‘had the sentence of death in himself’ (2 Cor. i. 8, 9).

1 In his shorter and earlier commentary on the Galatians (1510) Luther explains it of 'persecution'; in his later and fuller work (1535) he combines spiritual temptations with persecution; and lastly in the Table-talk he drops persecution and speaks of spiritual trials only, xxiv. § 7 (vol. xxii. p. 1992 of the Halle edition). This last passage forms a striking contrast to the language of a Lapide quoted in the last note. 'Those were high spiritual temptations,' says Luther, 'which no papist has understood,' with more in the same strain. Thus each of these writers makes his own interpretation in a manner a test of orthodoxy. Other references in Luther's works to the 'thorn in the flesh' are, vol. viii. p. 959, xi. p. 1437, xvi. p. 561.

2 This seems to be the meaning of σκόλοφ: see the notes of Meyer and Stanley on 2 Cor. xii. 7. Robertson, Lectures on the Corinthians ix, x, speaks of the thorn as peculiarly suggestive of some 'secret sorrow'; for 'a thorn is a small invisible cause of suffering.' The Greek word however suggests no such idea; nor is it consistent with the fear of contempt or loathing expressed in the Galatian Epistle. This slight blemish, occurring where it does, may well be overlooked in the latest utterance of one who spoke from deep personal experience, having himself maintained a hard struggle against 'fightings without' and 'fears within,' and 'borne about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus.' The lesson of St Paul's sufferings is nowhere more powerfully brought out than in this exposition of the thorn in the flesh.

The life of the greatest and best of English kings presents so close a parallel to the Apostle’s thorn in the flesh, that I cannot forbear quoting the passage at length, though the illustration is not my own 1.

“it was in the midst of these rejoicings (on the occasion of his marriage) that Alfred was suddenly attacked by an illness, the sight of which struck dumb the loud joy of the guests, and for which neither they nor all the physicians of the day could account...Others thought it was the unexpected return of a painful malady to which he had been subject at an early age.

“We are informed what the malady really was in an account which is not quite clear...On passing from childhood to youth...he begged for some protection against his passions, for some corporal suffering which might arm him against temptation, so that his spirit might be enabled to raise him above the weakness of the flesh. On this, we are told, heaven sent him his illness, which Asser describes as a kind of eruption. For many years it caused him the most horrible torture, which was so intense that he himself began to despair of his life. One day...the royal youth...prostrated himself in silent devotion and prayed to God for pity. For fear of being rendered by his bodily infirmities, or perhaps by leprosy or blindness, incapable of exercising the royal power or despicable in the sight of the world, had long obtained possession of his soul and induced him to pray for his deliverance from such a plague. Every other lighter trial he was willing to undergo, provided it only spared him for what he was accustomed to look on as his destined office. Not long after...in consequence of his fervent prayers, we are informed that all signs of his malady disappeared.

“And now in the very moment that he had taken to himself a wife,

1 The passage is quoted in Jowett, i. p. 368 (2nd ed.). The value of the illustration is diminished by the suspicion attaching to the so-called Asser.
in the very moment that the marriage-guests were drinking and carousing noisily in the festive halls, the evil against which (warum) he had prayed overtook him. He was suddenly seized with fear and trembling; and to the very hour that Asser wrote, to a good old age, he was never sure of not being attacked by it. There were instants when this visitation seemed to render him incapable of any exertion, either intellectual or bodily: but the repose of a day, a night, or even an hour, would always raise his courage again. Under the weight of this bodily infirmity, which was probably of an epileptic nature, he learned, by the force of his unyielding will, to overcome the heaviest cares that ever weighed upon any ruler engaged in a contest with a most terrible foe, and under the weight of corporeal weakness and the cares of the outer world, to prosecute unceasingly his great purpose.” Pauli’s Life of Alfred, pp. 122—125 (Eng. Trans).

In the mystery which hangs over the whole subject, in its physical symptoms, and in its influence on his own character and feelings, Alfred’s malady is a most striking counterpart to the infirmity of St Paul; and the coincidence is the less open to suspicion, since neither Asser, who is the original authority for the fact, nor Pauli, whose account I have quoted, seems to have been struck by the parallel.

Unless then we accept the earliest tradition of this infirmity, and conclude that the Apostle suffered from acute pain in the head (an account of which considering his nervous sensibility is perhaps sufficient to explain the feeling of humiliation and the fear of contempt which his malady inspired), we should be tempted by the closeness of the parallel to conjecture that it was of the nature of epilepsy. Recent criticism has offered other conjectures in abundance. Of these, the view that it was a complaint in the eyes deserves especially to be mentioned, as having been supported by the most ingenious advocacy and found the largest number of adherents: but it does not, I think, sufficiently recognise the conditions of the problem, as stated above; while the direct arguments, on which it is founded, seem to melt away under the light of careful examination.

1 It is put forward in a lively and interesting paper in Dr J. Brown’s Horæ Subsecivæ. But the foundation on which this opinion is built seems to me scarcely strong enough to bear it; for (1) The stress of the argument rests on what I cannot but think a mistaken interpretation of Gal. iv. 15, ‘If it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your eyes and have given them to me.’ Here the English version has ‘your own eyes,’ which lends some countenance to the idea that St Paul intended to say they would have replaced his eyes with their own, if it could have been done; but the Greek is τοὺς ὑμᾶς ὑμῶν ὑμῶν, where ὑμῶν is as unemphatic as possible, so that the meaning is not ‘your eyes,’ but ‘your eyes.’ (2) The expression πηλκα γραμματα (vi. 11) is thought to be illustrated by this view of St Paul’s complaint, as though his defective eyesight explained the allusion to the size of the letters, or the length of the epistle, whichever way we take it. It seems to me that a much better account can be given of that expression: see the note there. (3) It is supposed that this defective eyesight was a permanent effect of the temporary blindness which seized the Apostle on the way to Damascus; and that thus his thorn in the flesh was eminently fitted to be a check on spiritual pride produced by his ‘visions and revelations.’ But the narrative of the Acts implies, if it does not state, that this blindness was completely healed;
The various readings in iv. 25.

(i) τό γάρ Σωά ὄρος ἐστίν. So it is read in NCFG, 17; in the Old Latin (f.g.), Vulgate, Ethiopic, and Armenian Versions; in Origen, Epiphanius, Cyril, and Damascene; in Victorinus, the Ambrosian Hilary ("Sina autem mons," in his text), Augustine, Jerome, Pelagius, Primasius, and probably all the Latin fathers. This is also the reading of the Gothic Version, except that it omits γάρ. The Thebaic Version reads similarly, "qua vero mons Sina est." The MS N after ἐστίν adds δῶ, in which respect it stands alone (except apparently the Memphitic Version); and Epiphanius transposes Σωά and ὄρος.

(ii) τό ἀγαρ Σωά ὄρος ἐστίν. So the Memphitic Version as read by Boetticher; but Wilkins inserts a δὲ.

(iii) τό δὲ ἀγαρ Σωά ὄρος ἐστίν. Such is the reading of ABDE, 37, 73, 80, lectionary 40.

(iv) τό γάρ ἀγαρ Σωά ὄρος ἐστίν. So KLP with the vast majority of cursive manuscripts, with both Syriac Versions, and with the Greek commentators generally, Chrysostom, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, Theophylact, and the Ecumenian Catena. This also is apparently the reading of Ephraem Syrus.

(v) τό γάρ ἀγαρ ὄρος ἐστίν found only in the Latin of D and E⁴.

It will thus be seen that the strongest, because the most varied, testimony is in favour of the first of these readings. And there is also this weighty argument on the same side, that supposing it to have been the passage in 2 Corinthians refers to incidents which occurred only fourteen years before the letter was written, and therefore much later than the Apostle's conversion. (4) To the arguments already considered, some have added the expression δέρετρ' ἐπιθεοτρείσθαι, 'to look steadfastly,' twice used of St Paul (Acts xiii. 9, xxiii. 1), as indicating a defective vision; but, not to mention that the word occurs frequently in the Acts of others besides St Paul, this 'steadfast gaze' would seem, if anything, to imply a powerful eye. Thus it may be connected with the tradition or fiction, dating at least from the second century, that St Paul was σέρεφος (Acts Paul. et Theol. § 3). The overhanging brows and piercing glance made up at least a consistent and characteristic portrait of the Apostle, if not a true likeness. On the other hand it is possible that he suffered from weak eyes, and this may account for the incident of Acts xxiii. 5; but it is not implied in Gal. iv. 15, and does not explain the strong expressions used of his 'stake in the flesh,' though perhaps it might be one of the consequences of that infirmity. St Paul's language implies some more striking complaint.

1 In Cant. ii. (111. p. 52, ed. Delarue), extant only in a Latin translation.
2 Haeres. p. 695.
3 Glaphyr. i. p. 75 (ed. Auberti). Cyril is said in other passages to read τό δὲ ἀγαρ and τό γάρ ἀγαρ, but I am unable to verify the statement.
4 The Ambrosian Hilary (in his commentary) is also quoted in favour of this reading, but his words do not bear out the inference.
original reading we have on the whole a more probable explanation of the variations in the text, than on any other hypothesis. By the negligence or confusion of a scribe το Ἀγαρ might easily be substituted for το γάρ, the word Αγαρ occurring in the immediate context. As a next step a connecting particle must be supplied; and δέ or γάρ was inserted according to the caprice or judgment of the transcriber, thus producing the second and third readings. Lastly, the word Σωκ, now rendered superfluous, was expelled to relieve the passage, and hence arose the fourth variation, which indeed is too feebly supported to deserve consideration. The reading which I am here advocating is adopted by the two great masters of textual criticism, Bentley and Lachmann. Westcott and Hort however relegate it to their margin.

Such seems to be the most probable account of the passage. Otherwise the earlier conjecture of Bentley, that we have here a gloss transferred from margin to text, has much to recommend it. Bentley himself indeed read it το δέ Ἀγαρ συναγωγή τη νῦν ἦ τερωσιαλήμερος, but it seems simpler, if any such solution be adopted, to erase the whole clause το γάρ...... ει τῷ Ἀραβία. This hypothesis derives some colour from the fact that there is a slight variation of reading in the connecting particles of the following clauses, as if the connexion had been disturbed by the insertion of the gloss.

The meaning of Hagar in iv. 25.

If the word Hagar be omitted, the passage is capable of a very easy Probable and natural interpretation; 'Sinai,' St Paul argues, 'is situated in Arabia, the country of Hagar's descendants, the land of bondslaves.' And such too seems to be the most probable account of his meaning, even if with the received text we retain Hagar; 'This Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia,' i.e. it represents Mount Sinai, because Mount Sinai is in Arabia, the land of Hagar and her descendants. It is not το Ἀγαρ, the woman Hagar, but το Ἀγαρ, the thing Hagar, the Hagar of the allegory, the Hagar which is under discussion.

1 The commentary of Theodore Mops. on this passage shows how easily Ἀγαρ might be foisted in. The Greek text of this writer (in Cramer's Catena) has ἄλλος Ἀγαρ τε ἐρήμως πάσα κ.τ.λ., which makes no sense. The Latin translation runs 'sed ut solitudine omnis,' which doubtless represents the original reading, ἄλλος κατ τε ἐρήμως πάσα. Windischmann's conjecture to account for the insertion of Ἀγαρ in the text of St Paul is more ingenious than probable. He supposes a critical note, δ. γάρ (i.e. ἄλλος: γάρ), marking a various reading in the connecting particle, to have been transferred from the margin to the text.

2 In his text of the epistle as given in Bentleii Crit. Sacr. p. 108. This text is much later than his 'Epistola ad Millium' (Ib. p. 45), in which he starts the hypothesis of a gloss. This hypothesis was adopted by Mill and others.

3 το denotes that 'Hagar' is regarded not as a person, but as an object of thought or of speech. For this use of the neuter article see Winer § xviii. p. 135, A. Buttmann p. 84. It need not necessarily mean 'the word Hagar'; compare for instance Ephes. iv. 9 το δέ
Such substantially was the interpretation put upon the passage by some of the ablest among the Greek commentators. ‘The law was given in the very place,’ says Theodore of Mopsuestia (the sense is somewhat distorted through the medium of a bad Latin translation), ‘which belongs to that race whence Hagar also was.’ ‘About that mountain,’ says Theodoret, ‘are the tents of the descendants of Hagar (τὸ τῆς Ἀγαρ ἔσκινον τοῖς γένοις).’ ‘The Saracens,’ remarks a third writer, perhaps Severianus,1 ‘the descendants of Ishmael, dwell in the desert which reaches as far as Mount Sinai.’ Similarly Ephraem Syrus: ‘For this Hagar is Mount Sinai which is in the land of the Arabs, and it is a type (a likeness to) Jerusalem, for it is in subject and bondage with its sons under the Romans.’

This however is not the interpretation generally adopted by those who retain the received reading. They suppose the Apostle to be calling attention not to the locality of Sinai but to the meaning of the word Hagar: ‘The word Hagar in the language of the Arabians denotes Mount Sinai;’ This interpretation, which prevails widely, is put in its most attractive form by Dean Stanley. ‘There is another traveller through Arabia,’ he writes, ‘at this time, on whose visit to Mount Sinai we should look with still greater interest. I went into Arabia, says St Paul, in describing his conversion to the Galatians. It is useless to speculate; yet when in a later chapter of the same epistle the words fall upon our ears, This Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, it is difficult to resist the thought, that he too may have stood upon the rocks of Sinai, and heard from Arab lips the often repeated “Hagar,” “rock,” suggesting the double meaning to which that text alludes.2’ ‘Hagar’ in Arabic means ‘a rock,’ or rather ‘a stone’; and it is maintained that this Arabic word ‘Hagar’ was a common local name for Sinai, or at all events was appropriated to it in some special way.

Independently of any questions that may rise on the interpretation, I have endeavoured to show that ‘Hagar’ ought to be expelled from the text on the ground of external authority alone. Yet, if it be a fact that Hagar is really another name for Sinai, this fact will go some little way towards reinstating Ἀγαρ; and on this account, as well as in deference to the advocacy it has found, it will be worth while to consider the difficulties which beset this interpretation.

ἀδέσποτος τί λέγει; where τί is the statement, for the preceding word was not ἀδέσποτος, but ἀδέσπότα. The Ambrosian Hilary (after the middle of the fourth century) explains it ‘cansam Agar’: a very early example of the sense which this word bears in the Romance languages, ‘cosa,’ ‘chose.’

1 In Cramer’s Catena. It is anonymous (Διώσ εἰς Ἐφραίμ φηλαρ), but in the immediate neighbourhood there is a note assigned to Severianus.

2 Sinai and Palestine p. 50; see above, p. 89.

3 حajar pronounced ‘Chagar’ (or rather ‘Chajar’). The Arabic alphabet has two letters, گ and چ, a softer and a harsher sound, corresponding to the one Hebrew guttural כ (Cheth). The initial letter of ‘Hagar,’ ‘a stone,’ is the former of these, a soft guttural Ch, and not a simple aspirate. The second letter of the word is چ, corresponding to the Hebrew כ, our G, but generally pronounced by the Arabs softly like the English J, as we pronounce it in gem. I shall in this note represent چ by Ch, گ by G, both in Italics.
1. The evidence on which the assumed fact rests is both deficient (1) Inconsiderable in amount and suspicious in character. Not more than two independent witnesses, if they be independent, have, so far as I know, been produced.

(i) Chrysostom at the close of the fourth century in his exposition of this epistle writes somewhat obscurely; 'Hagar was the name of the bondmaid; and Mount Sinai is so interpreted in their native tongue (τὸ Ὠδὲ Σινᾶ ὤρος οὖν μεθερμηνεύεται τῇ ἑπιχώριῳ αὐτῶν γλώσσῃ),' and afterwards he speaks of the mountain as 'bearing the same name with the bondmaid (ὁμόωνυμον τῇ δούλῃ).' To the same effect writes Theophylact, who is often a mere echo of Chrysostom, as do one or two anonymous commentators in the Ecumenian Catena, without doubt deriving their information from the same source.

(ii) The Bohemian traveller Harant, who visited Sinai in the year Harant 1598, says: 'The Arabian and Mauritanian heathen call Mount Sinai Agar or Tur.' Though, for anything that is found in the context, this might have been written without a thought of the passage of St Paul, yet I think it hardly probable. Luther, following Erasmus, had maintained this interpretation; and from the enormous popularity of his commentaries on the Galatians, it is likely that they were known to Harant, who himself ultimately became a protestant. If so, he did not necessarily derive his information from the Arabs on the spot, but may have accepted without question the popular statement, as more recent travellers have done.

In later works of travel I have not found any direct personal testimony to this assumed fact. If there be any, it will from the nature of the case require careful sifting. The word 'Hagar' (Chagar) meaning 'a rock,' or 'a stone,' must be heard again and again from native lips in this wild region; and a traveller, once possessed of the idea, might easily elicit the word from his Arab guide by a leading question, and on the strength of an

1 Chrysostom's interpretation of the passage in St Paul may perhaps underlie the account of the word 'Hagar' given in Bar Bahlul's Syriac Lexicon, p. 417: 'חאגר חבל סנה This extract, which is taken from the MS in the Cambridge University Library, I owe to the kindness of R. L. Bensly, Esq., of Caius College.

2 Harant's authority is generally quoted at secondhand through Busching's Erdbeschr. r. l. p. 603 (Hamb. 1791). In Harant's work itself, Der Christliche Ulysses (Nürnberg. 1679), the passage runs: 'Den Berg Synai nennen die Arabische und Mauritanische Heyden Agar oder Tur: Weissenberg, wie auch Tucla, wie Odoardo Barbosa in der summ. del Ind. Orient. bezeuget.' The work was written in Bohemian, but translated into German by his brother and published by his nephew (see Balbinus Bohem. Doct. ii. p. 104). [A friend, who has consulted the Bohemian original, informs me that Weissenberg is a miswriting of the name of a traveller whom Harant quotes, and that Tucla is there written Turla.] I give the passage of Barbosa to which Harant refers, as it stands in the copies which I have consulted. The title is Primo volume delle Navigationi e Viaggi (Venet. 1550 and 1554); Libro di Odoardo Barbessa or Barbosa, p. 313 (323), 'passato il detto monte Sinai, il quale i Mori dimandano Turla.'

3 The index to Ritter's Erdkunde, Sinai etc. r. p. 1331, s.v. 'Hadschar,' 'Hadjar,' etc., names several 'stones' on and about Sinai; 'Hadschar Elma,' 'Hadsjar rükka,' 'Hadj Musa,' etc.
answer thus obtained unsuspiciously confirm the statement that it was a local name for the mountain.

Thus the independent testimony to this supposed fact is confined to Chrysostom and Harant, or, if my supposition with regard to Harant be correct, to Chrysostom alone. To Chrysostom then, if I mistake not, or to some earlier writer whom he copied, this statement is due. Nor should we be doing any injustice to one who makes St Paul speak of Sinai as 'contiguous to Jerusalem,' were we to suppose that having heard of some place bearing the name 'Hagar' whether in Arabia Petraea or in some district bordering upon the Sinaitic mountains, (for the name seems to have been not uncommon 1,) he compressed the geography of the whole region and assigned this name to Mount Sinai itself, imagining that he had thus found the key to St Paul's meaning 2. It is at least worthy of notice that no mention whatever of this assumed fact, or the interpretation based on it, is made either by his friend Theodore of Mopsuestia, or by Theodoret the pupil of Theodore, both natives of Antioch, and both acquainted with his work. Probably they were better informed on the subject, and for this reason tacitly abandoned Chrysostom's explanation.

2. But supposing it were proved that Sinai were so called by the Arabs, this word 'Chagar' is not written or pronounced in the same way as the proper name 'Hagar,' and etymologically the two are entirely distinct. The proper name 'Hagar,' with the simple aspirate (ιγαρ, in Arabic حجر), signifies 'a wanderer or fugitive,' being connected with the Arabic 'Iegira' 2.

1 Older critics, as Bochart and others (le Moyne Var. Sacr. p. 834, Pfeiffer Op. r. p. 504), assert that Petra itself bears the name Hagar (Chagar) in Arabic writers, just as in Greek it is called Ἱέραπα, and in Hebrew בכר words having the same meaning 'rock.' This statement however is founded on a twofold error; (1) The vocalisation of the proper name referred to is not 'Chagar,' but Chigr'; and (2) the place which bears this name 'El Chigr' in Arabic writers is not Petra itself, but a station several days south of Petra on the pilgrims' route between Damascus and Mecca. See Ewald Paulus p. 493 sq. Robinson's Palestine etc. ii. p. 532. There is no evidence that Petra itself was so called.

There is a place בכר, 'Chagra,' mentioned four times in the Targum of Onkelos, Gen. xvi. 7, 14, xx. 1, Exod. xv. 22. In the second passage it is substituted for 'Bered,' in the remaining three for 'Shur,' of the original text. It must therefore have lain somewhere at the south of Palestine in the desert on the way to Egypt. In Gen. xvi. 7 it occurs in connexion with the flight of Hagar.

I venture to conjecture that there was also a place 'Hagar' (whether בתיב or حاجر) in Belka, and that the appearance of 'Belka' in the Arabic version of Gal. i. 17 and iv. 25 (see above, p. 87) is to be explained by this fact.

2 Wieseler explains Chrysostom's meaning in a different way, insisting on the strict sense of μεθέρμηθεσθαι. According to Fürst Concord. and Hebr. Handb. s. v., φθινός signifies 'rocky,' so that interpreted in Arabic it would be حاجر, and to this identity of meaning in 'Sinai' and 'Hagar' he supposes Chrysostom to allude. But even if the account which Fürst gives of the word were altogether satisfactory, it would still remain in the highest degree improbable that Chrysostom should be acquainted with an etymology so abstruse.
the familiar term for the flight of Mahomet (compare also the Hebrew הָרַע and הָרָע), Thus it has nothing in common with ‘Chagar,’ ‘a stone’ (חַאֲקֵר), which if it occurred in Hebrew would be written רָע. It is true that the gutturals are closely allied, and were sometimes confounded; and this circumstance would deserve to be considered, if the supposed name for Sinai were supported by sufficient testimony: but where this is wanting, the false etymology throws an additional obstacle, to say the least, in the way of our accepting the explanation in question. Nor will it appear very probable that St Paul should have set aside the true derivation, when it is given and allegorized by his contemporary Philo.

It seems much more probable indeed, if St Paul is alluding to any local name of Sinai, that he should have regarded the true etymology, and that the name in question was not רָע ‘rock,’ but רָע ‘wanderer.’ This latter name was at least not uncommon among the Arab tribes; and it is far from unlikely, though direct evidence is wanting, that a settlement of these ‘wanderers,’ these children of ‘Hagar,’ occupied the country about Sinai in St Paul’s day and gave it their name for the time.

3. But lastly, is it probable, supposing this to have been St Paul’s meaning, that he would have expressed himself as he has done? If in writing to a half-Greek, half-Celtic people he ventured to argue from an Arabic word at all, he would at all events be careful to make his drift intelligible. But how could his readers be expected to put the right interpretation on the words ‘this Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia’? How could they

1 The close alliance between the gutturals is shown, (1) By their interchange in the same language in different words connected or identical in meaning and obviously derived from the same root, e.g. רָע and הָרַע, לַע and לֵע; (2) By their interchange in different languages of the Semitic family, e.g. Heb. לֹע and Syr. סָע (Hoffmann, Gramm. Syr. p. 123), or in different dialects of the same language, e.g. in the Aramaic dialects the Syriac סָע compared with the Chaldee רָע (see Gesen. Thes. p. 359, Fürst Aram. Idioms § 46); (3) By the confusion of sound in the same language or dialect, e.g. a Juden in the story professes himself unable to distinguish between רָע, ‘a lamb,’ לַע, ‘wool,’ קָע, ‘wine,’ and רָע, ‘an ass,’ as pronounced by a Galilean, when the latter wants to make a purchase; see Fürst, ib. § 15. There was the same confusion also in the Samaritan pronunciation of the gutturals; Gesen. Lehrgeb. § 32. 1. On the relation of the gutturals to each other, see Ewald, Ausf. Lehreb. d. Heb. Spr. § 39 sq.

Winer (Realw. s.v. Hagariter) is wrong in understanding Assemani’s remark of the station between Damascus and Mecca (see p. 196, note 1), and has been blindly followed by others.

2 οἶκος, Leg. Alleg. l. p. 135 M, Sacr. Ab. et Ca. l. p. 170 (παρουκέι σωφίς, οδ κατοκεί). Another derivation of Hagar, or rather a play upon the word, was יָרָע הָרַע, ‘here is thy wages’; see Beer Leben Abraham’s p. 149.
possibly understand, knowing nothing of Arabic, that he meant to say, 'this word Hagar in the Arabic tongue stands for Mount Sinai'? Even if it be granted that his readers were acquainted with the fact which was the key to his meaning, is ἔν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ at all a likely expression to be used by any writer for ἔν τῇ Ἀραβικῇ γλώσσῃ or Ἀραβιστὲ, unless it were made intelligible by the context? Yet this is the meaning generally assigned to ἔν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ by those commentators, ancient or modern, who adopt the interpretation in question, and indeed seems to be required to justify that interpretation.

In the face of these difficulties, it seems at least improbable that the point of the passage is the identity of 'Hagar' and 'Sinai' as different names of the same mountain, and the reading which retains 'Hagar' in the text loses any support which it may seem to draw from this identity, assumed as a fact.

Philo's allegory of Hagar and Sarah.

In giving an allegorical meaning to this passage of the Old Testament narrative St Paul did not stand alone. It might be inferred indeed from his own language that such applications of the history of Hagar and Sarah were not uncommon in the schools of his day. But, however this may be, it is more than once so applied in the extant works of Philo. I have already pointed out the contrast presented by his treatment of the history of Abraham in general to the lessons which it suggests to the Apostle of the Gentiles. This contrast extends to the application of the allegorical method to this portion of the sacred narrative. Philo's allegory is as follows.

Philo— the human soul progressing towards the knowledge of God— unites himself first with Sarah and then with Hagar. These two alliances stand in direct opposition the one to the other. Sarah, the princess—for such is the interpretation of the word—is divine wisdom. To her therefore Abraham is bidden to listen in all that she says. On the other hand Hagar, whose name signifies 'sojourning' (παροίκησις), and points therefore to something transient and unsatisfying, is a preparatory or intermediate 2 See the notes on συντονεῖται and ἄλληλοις εἰκὼν ὑμῖν ὑπόθεται γάμοι.

---

3 de Abr. ii. p. 15 ἑνωτίκτατοι ὅτε ἄλληλοι εἰκὼν ὑμῖν ὑπόθεται γάμοι.

4 In some passages Philo still further refines on the change in her name (Gen. xvii. 15): e.g. de Mut. Nom. l. p. 590, Quaest. in Gen. p. 229 (Auchzer), de Cherub. l. p. 139. Her first name Σάρα (Σαρὰ) is ἄρχει μον, her after-name Σάρπα (Σαρπα) is ἀρχον (see Hieron. Quaest. in Gen., iii. p. 331). Thus they are related to each other as the special to the general, as the finite and perishable to the infinite and imperishable.
training—the instruction of the schools—secular learning, as it might be termed in modern phrase. Hence she is fitly described as an Egyptian, as Sarah’s handmaid. Abraham’s alliance with Sarah is at first premature. He is not sufficiently advanced in his moral and spiritual development to profit thereby. As yet he begets no son by her. She therefore directs him to go in to her handmaid, to apply himself to the learning of the schools. This inferior alliance proves fruitful at once. At a later date and after this preliminary training he again unites himself to Sarah; and this time his union with divine wisdom is fertile. Not only does Sarah bear him a son, but she is pointed out as the mother of a countless offspring. Thus is realised the strange paradox that ‘the barren woman is most fruitful.’ Thus in the progress of the human soul are verified the words of the prophet, spoken in an allegory, that ‘the desolate hath many children.’

But the allegory does not end here. The contrast between the mothers is reproduced in the contrast between the sons. Isaac represents the wisdom of the wise man, Ishmael the sophistry of the sophist. Sophistry must in the end give place to wisdom. The son of the bondwoman must be cast out and flee before the son of the princess.

Such is the ingenious application of Philo—most like and yet most compared unlike that of St Paul. They both allegorize, and in so doing they touch with St Paul’s. Illustration. Yet in their whole tone and method they stand in direct contrast, and their results have nothing in common. Philo is, as usual, wholly unhistorical. With St Paul on the other hand Hagar’s career is an allegory, because it is a history. The symbol and the thing symbolized are the same in kind. The simple passage of patriarchal life represents in miniature the workings of God’s providence hereafter to be exhibited in grander proportions in the history of the Christian Church. The Christian

1 ἡ μετῆ καὶ ἐγκύκλιος παύεις is Philo’s favourite phrase, e.g. de Cherub. i. p. 139.
2 de Congr. Quaer. Erud. Gr. i. p. 519 ταῦτα Μωυσῆς, τὸ παραδοξότατον, καὶ στερεάν ἀποφαίνει καὶ πολυγονωτάτην: comp. de Mut. Nom. i. pp. 599, 600, where he adds κατὰ τὸ ἀδήμονον δόμα ὧπὸ τῆς χάριτος “Ἄνυης ἡ φήσεως, ἠφεῖρα ἔτεκεν ἐπὶ ἡ δὲ πολλὴ ἐν τέκνοις ζητεύεται (1 Sam. ii. 5).
3 de Execri. ii. p. 434 ἡ γὰρ ἐργασία, ἢ φήσεως ὁ προφήτης, εἰς τοῦτος τε καὶ πολυτάσις, ὅπερ λόγων καὶ ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἀληγορεῖται (Is. liv. 1). The coincidence with St Paul is the more striking inasmuch as Philo very rarely goes beyond the Pentateuch in seeking subjects for allegorical interpretation. There is indeed no mention of Sarah and Hagar here, but it appears, both from the context and from parallel passages, that they are present to his mind.
4 de Sobr. i. p. 394 σοφίαν μὲν Ἰσαὰκ, σοφοτελεῖαν δὲ Ἰσαὰκε ἐκκένωσαν: comp. de Cherub. i. p. 140, and other passages referred to in p. 198, note 1. The names give Philo some trouble. Isaac of course signifies ‘laughter,’ betokening the joy which comes of divine wisdom; see besides the passages just referred to, Leg. Alleg. i. p. 131, Quod Det. Pot. i. pp. 203, 215. Ishmael he contrasts with Israel, the one signifying the hearing God, the other the seeing God (Gen. n.n. n. ‘vir videns deum’; comp. Hieron. in Gen. iii. p. 357). Thus they are opposed to each other, as ἄσκοι to ἐργασίας, as the fallacious to the infallible, as the σοφός to the σοφοτελής, de Prof. i. p. 277, de Mut. Nom. i. p. 609.
5 de Cherub. i. p. 140.
Apostle and the philosophic Jew move in parallel lines, as it were, keeping side by side and yet never once crossing each other's path.

And there is still another point in which the contrast between the two is great. With Philo the allegory is the whole substance of his teaching; with St Paul it is but an accessory. He uses it rather as an illustration than an argument, as a means of representing in a lively form the lessons before enforced on other grounds. It is, to use Luther's comparison, the painting which decorates the house already built.

At the same time we need not fear to allow that St Paul's mode of teaching here is coloured by his early education in the rabbinical schools. It were as unreasonable to stake the Apostle's inspiration on the turn of a metaphor or the character of an illustration or the form of an argument, as on purity of diction. No one now thinks of maintaining that the language of the inspired writers reaches the classical standard of correctness and elegance, though at one time it was held almost a heresy to deny this. 'A treasure contained in earthen vessels,' 'strength made perfect in weakness,' 'rudeness in speech, yet not in knowledge,' such is the far nobler conception of inspired teaching, which we may gather from the Apostle's own language. And this language we should do well to bear in mind. But on the other hand it were mere dogmatism to set up the intellectual standard of our own age or country as an infallible rule. The power of allegory has been differently felt in different ages, as it is differently felt at any one time by diverse nations. Analogy, allegory, metaphor—by what boundaries are these separated the one from the other? What is true or false, correct or incorrect, as an analogy or an allegory? What argumentative force must be assigned to either? We should at least be prepared with an answer to these questions, before we venture to sit in judgment on any individual case.

The various readings in v. 1.

The variations of reading in this verse are the more perplexing, in that they seriously affect the punctuation, and thereby the whole texture of the passage. The main variations are threefold.

1. The position of oυν.
   (i) It stands after στηκες in NABCFG and a few of the better cursive mss; in f, g, the Vulgate, Gothic, Memphitic, Thebaic, Ethiopian, Armenian, and perhaps the Peshito Syriac two versions; in Origen, Basil, and Cyril; in Victorinus, Augustine, and others. The Memphitic version also inserts γὰρ with τὴν ἀληθείαν.

1 I have ascertained this from the ms belonging to Lord Crawford and Balcarres.
2 This is doubtful, the order of the words being altered in this version.
3 in Exod. H. 3 (p. 139), in Jud. H. 9 (p. 477), both extant only in Latin.
4 Mor. 14 (p. 247, Garnier), according to some of the best mss. In the printed editions however it stands after ἀληθείαν. In the de Bapte. (p. 641, Garnier), a treatise ascribed to Basil but of doubtful authorship, its place is after στηκες.
5 Gliophyr. i. p. 75.
EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

(ii) Its position is after ἀλευθερία in C (by a third hand) KL and very many cursive mss, in Marcus Monachus, Damascene, Theophylact, and Ecumenius.

(iii) It is omitted in DE (both Greek and Latin); in the Vulgate and later Syriac; in Ephraem Syrus, in Theodore of Mopsuestia and Theodoret, in Jerome, Pelagius, the Ambrosian Hilary, and others. It is wanting also in Chrysostom, who however supplies a connecting particle, reading τῇ γὰρ ἀλευθερία αὐτής.

In Asterius ὡδι is absent after ἀλευθερία, but, as the context is wanting, it is impossible to say whether it occurred after στήκετε or not.

Thus it will be seen that the balance of authority is decidedly in favour of placing ὡδι after στήκετε; and this is probably the correct reading. The displacement (ii) and the omission (iii) were, it would seem, different expedients to relieve the awkwardness in the position of the connecting particle, on the supposition that the sentence began with τῇ ἀλευθερία.

2. The position of ἡμᾶς. It is found,

(i) Before ἔργος in ΝΑΒΔΕFGP and some cursive mss, in Origen (Latin translation), Theodoro of Mopsuestia (Latin translation), and ἡμᾶς. Cyril.

(ii) After ἔργος in ΡΚΛ and many cursive mss, and in Chrysostom, Theodoret, Asterius, Marcus Monachus, and Damascene.

(iii) After ἀλευθερίωσεν in Theophylact.

The versions and the Latin fathers vary, the majority placing it after ἔργος; but this is plainly a case where no great stress can be laid on such evidence. The transposition would be made unintentionally in the course of translation (ἔργος ἡμᾶς being perhaps the more natural order), so that one authority in favour of ἡμᾶς ἔργος is of more weight than a number against it. The order ἡμᾶς ἔργος may therefore be retained with confidence.

3. Besides these, there still remains a third and more important variation. (3) The

(i) τῇ ἀλευθερία is read in D (by the correction of later hands) relative.

EKL and the great majority of cursives, in both Syriac versions, in Basil, Chrysostom, Theodore of Mopsuestia (Latin), Theodoret (twice), Cyril, Asterius, Marcus Monachus, Theophylact, and Ecumenius. The Ethiopic has 'quia Christus nos liberavit; et state igitur.'

(ii) τῇ ἀλευθερία alone is found in ΝΑΒCDP and a few cursive mss, in the Thebaic and Memphitic versions, and in Damascene and others.

(iii) ἡ ἀλευθερία in FG, in the old Latin, Vulgate, and Gothic versions, in Marcion (or rather Tertullian), Origen (Latin translation), in Victorinus, Augustine, Jerome, and others.

1 Gallandi viii. p. 47.
3 The Latin of D has 'qua libertate nostra.' It has been suggested to me that τρα was originally a direction to transpose 'nos.'
4 'D et D praeposuerunt, praetereaque D addidit signa quibus 7 X3 ante hmas ponendum esse significaret, sed videntur ea signa rursus delela esse.' Tischendorf Cod. Clarom.
5 adv. Marc. v. 4.
6 in Gen. H. 7 (n. p. 78), in Cant. i. 6 (n. p. 53).
Thus our choice seems to lie between (i) and (ii), and on the whole the first seems more probable than the second. For, though the balance of direct evidence is against it, the following considerations may be urged in its favour.

First. The reading τὴν ἀλευθερία without ετέρου is so difficult as to be almost unintelligible. At a certain point Bengel’s rule, ‘proclivi scripotioni praestat ardua,’ attains its maximum value; beyond this point it ceases to apply. And in the present instance it is difficult to give an interpretation to the words which is not either meaningless or ungrammatical.

Secondly. Supposing τὴν ἀλευθερία ητερου to have been the original reading, the omission of ητερου in some texts admits of a very simple explanation. Standing immediately before ἡμᾶς (which in its proper position, as we have seen, precedes Χριστός) it would easily drop out through the carelessness of transcribers. In this case too the transposition Χριστός ἡμᾶς for ἡμᾶς Χριστός was probably made for the sake of euphony to avoid the juxta-position of ητερου ἡμᾶς which came together in the original text.

At the same time the testimony in favour of τὴν ἀλευθερία alone is so strong, that I have hesitated to set it aside altogether and have therefore retained it at the foot as an alternative reading.

The third reading, ἡ ἀλευθερία, found chiefly in the Latin copies, is not very easily accounted for, but was perhaps substituted for τὴν ἀλευθερία as a more elegant expression or as a retranslation from the loose Latin rendering ‘qua libertate.’

The words being thus determined, the punctuation is best decided by the position of the connecting particle, and the sentence will run, τῆς ἀλευθερίας τὴν ἀλευθερία ημᾶς Χριστός ἀλευθερωσεν. Στήκετε οὖν κτ.λ.
2—6. 'Let there be no misunderstanding. I Paul myself declare to you that if you submit to circumcision, you forfeit all advantage from Christ. I have said it once, and I repeat it again with a solemn protest. Every man, who is circumcised, by that very act places himself under the law; he binds himself to fulfil every single requirement of the law. You have no part in Christ, you are outcasts from the covenant of grace, you who seek justification in obedience to law. There is a great gulf between you and us. We, the true disciples of Christ, hope to be justified of faith, not of works, in the Spirit, not in the flesh.'

2. At this point St Paul assumes a severer tone in condemning the observance of the law. It is not only a useless imposition, a slavish burden; it is pernicious and fatal in itself.

Idē so to be accented rather than Idē. According to the ancient grammarians, the pronunciation of common dialect was Idē, λαδὲ, of the Attic Idē, λαδὲ. See Winer § vi. p. 55 sq.

* epile Pauλoς*] What is the exact force of this? Is it (1) An assertion of authority? 'I Paul, who received a direct commission from Christ, who have done and suffered so much for the Gospel and for you, who have so strong a claim on your hearing?' Or is it rather (2) An indirect refutation of calumnies? 'I Paul, who have myself preached circumcision forsooth, who say smooth things to please men, who season my doctrine to the tastes of my hearers?' For the latter sense, see 2 Cor. x. 1, where the words autōs de éw Pauλoς are used in combating the contemptuous criticism of his enemies; and compare his tone in i. 10 of this epistle; 'do I now persuade men?'

See also the notes on ii. 3, v. 11, and the introduction, p. 28. For the former sense compare perhaps Ephes. iii. 1. The two ideas are not incompatible: they are equally prominent elsewhere in this epistle, and may both have been present to St Paul's mind, when he thus asserts himself so strongly.

περιτέμνησθε 'suffer yourselves to be circumcised'; see the note on περιτεμνομένοι ver. 3.

3. The argument is this; 'Circumcision is the seal of the law. He who willingly and deliberately undergoes circumcision, enters upon a compact to fulfil the law. To fulfil it therefore he is bound, and he cannot plead the grace of Christ; for he has entered on another mode of justification.'

μαρτύρομαι de πάλιν] 'Christ benefit you! nay, I protest again.' The adversative sense of δέ is to be explained by the idea of ωφελήσῃ. Πάλιν refers to the preceding λέγω; 'I have said it, and I repeat it with protestation.'

μαρτύρομαι 'I protest,' i.e. I assert as in the presence of witnesses. The word signifies properly 'to call to witness'; and is never, except perhaps in very late Greek, equivalent to μαρτυρεῖ, 'I bear witness.' See the notes on I Thess. ii. 12. For the dative ἐν compare Acts xx. 26. This use of the dative is a remnant of the fuller construction μαρτυρεσθαι τῷ ἐν (Judith vii. 28 μαρτυρομέθα ύμῖν τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν), the accusative being suppressed and the verb used absolutely without reference to the person of the witness.

περιτεμνομένοι 'who undergoes circumcision,' as περιτέμνησθε ver. 2, and οἱ περιτεμνομένοι vi. 13 (the better reading). In all these cases the present tense is more appropriate than the past. It is not the fact of their having been circumcised which St. Paul condemns (for this is indifferent in itself), but the fact of their allowing themselves to be circumcised, being free agents.

4. καταργήθητε, ἐξεπέσατε] The aorists represent the consequences as instantaneous; 'Ye are then and there shut out from Christ.' For similar instances see Joh. xv. 6 ἐὰν μὴ τίς μείνῃ ἐν ἐμοί, ἐξῆλθε ἐξα ὑπὸ τὸ κλῆρον, Rev. x. 7: comp. Winer § xi. p. 345.

καταργήθητε ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ] a pregnant expression for καταργήθητε καὶ ἔχορισθητε ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ, 'Ye are nothing as regards Christ, ye are entirely separate from Him'; as Rom. vii. 2, 6; comp. 2 Cor. xi. 3 φραγμα τὰ νομίμα ὑμῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀπλότητος, Col. ii. 20.

οἵτων δικαιοῦσθε] 'all ye who seek your justification.' See on πενείμα, ver. 3.

ἐξεπέσατε] 'are driven forth, are banished with Hagar your mother': see iv. 30 ἐκβάλε ἡ τινὶ πατίσισιν. The words ἐκπέπτεναι and ἐκβάλεσαι are correlates in this sense; e.g. Thucyd. vi. 4 ὑπὸ Σαμίων καὶ ἄλλων ἱλίων ἐκπέπτοσιν...τόις δὲ Σαμίων Ἀναξίδεας ἰργίνων τίραννοι οὐ πολλῷ ὑπόπερν ἐκβαλὼν κτλ. For the form ἐξεπέσατε see Löbeck Phryn. p. 724, Winer § xiii. p. 86.

5. ήμείς γὰρ] 'for we, who are in union with Christ, see who cling to the covenant of grace.' γὰρ introduces an argument from the opposite, as in iii. 10.

πνεύματι] 'spiritually,' or 'by the Spirit.' It is almost always difficult and sometimes, as here, impossible to say when πνεύμα refers directly to the Holy Spirit and when not. From the nature of the case the one sense will run into the other, the spiritual in man, when rightly directed, being a manifestation, an indwelling of the Divine Spirit.

ἄπιστα] here used in a concrete sense, 'the thing hoped for'; comp. Col. i. 5 τὴν ἄπιστα τὴν ἀποκείμενην υἱῶν, Tit. ii. 13 προδεχόμενοι τὴν μακαρίαν ἄπιστα, Heb. vi. 18; and see the note on ἐπαγγελία, iii. 14.

ἀπεκδεχόμεθα'] 'wait eagerly,' or perhaps 'patiently'; used especially in speaking of the future redemption; comp. Rom. viii. 19, 23, 25, 1 Cor. i. 7, Phil. iii. 20. Compare the ἐπὶ ἐν ἀποκαραδοκία, and see a paper by C. F. A. Fritzsche in Fritzsche. Opusc. p. 156.

6. γὰρ] explaining the emphatic ἄπιστα which has gone before: 'By the Spirit, for the dispositions of the flesh, such as circumcision or uncircumcision, are indifferent: from faith, for faith working by love is all powerful in Christ Jesus.'

St Paul had before pronounced a direct and positive condemnation of circumcision. He here indirectly qualifies this condemnation. Circumcision is neither better nor worse than uncircumcision in itself (see especially 1 Cor. vii. 18—20, Gal. vi. 15). The false sentiment which attends it, the glorying in the flesh, makes the difference, and calls down the rebuke.

πίστις κτλ.] 'In his stat totus Christianismus,' says Bengel.

ἐνεργευόμεν] 'working'; the middle voice according to the general usage of St Paul. The Spirit of God or the Spirit of Evil ἐνεργεῖ; the human agent or the human mind ἐνεργεῖται: see the note on 1 Thess. ii. 13. On the other hand ἐνεργείσθαι is never passive in St Paul (as it seems to be taken here by Tertullian adv. Marc. v. 4, 'di-condo per dilectionem perfici'), and therefore this passage does not express the doctrine of 'fides caritate formata.'

These words ά'γάπης ἑνεργομενή bridge over the gulf which seems to separate the language of St Paul and St James. Both assert a principle of practical energy, as opposed to a barren, inactive theory.

Observe in these verses the connexion between the triad of Christian graces. The same sequence—faith, love, hope—underlies St Paul’s language here, which appears on the surface in 1 Thess. i. 3, Col. i. 4, 5. See the note on the former of these two passages.

7-11. ‘Ye were running a gallant race. Who has checked you in your mid career? Whence this disloyalty to the truth? Be assured, this change of opinion comes not of God by whom ye are called. The deserters are only few in number? Yes, but the contagion will spread: for what says the proverb? A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. Do not mistake me: I do not confound you with them: I confidently hope in Christ that you will be true to your principles. But the ringleader of this sedition—I care not who he is or what rank he holds—shall bear a heavy chastisement, What, brethren? A new charge is brought against me? I preach circumcision forsooth? If so, why do they still persecute me? It is some mistake surely! Nay, we shall work together henceforth! there is no difference between us now! I have ceased to preach the Cross of Christ! The stumblingblock in the way of the Gospel is removed!’

7. 'Ετρέχετε καλῶς' 'Ye were running bravely,' again a reference to St Paul’s favourite metaphor of the stadium. See ii. 2, i Cor. ix. 24—27, Phil. iii. 14, 2 Tim. iv. 7.

ένέκοψεν] a metaphor derived from military operations. The word signifies ‘to break up a road’ (by destroying bridges etc.) so as to render it impassable, and is therefore the opposite of προκόπτειν, ‘to clear a way,’ ‘to act as pioneer’; comp. Greg. Naz. Or. xiv. 31 (1. p. 279 ed. Ben.) ἡ κακία ἔγκοπτομένη δυσπαθεὶς τῶν ποιημάτων ἡ ἀρετής ὕσσωσθαι ἐνυπαθείς τῶν βελτιῶν. Hence it originally took a dative of the person, e.g. Polyb. xxiv. 1. 12, but the metaphor being subsequently lost sight of, the dative was replaced by an accusative, as always in the New Testament, e.g. Acts xxiv. 4, 1 Thess. ii. 18. Compare the passive, Rom. xv. 22, 1 Pet. iii. 7. See the note on φθονοῦντες, ver. 26.

The testimony in favour of ἐνέκοψεν is overwhelming. Otherwise the received reading δίκοςει suits the metaphor of the stadium better; for ἀνακόπτειν ‘to beat back’ would apply to the πασίγνωσία (Thuc. v. 50) who kept the course: comp. Lucian Nigr. § 35 (1. p. 77) ἐξεπίπτεσκε τε καὶ ἀνακοπτόμην, Polyc. § 5 ἀνακόπτεσθαι ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπίθυμων. The word ἄνακόπτειν seems to have given offence to transcribers: in 1 Thess. ii. 18, as here, ἀνακόπτειν stands as a various reading; in Acts xxiv. 4, 1 Pet. iii. 7, ἐκκόπτειν.

8. πεισμονῇ] with a faint reference to the preceding πειθεσθαι; ‘You have refused to obey the truth, you have rendered another obedience which is not of God.’ πεισμονή (Ignat. Rom. 3, Justin Apol. i. c. 53, p. 17 B; comp. πλησιμονύ, Col. ii. 23), like the English ‘persuasion,’ may be either active or 9 μικρά ζύμη ὀλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοῖ. 10 ἐγὼ πέποιθα εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐν Κυρίῳ, ὅτι οὖν ἄλλο φρονήσετε. ο ᾗ τε ταράσσων ὑμᾶς βαστάσει τὸ κρίμα, ὡστις ἐὰν ἦ. 11 ἐγὼ passive; 'the act of persuading,' referring to the false teachers; or 'the state of one persuaded,' referring to the Galatians themselves. The latter is perhaps simpler.

τοῦ καλοῦντος i.e. God, as always in St Paul; see Usteri Paul. Lehrbegr.
p. 269, and comp. i. 6, 15. The present is preferred here to the aorist, because the stress is laid on the per-sion rather than the act; see the note on i. Thess. v. 24, and comp. Winer § xlv. p. 444.

9. This proverb is quoted also in 1 Cor. v. 6. Comp. Hosen vii. 4.

Does it apply here (1) To the doctrine? 'If you begin by observing the law in a few points, you will end by selling yourselves wholly to it.'
(comp. v. 3); or (2) To the persons?
'Though the Judaizers may be but few now, the infection will spread to the whole body.' The latter is far more probable: for the prominent idea in the context is that of a small and compact body disturbing the peace of the Church; and the metaphor is thus applied also in 1 Cor. v. 7, where again it refers to the contagious example of a few evil-doers.

The leaven of Scripture is always a symbol of evil, with the single exception of the parable (Matt. xiii. 33, Luke xiii. 20, 21), as it is for the most part also in rabbinical writers: see Lightfoot on Matt. xvi. 6 and Schöttgen on 1 Cor. v. 6. Heathen nations also regarded leaven as unholy. Plu-tarch, Quaest. Rom. 109 (p. 289 E), in answer to the question why the Flan-men Dialis was not allowed to touch leaven, explains it, ἦ ἦ ζύμη καὶ γάγως ἐκ φθοράς αὐτῆς καὶ φείδει τὸ φύραμα μηγμαμένη. See Trench On the Parables, p. 111.

For the expression ζυμοῖν τὸ φύρα-μα see Exod. xii. 34.

10. ἐγὼ emphatic, 'I, who know you so well, who remember your forger zeal': iv. 14, 15.

πέποιθα] still dwelling on the same word, πείθεσθαι πεισμοῦ; see Winer § lxviii. p. 793 sq.

eἰς ὑμᾶς 'in regard to you'; see Winer § xlix. p. 496: comp. 2 Cor.
viii. 22 πεποίησεν πολλή τῇ εἰς ὑμᾶς,
2 Cor. ii. 3 πεποίθησα ἐπὶ πάντας ὑμᾶς
ὅτι κ.τ.λ., 2 Thess. iii. 4 πεποίησαν ἐν Κυρίῳ ἐὰν τί ρούσ ὁτι κ.τ.λ. As in the passage last cited, ἐν Κυρίῳ here denotes not the object of the writer's confidence, but the sphere in which it is exercised.

οὖν ἄλλο φρονήσετε] 'none otherwise minded,' either (1) 'than I bid you,' for though no direct command immediately precedes these words, there is one implied; or, as seems more probable, (2) 'than ye were before this disorder broke out'; see ἐτρίχετε καλῶς, ver. 7.

ταράσσων] 'raises seditions, excites tumults among you,' the metaphor being continued in ἀναστασίοιντες ver.
12. See the note on i. 7.

βαστάσει] 'shall bear as a burden;
shall press grievously on him': see
vi. 2, 5.

κρίμα] On the accent of this word, which is κρίμα in classical writers, see Lobeck Paral. p. 418, Fritzsche Rom.
Compare the note on στόλος, ii. 9.

ὡστις ἐὰν ἦ] i.e. 'whatever may be his position in the Church, however he may vaunt his personal intercourse with the Lord.' See 2 Cor. x. 7.

11. At this point the malicious charge of his enemies rises up before the Apostle; 'Why you do the same thing yourself; you caused Timothy to be circumcised.' To this he replies:
'What do I, who have incurred the deadly hatred of the Judaizers, who
"EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

V. 12]

ἀποκόψωνται οἱ ἀναστατοῦντες ύμᾶς.

am exposed to continual persecution from them, do I preach circumcision?

better, 'I would they... vengeance!' so it appears:) ἄρα introduces a false statement or inference also in 1 Cor. v. 10, xv. 14, 15, 18, 2 Cor. i. 17. It is here ironical; 'So I have adopted their mode of justification; I am silent about the Cross of Christ: no one takes offence at my preaching now; all goes on pleasantly enough!' The σταυρός here stands for the atoning death of Christ. The crucifixion of the Messiah was in itself a stumbling-block to the Jews, but preached as the means of atonement, it became doubly so: comp. 1 Cor. i. 23.

σκάνδαλον] almost confined, it would appear, to biblical and ecclesiastical Greek. σκανδάλιθρον however is a classical word, e.g. Arist. Ach. 687.

12. After this abrupt digression St Paul returns again to the false brethren: 'Why do they stop at circumcision? he asks indignantly, 'why do they not mutilate themselves, like your priests of Cybele?' The severity of the irony may be compared with 2 Cor. xi. 19, 'Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise,'

Circumcision under the law and to the Jews was the token of a covenant, To the Galatians under the Gospel dispensation it had no such significance. It was merely a bodily mutilation, as such differing rather in degree than in kind from the terrible practices of the heathen priests. Compare Phil. iii. 2, 3 βλέπετε τὴν καταμορφὴν ἡμεῖς γὰρ ἐσμέν ἐν ἑπετομῇ, where the same idea appears, clothed in similar language.

ἄφελον] Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 8, 2 Cor. xi. 1, in both of which passages the irony is plain. In this construction with the indicative, which appears only in later writers, the original meaning of ἄφελον is lost sight of, and it is treated as a mere particle; see Winer § xii. p. 377, A. Buttmann § 139, 10, p. 185.

ἀποκόψωνταί will not admit the rendering of the A. V., 'I would they were even cut off.' On the other hand the meaning given above is assigned to ἀποκόψωντα by all the Greek commentators, I believe, without exception (the Latin fathers, who read 'abscindantur' in their text, had more latitude), and seems alone tenable. See for instance ἀποκόπεσθαι was the common term for this mutilation. If it seems strange that St Paul should have alluded to such a practice at all, it must be remembered that as this was a recognised form of heathen self-devotion, it could not possibly be shunned in conversation, and must at times have been mentioned by a Christian preacher. For the juxtaposition of περιτέμενων and ἀποκόπτενων see Dion Cassius lxix. 11 (quoted by Bentley Crit. Sacr. p. 48), and compare Diod. Sic. iii. 31. The remonstrance is doubly significant as addressed to Galatians, for Pessinus one of their chief towns was the home of the worship of Cybele in honour of whom these mutilations were practised: comp. Justin Apol. i. p. 70 ε ἀποκόπτοντα τινες καὶ εἰς μητέρα θεῶν τὰ μυστήρια ἀναφέρουσα. See also [Bardesanes] de Fato § 20, in Cureton's Spic. Syr. p. 32. Thus by 'glorying in the flesh' the Galatians were returning in a very marked way
17. ὁ δὲ πνεῦμα ʿbut the Spirit strives, fights against the flesh.' Διὸ ἐπιθυμεῖ cannot apply to the Spirit, some other verb must be supplied in the second clause. Throughout this passage the πνεῦμα is evidently the Divine Spirit; for the human spirit in itself and unaided does not stand in direct antagonism to the flesh. See Müller's Doctrine of Sin 1. p. 354 sq.

18. ἐι δὲ πνεῦματι ἁγίωσθε, οὐκ ἐστε ὑπὸ νόμον. is to be looked for in the catalogue which follows, yet a partial and unconscious arrangement may perhaps be discerned. The sins here mentioned seem to fall into four classes: (1) Sensual passions, fornication, uncleanness, licentiousness; (2) Unlawful dealings in things spiritual, idolatry, witchcraft; (3) Violations of brotherly love, enmities...murders; (4) Intemperate excesses, drunkenness, revelings. From early habit and constant association a Gentile Church would be peculiarly exposed to sins of the first two classes. The third would be a probable consequence of their religious dissensions, inflaming the excitable temperament of a Celtic people. The fourth seems to be thrown in to give a sort of completeness to the list, though not unfittly addressed to a nation whose Gallic descent perhaps disposed them too easily to these excesses; see the introduction p. 13.

19. ‘Would you ascertain whether you are walking by the Spirit? Then apply the plain practical test.’ ἀναθεματίζειον, not ἀνάθεμα, ‘which are’; the list not being exhaustive, but giving instances only. See on iv. 24.
idea is sensuality, according to the loose definition in Etym. Magn. ἑτομοτρόποι. 2ος πᾶσαν ὡδὸν: comp. Polyb. xxxvii. 2 πολλή δὲ τις ἀσέλγεια καὶ περί τὰς σωματικὰς ἐπιθυμίας αὐτῶν συνεξολοθεῖ. Thus it has much the same range of meaning as ἔφιβος.

20. In spiritual things two sins are named; εἰδωλολατρεία the open recognition of false gods, and φαρμακεία the secret tampering with the powers of evil.

φαρμακεία] not 'poisoning' here, but 'sorcery, witchcraft;' as its association with 'idolatry' shows: comp. Rev. xxii. 8 φαρμακοῖς καὶ εἰδωλολατραῖς. On the different kinds of φαρμακεία see especially Plato Legg. xi. pp. 932, 933: comp. Philo de Migr. Adv. p. 449 ἐν οἷς ὄρας τοὺς ἐπαύοντο καὶ φαρμακεύτας ἀντιστοιχείονται τῷ θεῷ λόγῳ, Quod Det. Pot. p. 198 μὲν ἐν Ἀιγύπτῳ τῷ σώματι σοφιστὰς οὓς φαρμακεῖς ἐνομάζει, Plato Symp. p. 203 δὲ δεόν γονίς καὶ φαρμακεύς καὶ σοφιστής. This is a common sense of φαρμακεύς, φαρμακεία, in the LXX. It is a striking coincidence, if nothing more, that φαρμακεία were condemned by a very stringent canon outward manifestation to the inward feeling, see Trench, N. T. Syn. § xxxvii.

θυμός] 'outbursts of wrath.' On θυμός in its relation to ὀργή, as the outward manifestation to the inward feeling, see Trench, N. T. Syn. § xxxvii. p. 123. The plural is frequent even in classical writers; see Lobeck on Soph. Αϊ. 716.

εἰρήνεια] 'caballings.' Derived from ἐρίδος, the word signifies properly 'working for hire'; hence it gets to mean 'the canvassing of hired partisans' (Suidas, ἐρίδευσθαι δυών ἐστι τῷ δεκάεισθαι, καὶ γὰρ ἡ ἑρίδα ἐρίζεται ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ μισθοῦ δόσεως) and hence more generally 'factiousness'; comp. Arist. Polit. v. [viii.] 3, μεταβαλλόμενος δ' ἀν πολίτεωι καὶ ἄλλου στάσεως διά τῆς ἑρίδας δόστερ ἐν Ἡρακλ. εἰ ἐκείνων γὰρ διὰ τοῦτο ἑτοιμασάν κληρώτας, ὁτι
212 EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

[V. 21, 22]

'aipe<rets, [φόνοι], μέθαι, κώμοι, καὶ τὰ ὀμοια τοῦτοι; ἀ προλέγω ὡμίν καθὼς [καὶ] προείπον, ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσαστες βασιλείαν Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ τὴν κληρονομι­σούσιν. ἀ] ὅ δὲ καρπὸς τοῦ πνεύματός ἐστιν ἀγάπη, ἡρουντο τούτω ἐρημευόμενα. Thus it has no connexion with ἔρσ, unless indeed both are to be referred ultimately to the same root ἔρα, as is maintained by Lobeck Pathol. p. 365. Comp. Fritzsche Rom. i. p. 143. For ἐρθεία following upon ἔχλος see James iii. 14, εἴ δὲ ἐξολος τικρῶν ἐχέτε καὶ ἐρθείαν, and ib. ver. 16.

ἀιρέσεις] A more aggravated form of διχοστασία, when the divisions have developed into distinct and organized parties; comp. i Cor. xi. 18 διὰ τοῦ ἐχλοιοματα ἐν ὡμίν ὑπάρχειν καὶ κέρας τι πιστεύω, δεῖ γὰρ καὶ ἀιρέσεις ἐν ὡμίν ἐναί, and the remarks of Tertullian de Præsar. Haer. § 5, thereon.

21. φόνοι] On the distinction of ἔχλος the desire to be as well off as another, and φόνοι the desire to deprive another of what he has, see Aristotle Rhet. ii. 9, 10, 11, who says, διὸ καὶ ἐπεικές ἐστιν ὁ ἄχλος καὶ ἐπεικέως, τὸ δὲ φόνοιν φανεν καὶ φαν­λαν. Compare Trench N. T. Syn. § xxvi. p. 82, and to the references there given add Ἀσχ. Αγαμ. 939 ὁ δ’ ἀφθαρστός γ’ οὐκ ἐπίχλος πέλει, and Thucyd. ii. 64.

[φόνοι] is omitted by some editors with a few of the most ancient texts, as an interpolation from Rom. i. 29, where φόνου φόνου occur together. The fact however of the same alteration occurring in another epistle written about the same time is rather in its favour, and the omission in some texts may be due to the carelessness of a copyst transcribing words so closely resembling each other. The reading must therefore remain doubtful. Comp. Eur. Troad. 793 φόνου φόνου τε. For the paronomasia see Winer § lxviii. p. 658.

μέθαι, κώμοι] as Rom. xiii. 13; comp. Dion Cass. lxv. 3 μέθαι τε καὶ κώμοι.

ἀ προλέγω κ.τ.λ.] For the construction comp. Joh. viii. 54 δὴ ὡμίν λέγετε ὅτι Θεός ὑμῶν ἐστίν.

προείπον] probably on the occasion of his second visit. See i. 9, iv. 13, 16, and the introduction p. 25.

βασιλείαν κ.τ.λ.] Comp. i Cor. vi. 9, 10, x. 50.

22. ὅ δὲ καρπὸς] The Apostle had before mentioned the works of the flesh; he here speaks of the fruit of the Spirit. This change of terms is significant. The flesh is a rank weed which produces no fruit properly so called (comp. Eph. v. 9, 11, Rom. vi. 21); and St Paul's language here recalls the contrast of the fig and vine with the thorn and the thistle in the parable, Matt. vii. 16 sq.

22, 23. The difficulty of classification in the list which follows is still greater than in the case of the works of the flesh. Nevertheless some sort of order may be observed. The catalogue falls into three groups of three each. The first of these comprises Christian habits of mind in their more general aspect, 'love, joy, peace'; the second gives special qualities affecting a man's intercourse with his neigh­bour, 'long-suffering, kindness, benefi­cence'; while the third, again general in character like the first, exhibits the principles which guide a Christian's conduct, 'honesty, gentleness, temper­ance.'

ἀγάπη κ.τ.λ.] The fabric is built up, story upon story. Love is the founda­tion, joy the superstructure, peace the crown of all.

μακροβυμα κ.τ.λ.] This triad is again arranged in an ascending scale; μακρο­βυμα is passive, 'patient endurance under injuries inflicted by others';
χαρά, εἰρήνη, μακροθυμία, χρηστότης, ἀγαθωσύνη, πίστις, ἡ πραΰτης, ἐγκράτεια. κατὰ τῶν τουούτων οὐκ ἐστιν νόμος. ὡς δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἡσυχία τῆς σάρκας ἐσταύρωσαν σὺν τοῖς παθήμασιν καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις.

χρηστότης, neutral, 'a kindly disposition towards one's neighbours' not necessarily taking a practical form; ἀγαθωσύνη, active, 'goodness, beneficence' as an energetic principle. For the first two words compare 1 Cor. xiii. 4 ἡ ἀγάπη μακροθυμεῖ χρηστεύεται. The second is distinguished from the third as the θέος from the ἐνέργεια; χρηστότης is potential ἀγαθωσύνη, ἀγαθωσύνη is energising χρηστότης. They might be translated by 'benignitas' and 'bonitas' respectively, as Jerome renders them here, or by 'beneficentia' and 'beneficentia.' Other distinctions which have been given of these words are discussed in Trench's N. T. Syn. § lxiii. p. 218 sq.

πίστις seems not to be used here in its theological sense 'belief in God.' Its position points rather to the passive meaning of faith, 'trustworthiness, fidelity, honesty,' as in Matt. xxiii. 23, Tit. ii. 10; comp. Rom. iii. 3. See above, p. 157. Possibly however it may here signify 'trustfulness, reliance,' in one's dealings with others; comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 7 ἡ ἀγάπη...πάντα πιστεύει.

23. πραΰτης 'meekness' is joined with πίστις (used apparently in the same sense as here) in Ecclus. xlv. 4 ἐν πίστει καὶ πραΰτητι αὐτοῦ ὑγίασεν (sc. Μωυσῆν). On the meaning of πραΰτης see Trench N. T. Syn. §§ xliii., xliiiii. p. 140 sq.; and on the varying forms πράος (-οτος), πρᾶσι (-τος), Lobeck Phryn. p. 403, Lipsius Gram. Uners. p. 7. The forms in ν are the best supported in the New Testament: see A. Buttmann pp. 23, 24.

κατὰ τῶν τουούτων κ.τ.λ.] 'against such things.' Law exists for the purpose of restraint, but in the works of the Spirit there is nothing to restrain; comp. 1 Tim. ii. 9 εἰδὼς τούτο, ὦτι δικαῖος νόμος οὐ κεῖται, ἀνάμοι δὲ καὶ ἀνυπόκτοις κ.τ.λ. Thus then the Apostle substantiates the proposition stated in ver. 18, 'If ye are led by the Spirit, ye are not under law.'

24. οὖ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἡσυχία τὴν σάρκα, ἐσταύρωσαν σὺν τοῖς παθήμασιν καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις. "Ἡσυχία" which is struck out in the received text, ought probably to be retained. It is found in several of the oldest texts, and the omission in others is easily accounted for by the unusual order ὁ Χριστός Ἡσυχία. This order occurs also in Ephes. iii. 1, 11, Col. ii. 6, but in both passages with some variation of reading.

ἔσταυρώσαν 'crucified.' The aorist is to be explained either (1) By reference to the time of their becoming members of Christ in baptism, as Rom. vi. 6 ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν ἀνθρώπος συνεσταύρωθη; or (2) As denoting that the change is complete and decisive, without reference to any distinct point of time; see the note on ver. 4, κατεργάσθητε.

τοῖς παθήμασι κ.τ.λ.] 'the affections and the lusts.' Comp. Col. iii. 5, i Thess. iv. 5, and see Trench N. T. Syn. §§ xlvii, p. 305. The two words are chiefly distinguished as presenting vice on its passive and its active side respectively. Comp. Joseph. [1] Macc. § 3. At the same time παθήματα perhaps retains something of the meaning which it has in Greek philosophy; and, if so, it is more comprehensive than ἐπιθυμίας; see for instance Arist. Eth. Nic. ii. 4 λέγω δὲ πάθη μὲν ἐπιθυμίαν ὡργὴν φῶςον θρᾶσος κ.τ.λ.
25. Ἐπίστευτον τὴν πτυχὴν, πτυχὴν καὶ στοιχίωμαν. 25. μὴ γινόμεθα κενόδοξοι, ἀλλήλους προκαλούμενοι, ἀλλήλους φθονοῦντες.

26. ἀλλήλους φθονοῦντες.

25. 'You have crucified your old selves: you are dead to the flesh and you live to the Spirit. Therefore conform your conduct to your new life.' See Gal. ii. 19, 20, and especially Rom. vi. 2—14, where the same thoughts are expanded.

The 'life to the Spirit,' of which the Apostle here speaks, is an ideal rather than an actual life; it denotes a state which the Galatians were put in the way of attaining rather than one which they had already attained. Otherwise the injunction 'walk also by the Spirit' were superfluous. Comp. Col. iii. 1, Ephes. iv. 30. This is always St Paul's way of speaking. Members of the Christian brotherhood are in his language the 'saints,' the 'elect,' by virtue of their admission into the Church. It remains for them to make their profession a reality.

26. St Paul works round again to the subject of ver. 15, and repeats his warning. It is clear that something had occurred which alarmed him on this point. See the introduction, p. 14.

There is a gradation in the phrases used here. Vainglory provokes contention; contention produces envy.

[γινόμεθα] not ἀμέν. This vainglorying was a departure from their spiritual standard.

κενόδοξοι 'vainglorious.' So κενόδοξια, Phil. ii. 3, and occasionally in Polybius and later writers. In Wisd. xiv. 14 κενόδοξια seems to mean rather 'vain opinion,' 'folly.'

προκαλούμενοι] provoking, challenging to combat.' Both this word and φθονεῖν are ἀπαξ λέγομεν in the New Testament. In the LXX φθονεῖν occurs once only, Tob. iv. 16; προκαλεῖσθαι never.

ἀλλήλους φθονοῦντες] I have ventured to place the accusative in the text rather than the dative, in deference to a few excellent authorities, though I am not aware of any other example of φθονεῖν with an accusative of the person. It seems to be one out of many instances of the tendency of later Greek to produce uniformity by substituting the more usual case of the object for the less usual; see the note on γεγονότεν ver. 7. Comp. also Hebr. viii. 8 μεθ' ὑμῶν αὐτοὺς (the correct reading). So too πολεμεῖν takes an accusative, e.g. Ignat. Traill. 4.

VI. 1—5. 'As brethren, I appeal to you. Act in a brotherly spirit. I have just charged you to shun vainglory, to shun provocation and envy. I ask you now to do more than this. I ask you to be gentle even to those whose guilt is flagrant. Do any of you profess to be spiritually-minded? Then correct the offender in a spirit of tenderness. Correct and reinstate him. Remember your own weakness; reflect that you too may be tempted some day, and may stand in need of like forgiveness. Have sympathy one with another. Lend a ready hand in bearing your neighbours' burdens. So doing you will fulfil the most perfect of all laws—the law of Christ. But if any one asserts his superiority, if any one exalts himself above others, he is nothing worth, he is a vain self-deceiver. Nay rather let each man test his own work. If this stands the test, then his boast will be his own, it will not depend on comparison with others. Each of us has his own duties, his own responsibilities. Each of us must carry his own load.'

1. ἀδελφοί[ 'Brothers.' 'A whole argument lies hidden under this one word,' says Bengel. See iii. 15, iv. 12 and especially vi. 18.

The fervour and pathos of this appeal are perhaps to be explained by certain circumstances which engaged St Paul's attention at this time. A grave offence had been committed in the Church of Corinth. St Paul had called upon the Corinthian brethren to punish the offender; and his appeal had been promptly and zealously responded to. He had even to protest against undue severity, to interpose for the pardon of the guilty one. The remembrance of this incident still fresh on his mind may be supposed to have dictated the injunction in the text. The striking resemblance in his tone here to 2 Cor. ii. 6-8, where he is speaking of the Corinthian offender, bears out this conjecture. See the introduction, p. 54.

ἐὰν καὶ[ See the note on i. 8. προλημφθῇ[ 'be surprised, detected in the act of committing any sin,' so that his guilt is placed beyond a doubt. For this sense of προλημφαίνειν, 'to take by surprise, to overpower before one can escape,' see Wisd. xvii. 16 προλημφθείς τινι δεινόλυκτον ἡμεν ἀνάγκην: comp. καταληπται, Joh. viii. 4. The word cannot here mean 'be betrayed into sin,' for neither will the proposition ἐν admit this meaning, nor is it well suited to the context.

ὑμεῖς οἱ πνευματικοὶ[ St Paul had once and again urged them to walk by the Spirit: (v. 16, 25). This explains the form of address here; 'Ye who have taken my lesson to heart, ye who would indeed be guided by the Spirit.' Their readiness to forgive would be a test of their spirituality of mind. It might indeed be supposed that the Apostle was here addressing himself especially to the party of more liberal views, who had taken his side against the Judaizers, and in their opposition to ritualism were in danger of paying too little regard to the weaker brethren; comp. Rom. xv. 1 ὑμεῖς οἱ δυσαρεί. In this case there would be a slight shade of irony in πνευματικόν. The epistle however betrays no very distinct traces of the existence of such a party in the Galatian Churches (see v. 13), and indeed the context here is far too general to apply to them alone. For οἱ πνευματικοὶ, see 1 Cor. ii. 13, 15, iii. 1.

καταρτίζετε[ 'correct, restore.' The idea of punishment is quite subordinate to that of amendment in καταρτίζετε, which on this account is preferred here to κολάζετε or even νοιτεῖτε, though the latter occurs in a similar passage, 2 Thess. iii. 15 μι ὡς ἕχον ἠγείρθη διὰ νοιτεῖτε ἃς ἄδελφον. On καταρτίζειν see the note 1 Thess. iii. 10. It is used especially as a surgical term, of setting a bone or joint; see the passages in Wetstein on Matt. iv. 21. ἐν πνεύματι πράσκετος] Comp. 1 Cor. iv. 21 ἐν ἀγάπῃ πνεύματι τε πράσκετος.
Gentleness is a characteristic of true spirituality. By their conduct towards wrong-doers their claim to the title of paeumatiaki would be tested.

The transition from the plural to the singular gives the charge a direct personal application; 'each one of you individually.' Compare the kal sv, and see the note on iv. 7.

'2. 'If you must needs impose burdens on yourselves, let them be the burdens of mutual sympathy. If you must needs observe a law, let it be the law of Christ.' The Apostle seems to have used both bap and vómov (the latter certainly), with a reference to the ritualistic tendencies of the Galatians; see above vv. 13, 14. For the idea of the burden of the Mosaic law compare especially Luke xi. 46 foróptéte tois ánthropous foróia dvoazbástata, Acts xv. 10 épithéinai sývov dén oúte os patéres émous oúte émous iochuv-samenv bapstásos, ver. 28 mév dén plénos építhédshai émín bárros. For the 'law of Christ,' always in contrast to the law of Moses, see I Cor. ix. 21, 7, xv. 9, 10, 2 Cor. xii. 11.

2. 'If you must needs impose burdens on yourselves, let them be the burdens of mutual sympathy. If you must needs observe a law, let it be the law of Christ.' The Apostle seems to have used both bárap and vómov (the latter certainly), with a reference to the ritualistic tendencies of the Galatians; see above vv. 13, 14. For the idea of the burden of the Mosaic law compare especially Luke xi. 46 foróptéte tois ánthropous foróia dvoazbástata, Acts xv. 10 épithéinai sývov dén oúte os patéres émous oúte émous iochuv-samenv bapstásos, ver. 28 mév dén plénos építhédshai émín bárros. For the 'law of Christ,' always in contrast to the law of Moses, see I Cor. ix. 21, 7, xv. 9, 10, 2 Cor. xii. 11.

2. 'If you must needs impose burdens on yourselves, let them be the burdens of mutual sympathy. If you must needs observe a law, let it be the law of Christ.' The Apostle seems to have used both bárap and vómov (the latter certainly), with a reference to the ritualistic tendencies of the Galatians; see above vv. 13, 14. For the idea of the burden of the Mosaic law compare especially Luke xi. 46 foróptéte tois ánthropous foróia dvoazbástata, Acts xv. 10 épithéinai sývov dén oúte os patéres émous oúte émous iochuv-samenv bapstásos, ver. 28 mév dén plénos építhédshai émín bárros. For the 'law of Christ,' always in contrast to the law of Moses, see I Cor. ix. 21, 7, xv. 9, 10, 2 Cor. xii. 11.
than by ἀπαράδεξιον, for it brings out the idea of subjective fancies and thus enforces the previous ὀρθά. It was possibly coined by St Paul, for it seems not to be found in any earlier writer, and at a later date occurs chiefly, if not solely, in ecclesiastical authors.

4. τὸ δὲ ἐργόν ἑαυτοῦ 'his own work'; ἐργόν, emphatic by its position, stands in contrast to ὀρθά and φρενάρατος; and this contrast is enhanced by the addition of ἑαυτῷ.

ἐργοῖν ἑαυτοῦ δοκιμαζέτω ἐκάστος, καὶ τότε εἰς ἑαυτὸν μόνον τὸ καύχημα ἐξελ, καὶ οὐκ εἰς τὸν ΄έτερον. ἕκαστος γὰρ τὸ ἴδιον φορτίον βαστάσει.

establish any precise distinction between φορτίον here and ἐμπροσθεν, ver. 2. This much difference however there seems to be, that the latter suggests the idea of an adventitious and oppressive burden, which is not necessarily implied in the former; so that ἐμπροσθεν points to a load of which a man may fairly rid himself when occasion serves, φορτίον to a load which he is expected to bear. Thus φορτίον is a common term for a man's pack, e.g. Xen. Mem. iii. 13. 6. Here it is perhaps an application of the common metaphor of Christian warfare in which each soldier bears his own kit (φορτίον), as each is supplied with his own provisions (ἐφόδια, Clem. Rom. 2), and each receives his proper pay (ἡμῶν ἑαυτῷ ἐπομ. I Cor. ix. 7, Iguat. Pol. 6). The soldier of Christ sets out on his march, 'Non secus ac patriis acer Romanus in armis Injusto sub fasce viam cum carpit.' If so, βαστάζειν τὸ ἴδιον φορτίον refers rather to the discharge of the obligations themselves than to the punishment undergone for their neglect.

βαστάζειν 'is appointed to bear, must bear.' Each man has certain responsibilities imposed on him individually, which he cannot throw off. For the future tense see ii. 16, Winer § xxv. p. 296.

6. 'I spoke of bearing one another's loads. There is one special application I would make of this rule. Provide for the temporal wants of your teachers in Christ.' Δὲ arrests a former topic before it passes out of sight; see the note iv. 20. Otherwise it might be taken as qualifying the clause which immediately precedes: 'Each man must bear his own burden; but this law does not exempt you from supporting your spiritual teachers.' Such a turn of the sentence however, inas
6.

κοινωνεῖτω δὲ ὁ κατηχούμενος τὸν λόγον τῷ κατηχούντι ἐν πάσιν ἄγαθοῖς. μὴ πλανᾶσθε, Θεὸς οὐ μυκτη-ρίζεται: ὃ γὰρ ἐὰν σπέιρῃ ἄνθρωπος, τούτο καὶ θερίσει.

much as it is not obvious, might be expected to be marked in some more decided way than by the very faint opposition implied by δί.

6. κοινωνεῖτω] 'let him impart to'; literally 'let him go shares with.' The word is properly intransitive and equivalent to κοινωνέως εἶναι 'to be a partner with.' It may be construed with all three cases: (1) The genitive of the thing which is participated in: once only in the New Testament, Heb. ii. 14 κοινωνήσαντες αἵματος καὶ σαρ κόσ; comp. Prov. i. 11, 2 Macc. xiv. 25. In this case the verb may denote either the person who gives or the person who receives. (2) The accusative of the thing imparted, as Ἑσχ. c. Cleo. p. 63 οἱ ἀποδόμοι καὶ κατα-κοινωνόντες τὰ τῆς πλῆς ἱσχύρα, a rare construction not found perhaps with the simple verb, and due in the passage quoted to the preposition. (3) The dative, which is explained by the idea of partnership implied in κοινωνεῖ, and expresses the person or thing with which the other makes common cause. He who κοινωνεῖ in this case may be either the receiver, as Rom. xvi. 27 τοῖς πνευματικοῖς αὐτῶν ἐκοινώσαν τὰ ἔθη, or the giver, as Rom. xii. 13 τοῖς χρήματι τῶν ἀγίων κοινωνού-

τες. Here the latter is intended.

κατηχούμενος 'instructed.' The word in this sense is not peculiar to biblical Greek. κατηχεῖσις 'oral instruction' occurs as early as Hippocrates p. 23. 25 κατηχήσις ἰδιώτεων, and probably κατηχεῖν 'to instruct' was in common use in the other dialects, though it would seem to have been banished from the Attic of the classical period. See the remarks on ἀπόστολος, p. 92 note 3.

ἐν πάσιν ἄγαθοῖς] 'in all good things.'

The obligation of the hearers of the word to support the ministers of the word is again and again insisted upon by St Paul, though he seldom asserted his own claims; see 1 Thess. ii. 6, 9, 2 Cor. xi. 7 sq, Phil. iv. 10 sq, 1 Tim. v. 17, 18, and especially 1 Cor. ix. 7. The resemblance of language in this last passage leaves no doubt that St Paul is here speaking of imparting temporal goods. The metaphor of sowing and reaping both there and in the very close parallel, 2 Cor. ix. 6, has reference to liberality in almsgiving. The more general sense which has been assigned to this passage, 'let the taught sympathize with the teacher in all good things,' is not recommended either by the context or by St Paul's language elsewhere. For ἄγαθος, 'temporal blessings,' see Luke i. 53, xii. 18, 19, xvi. 25. Compare Barnabas § 19 κοινωνήσεις ἐν πάσιν τῷ πλησίον σου.

7. 8. 'What! you hold back? Nay, do not deceive yourselves. Your niggardliness will find you out. You cannot cheat God by your fair professions. You cannot mock Ἃμ. According as you sow, thus will you reap. If you plant the seed of your own selfish desires, if you sow the field of the flesh, then when you gather in your harvest, you will find the ears blighted and rotten. But if you sow the good ground of the Spirit, you will of that good ground gather the golden grain of life eternal.'

7. οὐ μυκτηρίζεται 'is not mocked.' Μυκτηρίζεω, which is properly 'to turn up the nose at,' 'to treat with contempt,' involves as a secondary meaning the idea of contradicting one's language by one's gesture or look, and so implies an outward avowal of
VI. 8, 9]

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

8. The former verse speaks of the kind of seed sown (ὅ ἐν σπείρῃ). In the present the metaphor is otherwise applied, and the harvest is made to depend on the nature of the ground in which it is cast (εἰς), as in the parable of the sower. In moral husbandry sowers choose different soils, as they choose different seeds. The harvest depends on both the one and the other. For St Paul's diversified application of metaphors, see the notes on ii. 20, iv. 19.

εἰς τοῦ σπείραν εἰς τὴν σάρκα ἐαντοῦ ἡ τῆς σαρκὸς θερίσει φθοράν, ὁ δὲ σπείραν εἰς τὸ πνεῦμα ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος θερίσεις ζωὴν αἰώνιον. ᾧ τὸ δὲ καλὸν ποιrespect neutralised by an indirect expression of contempt. In other words it conveys the idea of irony, whether this irony be dissembled or not. Thus μυκτήρ is frequently connected with εἰρωνεία, as in Lucian Prom. c. 1; compare Pollux ii. 78 καὶ τὸν εἰρωνεῖα τίνες μυκτήρα καλοῦν. In writers on rhetoric μυκτηριμοός is ordinarily treated as a species of εἰρωνεία; see for instance four different treatises on 'tropes' in the Rhet. Graec. iii. pp. 205, 213, 235, 254 (ed. Spengel). Similarly Quintilian, viii. 6, 59, well defines it, 'dissimulatus quidam sed non latens risus.' Such is the force of μυκτηριμετα in this passage: 'you cannot with impunity turn your professions to contempt, you cannot without God indulge in a postica sanna.'

ὃ γὰρ ἐὰν κ.τ.λ.] A common proverb not only in the Bible (Job iv. 8), but elsewhere; e.g. Cic. de Orat. ii. 65 'ut sementem feceris, ita metes,' and Gorgias in Arist. Rhet. iii. 3 σ᾽ ὑπὲρ τοῦ καλοῦ πλοῦτος μὲν ἑπετερα πολλοὺς ὑπὸ ἑπετερας (see Plato Phaedr. 260 ε, Thompson's note). It occurs in 2 Cor. ix. 6, of the contributions for the brethren of Judaea. To this object the Galatians also had been asked to contribute (1 Cor. xvi. 1). We may therefore conjecture that niggardliness was a besetting sin with them (see p. 14); that they had not heartily responded to the call; and that St Paul takes this opportunity of rebuking their backwardness, in passing from the obligation of supporting their ministers to a general censure of illiberality. See p. 55.

9. Having passed from a particular form of beneficence (ver. 6) to beneficence in general (vv. 7, 8), the Apostle still further enlarges the compass of his advice; 'Nay, in doing what is honourable and good let us never tire.' Compare 2 Thess. iii. 13 μὴ ἐγκακήσῃς καλοποιοῦται. The word καλοποιῶν includes ἀγαθοποιῶν and more, for while τὰ ἀγαθὰ are beneficent actions, kind services, etc., things good in their results, τὰ καλὰ are right actions, such as are beautiful in themselves, things absolutely good. In this passage, as in 2 Thess. i. c., the antithesis of καλὸν and κακὸν seems to be intended, though it can scarcely be translated into English; 'in well doing let us not show an ill heart.'
οὖντες μὴ ἐγκακώμεν· καὶ ὡς γὰρ ἴδιοθερίσομεν μὴ ἐκλυόμενοι. Ὡρὰ ὦν ὡς καὶ ἐχομεν, ἐργαζόμεθα

ἐγκακώμεν] 'turn cowards, lose heart'; ἐγκακεῖν or ἐνακεῖν is the correct word in the New Testament, not ἐκκακεῖν. It is read persistently in a few of the best MSS, though in all six passages where it occurs ἐκκακεῖν is found as a various reading; see the note on 2 Thess. iii. 13.

καὶ ὡς 'at its proper season,' i.e. the regular time for harvest; comp. 1 Tim. ii. 6, vi. 15, Tit. i. 3.

μὴ ἐκλυόμενοι] 'if we faint not,' as husbandmen overcome with heat and fatigue. Comp. James v. 7. For ἐκ-λυέσθαι compare 1 Macc. iii. 17, Matt. xv. 32, Mark viii. 3. On the synonyms here used Bengel remarks: 'ἐκκακεῖν [rather ἐγκακεῖν] est in velle, ἐκλυέσθαι est in posse.' To this it may be added that ἐκλυέσθαι is a consequence of ἐγκακεῖν; the prostration of the powers following on the submission of the will.

10. ὡς καὶ ἐχομεν] 'as we find a seasonable time, as opportunity presents.' The καὶ here answers to the καὶ of the former verse. There is a time for sowing as there is a time for harvest. ὡς is perhaps best translated as above. There is however no objection to rendering it 'while we have time'; comp. Joh. xii. 35 ὡς τὸ φῶς ἔχετε (as it is read in the best MSS), Ignat. Smyrn. 9 ὡς ἔτι καὶ ἐχομεν, [Clem. Rom.] ii. 8 ὡς οὖν ἔστω ἐν γίγνετο, ἦν. § 9 ὡς ἔχομεν καὶ ὡς. The distinction is introduced by translation; the original ὡς covers both meanings.

τοὺς οἰκείους κ.τ.λ.] 'the members of the household of the faith'; compare Ephes. ii. 19 συναγωνία τῶν ἔχων καὶ οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ. Similarly the Church is elsewhere spoken of as the house of God, 1 Tim. iii. 15, 1 Pet. iv. 17; comp. 1 Pet. ii. 5, Heb. iii. 6. We need not therefore hesitate to assign this meaning to οἰκεῖοι here. Comp. Clem. Rec. p. 45, l. 31 (Syr.). In this case τῆς πίστεως will probably be nearly equivalent to τοῦ εὐαγγελίου; see above, p. 157. On the other hand, οἰκείοι τούς is not an uncommon phrase in profane writers for 'acquainted with,' e.g. φιλοσοφίας, γεωγραφίας, ὁλογραφίας, τυραννίδος, τρυφές; see the passages in Wetstein: but this sense would be insipid here.

II. At this point the Apostle takes the pen from his amanuensis, and the concluding paragraph is written with his own hand. From the time when letters began to be forged in his name (2 Thess. ii. 2, iii. 17), it seems to have been his practice to close with a few words in his own handwriting as a precaution against such forgeries. Frequently he confined himself to adding the final benediction (2 Thess. iii. 17, 18), with perhaps a single sentence of exhortation, as 'If any one love not the Lord Jesus Christ, etc.' (1 Cor. xvi. 21—24), or 'Remember my bonds' (Col. iv. 18). In the present case he writes a whole paragraph, summing up the main lessons of the epistle in terse eager disjointed sentences. He writes it too in large bold characters, that his handwriting may reflect the energy and determination of his soul (see above, p. 65). To this feature he calls attention in the words which follow.

'Ἰδε τ.κ.λ.] 'Look you in what large letters I write with mine own hand.' In the English version the words are translated 'How large a letter I have written with mine own hand.' It is true indeed that γράφω sometimes signifies 'a letter' (Acts xxviii. 21, 1 Macc. v. 10, comp. Ignat. Polyc. 7, Clem. Hom. xii. 10), and therefore πεπίλα γράφωσι sometimes mean 'how long a letter'; but on the other hand, it seems equally clear that
VI. 11] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. 221

to ἀγαθῶν πρὸς πάντας, μάλιστα δὲ πρὸς τοὺς οἰκείους tῆς πίστεως.

II. Ἡ ἔδει τῇ ἔγγραψεν ὑμῖν γράμμασιν ἔγγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ γράμμασιν γράφειν 'to write with letters' cannot be used for γράμματα γράφειν 'to write a letter.' On this account the other interpretation must be preferred. But what is the Apostle's object in calling attention to the handwriting? Does he, as Chrysostom and others have supposed, point to the rude ill-formed characters in which the letter was written, as though he gloried in his imperfect knowledge of Greek? But where is there any mention of rudeness of form? and is it at all probable that St Paul who had received a careful education at Jerusalem and at Tarsus, the great centres of Jewish and of Greek learning, should have betrayed this childlike ignorance and even gloried in it? Or again does he, as others imagine, refer to the physical difficulties under which he was labouring, the irregularity of the handwriting being explained by his defective eyesight or by his bodily suffering? But here again πηλικος denotes size only, not irregularity; and altogether this explanation is forced into the passage from without, nor does the sentence in this case contain the key to its own meaning. Theodore of Mopsuestia has caught the point of the expression, explaining it ἀγαθον μείζων ἐχόσασο γράμμασιν ἐμφαῖνων ὅτι οὐδὲ αὐτὸς ἔργον ἄρα ἀρνεῖται τὰ λεγόμενα. The boldness of the handwriting answers to the force of the Apostle's convictions. The size of the characters will arrest the attention of his readers in spite of themselves.

ὑμῖν] Its right place is after πηλικος, though a few MSS have transposed the words. Standing therefore in this position, it cannot well be taken with ἔγγραψα, 'I write' or 'I wrote to you'; but is connected rather with πηλικος, which it emphasizes, 'how large, mark you'; see e.g. Plat. Theaet. p. 143 ἐ ἀκούσαν πάνι ἐξεύ ὑμῖν τῶν πολυtῶν μειρακια ἐπετύχηκα.

ἔγγραψα Ἐγγραφα, 'I write,' the epistolary aorist, conveniently translated by a present. According to the view here adopted, it marks the point at which St Paul takes the pen into his own hand. For other instances of this epistolary ἔγγραψα see Philerm. 19, 21, ⅰ Pet. v. 12, ⅰ Joh. ii. 14, 21, 26, v. 13;
comp. ἐσπειρα, Heb. xiii. 22. The objection, that the aorist cannot be so used except at the close of a letter and in reference to what goes before, seems to be groundless; for (1) it fails to recognise the significance of the epistolary aorist, the explanation of the past tense being that events are referred to the time at which the letter is received: (2) There are clear in­ estances of the past tense used as here, e.g. in Mart. Polyc. § 1 ἔγγραψαν ὑμῖν, διδομον, τα κατά τους μαρτυρήσανtος, these words occurring immediately after the opening salutation;
comp. ἐπεμψα, Acts xxiii. 30, 2 Cor. ix.
3, Ephes. vi. 22, Col. iv. 8. The usage of the epistolary past (the imperfect and pluperfect) is still more marked in Latin, and is clearly explained by Madvig Gr. § 345. Thus ἔγγραψα in no way prejudices the question whether the whole letter or the last paragraph only was written by St Paul.

12, 13. 'Certain men have an object in displaying their zeal for carnal ordinances. These are they, who would force circumcision upon you. They have no sincere belief in its value.
Their motive is far different. They hope thereby to save themselves from persecution for professing the cross of Christ. For only look at their incom­ χειρὶ. ἐστὶν χειρὶς νῶτος εὔπροσωπήσαι ἐν σαρκὶ, ὡς τὸν ἄναγκαζουσίν ὡς περιτεμνεσθαι, μόνον ἣν τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ μὴ διώκωνται. "οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ περιτεμνόμενοι αὐτοῦ νόμον φυλάσσουσιν, ἀλλὰ χείλουσιν ὡμᾶς sistency. They advocate circumcision, and yet they themselves neglect the ordinances of the law. They would make capital out of your compliance; they would fain boast of having won you over to these carnal rites.'

It was not against bigotry alone that St Paul had to contend; his opponents were selfish and worldly also; they could not face the obloquy to which their abandonment of the Mosaic ordinances would expose them; they were not bold enough to defy the prejudices of their unconverted fellow-countrymen. And so they attempted to keep on good terms with them by imposing circumcision on the Gentile converts also, and thus getting the credit of zeal for the law. Even the profession of Jesus as Messiah by the Christians was a less formidable obstacle to their intercourse with the Jews than their abandonment of the law.

12. εὐπροσωπήσαι κ.τ.λ.] 'to show fair in the flesh,' i.e. 'to make a pretentious display of their religion in outward ordinances.' The emphasis seems to lie as much on εὐπροσωπήσαι as on ἐν σαρκὶ, so that the idea of insincerity is prominent in the rebuke. Thus the expression is a parallel to our Lord's comparison of the whited sepulchres, ὡς ἡ τὰς φαλάντας τῶν σεπυλωντος (Matt. xxiii. 27). The adjective εὐπροσώπος is not uncommon in classical Greek, and generally has this sense, 'specious, plausible,' e.g. Demosth. p. 277 λόγους εὐπροσώπους καὶ μύσις συνθεί καὶ διεκ διακ. The verb εὐπροσωπίζω (1) occurs in Symmachus, Ps. cxiii. 6.

ἐν σαρκὶ] 'in the flesh,' i.e. in external rites. It has been taken by some as equivalent to σαρκικοὶ νῶτες, but, besides that this interpretation is harsh in itself, ἐν σαρκὶ here cannot well be separated from ἐν τῇ ὑπερτέρᾳ σαρκί of the following verse.

μόνον ἣν] seemingly elliptical; 'only (their object in doing so is) that they may not etc.' See the note on ii. 10. τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ] not as it is sometimes taken, 'with the sufferings of Christ,' but 'for professing the cross of Christ.' A comparison with ver. 14 and v. 11 seems to place this beyond a doubt. The cross of Christ and the flesh are opposed, as faith and works. They are two antagonistic principles, either of which is a denial of the other. For the dative of the occasion compare Rom. xi. 20, 30, 2 Cor. ii. 13.

διώκουσιν.] The reading διώκουσι, however well supported, can only be regarded as a careless way of writing διώκουσιν. In the same way in ver. 10 many texts read ἔργαζόμεθα for ἔργαζομέθα; compare Rom. v. 1, ἔρχομαι and ἔρχομαι.

13. οὐδὲ γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] 'for even the advocates of circumcision themselves do not keep the law.' The allusion here is not to the impossibility of observing the law, the distance from Jerusalem for instance preventing the due sacrifices, for this would argue no moral blame; but to the insincerity of the men themselves, who were not enough in earnest to observe it rigorously.

οἱ περιτεμνόμενοι] 'the circumcision party, the advocates of circumcision.' See the apt quotation from the apocryphal book Act. Petr. et Paul. § 63 (p. 28, ed. Tisch.), where Simon says of the two Apostles, οὕτω οἱ περιτεμνόμενοι πανηγυροῖς εἶμαι, to which St Paul replies, πρὸ τοῦ ήμᾶς εὑπρωσώναι περιτείμνεσθαι, ἵνα ἐν τῇ ύμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχῆσονται.
VI. 14, 15] EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

223

14. Ἐμοὶ δὲ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶσθαι, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, διὸ ὡς ἐμοὶ κόσμος ἐ-σταύρωται καὶ γάμῳ κόσμῳ. ὃς γὰρ περιτομὴ τι ἐστὶν tὴν ἐλθεῖν σαρκὸς ἐσχαμεν περιτομὴν" óτε δὲ ἐφάνη ἡ ἐλθεία, ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ περιτομῆς καὶ περιτείμνεσθαι καὶ πεritέμνουμεν: and compare the somewhat similar classical usage in the expression ὁδόντης Plat. Theat. p. 181 A. See the note i. 23. If this interpretation be correct, the present tense leaves the question open whether the agitators were converted Jews or converted proselytes. The former is more probable; for proselytes would not be so dependent on the good opinion of the unconverted Jews. The balance of authority is perhaps in favour of reading περιτείμνομεν rather than περιτεῖμνοι, as the versions which have a present tense may safely be urged in favour of the former, while those which have a past cannot with the same confidence be alleged to support the latter; but independently of external authority, a preference must be given to περιτείμνομεν, as the original reading, of which περιτεί-μνήμην is so obvious a correction.

νάμον] 'They are no rigorous observers of law,' regarded as a principle. On the absence of the article, see the references in the note on v. 18.

ὑμᾶς, ύμετέρα] opposed to αὐτοῖς;

'Indifferent themselves, they make capital out of you.'

ἐν τῇ ύμετέρᾳ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. that they may vaunt your submission to this carnal rite and so gain credit with the Jews for proselytizing. Comp. Phil. iii. 3 καυχάμενοι ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ οὐκ ἐν σαρκὶ πεποιθότες.

14. 'For myself—God forbid I should glory in anything save in the cross of Christ. On that cross I have been crucified to the world and the world has been crucified to me. Henceforth we are dead each to the other. In Christ Jesus old things have passed away. Circumcision is not and uncircumcision is not. All external distinctions have vanished. The new spiritual creation is all in all.'

μὴ γένοσθαι] with the infinitive. This is the common construction in the lxx, Gen. xliv. 7, 17, Josh. xxii. 29, xxiv. 16, 1 Kings xxi. 3, 1 Macc. ix. 10, xiii. 5. ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ] Again not 'in my sufferings for Christ' (2 Cor. xii. 9, 10), but 'in His sufferings for me' (Phil. iii. 3). The offence of the cross shall be my proudest boast.

δὲ οὖ] probably refers to σταυρῷ; 'The cross of Christ is the instrument of my crucifixion as of His; for I am crucified with Him' (ii. 20). If the relative bad referred to Xπιττοῦ, we should have expected rather ἐν ἰ or σῖν δ. For the same image as here compare Col. ii. 14 αὐτὸ ἦκεν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου προσηλώσασι αὐτῷ τῷ σταυρῷ (i.e. it was nailed with Christ to the cross, and rent as His body was rent); and for the general purport of the passage, Col. ii. 20, 'If ye died with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why as if living in the world are ye subject to ordinances?' This κόσμος, the material universe, is the sphere of external ordinances.

Some texts insert the article before κόσμος and κόσμῳ—before either or both. It should be expunged in both places with the best mss. The sentence thus gains in terseness.

15. This verse has been variously lengthened out and interpolated from the parallel passage, v. 6. Some of these interpolations have very considerable ms authority. The reading adopted is the shortest form, and doubtless represents the genuine text.

In this annihilation of the world all external distinctions have ceased to be. This sentence occurs again, v. 6 and 1 Cor. vii. 19, in substantially the same words.

Nevertheless this passage is said by several ancient authors (Photius Amphil. Qu. 183, G. Syncellus Chronogr. p. 27; see also Cotel. on Apost. Const. vi. 16, Cod. Bodl. Ethiop. p. 24) to be a quotation from the 'Revelation of Moses.' A sentiment however, which is the very foundation of St Paul's teaching, was most unlikely to have been expressed in any earlier Jewish writing; and, if it really occurred in the apocryphal work in question, this work must have been either written or interpolated after St Paul's time; see Lücke Off. d. Johann. i. p. 232. Cedrenus (Hist. Comp. p. 4) states that the Revelation of Moses was identified by some persons (φασιν) with the 'Little Genesis.' This latter title is another name for the Book of Jubilees, which of late years has been discovered in an Ethiopic translation. In the Book of Jubilees however the words in question do not occur; see Ewald's Järhb. iii. p. 74.

καυνή κτίσις 'a new creature.' Compare the parallel passage, 2 Cor. v. 17 εἰς ἐν Χριστῷ καυνή κτίσις. This phrase καυνή κτίσις, ἀνωτέρωσις κτισάτα, is a common expression in Jewish writers for one brought to the knowledge of the true God. See the passages in Schöttgen i. p. 704. The idea of spiritual enlightenment as a creating anew appears also in παλιγγενεσία 'regeneration'; see also Ephes. iv. 24 καυνήν ἀνωτρισμὸς κτισάτα; comp. Ephes. ii. 10, 15, Col. iii. 10; and 2 Cor. iv. 16, ἀνακαυνώσθαι.

16. 'On all those who shall guide their steps by this rule may peace and mercy abide; for they are the true Israel of God.'

δόσω] 'as many as;' no matter whether they are of the circumcision or of the uncircumcision.'

σταυχήσουσιν] 'shall walk.' This reading is to be preferred to σταυχώσων, both as having somewhat higher support and as being slightly more difficult. It is at the same time more expressive as implying the continuance of this order. Compare ii. 16, Rom. iii. 30, and see Winer § xl. p. 350.

κανών] 'by this line;' corresponding to the meaning of σταυχίς. Kanów is the carpenter's or surveyor's line by which a direction is taken. In 2 Cor. x. 13, 16, it is used metaphorically, where the image is taken from surveying and mapping out a district, so as to assign to different persons their respective parcels of ground. For the several senses through which this word has passed, and for its ecclesiastical meaning especially, see Westcott On the Canon, App. a, p. 541 sq. On the dative see the notes, v. 16, 25; comp. Phil. iii. 16 τῷ αὐτῷ σταυχίς, where κανών is interpolated in some texts from this passage.

καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰσραήλ κ.τ.λ.] 'yea upon the Israel of God.' Israel is the sacred name for the Jews, as the nation of the Theocracy, the people under God's covenant: see Trench's N. T. Syn. § xix. p. 129 sq, and compare Ephes. ii. 12 ἰδέατος τῆς πολιτείας τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, Rom. ix. 4. oūtēs εἰσών Ἰσραήλιτα, δὲν ἡ νόησις κ.τ.λ. (comp. 2 Cor. xi. 22, Phil. iii. 5), John i. 48 ἰδέα δηλοῦ Ἰσραήλιτις, compared with ver. 50 σὺ βασιλεὺς εἰς τὸν Ἰσραήλ. St Paul is perhaps referring here to the benediction εἰρήνῃ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰσραήλ, which closes Psalms cxix, cxxviii, and must have been a familiar sound in the ears of all devout Israelites.

The 'Israel of God' is in implied
It stands here, contrast not aspect, as in Heb. xi. I and thus of believers whether Jew or Gentile; circumcision alone, but for the spirit of man had begun it, with an uncompromising assertion of his office: 'Henceforth let no man question my authority: let no man thwart or annoy me. Jesus is my Master, my Protector. His brand is stamped on my body. I bear this badge of an honourable servitude.'

'toù λοιπον' ['henceforth'] differs from το λοιπον, as 'in the time to come' from 'throughout the time to come.' Compare νυκτος and νυκτα. In the New Testament it occurs only here and Ephes. vi. 10, where however the received reading is το λοιπον.

τα στιγματα ['the brands,' i.e. the marks of ownership branded on his body. These στιγματα were used; (1) In the case of domestic slaves. With these however branding was not usual, at least among the Greeks and Romans, except to mark such as had attempted to escape or had otherwise misconducted themselves, hence called στιγμαια, 'literati' (see the ample collection of passages in Wetstein), and such brands were held a badge of disgrace; Pseudo-Phocyl. 212 στιγματα μη γράφης επονειδίων θεραπονta, Senec. de Benef. iv. 37, 38. (2) Slaves attached to some temple (λειψωδουλοι) or persons devoted to the service of some deity were so branded: Herod. ii. 115 συν ἀνθρώπων ἐπίβαλε στιγματα Ἴρα, λουτρων διδομεν τα βεβα, ουκ ἔξεστι τούς δρασας, Lucian de Dea Syr. § 59 στιγμαια δε πάντες οι μεν εσκαρμονται κατεκυρων οι δε εσειχναι; Philo de Mon. p. 221 M.: comp. 3 Macc. ii. 29. The passage of Lucian is a good illustration of Rev. xiii. 16, 17. (3) Captives were so treated in very rare cases. (4) Soldiers sometimes branded the name of their commander on some part of their body; see Deyling Obs. Sacra ii. p. 427. The metaphor here is most appropriate, if referred to the second of these classes. Such a practice at all events cannot have been unknown in a country which was the home of the worship of Cybele. A λεπός δολος is mentioned in a Galatian inscription, Texier Asie Mineure i. p. 135.

The brands of which the Apostle speaks were doubtless the permanent marks which he bore of persecution undergone in the service of Christ: comp. 2 Cor. iv. 10 την πέρασιν του Ἰησου ἐν τῷ σώματι περιφέροντες, xi. 23. See the introduction, p. 51 sq.

Whether the stigmata of St Francis of Assisi can be connected by any historical link with a mistaken interpretation of the passage, I do not know. Bonaventura in his life of this saint (§ 13. 4) apostrophizes him in the language of St Paul, 'Jam enim propter stigmata Domini Jesu quae in corpore tuo portas, nemo debet tibi esse molestus'; and the very use of the word 'stigmata' (which is retained untranslated in the Latin Versions) points to such a connexion. On the other hand, I am not aware that this interpretation of the passage was current in the age of St Francis. A little later Aquinas paraphrases the words, 'portabat insignia passionis Christi,' but explains this expression away in the next sentence.
18 'H χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί. ἀμήν.

ʼΙησοῦ] So it is read in the majority of the older mss. All other variations, including the received reading τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, are inferior, for the personal name of the owner alone is wanted.

βαστάζω] St Chrysostom has probably caught the right idea, οὐκ εἶπεν ἔχω ἀλλὰ βαστάζω, ὥσπερ τις ἐπὶ προσπαθεῖς μέγα φρονῶν. Compare the use of περιφέρεσις in 2 Cor. iv. 10 already quoted. For βαστάζω see Acts ix. 15.

18. μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν] 'with your spirit'; perhaps in reference to the carnal religion of the Galatians, as Chrysostom suggests. This allusion however must not be pressed, for the same form of benediction occurs in Philem. 25, 2 Tim. iv. 22.

ἀδελφοί] 'brothers,' in an unusual and emphatic position; comp. Philem. 7. St Paul’s parting word is an expression of tenderness; 'Ita mollitur,' says Bengel, 'totius epistolae severitas.' See the note on vi. 1.
The Patristic Commentaries on this Epistle.

The patristic commentaries on the Galatians, extant either whole or in part, are perhaps more numerous than on any other of St Paul's Epistles. The earlier of these have for the most part an independent value; the later are mere collections or digests of the labours of preceding writers and have no claim to originality. In the list which follows an asterisk is prefixed to the name of the author in cases where fragments only remain.

In drawing up this account I have had occasion to refer frequently to Cave's Script. Eccles. Hist. Liter. (Oxon. 1740), to Fabricius's Bibliotheca Graeca (ed. Harles), and to Schröckh's Christliche Kirchengeschichte. Special works relating to the subject, to which reference is also made, are Simon's Histoire Critique des Principaux Commentateurs du N. T. (1693), Rosenmüller's Historia Interpretationis Librorum Sacrorum (1795—1814), and a treatise by J. F. S. Augustin in Nösselt's Opusc. iii. p. 321 sq.

1. EARLIER COMMENTARIES.

(a) Greek and Syrian Fathers.

(i) *ORIGENES († 253). The recently discovered list of Origen's works drawn up by Jerome mentions fifteen books on the Epistle to the Galatians, besides seven homilies on the same (Redepenning in Niedner's Zeitschr. 1851, pp. 77, 78); while the same Jerome in the preface to his Commentary (vii. p. 370, ed. Vall.) says of this father, 'Scrispsit ille vir in epistolam Pauli ad Galatas quinque proprium volumina et decimum Stromatum suorum librum commatico super explanatione ejus sermonem complevit: tractatus quoque varius et excerpta quae vel sola possint sufficere compositum.' The two accounts are not irreconcilable. Of this vast apparatus not a single fragment remains in the original, and only two or three have been preserved in a Latin dress either in the translation of Pamphilus's Apology (Origen, Op. iv. p. 690, Delarue), or in Jerome's Commentary (Gal. v. 13). On the other hand there can be no doubt that all subsequent writers are directly or indirectly indebted to him to a very large extent. Jerome especially avows his obligations to this father of Biblical criticism. In my notes I have had occasion to mention Origen's name chiefly in connexion with fanciful speculations or positive errors, because his opinion has rarely been recorded by later writers, except where his authority was needed to sanction some false or questionable interpretation: but the impression thus produced is most unjust to his reputation. In spite of his very patent faults, which it costs nothing to denounce, a very considerable part of what is valuable in subsequent commentaries, whether ancient or modern, is due to him. A deep thinker, an accurate grammarian, a most laborious worker, and a most earnest Christian, he not only laid the foundation, but to a very great extent built up the fabric of Biblical interpretation.

(ii) EPHRAEM SYRUS († 378), the deacon of Edessa. An Armenian Ephraem version of a commentary on the Scriptures, including St Paul's Epistles, purporting to be by this author, was published at Venice in 1836. If this work be genuine, it ought to be of some value for the text at all events, if not for the interpretation. On this writer see Cave i. p. 235, Fabricius viii. p. 217, Schröckh xv. p. 527; and the article by E. Rödiger in Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie, with the references there given. Lagarde (Apost. Const. p. vi) very decidedly maintains the genuineness of these Armenian works; and Rödiger seems also to take this view. In the few passages which I have had the opportunity of testing, both the readings and the interpretation are favourable to their genuineness.
228

School of Antioch.

The five writers whose names follow all belong to the great Antiochene school of interpreters. For its grammatical precision, and for its critical spirit generally, this school was largely indebted to the example of Origen, whose principles were transmitted to it through Lucian of Antioch and Pamphilus of Caesarea, both ardent Biblical critics and both martyrs in the Diocletian persecution; but in its method of exposition it was directly opposed to the great Alexandrian, discarding the allegorical treatment of Scripture and maintaining for the most part the simple and primary meaning. The criticisms of these commentators on Gal. iv. 21—31 exhibit the characteristic features of the school to which they belonged. Theodore of Mopsuestia is its best typical exponent, being at once the most original thinker and the most determined antagonist of the allegorists. On the Antiochene school see Neander Church Hist. ii. p. 498, iii. p. 497 sq (Eng. trans.), Reuss Gesch. d. Heil. Schr. § 518 (3te ausg.), Kuhn Die Bedeutung der Antioch. Schule (1867), Th. Forster Chrysostom u. sein Verhältniss zur Antiochenischen Schule (1869).

Eusebius of Emisa.

(iii) EUSEBIUS EMISENUS ( about 360), so called from the name of his see Emsea or Emisa (Hums), a native of Edessa. A few fragments of his work are preserved in Cramer's Catena, pp. 6, 8, 12, 20, 28, 32, 40, 44, 57, 62, 64, 65, 67, 91. It is described by Jerome, as 'ad Galatas libri decem' (de Vir. Illust. c. 91). Eusebius enjoyed a great reputation with his contemporaries, and these scanty fragments seem to indicate an acute and careful expositor. His writings are the subject of monographs by Augusti Eusebii Emeseni Opusc. Gr. etc. 1829, and by Thilo Ueber die Schriften d. Euseb. v. Alexandrien u. d. Euseb. v. Emisa (1832). See also Fabricius vii. p. 412, Schröckh v. p. 68 sq. The publication of Cramer's Catena has since added materials for an account of this writer.

Chrysostom.

(iv) JOANNES CHRYSOSTOMUS (+ 407). This father's commentary on the Galatians differs from his expositions of other parts of the New Testament, in that it is not divided into separate discourses, nor interrupted by long perorations, which in his Homilies break the continuity of the subject. This gives it compactness and adds considerably to its value. At the same time though advertised, seems never to have appeared.

1 Zenker Bibl. Orient. also mentions as published at Venice in 1833 a book by Aucher, bearing the title S. P. Ephraemi Syri Comment. in Epist. S. Pauli etc. ex antiquissima Armenica versione nunc primum latinitate donatum. But it is not included in a recent catalogue of the works printed at the Armenian press at Venice, and it would seem from its character to have been intended for oral delivery. It is an eloquent popular exposition, based on fine scholarship. The date is uncertain, except that it was written at Antioch, i.e. before A.D. 398, when St Chrysostom became Patriarch of Constantinople (see the preface of the Benedictine edition, x. p. 655). It appears not to have been known to Jerome when he wrote his own commentary. In his controversy with Augustine indeed, which arose out of that commentary, he alludes to the opinion of Chrysostom on the collision of the Apostles at Antioch, but distinctly refers to a separate homily of the great preacher devoted to this special subject (‘proprie super hoc capitulo latissimum exaravit librum,’ Hieron. Epist. cxii. See above, p. 131 sq). The exposition of the Galatians may be read in the Benedictine edition of Chrysostom’s works x. p. 657; or still better in Field’s edition of the Homilies (Oxon. 1852).

2 Through the kindness of Dr Rieu of the British Museum I have been able in some important passages to give the readings and interpretations of Ephraem in my commentary. [On this work see further in Essays on Supernatural Religion, 1889, p. 287 sq.]

(v) Severianus (about 400), bishop of Gabala in Syria, first the friend Severian and afterwards the opponent of Chrysostom; see Schröckh x. p. 458 sq. He wrote an Expositio in Epistolam ad Galatas (Gennad. de Vir. Illust. c. 21, Hier. Op. II. p. 981). Gennadius speaks of him as ‘in divinis scripturis eruditus.’ Several fragments of this work are preserved in Cramer’s Catena, pp. 16, 18, 23, 29, 39, 40, 45, 55, 58, 59, 64, 66, 70, 82, 93, and one at least in the Ecumenian commentary (Gal. i. 13). Like most writers of the Greco-Syrian School he maintained the literal meaning of Scripture against the allegorists. See Cave i. p. 375, Fabricius x. p. 507.

(vi) Theodorus Mopsuestenus († 429), a native of Tarsus, so called Theodore from the see of Mopsuestia which he held. He wrote commentaries on all of St Paul’s Epistles; see Ebed Jesu’s Catalogue in Asseman. Bibl. Orient. iii. p. 32. Several fragments of these in the original are preserved in the Catena, and have been collected and edited by O. F. Fritzche Theod. Mops. Comment. in N. T. (1847). This editor had before written a monograph De Theodori Mopsuesteni Vita et Scriptis (1836). Fritzche’s monograph and collection of fragments are reprinted in the edition of Theodore’s works in Migne’s Patrol. Graec. lxvi. But though only portions survive in the Greek, the complete commentaries on the smaller epistles from Galatians to Philemon inclusive are extant in a Latin translation. These commentaries, from Philippians onwards, had been long known in the compilation of Rabanus Maurus (Migne’s Patrol. Lat. cxix), where they are incorporated nearly entire under the name of Ambrose; and a few years since Dom Pitra, Spicil. Solesm. r. p. 49 sq (1852), printed the expositions of the Galatians, Ephesians, and Philemon complete, and supplied the omissions and corrected the errors in the extracts on the remaining epistles in Rabanus, ascribing the work however to Hilary of Poitiers.

In the Corbey ms which he used, these commentaries of Theodore on the shorter epistles were attached to the exposition of the Ambrosiaster or pseudo-Ambrose (who seems to have been one Hilary; see below, p. 232) on Romans and Corinthians, and the two together were entitled Expositio Sancti Ambrosii in Epistolae B. Pauli. This circumstance accounts for their being assigned to St Ambrose in Rabanus, as it also suggested the conjecture of Dom Pitra, that the great Hilary was their author. The true authorship was ascertained by Professor Hort\(^1\) from a comparison with the Greek fragments of Theodore, and pointed out by him in the Journ. of Clas. and Sacr. Phil. iv. p. 332 (Camb. 1859). Though much marred by an indifferent Latin translator\(^2\), this commentary is inferior in importance to the works of Jerome and Chrysostom alone among the patristic expositions now extant. Theodore was a leader of religious thought in his day, and as an expositor he has frequently caught the Apostle's meaning where other commentators have failed\(^3\). Among his contemporaries he had a vast reputation, and was called by the Nestorian Christians 'the Interpreter' par excellence; see Renaudot Lit. Orient. ii. p. 616. In the Catholic Church of a later date the imputation of heresy overshadowed and darkened his fame. On this writer see Fabricius x. p. 346 sq (esp. p. 359), Rosenmüller iii. p. 250 sq, Schröck xv. p. 197 sq.

1 The fragments assigned to Theodore in Mai Nov. Patr. Bibli. vii. r. p. 403 are none of his, but belong to Theodore.

Theodore. (vii) Theodoret († about 458), bishop of Cyrus, a native of Antioch and a disciple of Theodore. His commentaries on St Paul are superior to his other exegetical writings and have been assigned the palm over all patristic expositions of Scripture. See Schröck xvii. p. 398 sq, Simon p. 314 sq, Rosenmüller iv. p. 93 sq, and the monograph of Richter de Theodoretto Epist. Paulin. interprete (Lips. 1822). For appreciation, terseness of expression, and good sense, they are perhaps unsurpassed, and, if the absence of faults were a just standard of merit, they would deserve the first place; but they have little claim to originality, and he who has read Chrysostom and Theodore of Mopsuestia will find scarcely anything in Theodoret which he has not seen before. It is right to add however that Theodoret himself modestly disclaims any such merit. In his preface he apologizes for attempting to interpret St Paul after two such men (μετὰ τὸν δείκνυ σαλ τὸν δείκνυ) who are 'luminaries of the world'; and he professes nothing more than to gather his stores 'from the blessed fathers.' In these expressions he alludes doubtless to Chrysostom and Theodore.

Euthalius. (viii) Euthalius, afterwards bishop of Sulce (supposed to have been in Egypt, but as no such place is known to have existed there, probably Sulce in Sardinia is meant; see the Notitia printed in Hierocl. Synecd. p. 79, ed. Parthey), wrote his work while a young man in the year 458. On his date see Zacagni Collect. Mon. Vet. i. pp. 402, 536, Fabricius ix. p. 287. Euthalius edited the Epistles of St Paul, dividing them into chapters (κεφάλαιαι) and verses (τις λόγοι), writing a general preface and arguments to the several epi-

\(^1\) Whilst the first edition of this work was going through the press, my attention was directed by Dr Hort to an article by J. L. Jacobi in the Deutsche Zeitschr. f. Christl. Wissensch. Aug. 1854, in which, unknown to him, his conclusions had been anticipated. A more recent writer (Reinkens Hilarius von Poitiers, Schaffhausen 1864) states fairly the objections to Dom Pitra's view, but is apparently ignorant that the question of authorship is no longer a matter of conjecture.

\(^2\) Thus for instance he makes Theodore fall into the common error of interpreting ὑπερτοχεί, Gal. iv. 25, 'is contiguous to' ('affinis,' 'confinis'); but the context, as well as the Greek fragment which has ἱδοδωτακεί, shows that the blunder is the translator's own.

\(^3\) The first volume of a very careful edition of these Commentaries has recently appeared, by the Rev. H. B. Swete, Cambridge, 1880.
stles, and marking and enumerating the scriptural quotations. The divisions into chapters and the headings of the chapters he borrowed from some earlier writer (Zacagni, p. 528), probably the same whose date is given as A.D. 396 (ib. 536). Mill conjectures this person to have been Theodore of Mopsuestia; Proleg. pp. lxxxvi, lxxxvii. Reasons however have been assigned for thinking that Euthalius in this work was largely indebted to a much earlier critic, Pamphilus the martyr († 309): see Tregelles in Horne's Introduction, p. 27. On the stichometry of Euthalius see Mill Proleg. p. xx, Scrivener's Introduction, pp. 49, 58, and especially Tregelles, l. c. Though not a commentary, the work is sufficiently important in its bearing on the criticism of St Paul's Epistles to deserve a place here. It was first printed entire in Zacagni's Collect. Mon. Vet. i. p. 402 sq, and may be found in Gallandi x. p. 197 sq.

(ix) *GENNADIUS († 471), patriarch of Constantinople. A few extracts Gennadius in the printed editions of the Òcumenian Catena bear the name of Gennadius, and the number might be increased by consulting the mss. I suppose these are rightly attributed to the patriarch of Constantinople, among whose works they are included in Migne's Patrol. Græc. lxxxv. p. 1611, for they can scarcely be assigned to any other of the name. So far as I know, there is no record of any work on St Paul by this or any Gennadius. The fragments on the Galatians indeed are so scanty that they do not in themselves warrant us in assuming a special work on this epistle, but the numerous extracts on the Epistle to the Romans in Cramer's Catena must certainly have been taken from a continuous exposition.

(x) *PHOTIUS († about 891), patriarch of Constantinople. For the fullest information on the writings of this great man, see Fabricius x. p. 670 sq. Large fragments bearing the name of Photius are preserved in the Òcumenian Catena, taken it would appear from a Commentary on St Paul's Epistles no longer extant. Cave indeed asserts (II. p. 49) that a ms exists in the Cambridge University Library, and this statement is repeated by Fabricius, xi. p. 33, and others. This is a mistake. The ms in question (Ff. i. 30), which is incorrectly labelled with the name of Photius, proves—as far at least as relates to the Epistle to the Galatians—to contain a collection of notes identical with that of the Òcumenian Catena. It is accurately described in the new Catalogue. These fragments of Photius do not contribute much that is new to the criticism of St Paul, but they are an additional testimony to the extensive learning and intellectual vigour of the writer.

(b) Latin Fathers.

(i) C. Marcus Victorinus (about 360), an African, surnamed the Philosopher, converted to Christianity in old age, taught rhetoric at Rome when Jerome was a boy. He wrote commentaries apparently on all St Paul's Epistles (Hieron. de Vir. Illustr. 101, prof. ad Gal.), of which the expositions of the Galatians, Philippians, and Ephesians alone are extant. They were first published by Mai Script. Vet. Nov. Coll. iii. 2, p. 1 (1828), and may be found in Migne Patr. Lat. viii. p. 1145. It is difficult to understand the reputation which Victorinus had for eloquence. His work on the Galatians is obscure, confused, and as an exposition almost worthless, but it now and then preserves a curious fact (e.g. about the Symmachians, p. 16) and is interesting as the earliest extant commentary on this epistle. There is a lacuna from v. 18 to the end of the chapter. On this writer see Mai's Preface, p. x sq, and the article in Smith's Dict. of Biography.

Hilary. (ii) Ambrosiaster, so called because his commentary was wrongly ascribed to St Ambrose and is commonly printed with the works of that father: see the Benedictine Edition, 11 App. p. 20 sq. It is however quoted by Augustine (cont. Duas Epist. Pelag. iv. 7, x. p. 472, ed. Ben.) under the name ‘sanctus Hilarius,’ and is generally ascribed in consequence to Hilary the Roman deacon who lived about the middle of the fourth century and attached himself to the Luciferian schism. The epithet ‘sanctus’ however is not likely to have been applied by St Augustine to this person, and it must remain doubtful what Hilary was intended, except that we cannot possibly ascribe these commentaries to the great Hilary of Poitiers. The author, whoever he was, wrote during the pontificate of Damasus (see his note on 1 Tim. iii. 15) who was bishop of Rome from 366 to 384. See Schröck vi. p. 210, xiv. p. 310. This work, which includes the thirteen epistles of St Paul, is one of the best Latin commentaries. A good account of it is given in Simon p. 133 sq: see also Rosenmüller iii. p. 589 sq. I have generally quoted this commentator as the Ambrosian Hilary, or as Hilary simply.

Jerome. (iii) Eusebius Sophronius Hieronymus. His Commentarii in Epistolam ad Galatas (vii. p. 367 ed. Vallarsi) were written about the year 387 (Hieron. Vit. xi. p. 104). In his preface he speaks of himself as undertaking a task unattempted by any Latin writer (he afterwards excepts Victorinus, of whom he speaks contemptuously), and treated by very few even of the Greeks in a manner worthy of the dignity of the subject. It is clear from this that he had not seen the work of the Ambrosiaster, which perhaps had only been published a few years before. Of the Greeks he singles out Origen, whose labours he extols highly and whom he professes to have followed. Besides Origen, he mentions having read Didymus (of Alexandria, who died in 396 at an advanced age: see Fabricius ix. p. 269) whom in allusion to his blindness he calls ‘my seer’ (videntem meum), one Alexander whom he designates an ancient heretic (of whom nothing is known), ‘the Laodicene who has lately left the church’ (meaning Apollinarius; see Fabricius viii. p. 589), Eusebius of Emisa, and Theodorus of Horaclea († about 355; see Fabricius ix. p. 319). Of these writers he speaks loosely as having left ‘nonnullos commentariolos,’ which were not without their value. All these he read and digested before commencing his own work. Though abounding in fanciful and perverse interpretations, violations of good taste and good feeling, faults of all kinds, this is nevertheless the most valuable of all the patristic commentaries on the Epistle to the Galatians: for the faults are more than redeemed by extensive learning, acute criticism, and lively and vigorous exposition.

Augustine. (iv) Aurelius Augustinus; ‘Expositio Epistolae ad Galatas,’ written about 394 and apparently without consulting previous commentators (see p. 130, note 3), of whom he shows no knowledge. The great excellences of Augustine as an ‘Interpreter of Scripture’ are sufficiently vindicated by Archbishop Trench (in his introduction to the 'Exposition of the Sermon on the Mount') against the attacks of writers who had too little sympathy with his tone of mind to appreciate his merits: but spiritual insight, though a far diviner gift than the critical faculty, will not supply its place. In this faculty Augustine was wanting, and owing to this defect, as a continuous expositor he is disappointing. With great thoughts here and there, his commentary on the Galatians is inferior as a whole to several of the patristic expositions.

(v) Pelagius, the great heresiarch, wrote his commentaries on the thirteen epistles of St Paul in Rome, and therefore not later than 410, before the Pelagian controversy broke out. Strangely enough in the middle of the 6th century, when Cassiodorus wrote, learned men assigned them to Pope Gelasius. Stranger still they have at a later date been fathered upon Jerome, and are generally printed in the editions of his works (xl 2, p. 135 ed. Vall). The true authorship however is established almost beyond a doubt by the quotations and references of Augustine and Marius Mercator, the contemporaries of Pelagius. On the other hand some of the passages given by Marius Mercator are wanting in the extant copies; but history supplies the clue to this perplexity. About the middle of the sixth century Cassiodorus (Inst. Dia. Lit. c. 8), finding this commentary tainted with Pelagian errors, expurgated the Epistle to the Romans by removing the heretical passages, and thus set an example, as he tells us, which might be followed the more easily by others in the remaining epistles. In its present form then this commentary is mutilated. The notes are pointed and good, but meagre. The high estimation in which they were held, in spite of the cloud which hung over their author, and the fact of their being attributed both to Gelasius and to Jerome, are high testimonies to their merits. Good accounts of this commentary will be found in Simon p. 236 sq, Schröckh xiv. p. 338 sq, and Rosenmüller iii. p. 503 sq.

(vi) Magnus Aurelius Cassiodorus (+ after 562). 'Complexiones in Cassiodori-Epistolae Apostolorum, in Acta et in Apocryphae,' first brought to light and published by Scipio Maffei in 1721. It was reprinted by Chandler (1722 and 1723), and may be found in Migne's Patrol. Lat. lxx. p. 1343. This work consists of a few reflexions on detached passages, utterly valueless in themselves. It has a peculiar interest however as containing traces of 1 Joh. v. 7. See Schröckh xv. p. 153, Rosenmüller v. p. 412 sq.

2. Secondary Commentaries, excerpts, compilations, and collections of later variorum notes, mostly of a later date.

(a) Greek Writers.

These are compiled from the Greek fathers already mentioned, but especially from Chrysostom.

1 Migne's Patrol. Lat. lxx. p. 1119 sq. The identity of the work of which Cassiodorus speaks with this commentary is inferred from his description, for he does not himself mention the true author, though protesting against assigning it to Gelasius. On the other hand Cassiodorus a little later mentions what apparently he regards as another work the description of which would suit this commentary equally well: 'Tertium vero codicem reperi epistolorum Sancti Pauli, qui nonnullile beati Hieronymi annotationes brevissimas dicitur continere, quem vobis pariter Christo largiante dereliqui.'

(ii) ANONYMOUS CATENA (date uncertain), first published by Cramer (Oxon. 1842). The authorship of the comments is very frequently noted (though not always correctly) either in the text or in the margin, but sometimes they are anonymous. The portion on the Galatians seems to be made up entirely of extracts from four commentators. Chrysostom is by far the largest contributor; Theodore of Mopsuestia comes next; and a few fragments (enumerated above, pp. 228, 229) bear the names of Eusebius of Emisa and Severianus. Of the anonymous fragments, those which belong to Chrysostom and Theodore can be verified: and such as remain after this verification ought probably to be assigned to either Eusebius or Severianus.

(iii) ŒCUMENIUS (10th century), bishop of Tricca in Thessaly. The work which bears his name is a catena on the Acts and Epistles, to which he is one of the less important contributors. See especially Simon p. 458, and comp. Fabricius viii. p. 693, Rosenmüller iv. p. 263. Though this commentary seems to be anonymous in the mss, it appears on the whole more probable than not, from internal evidence, that Œcumenius was also the compiler of the Catena, adding to it a few notes of his own. The affirmative is maintained by Hentenius in the preface to his edition (Paris, 1630); the negative by J. F. S. Augustin de Cat. Patr. Græc. p. 366. There are considerable variations in the different mss of this work; see Fabricius l. c. p. 696, and Cramer's Catena p. 411. The names on the margin of the printed editions in the portion relating to the Galatians are Photius (apparently by far the largest contributor), Joannes (i.e. Chrysostom), Gennadius, Severianus, Theodoret, Cyril, and Œcumenius. The mss in some instances supply names to extracts which in the printed editions are anonymous. The few extracts from Cyril do not appear to be taken from a commentary on this epistle.

(iv) THEOPHYLACTUS (latter part of the 11th century), archbishop of Acris in Bulgaria. His commentary on St Paul's Epistles is founded chiefly on Chrysostom, with the aid of some other of the Greek fathers. The manner of execution has secured it a high reputation, but it possesses no independent value. On this commentary see Simon p. 403, Augustin p. 346, comp. Fabricius vii. p. 591.

To these should be added the commentary of EUTHYMIUS ZIGABENUS (about 1110), which is said to exist in mss, but has never been printed.

(b) Latin Writers.

These are derived from the four Latin commentators, Hilary (Ambrosiaster), Jerome, Augustine, and Pelagius, directly or indirectly.

(i) PRIMASIUS (about 550), bishop of Adrumetum in Africa, wrote a commentary on all St Paul's Epistles, including the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Apocalypse. It is a brief and fairly executed compilation from the Latin fathers already noticed, the most successful of these secondary commentaries. The editio princeps is by Gagnée (Lyons, 1537). This work

It will be seen that the majority of the commentaries which follow were written about the middle of the ninth century within a period of a few years. The interest in Biblical studies was evidently very keen at this time, especially in France, and may be traced to the influence of our own Alcuin. I have already had occasion to speak of a similar period of activity in the history of Biblical interpretation during the latter half of the fourth and beginning of the fifth centuries, having its head-quarters at Antioch. In one respect these movements present a remarkable parallel. The first followed upon the establishment of Christianity as the religion of the Roman Empire under Constantine; the second upon the consolidation and extension of Western Christendom under Charlemagne. Thus the two most prominent epochs in the history of Biblical interpretation during the early centuries were ushered in by the two political events which exerted incomparably the greatest influence on the practical working of the Church; and it seems not unreasonable to attribute them in some measure to the stimulus given by these events. In real importance however the second of these two epochs in Biblical criticism bears no comparison with the first. It was feeble in character, and wholly unoriginal, and has therefore left no permanent stamp on the interpretation of Scripture. The Commentaries on the Epistle to the Galatians belonging to this period are derived entirely from one or more of the four great Latin expositors already mentioned either directly or through the medium of Primasius, together with the Latin translation of Theodore's work (then attributed to St Ambrose) which was made use of in some cases, and here and there a passage culled from the writings of Gregory the Great. Yet among these commentators, who were thus content to compile from the labours of their predecessors, are found the names of some of the ablest and most famous churchmen of their day.

(ii) Sedulius (Scotus? 8th or 9th century). ‘In omnes S. Pauli Sedulius. Epistolae Collectaneum,’ compiled from the Latin fathers, a direct reference being occasionally given. This writer, whenever he lived, is certainly to be distinguished from Sedulius the Christian poet of the 5th century, with whom he has been confused. See Cave ii. p. 15, Simon p. 379. This commentary is printed in Magn. Bibl. Vet. Patr. v. 1, p. 438, and in Migne's Patrol. Lat. cit. p. 181.

(iii) Claudius Taurinensis († about 840), less correctly called ‘AItis- Claudius, siodorensis’ or ‘Autissiodorensis’ (of Auxerre), a Spaniard by birth, but bishop of Turin. Of his commentaries on St Paul, the exposition of the Epistle to the Galatians alone is printed (Magn. Bibl. Vet. Patr. ix. p. 66, Migne's Patrol. Lat. citv. p. 838), but other portions exist or did exist in ms, and references are made to them in Simon p. 353 sq, where the fullest account of this writer will be found. See also Schröckh xxiii. p. 281, Cave ii. p. 16.

(iv) Florus Lugdunensis, surnamed ‘Magister’ († after 852). A Florus. commentary on St Paul's Epistles, being a catena from the works of Augustine. The portion relating to the Galatians is not taken from Augustine's exposition of the epistle, but is culled from his works generally. This commentary is printed among the works of Bede (vi. p. 690, ed. Basil. 1563), to whom it was ascribed; but the probable authorship was pointed out by Mabillon Vet. Anal. pp. 18, 488 (1723). On this work see Simon p. 339, Cave ii. p. 24. It is printed in Migne's Patrol. Lat. xxix. p. 363.

(v) Rabanus Maurus († 856), archbishop of Mentz. Enarrationum in Epistolas B. Pauli libri triginta, a catena from the fathers, the names being given. The commentary on the Galatians in this collection is made up of large extracts from Jerome, Augustine, and the pseudo-Ambrose (see above p. 229), with one or two passages from extraneous writers, e.g. Gregory the Great. In Migne's Patrol. Lat. cxii.

(vi) Walapredus Strabo or Strabus († 849), a disciple of Rabanus, is the reputed author of the Glossa Ordinaria on the Scriptures, compiled from the fathers and especially from the catena of his master. It was the standard commentary during the middle ages and had an immense reputation. See Rosenmüller v. p. 135, and especially Simon p. 377. Printed in Migne's Patrol. Lat. cxiv. p. 570.

(vii) Haymo, bishop of Halberstadt († 853), wrote a commentary on St Paul's Epistles, which has been attributed also to his contemporary Remigius (of Lyons). See Cave ii. pp. 28, 42, Schröckh xxiii. p. 283, Simon p. 365. Printed in Migne's Patrol. Lat. cxvii. p. 669.

Later commentaries still, differing little in character from those just enumerated and for the most part equally unoriginal, are those of Atto Vercellensis († about 960), Migne's Patrol. Lat. cxxiv. p. 491; see Schröckh xxiii. p. 302; of Lanfranc († 1089), an interlinear gloss and commentary, Migne clx. p. 259; see Simon p. 385, Schröckh xxiv. p. 334; the authorship however has been questioned: of Bruno Carthusianus († 1101), the founder of the order, Migne cliii. p. 281; see Simon p. 387; and of Herveus Dolensis (about 1130), Migne clxxxii. p. 1129; see Cave ii. pp. 187, 213, Simon p. 386. The authorship of the last-mentioned work is doubtful; it has been wrongly assigned to Anselm of Canterbury, but there is some authority for attributing it to his namesake of Laon.
DISSERTATIONS.
I.
WERE THE GALATIANS CELTS OR TEUTONS?

II.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

III.
ST PAUL AND THE THREE.
I.

WERE THE GALATIANS CELTS OR TEUTONS?

FOLLOWING the universal tradition of ancient writers, I have hitherto assumed that the remarkable people who settled in the heart of Asia Minor were members of the great Celtic family and brothers of the Gauls occupying the region west of the Rhine. And this tradition is confirmed in a striking way by the character and temperament of the Asiatic nation. A Teutonic origin however has been claimed for them by several writers, more especially commentators on this epistle; and this claim it will be necessary now to consider.

How or when this theory arose I do not know: but it seems, in some form or another, to have been held as early as the beginning of the sixteenth century; for Luther takes occasion by it to read his countrymen a wholesome lesson. ‘Some think,’ he says, ‘that we Germans are descended from the Galatians. Neither is this divination perhaps untrue, for we Germans are not much unlike them in temper. And I also am constrained to wish there were in my countrymen more steadfastness and constancy: for in all things we do, at the first brunt we be very hot, but when the heat of our first affections is burnt out, anon we become more slack, and look, with what rashness we begin things, with the same we throw them aside again and neglect them’; and he goes on to reproach them with their waning interest in the cause of the Reformation. Doubtless the rebuke was well deserved; but Luther did injustice to his countrymen in representing this as a special failing of the Teutonic race. The Roman historians at all events favourably contrast the constancy of the Germans with the fickleness of the Gauls.

1 Luther's later commentary on Gal. i. 6.

More recently a skirmishing battle has been fought over the carcass of this extinct nation, as if it were a point of national honour to claim possession. 'For ourselves,' says a French traveller, 'we cannot remember without a sentiment of national pride, that the Gauls penetrated to the very centre of Asia Minor, established themselves there, and left in that country imperishable monuments of themselves. If the name of Franks is the general term by which Eastern nations designate the inhabitants of Europe, it is because our ancestors have influenced in a remarkable manner the destinies of the East from the earliest ages of our history.' Contrast with this the language held by German commentators. 'Thus,' says Wieseler, after summing up the arguments in favour of his view, 'it can scarcely be doubtful that the Galatians are indeed the first German people to whom the Word of the Cross was preached.' 'The Epistle to the Galatians,' writes Olshausen, 'is addressed to Germans, and it was the German Luther who in this Apostolical Epistle again recognised and brought to light the substance of the Gospel.'

The question is not so simple as at first sight it might appear. Accustomed ourselves to dwell on the distinctive features of Celts and Germans, and impressed with the striking contrasts between the two races, we can scarcely imagine any confusion possible. But with the ancients the case was different. In their eyes Gauls and Germans alike were savage and lawless tribes, living in the far North beyond the pale of civilisation, and speaking an unknown language. The contrast to Greeks and Romans, which they observed in both alike, obscured the minor differences between one barbarian and another. As time opened out new channels of communication, they became more and more alive to the distinction between the two races.

2 Galater p. 528.
3 The authorities will be found in Diefenbach's Celtica. They are very fairly and clearly stated also in Brandes Kelten und Germanen (Leips, 1857). See especially his summary, p. ix. The only really important exception among ancient authors is Dion Cassius, who Cæsar the line of separation is roughly traced; in Tacitus it is generally sharp and well-defined. But without doubt the two were sometimes confused; and this fact alone rescues the theory of the Teutonic origin of the Galatians from the imputation of a mere idle paradox.

Still historical scepticism must have some limit; and it would require a vast mass of evidence on the other side to overcome the very strong presumption from the agreement of ancient authorities, both Greek and Roman. Classical writers uniformly regard the ruthless hordes who poured into Italy and sacked Rome, the sacrilegious invaders who attacked the temple at Delphi, and the warlike immigrants who settled in the heart of Asia Minor, as belonging to one and the same race, as Gauls sprung from that Celtic nation whose proper home was north of the Alps and west of the Rhine. On this point there is little or no wavering, I believe, from first to last. It would not be strange that an incorrect view of the affinities of some obscure tribe, springing up in the early twilight of history, when the intercourse between distant nations was slight and interrupted, should pass unchallenged. But it is less easy to understand how, when a widespread race had played so important a part in the history of the world for some centuries, when civilised nations had been brought into close contact with them in the far East and West and at different points along a line extending with some interruptions across the whole of Europe and even into Asia, when the study of their language and manners had long been within the reach of the curious, so vital an error should still have held its ground. All ethnology would become hopeless, if testimony so strong were lightly set aside. There must have been many who for purposes of commerce or from love of travel or in discharge of some official duty or persistently makes the Rhine the boundary-line between the Gauls on the left bank, and the Celts on the right bank. See Brandes p. 202. Thus he identifies the Celts with the Germans, and distinguishes them from the Gauls. Extreme paradoxes have been held by some recent writers. On the one hand Holtzmann, Kelten und Germanen (1855), maintains that the Celts and Germans of the ancients (the inhabitants of Gaul as well as of Germany) were Teutonic in the language of modern ethnography (see esp. p. 157); on the other, Mone, Celtische Forschungen (1857), is of opinion that Germany as well as Gaul was of old occupied by races which we should call Celtica.
through missionary zeal had visited both the mother country of the Gauls and their Asiatic settlement, and had seen in the language and physiognomy and national character of these distant peoples many striking features which betokened identity of race.

The testimony of one of these witnesses is especially valuable. Jerome, who writes at the close of the fourth century, had spent some time both in Gaul proper and in Galatia. He had thus ample opportunities of ascertaining the facts. He was moreover eminently qualified by his critical ability and linguistic attainments for forming an opinion. In the preface to his Commentary on the Galatians he expresses himself to the following effect; 'Varro and others after him have written voluminous and important works on this race: nevertheless he will not quote heathen writers; he prefers citing the testimony of the Christian Lactantius. This author states that the Galatre were so called from the whiteness of their complexion (γαλά), described by Virgil (AEn. viii. 660), Tum lactea colla auro innec-tatur, informing us also that a horde of these Gauls arrived in Asia Minor, and there settled among the Greeks, whence the country was called Gallo-Græcia and afterwards Galatia. No wonder, adds Jerome, after illustrating this incident by other migrations between the East and the West, that the Galatians are called fools and slow of understanding, when Hilary, the Rhone of Latin eloquence, himself a Gaul and a native of Poitiers, calls the Gauls stupid (indociles). It is true that Gaul produces orators, but then Aquitania boasts a Greek origin, and the Galatians are not descended from these but from the fiercer Gaulish tribes (de ferocioribus Gallis sint profecti).'

1 Jerome mentions his visit to Galatia (totius Galatiae iter), and his sojourn in Gaul (Rheni semibarbarae ripae) in the same letter (Epist. iii, 1. pp. 10, 12). While in Gaul, he appears to have stayed some time 'apud Treveros' (Epist. v. 1. p. 15). Elsewhere he tells us that he paid this visit to Gaul when a very young man (adolescentulus, adv. Jovin. ii. 7, n. p. 335). Lastly, in his commentary on this epistle (viii. p. 430), he mentions having seen Ancyra the capital of Galatia.

2 n. p. 425.

3 It is scarcely necessary to say that Jerome here misses the point of St Paul's rebuke. The Galatians were intellectually quick enough (see p. 15, note 1). The 'folly' with which they are charged arose not from obtuseness but from fickleness and levity; the very versatility of their intellect was their snare. The passage of Hilary to which Jerome refers is not extant.
writers when speculating on questions of philology, this passage taken in connexion with its context implies a very considerable knowledge of facts; and if Jerome agreed with the universal tradition in assuming the Galatians to be genuine Gauls, I can hardly doubt that they were so.

But beyond the testimony borne to Jerome's personal knowledge and conviction, this passage suggests another very important consideration. The influence of the Christian Church must have been largely instrumental in spreading information of this kind. The Roman official was under no obligation to learn the language of the people whom he governed; but the Christian missionary could not hope for success unless he were able to converse freely with his hearers. In this way the practical study of languages was promoted by the spread of the gospel far more than it had ever been by the growth of the Roman empire. At the same time the feeling of brotherhood inspired by Christianity surmounted the barriers of race and language and linked together the most distant nations. There is no more striking phenomenon in the history of the early centuries than the close and sympathetic intercourse kept up between churches as far apart as those of Asia and Gaul. These communications could scarcely have failed to clear up the error as to the origin of the Galatian people, if any error existed.

But great reliance has been placed by those who advocate the Teutonic descent of the Galatians on the words with which Jerome concludes the passage above quoted; 'Besides the Greek,' he says, 'which is spoken throughout the East, the Galatians use as their native tongue a language almost identical with that of the Treveri; for any corruption they may have introduced need not be taken into account.' The Treveri, it is affirmed, were Germans and spoke a German tongue.

1 'The science of language,' says Prof. Max Müller, 'owes more than its first impulse to Christianity. The pioneers of our science were those very apostles who were commanded to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; and their true successors, the missionaries of the whole Christian Church' (Science of Language, 1st series, p. 121).

3 Even Niebuhr, who maintained the Celtic origin of the Galatians,
WERE THE GALATIANS CELTS OR TEUTONS?

This question is not free from difficulty. The fact that German is now spoken and has been spoken for many centuries in the district corresponding to the ancient Treveri (Treves) is in itself a presumption in favour of this view. Nor is the testimony of ancient writers so decisive as to remove every shadow of doubt.

Yet the balance of evidence is doubtless on the side of the Celtic extraction of this tribe. Tacitus indeed in one passage says that they, like the Nervii, eagerly affected a German origin, but he expresses no opinion of his own; and by distinguishing certain races whom he mentions immediately after as 'unquestionably Germans,' he evidently throws some doubt on the validity of their claims. Elsewhere he speaks of them plainly as Belgians and Gauls. The testimony of Caesar leans the same way, though here again there is some indistinctness; 'Being harassed by constant wars, owing to their proximity to Germany, they did not differ much in their warlike habits from the Germans'; but he too expressly calls them Gauls or Belgians elsewhere.

sidered that German was the language of the Treveri, and accounted for Jerome's statement by supposing him to have heard some Germans who had recently settled in Galatia (Vorträge über Rom. Gesch. ii. p. 181). This view is opposed by Dr Latham (Germania of Tacitus, p. 98, comp. p. cxlv), who upholds the testimony of Jerome. In a later work (Prichard's Celtic Nations, p. 106 sq) he somewhat impugns that testimony, suggesting that Jerome was mistaken, and starting the theory that the Galatians were neither Gauls nor Germans, but Slavonians. 1 Tac. Germ. 28 'Treveri et Nervii circa affectationem Germanicae originis ultra ambitiosi sunt, tamquam per hanc gloriem sanguinis a similitudine et inertia Gallorum separuntur. Ipsam Rheni ripam haud dubie Germanorum populi colunt, Vangiones, Triboci, Nemetes.' Strabo (iv. p. 194) says Τρέβριοι ἢ συμεχθέν Νερβίοι καὶ τοῦτο Γερμανικὸν έθνος. Φ καὶ τοῦτο here refers to Τρέβριοι, which however is very questionable (see Ukert i. 2, p. 261, note 65), it would seem that Strabo did not care to dispute their claims.

2 Ann. i. 43, 44; iii. 44, Hist. iv. 71, 73. 8 Bell. Gall. viii. 25 'Treveros quo- rum civitas propter Germaniae viuitatem quotidians exercitata bellis cultu et feritate non multum a Germanis differebat.'

4 Bell. Gall. ii. 4, 24, v. 3, 45, vi. 2, 7, 8, vii. 63. So too Mela iii. 2 calls them 'clarissimi Belgarum.' Dion Cassius in like manner, xxxix. 47, xl. 31, li. 20, separates them from his Κελτ (i.e. Germans). See Diefenb. Celt. ii. p. 10 sq. In some of these passages they (as well as the Nervii) are spoken of as Gauls, in others as Belgians. This latter designation cannot be regarded as conclusive, inasmuch as some writers have maintained that the Belgians were themselves a German race. The evidence however is irresistibly strong in favour of their Gallic parentage. The facts of the case seem to be as follows; (1) The names of places and, what is more important, of persons among the
WERE THE GALATIANS CELTS OR TEUTONS?

And this is fully borne out by the less questionable evidence supplied by the names of places and of persons among the Treveri, which equally with other Belgian names betoken their Celtic origin.

The country of the Treveri indeed has long been occupied by a German-speaking population, but history is not silent as to the change. About the close of the third century a colony of Franks settled in the waste lands of the Nervii and Treveri. This was somewhat more than half a century before Jerome visited the place. The old Celtic language cannot have died out in so short a time. Gradually it was displaced by the German of the Frankish immigrants, reinforced by fresh hordes of their fellow-countrymen; but in the cities especially, where the remnants of the old population were gathered together, it would still continue to be the vulgar tongue; and Jerome’s acquaintance with the inhabitants would naturally be confined for the most part to the towns.

Belgæ are Celtic. Thus we find proper names having well-known Celtic terminations, and occasionally even identical with the names of Gallic places and heroes: see Zeus’s Die Deutschen etc. p. 189. This is true even of the Treveri, e.g. Cingetorix (Bell. Gall. v. 3) compared with Vereingetorix (ib. vii. 4); see Brandes, p. 84. (2) Cæsar relates that the maritime parts of Britain were peopled by the Belgæ (v. 12, comp. ii. 4), and the British on the sea-coasts were certainly Celts. These facts seem decisive. On the other hand (3) Cæsar speaks of a difference of language between the three divisions of Gaul, the Belgæ, the Aquitani, and the Celtæ (‘hi omnes lingua institutis legibus inter se different,’ i. 1), but this is most naturally explained of various dialects of the same language, as in fact Strabo represents it (who however excepts the Aquitani), ὁμογλῶττος δ’ οὐ πάντας, ἀλλ’ ἐνίον μικρὸν παραλλάσσοντα ταῖς γλῶσσαις, iv. p. 176. (4) Cæsar relates ‘plerosque Belgas esse ortos ab Germanis’ (ii. 4, comp. Tac. Germ. 2); but this very expression implies that the staple of the population was Celtic, and it becomes simply a question to what extent they were leavened by the infusion of a German element. The statement of this question by Brandes, p. 80 sq, seems very fair and reasonable.

Of the two great branches of the Celtic family philologers for the most part assign the ancient Belgæ to the Cymric (see Diefenbach ii. p. 58 sq, Thierry i. p. 153, 4me ed., Brandes p. 85 sq), and as the tradition seems to connect the Galatians with the Belgæ, we may, in the absence of any direct evidence, look for their modern affinities rather in the Welsh than in the Irish or the Gael. A careful examination of local words and names in Galatia might even now clear up some difficulties.

2 Perrot (De la Disparition de la Langue Gauloise en Galatie, p. 180 sq in the Revue Celtique, no. 2, Août Evidence afforded by the Galatian language.

But the evidence for the Celtic parentage of the Galatians is not confined to the testimony of ancient writers, however well informed. The Galatian language itself is a witness free from all suspicion of ignorance or perjury. And considering that a mere handful of words, chiefly proper names, has alone survived, the evidence thence derived is far fuller than might have been anticipated.

(1) Several Galatian names of places and persons exhibit Celtic terminations. These are as follows:

Of places:

-Iacum. Rosologiacum (Itin. Ant. p. 143); Acitorihiacum (Tab. Peut.); Teutobodiaci (Plin. v. 42); Timoniacenses (? Plin. v. 42).

On this very common Celtic termination see Zeuss G. C. p. 772.

Of persons:

-Gnatus. Eposognatus (Polyb. xxii. 20): compare Criotognatus, Boduognatus (Cæsar), and several Celtic names in inscriptions; (gnath, 'consuetus'; Zeuss G. C. p. 82, and compare dz. p. 19).

-Marus. Combolomarus (Liv. xxxviii. 19); Chiomara (Polyb. xxii. 21); compare Virdumarus, Indutiomarus (Cæsar), and other names in Gallic inscriptions; (mar, 'magnus'; see Zeuss G. C. p. 19, Glück p. 77).

-Orius. Acichorius (Paus. x. 19. 4); Orestorius (Paus. x. 22. 2); Comontorius (Polyb. iv. 46. 3); see Zeuss G. C. p. 741.

-Rix. Adiatorix² (Cic. Fam. ii. 12, Strabo xii. p. 534); Albiorix, 1870) seeks to invalidate Jerome's testimony altogether, but his arguments do not seem to me to be substantial. He believes that the Celtic language had died out in Galatia itself some centuries before; and he therefore supposes that this father thoughtlessly copies a statement of some earlier writer, and applies it to his own time, regardless of the anachronism. Jerome's assertion however has every appearance of being founded on personal knowledge.

² The first element in this word also occurs in several Celtic names, Adiantunnus, Adiatumarus, etc., Glück p. 1.
WERE THE GALATIANS CELTS OR TEUTONS?

Ateporix (Boeckh Inscr. 4039); a very common Celtic termination, e.g. Dumnorix, Ambiorix, Vercingetorix, etc.; (‘rex,’ ‘princeps,’ Zeuss G. C. p. 25, where instances are given).

(2) But it is not only in the terminations that the Celtic origin of the language is seen. It appears unmistakeably also in a large proportion of the Galatian names and words which have been preserved.

Strabo tells us (xii. p. 567) that the great council of the Galatian people met at a place called DRYNEMETUM (Ἀρυγνεῖτος). Now nemetum (‘nemed’) is a good Celtic word for a temple: we meet with it for instance in Augustonemetum, ‘the temple of Augustus,’ at Clermont in the Auvergne; in Vernemetum, ‘the great temple,’ in the province of Bordeaux, of which it is said

Nomine Vernemetis voluit vocitare vetustas, Quod quasi fanum ingens Gallica lingua refert;

in another Vernemetum also in Britain (Itin. Ant. p. 479); and in several other names: comp. Diefenb. Celt. i. p. 83, ii. p. 329, Zeuss G. C. pp. 11, 186, Glück p. 75. The first syllable of Drynemetum again represents the Celtic (Welsh) derw, ‘quercus,’ whence Druid (‘derwydd’), Derwent, etc.: see Zeuss G. C. pp. 8, 16, and Diefenb. i. p. 160. Thus ‘Drynemetum’ is the ‘oak-shrine’ or the ‘grove temple,’ recalling a characteristic feature of the old Celtic worship which prevailed in Britain and Gaul.

Again the names of several of the Galatian chieftains betray their Celtic extraction. The leader of the expedition against Greece, of which the Galatian immigration was an offshoot, bears the same name with the Gaulish captain who sacked Rome; he too, like his predecessor, is a BRENNUS—no proper name but a good Celtic word signifying a ‘prince’ or ‘chieftain’ (Thierry Hist. des Gaul. i. p. 160, Zeuss G. C. p. 101). A second name assigned to this same king was

1 Venant. Fortun. i. 9.
Were the Galatians Celts or Teutons?

Prausus, 'the terrible' (Strab. iv. p. 187; see Thierry i. p. 218, and especially Diefenb. ii. p. 252). Again, another commander in this expedition is called Cerethrius, 'the famous, the glorious' (Pausan. x. 19. 4; certh, 'celebrated,' certhrwyx, 'glory'; Thierry i. p. 219, from Owen's Welsh Dict.). Bolorius again (Pausan. ib.), also written Belgius (Justin. xxiv. 5), presents the same Celtic root which appears in 'Belges' (comp. Diefenb. i. p. 200, ii. pp. 61 sq. 267). The name of Acichorius too (Pausan. i. c.) or Cichorius (Diod. xxii. fragm.), who is associated with Brennus in the command, taken as a Celtic word, describes his office (cygwiawr, 'colleague,' Thierry i. p. 225).

Among later Galatian names of persons we meet with Gæzatodiastus (Boeckh Inscr. 4039), doubtless to be connected with the 'Gesates' of whom we read among the western Gauls, and whose name, signifying 'warriors,' is derived from the Gallic word gesum, 'a spear' (Cæs. B. G. iii. 4; comp. Serv. in Virg. Æn. viii. 662, Diefenb. i. p. 126); and Brogoris (Boeckh Inscr. 4118), the root of which appears in Brogitarus, Allobroges, etc.; Zeuss G. C. p. 106; Glück p. 27. Again the name Bititus, Bitovitus, or Bitetus, seems to occur both in Asiatic (Appian Mithr. 111) and in European Gaul (ib. Celt. 12, Liv. Epit. lxi); for the reasons given (Wernsdorff p. 164) for assigning the first of these, who slew Mithridates, to the western nation seem insufficient. Nor is this the only proper name which links the two countries together. Strabo (xiii. p. 625) mentions one Adobogion, a Galatian; the name Adogius appears on an inscription relating to Rhenish Gaul (Steiner Cod. Inscr. Rom. Rhen. no. 440).

Again, of the three tribes which composed the Galatian people two at least proclaim their Celtic descent in their names. The Tectosage or Tectosages bear identically the same name with a tribe of western Gauls (Cæs. B. G. vi. 24) whom we find moving eastward and occupying a district which was properly German (see Diefenb. ii. p. 264 sq). Similarly both the component parts of Tolistobogii, the name of the second of these tribes, claim a Celtic affinity. The word is variously written, but its original Celtic form would seem to be represented by Tolosatobogii. Tolosa was a common Gallic name for places (Diefenb. II. p. 339), and has survived both in the French Toulouse and in the Spanish Tolosa. It is connected moreover with the name and history of the other Galatian tribe already discussed. 'Tolosa Tectosagum' is especially mentioned (Mela ii. 5 ; comp. Plin. iii. 5); and according to the ancient legend a portion of the Tectosages returning from the Delphic expedition 'to their ancient country Tolosa,' and being afflicted by a pestilence, betook them of averting the wrath of heaven by sinking their ill-gotten gains in the neighbouring lake (Justin. xxxii. 3; comp. Strab. iv. p. 188, Dion. Cass. Exc. i. p. 133, ed. L. Dind.). The riddle of this legend I shall not attempt to read; I simply quote it to show the connexion of the Gallic Tolosa with the Asiatic settlement. Indeed this name occurs in Galatia itself under the form Tolosocorium (Tab. Peut.), and Τόλοσατοβοῖον χώριον (Ptol. v. 4). The second element in the composition of Tolostobogii or Tolostoboi is no less Celtic. It is the name borne by the tribe of the Boii which plays so prominent a part in early Gallic history, and is not uncommon as a termination of other Celtic names (see instances in Zeuss G. C. p. 69, comp. p. 58, and compare the proper name Adobogius already referred to). Even in the third and remaining tribe the Trocmi Celtic affinities have been pointed out (Diefenb. I. p. 256, Zeuss G. C. p. 28), but these are obscure and far from convincing.¹

Of Galatian words besides proper names very few indeed have been recorded. The explanations given of these may be found in Diefenbach (see his references II. p. 251). Among others which are less patent, one is certainly a good Celtic word μάρκα, mentioned

¹ Diefenbach, Celt. II. p. 248, quotes Solinus (c. 42) as mentioning a Galatian tribe 'Ambiani,' this being the ancient Gaulish name for the modern 'Amiens.' But there seems to be an accidental error here. In the most recent and most critical edition of Solinus (c. 41, ed. Mommsen, 1864) the word is 'Ambitoti;' and in the corresponding passage of Pliny (v. 42), from which Solinus borrowed, Sillig reads 'Ambitotii.' Though the mss in both authors present some variations, there seems to be no authority for Ambiani.

I notice also that the names of several Galatian places begin with Reg-, as Reganagalla, Regemnezus, Regemauricium, Regetmocata, Regomori; see Wernsdorff pp. 232, 3. This may be the same word which appears in many Gallic names, as Rigodulum, Rigomagus, etc.; see Diefenbach I. p. 53, II. p. 331, Zeuss G. C. p. 25.
by Pausanias (x. 19) as the name for a horse among the Gauls of the Delphic expedition (Diefenb. i. p. 67).

In gathering together the evidence in favour of the Celtic extraction of the Galatians as afforded by their language I have omitted many questionable affinities; and even of those which are given some perhaps will appear uncertain. But taken as a whole the evidence, if I mistake not, places the result beyond a doubt; and the few German etymologies real or imagined, which have been alleged on the other side, will be quite insufficient to turn the scale. Thus it is asserted that the names of the leaders of the Asiatic expedition, Lutarius and Leonnorius, are both German; and that the Galatian tribe Teutobodiaci and the Galatian town Germanopolis point very clearly to the same origin. On these four words the whole stress of the Teutonic theory may be said to rest.

And if they had stood alone, the German affinities of these names might perhaps have been accepted. But with the vast mass of evidence on the other side, it becomes a question whether some more satisfactory account cannot be given of them. Thus Lutarius (or Luturius) is said to be the same name with the Frankish Lothaire and the Saxon Luther, and therefore Teutonic (see Graff Althochd. Sprachschr. iv. p. 555); but among the Gallic chieftains one Lucterius is mentioned (Cesar B. G. vii. etc.), and the identity of the names Lutarius and Lucterius is at least not improbable (Diefenb. ii. p. 253; Zeuss, G. C. p. 78, derives the name Lucterius from luct, 'agmen,' 'pars': see also p. 180). Again the other Galatian commander Leonnorius has certainly a namesake in a genuine Celtic saint, a native of Britain (Acta Sanct. Jul. i. see Diefenb. ii. p. 254), and there seems to be no reason for assigning a Teutonic parentage to this word. In the name Teutobodiaci indeed the first component seems very plainly to mean 'German': but, even granting that this is not one of those very specious but very deceptive affinities which are the snares of comparative philology, the word need not imply that the tribe itself was Teutonic. If the second component is rightly taken to denote victory ('buad,' 'buaid,' comp. Boadicea, Bodiocasses, Bodiontici, Bodicus, etc.; see Zeuss G. C. p. 27, Glück
p. 53), then the Teutobodiaci were not necessarily Teutons any more than Thessalonica was Thessalian. The remaining word Germanopolis seems in its very form to betray its later origin, or at all events to mark some exceptional occupants other than the main population of the country.

It is quite possible indeed, as Thierry supposes (i. p. 225), that A possible German element swept away with the hordes of Gaulish invaders a small body of Germans also settled in Asia Minor, and this may be the true account of the names Lutarius and Teutobodiaci. We know that of all the Gauls the Belgians were most mixed up with the Germans, and it is with the Belgian members of the Celtic family especially that the Gauls of the Asiatic settlement seem to be connected. But the evidence is scarcely strong enough to bear the strain of the German theory, even when pared down to these very meagre dimensions. Beyond this we cannot go without doing violence to history.

There is every reason then for believing that the Galatian settlers were genuine Celts, and of the two main subdivisions into which modern philologers have divided the Celtic race, they seem rather to have belonged to the Cymric, of which the Welsh are the living representatives. Thus in the age when St Paul preached, a native of Galatia spoke a language essentially the same with that which was current in the southern part of Britain. And if—to indulge a passing fancy—we picture to ourselves one of his Asiatic converts visiting the far West to barter the hair cloths of his native country for the useful metal which was the special product of this island, we can imagine that finding a medium of communication in a common language he may have sown the first seeds of the Gospel and laid the foundations of the earliest Church in Britain.
Two rival theories. In the early ages of the Church two conflicting opinions were held regarding the relationship of those who in the Gospels and Apostolic Epistles are termed 'the brethren of the Lord.' On the one hand it was maintained that no blood relationship existed; that

1 The interest in this subject, which was so warmly discussed towards the close of the fourth century, has been revived in more recent times by the publication of Herder’s Briefe Zweener Brüder Jesu in unserem Kanon (1775), in which the Helvidian hypothesis is put forward. Since then it has formed the subject of numberless monographs, dissertations, and incidental comments. The most important later works, with which I am acquainted, are those of Blom, Deoīs δὲ δὲ δὲ δὲ δὲ τὰς ἀδελφὰς τοῦ Κυρίου (Leiden, 1839); of Schaf, Das Verhältniss des Jakobus Brüders des Herrn zu Jakobus Alphāi (Berlin, 1842); and of Mill, The accounts of our Lord’s Brethren in the New Testament vindicated etc. (Cambridge, 1843). The two former adopt the Helvidian view; the last is written in support of St Jerome’s hypothesis. Blom gives the most satisfactory statement which I have seen of the patristic authorities, and Schaf discusses the Scriptural arguments most carefully. I am also largely indebted to the ability and learning of Mill’s treatise, though he seems to me to have mistaken the general tenor of ecclesiastical tradition on this subject. Besides these monographs I have also consulted, with more or less advantage, articles on the subject in works of reference or periodicals, such as those in Studien u. Kritiken by Wieseler; Die Söhne Zebedäüs Vettern des Herrn (1840, p. 648), and Ueber die Brüder des Herrn, etc. (1842, p. 71). In preparing for the second edition I looked over the careful investigation in Laurent’s Neutest. Studien p. 155 sq (1866), where the Helvidian hypothesis is maintained, but saw no reason to make any change in consequence. The works of Arnaud, Recherches sur l’Epître de Jude, and of Goy (Mont. 1845), referred to in Bishop Ellicott’s Galatians i. 19, I have not seen. My object in this dissertation is mainly twofold; (1) To place the Hieronymian hypothesis in its true light, as an effort of pure criticism unsupported by any traditional sanction; and (2) To say a word on behalf of the Epiphanian solution, which seems, at least of late years, to have met with the fate reserved for τὰ μετα in literature and theology, as well as in politics, ἦν διαμορφώτως ὅτι οἱ ἑξίπτωτοι ἢ θρόνῳ τοῦ περιέχοντο πεφυλακτο. I suppose it was because he considered it idle to discuss a theory which had no friends, that Prof. Jowett (on Gal. i. 19), while balancing the claims of the other two solutions, does not even mention the existence of this, though in the early centuries it was the received account.
these brethren were in fact sons of Joseph by a former wife, before he espoused the Virgin; and that they are therefore called the Lord's brethren only in the same way in which Joseph is called His father, having really no claim to this title but being so designated by an exceptional use of the term adapted to the exceptional fact of the miraculous incarnation. On the other hand certain persons argued that the obvious meaning of the term was the correct meaning, and that these brethren were the Lord's brethren as truly as Mary was the Lord's mother, being her sons by her husband Joseph. The former of these views was held by the vast majority of orthodox believers and by not a few heretics; the latter was the opinion of a father of the Church here and there to whom it occurred as the natural inference from the language of Scripture, as Tertullian for instance, and of certain sects and individuals who set themselves against the incipient worship of the Virgin or the one-sided asceticism of the day, and to whom therefore it was a very serviceable weapon of controversy.

Such was the state of opinion, when towards the close of the fourth century Jerome struck out a novel hypothesis. One Helvidius, who lived in Rome, had attacked the prevailing view of the superiority of virgin over married life, and in doing so had laid great stress on the example of the Lord's mother who had borne children to her husband. In or about the year 383 Jerome, then a young man, at the instigation of the brethren wrote a treatise in reply to Helvidius, in which he put forward his own view. He maintained that the Lord's brethren were His cousins after the flesh, being sons of Mary the wife of Alphæus and sister of the Virgin. Thus, as he boasted, he asserted the virginity not of Mary only but of Joseph also.

These three accounts are all of sufficient importance either from their real merits or from their wide popularity to deserve consideration, and I shall therefore investigate their several claims. As it will be convenient to have some short mode of designation,

I shall call them respectively the Epiphanian, the Helvidian, and the Hieronymian theories, from the names of their most zealous advocates in the controversies of the fourth century when the question was most warmly debated.

But besides the solutions already mentioned not a few others have been put forward. These however have been for the most part built upon arbitrary assumptions or improbable combinations of known facts, and from their artificial character have failed to secure any wide acceptance. It is assumed for instance, that two persons of the same name, James the son of Alpheus and James the Lord's brother, were leading members of the Church of Jerusalem, though history points to one only; or that James the Lord's brother mentioned in St Paul's Epistles is not the same James whose name occurs among the Lord's brethren in the Gospels, the relationship intended by the term 'brother' being different in the two cases; or that 'brethren' stands for 'foster-brothers,' Joseph having undertaken the charge of his brother Clopas' children after their father's death; or that the Lord's brethren had a double parentage, a legal as well as an actual father, Joseph having raised seed to his deceased brother Clopas by his widow according to the levirate law; or lastly, that the cousins of Jesus were rewarded with the title of His brethren, because they were His steadfast disciples, while His own brothers opposed Him.

All such assumptions it will be necessary to set aside. In themselves indeed they can neither be proved nor disproved. But it is safer to aim at the most probable deduction from known facts than to build up a theory on an imaginary foundation. And, where the question is so intricate in itself, there is little temptation to... introduce fresh difficulties by giving way to the license of conjecture.

To confine ourselves then to the three accounts which have the greatest claim to a hearing. It will be seen that the hypothesis which I have called the Epiphanian holds a middle place between the remaining two. With the Helvidian it assigns an intelligible sense to the term 'brethren': with the Hieronymian it preserves the perpetual virginity of the Lord's mother. Whether or not, while uniting in itself the features which have recommended each of these to acceptance, it unites also their difficulties, will be considered in the sequel.

From a critical point of view however, apart from their bearing on Christian doctrine and feeling, the Helvidian and Epiphanian theories hang very closely together, while the Hieronymian stands apart. As well on account of this isolation, as also from the fact which I have hitherto assumed but which I shall endeavour to prove hereafter, that it was the latest born of the three, it will be convenient to consider the last-mentioned theory first.

St Jerome then states his view in the treatise against Helvidius somewhat as follows:

The list of the Twelve Apostles contains two of the name of James, the son of Zebedee and the son of Alphæus. But elsewhere we read of a James the Lord's brother. What account are we to give of this last James? Either he was an Apostle or he was not. If an Apostle, he must be identified with the son of Alphæus, for the son of Zebedee was no longer living: if not an Apostle, then there were three persons bearing this name. But in this case how can a certain James be called 'the less,' a term which implies only one besides? And how moreover can we account for St Paul's language 'Other of the Apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother' (Gal. i. 19)? Clearly therefore James the son of Alphæus and James the Lord's brother are the same person.

And the Gospel narrative explains this identity. Among the Lord's brethren occur the names of James and Joseph. Now it is stated elsewhere that Mary the mother of James the less and of...
Joseph (or Joses) was present at the crucifixion (Matt. xxvii. 56, Mark xv. 40). This Mary therefore must have been the wife of Alpheus, for Alpheus was the father of James. But again in St John's narrative (xix. 25) the Virgin's sister 'Mary of Cleophas (Clopas)' is represented as standing by the cross. This carries us a step in advance. The last-mentioned Mary is to be identified with the wife of Alpheus and mother of James. Thus James the Lord's brother was in reality the Lord's cousin.

But, if His cousin, how is he called His brother? The following is the explanation. The term 'brethren' is used in four different senses in Holy Scripture: it denotes either (1) actual brotherhood or (2) common nationality, or (3) kinsmanship, or (4) friendship and sympathy. These different senses St Jerome expresses by the four words 'natura, gente, cognatione, affectu.' In the case of the Lord's brethren the third of these senses is to be adopted: brotherhood here denotes mere relationship, just as Abraham calls his nephew Lot brother (Gen. xiii. 8), and as Laban uses the same term of Jacob his sister's son (Gen. xxix. 15).

So far St Jerome, who started the theory. But, as worked out by other writers and as generally stated, it involves two particulars besides.

(i) The identity of Alpheus and Clopas. These two words, it is said, are different renderings of the same Aramaic name שָׂלָה (Chalphai), the form Clopas being peculiar to St John, the more completely grecized Alpheus taking its place in the other Evangelists. The Aramaic guttural Cheth, when the name was reproduced in Greek, might either be omitted as in Alpheus, or replaced by a χ (or χ) as in Clopas. Just in the same way Aloysius and Ludovicus are recognised Latin representatives of the Frankish name Clovis (Clodovicus, Hludovicus, Hlouis)¹.

This identification however, though it materially strengthens his theory, was unknown to Jerome himself. In the course of his argument he confesses plainly that he does not know why Mary is called Clope, (or Cleophæ, as he writes it): it may be, he suggests, after her father or from her family surname ('gentilitate familiae') or for some other reason. In his treatise on Hebrew names too he gives an account of the word Alphäus which is scarcely consistent with this identity. Neither have I found any traces of it in any of his other works, though he refers several times to the subject. In Augustine again, who adopts Jerome's hypothesis and his manner of stating it, it does not anywhere appear, so far as I know. It occurs first, I believe, in Chrysostom who incidentally speaks of James the Lord's brother as 'son of Clopas,' and after him in Theodoret who is more explicit (both on Gal. i. 19). To a Syrian Greek, who, even if he were unable to read the Peshito version, must at all events have known that Chalphai was the Aramaean rendering or rather the Aramaean original of 'Alphäos, it might not unnaturally occur to graft this identification on the original theory of Jerome.

¹ This illustration is taken from Mill, p. 236.

(ii) The identity of Judas the Apostle and Judas the Lord's brother. In St Luke's catalogues of the Twelve (Luke vi. 16, Acts i. 13) the name 'Judas of James' ('Ioûdas Iakóbou) occurs. Now we find a Judas also among the four brethren of the Lord (Matt. xiii. 55, Mark vi. 3); and the writer of the epistle, who was doubtless the Judas last mentioned, styles himself 'the brother of James' (Jude 1). This coincidence suggests that the ellipsis in 'Judas of James' should be supplied by brother as in the English version, not by son which would be the more obvious word. Thus Judas the Lord's brother, like James, is made one of the Twelve. I do not know when the Hieronymian theory received this fresh accession, but, though the gain is considerable in apparent strength at least, it does not appear, so far as I have noticed, to have occurred to Jerome himself.

And some have gone a step farther. We find not only a James and perhaps a Judas among the Lord's brethren, but also a Symeon or Simon also.

2 Alphäus, fugitivus [ἢ]; the Greek of Origen was doubtless oixômu-rov, see p. 626], sed melius millesimus [ἢΝ] vel doctus [ἢΝ]; iii. p. 89; and again, 'Alphäus, millesimus, sive super os [ἢΝ] ab ore non ab osse.' ib. p. 98. Thus he deliberately rejects the derivation with a Cheth, which is required in order to identify 'Alphäus' with 'Clopas.' Indeed, as he incorrectly wrote Cleopas (or Cleophas) for Clopas with the Latin version, this identification was not likely to occur to him.

17
Simon. Now it is remarkable that these three names occur together in St Luke's list of the Twelve: James (the son) of Alpheus, Simon called Zelotes, and Judas (the brother) of James. In the lists of the other Evangelists too these three persons are kept together, though the order is different and Judas appears under another name, Lebbeus or Thaddæus. Can this have been a mere accident? Would the name of a stranger have been inserted by St Luke between two brothers? Is it not therefore highly probable that this Simon also was one of the Lord's brethren? And thus three out of the four are included among the Twelve.

Without these additions the theory is incomplete; and indeed they have been so generally regarded as part of it, that advocates and opponents alike have forgotten or overlooked the fact that Jerome himself nowhere advances them. I shall then consider the theory as involving these two points; for indeed it would never have won its way to such general acceptance, unless presented in this complete form, where its chief recommendation is that it combines a great variety of facts and brings out many striking coincidences.

But before criticizing the theory itself, let me prepare the way by divesting it of all fictitious advantages and placing it in its true light. The two points to which attention may be directed, as having been generally overlooked, are these:

(i) Jerome claims no traditional support for his theory. This is a remarkable feature in his treatise against Helvidius. He argues the question solely on critical and theological grounds. His opponent had claimed the sanction of two older writers, Tertullian and Victorinus of Pettaw. Jerome in reply is obliged to concede him Tertullian, whose authority he invalidates as 'not a member of the Church,' but denies him Victorinus. Can it be doubted that if he could have produced any names on his own side he would only too gladly have done so? When for instance he is maintaining the virginity of the Lord's mother, a feature possessed by his theory in common with the Epiphanian, he is at no loss for authorities: Ignatius, Polycarp, Irenæus, Justin, and many other 'eloquent apostolic men' occur to him at once. But in support of his own account of the relationship he cannot, or at least does not, name a single writer; he simply offers it as a critical deduction from the statements of Scripture. Again in his later writings, when he refers to the subject, his tone is the same: 'Some suppose them to have been sons of Joseph: it is my opinion, I have maintained in my book against Helvidius, that they were the children of Mary the Virgin's sister?' And the whole tenor of patristic evidence, as I shall hope to show, is in accordance with this tone. No decisive instance can be produced of a writer holding Jerome's view, before it was propounded by Jerome himself.

---

(2) Jerome does not hold his theory staunchly and consistently. The references to the subject in his works taken in chronological order will speak for themselves. The theory is first propounded, as we saw, in the treatise against Helvidius written about 383, when he was a young man. Even here his main point is the perpetual virginity of the Lord's mother, to which his own special solution is quite subordinate: he speaks of himself as not caring to fight hard ('contentiosum funem non traho') for the identity of Mary of Cleophas with Mary the mother of James and Joses, though this is the pivot of his theory. And, as time advances, he seems to hold to his hypothesis more and more loosely. In his commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians (i. 19) written about 387 he speaks very vaguely: he remembers, he says, having when at Rome written a treatise on the subject, with which such as it is he ought to be satisfied ('qualiacunque sunt illa quae scripsimus his contenti esse debemus'); after which he goes on inconsistently

1 See however below, p. 278, note 1.
2 He sets aside the appeal to authority thus: 'Verum nugas terimus, et fonte veritatis omisso opinionum rivulos consetamur,' ad Helvid. 17.
3 de Vir. Illuat. 2 'ut nonnulli existimant, Joseph ex alia uxore; ut autem mihi videtur Mariae sororis matris Domini... filius'; Comment. in Matth. xii. 49 (vii. p. 86) 'Quidam fratres Domini de alia uxore Joseph filios suspicantur... nos autem, sicut in libro quem contra Helvidium scripsimus continetur etc.'
but wavers enough, 'Suffice it now to say that James was called the Lord's brother on account of his high character, his incomparable faith, and extraordinary wisdom: the other Apostles also are called brothers (John xx. 17; comp. Ps. xxii. 22), but he preeminently so, to whom the Lord at His departure had committed the sons of His mother (i.e. the members of the Church of Jerusalem); with more to the same effect: and he concludes by showing that the term Apostle, so far from being confined to the Twelve, has a very wide use, adding that it was 'a monstrous error to identify this James with the Apostle the brother of John.' In his Catalogue of Illustrious Men (A.D. 392) and in his Commentary on St Matthew (A.D. 398) he adheres to his earlier opinion, referring in the passages already quoted to his treatise against Helvidius, and taunting those who considered the Lord's brethren to be the sons of Joseph by a former wife with 'following the ravings of the apocryphal writings and inventing a wretched creature (mulierculam) Melcha or Escha by name.' Yet after all in a still later work, the Epistle to Hedibia (about 406 or 407), enumerating the Maries of the Gospels he mentions Mary of Cleophas the maternal aunt of the Lord and Mary the mother of James and Joses as distinct persons, adding 'although others contend that the mother of James and

1 'Quod autem exceptis duodecim quidam vocentur apostoli, illud in causa est, omnes qui Dominum viderant et eum potesc predicabant fuisse apostolos appellatos'; and then after giving instances (among others 1 Cor. xv. 7) he adds, 'Unde vehementer erravit qui arbitratus est Jacobum hunc de evangeli esse apostolum fratrem Johannis... hic autem Jacobus episcopus Hierosolymorum primus fuit cognomento Justus etc.' (viii. p. 396). These are just the arguments which would be brought by one maintaining the Epiphanian account. Altogether Jerome's language here is that of a man who has committed himself to a theory of which he has misgivings, and yet from which he is not bold enough to break loose.

2 See p. 259, note 3.

3 'Sequentes deliramenta apocryphorum et quandam Melcham vel Escham multierculam confingentes.' Comm. in Matth. 1. c. 'Nemo non videt,' says Blom, p. 116, 'illud nomen רַםְנִי [wife, woman] esse mere fictitium, nec minus posterius [prius] רֶלֶבַּה [queen].' (Comp. Julius Africanus in Routh's Rel. Sacr. ii. p. 233, 339.) If so, the work must have been the production of some Jewish Christian. But Escha is not a very exact representation of רַםְנִי (Ishah). On the other hand, making allowance for the uncertain vocalisation of the Hebrew, the two daughters of Haran (Gen. xi. 29) bear identically the same names: 'the father of Milcah (xxx Μελχά) and the father of Iscah (ירחל) xxx 'Iςחא).' Doubtless these names were borrowed thence.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

Joses was His aunt. Yet this identification, of which he here speaks with such indifference, was the keystone of his own theory. Can it be that by his long residence in Bethlehem, having the Palestinian tradition brought more prominently before him, he first relaxed his hold of and finally relinquished his own hypothesis?

If these positions are correct, the Hieronymian view has no claim to any traditional sanction—in other words, there is no reason to believe that time has obliterated any secondary evidence in its favour—and it must therefore be investigated on its own merits.

And compact and plausible as it may seem at first sight, the theory exposes, when examined, many vulnerable parts.

(1) The instances alleged notwithstanding, the sense thus assigned to 'brethren' seems to be unsupported by biblical usage. In an affectionate and earnest appeal intended to move the sympathies of the hearer, a speaker might not unnaturally address a relation or a friend or even a fellow-countryman as his 'brother.' And even when speaking of such a third person he might through warmth of feeling and under certain aspects so designate him. But it is scarcely conceivable that the cousins of any one should be commonly and indeed exclusively styled his 'brothers' by indifferent persons; still less, that one cousin in particular should be singled out and described in this loose way, 'James the Lord's brother.'

(2) But again: the Hieronymian theory when completed supposes two, if not three, of the Lord's brethren to be in the number of the Twelve. This is hardly reconcileable with the place they hold in the Evangelical narratives, where they appear sometimes as distinct from, sometimes as antagonistic to the Twelve. Only a short time before the crucifixion they are disbelievers in the Lord's divine mission (John vii. 5). Is it likely that St John would have made this unqualified statement, if it were true of one only or at most of two out of the four? Jerome sees the difficulty and meets it by saying that James was 'not one of those that disbelieved.' But what if Jude and Simon also belong to the Twelve? After the Lord's Ascension, it is true, His brethren appear in company with the Apostles, and apparently by this time their unbelief has been everting into faith. Yet even on this later occasion, though with the Twelve, they are distinguished from the Twelve; for the latter are described as assembling in prayer 'with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus and [with] His brethren' (Acts i. 14).

And scarcely more consistent is this theory with what we know of James and Jude in particular. James, as the resident bishop or presiding elder of the mother Church, held a position hardly compatible with the world-wide duties which devolved on the Twelve. It was the essential feature of his office that he should be stationary; of theirs, that they should move about from place to place. If on the other hand he appears sometimes to be called an Apostle (though not one of the passages alleged is free from ambiguity), this term is by no means confined to the Twelve and might therefore be applied to him in its wider sense, as it is to Barnabas'. Again, Jude on his part seems to disclaim the title of an Apostle (ver. 17); and if so, he cannot have been one of the Twelve.

(3) Their connexion
with Joseph and Mary.

(3) But again: the Lord's brethren are mentioned in the Gospels in connexion with Joseph His reputed father and Mary His mother, never once with Mary of Clopas (the assumed wife of Alpheus). It would surely have been otherwise, if the latter Mary were really their mother.

(4) James
the less.

(4) Jerome lays great stress on the epithet minor applied to James, as if it implied two only, and even those who impugn his theory seem generally to acquiesce in his rendering. But the Greek gives not 'James the Less' but 'James the little' (δ' μικρός).
Is it not most natural then to explain this epithet of his height?
'There were many of the name of James,' says Hegesippus, and the short stature of one of these might well serve as a distinguishing mark. This interpretation at all events must be regarded as more probable than explaining it either of his comparative youth or of inferior rank and influence. It will be remembered that there

1 See above, p. 95.
2 As in Xen. Mem. i. 4. 2 'Αριστόδήμον τόν μικρόν ἐπικαλοῦμεν, referring to stature, as appears from Plato, Symp. 173 b; and in Arist. Ran. 708
Kλειγένης δ' μικρός.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

is no Scriptural or early sanction for speaking of the son of Zebedee as 'James the Great.'

(5) The manner in which Jude is mentioned in the lists of the Twelve is on this hypothesis full of perplexities. In the first place it is necessary to translate Ἰακώβου not 'the son' but 'the brother of James,' though the former is the obvious rendering and is supported by two of the earliest versions, the Peshito Syriac and the Thebaic, while two others, the Old Latin and Memphitic, leave the ellipsis unsupplied and thus preserve the ambiguity of the original. But again, if Judas were the brother of James, would not the Evangelist's words have run more naturally, 'James the son of Alpheus and Jude his brother,' or 'James and Jude the sons of Alpheus,' as in the case of the other pairs of brothers? Then again, if Simon Zealotes is not a brother of James, why is he inserted by St Luke between the two? If he also is a brother, why is the designation of brotherhood (Ἰακώβου) attached to the name of Judas only?

Moreover in the different lists of the three Evangelists the Apostle in question is designated in three different ways. In St Matthew (x. 3) he is called Lebbæus (at least according to a well-supported reading); in St Mark (iii. 18) Thaddeus; and in St Luke 'Jude of James.' St John again having occasion to mention him (xiv. 22) distinguishes him by a negative, 'Judas not Iscariot.' Is

1 The perplexity is increased by the Curetonian Syriac, which for Ἰούδας ὁ Ἰσιγαρώθη reads Ἰούδας Τομᾶς, 'Judas Thomas,' i.e. 'Judas the Twin.' It seems therefore that the translator took the person intended by St John to be not the Judas Jacobi in the list of the Twelve, but the Thomas Didymus, for Thomas was commonly called Judas in the Syrian Church; e.g. Euseb. H. E. i. 11 Τομας ὁ καλὸς Θωμᾶς, and Acta Thomæ x Τομᾶς Θωμᾶς τῷ καὶ Διδύμῳ (ed. Tisch. p. 190); see Assemani Bibl. Orient. i. pp. 100, 318, Cureton's Syriac Gospels p. ii, Anc. Syr. Documents p. 33. As Thomas (Διδύμος), 'the Twin,' is properly a surname, and this Apostle must have had some other name, there seems no reason for doubting this very early tradition that he also was a Jude. At the same time it is highly improbable that St John should have called the same Apostle elsewhere Thomas (Joh. xi. 16, xiv. 5, xx. 24 etc.) and here Judas, and we may therefore conclude that he is speaking of two different persons. The name of the other brother is supplied in Clem. Hom. ii. 1 προσέτι δὲ Θωμᾶς καὶ Ἐλεέσωρος οὗ δίδυμοι.

The Thebaic version again for ὁ δὲ Ἰσιγαρώθη substitutes ὁ Κανάβις. Similarly in Matth. x. 3 for Θαδδαῖος some of the most important MSS of the Old Latin have Judas Zealotes; and in the Canon of Gelasius Jude the writer of the epistle is so designated. This points to some connexion or confusion with Simon Zealotes. See p. 258, note.
it possible, if he were the Lord's brother Judas, he would in all these places have escaped being so designated, when this designation would have fixed the person meant at once?

(6) Lastly; in order to maintain the Hieronymian theory it is necessary to retain the common punctuation of John xix. 25, thus making 'Mary of Clopas' the Virgin's sister. But it is at least improbable that two sisters should have borne the same name. The case of the Herodian family is scarcely parallel, for Herod was a family name, and it is unlikely that a humble Jewish household should have copied a practice which must lead to so much confusion. Here it is not unlikely that a tradition underlies the Peshito rendering which inserts a conjunction: 'His mother and his mother's sister, and Mary of Cleophas and Mary Magdalene.' The Greek at all events admits, even if it does not favour, this interpretation, for the arrangement of names in couples has a parallel in the lists of the Apostles (e.g. Matt. x. 2—4).

I have shown then, if I mistake not, that St Jerome pleaded no traditional authority for his theory, and that therefore the evidence in its favour is to be sought in Scripture alone. I have examined the Scriptural evidence, and the conclusion seems to be, that though this hypothesis, supplemented as it has been by subsequent writers, presents several striking coincidences which attract attention, yet it involves on the other hand a combination of difficulties—many of these arising out of the very elements in the 1 See Wieseler Die Söhne Zebedei etc. p. 672. This writer identifies the sister of the Lord's mother (John xix. 25) with Salome (Mark xv. 40, xvi. 1), who again is generally identified with the mother of Zebedee's children (Matt. xxvii. 56); and thus James and John, the sons of Zebedee, are made cousins of our Lord. Compare the pseudo-Papias, p. 273, note; and see the various reading Ἰωάννης for Ἰωάφ in the list of the Lord's brethren in Matt. xiii. 55. But as we are told that there were many other women present also (Mark xv. 41, comp. Luke xxiv. 10),—one of whom, Joanna, is mentioned by name—both these identifications must be considered precarious. It would be strange that no hint should be given in the Gospels of the relationship of the sons of Zebedee to our Lord, if it existed.

---

The Jerusalem Syriac lectionary gives the passage John xix. 25 not less than three times. In two of these places (pp. 387, 541, the exception being p. 445) a stop is put after 'His mother's sister,' thus separating the words from 'Mary of Cleophas' and suggesting by punctuation the same interpretation which the Peshito fixes by inserting a conjunction.
hypothesis which produce the coincidences—which more than counterbalances these secondary arguments in its favour, and in fact must lead to its rejection, if any hypothesis less burdened with difficulties can be found.

Thus, as compared with the Hieronymian view, both the Epiphanian and the Helvidian have higher claims to acceptance. They both assign to the word brethren its natural meaning; they both recognise the main facts related of the Lord's brethren in the Gospels—their unbelief, their distinctness from the Twelve, their connexion with Joseph and Mary—and they both avoid the other difficulties which the Hieronymian theory creates.

And moreover they both exhibit a coincidence which deserves notice. A very short time before the Lord's death His brethren refuse to accept His mission; they are still unbelievers. Immediately after His ascension we find them gathered together with the Apostles, evidently recognising Him as their Master. Whence comes this change? Surely the crucifixion of one who professed to be the Messiah was not likely to bring it about. He had claimed to be King of Israel and He had been condemned as a malefactor: He had promised His followers a triumph and He had left them persecution. Would not all this confirm rather than dissipate their former unbelief? An incidental statement of St Paul explains all; 'Then He was seen of James.' At the time when St Paul wrote, there was but one person eminent enough in the Church to be called James simply without any distinguishing epithet—the Lord's brother, the bishop of Jerusalem. It might therefore reasonably be concluded that this James is here meant. And this view is confirmed by an extant fragment of the Gospel according to the Hebrews, the most important of all the apocryphal gospels, which seems to have preserved more than one true tradition, and which expressly relates the appearance of our Lord to His brother James after His resurrection.

This interposition, we may suppose, was the turning-point in the religious life of the Lord's brethren; the veil was removed at once and for ever from their hearts. In this way the antagonistic notices in the Gospels—first the disbelief of the Lord's brethren, and then their assembling together with the Apostles—are linked together; and harmony is produced out of discord.

1 See below, p. 274.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

Two objections however are brought against both these theories, which the Hieronymian escapes.

(1) Repetition of names.

They both, it is objected, assume the existence of two pairs of cousins bearing the same names, James and Joseph the sons of Alphæus, and James and Joseph the Lord's brothers. If moreover we accept the statement of Hegesippus¹ that James was succeeded in the bishopric of Jerusalem by Symeon son of Clopas, and also admit the identification of Clopas with Alphæus, we get a third name Symeon or Simeon common to the two families. Let us see what this objection really amounts to.

It will be seen that the cousinhood of these persons is represented as a cousinhood on the mothers' side, and that it depends on three assumptions: (1) The identification of James the son of Alphæus in the list of the Twelve with James the Little the son of Mary: (2) The identification of 'Mary of Clopas' in St John with Mary the mother of James and Joses in the other Evangelists: (3) The correctness of the received punctuation of John xix. 25, which makes 'Mary of Clopas' the Virgin's sister. If any one of these be rejected, this cousinhood falls to the ground. Yet of these three assumptions the second alone can safely be pronounced more likely than not² (though we are expressly told that 'many other women' were present), for it avoids the unnecessary multiplication of Maries. The first must be considered highly doubtful, seeing that James was a very common name; while the third is most improbable, for it gives two sisters both called Mary—a difficulty far surpassing that of supposing two or even three cousins bearing the same name.

On the other hand, if, admitting the second identification and supplying the ellipsis in 'Mary of Clopas' by 'wife', we combine

¹ See below, p. 276 sq.
² Eusebius however makes 'Mary of Clopas' a different person from Mary the mother of James and Joses; Quaest. ad Marin. ii. 5 (Op. iv. p. 945, Migne).
³ As η γυνὴ Κλωπᾶ may mean either the daughter or the wife or the mother.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

with it the statement of Hegesippus¹ that Clopas the father of Symeon was brother of Joseph, we get three cousins, James, Joses, or fathers’ side respectively, and Symeon, on their fathers’ side. Yet this result again must be considered on the whole improbable. I see no reason indeed for doubting the testimony of Hegesippus, who was perhaps born during the lifetime of this Symeon, and is likely to have been well informed. But the chances are against the other hypotheses, on which it depends, being both of them correct. The identification of Clopas and Alpheus will still remain an open question.²

1 The statement of Hegesippus suggests a solution which would remove the difficulty. We might suppose the two Mariæ to have been called sisters, as having been married to two brothers; but is there any authority for ascribing to the Jews an extension of the term ‘sister’ which modern usage scarcely sanctions?

2 Of the three names Alpheus (the father of Levi or Matthew, Mark ii. 14, and the father of James, Matt. x. 3, Mark iii. 18, Luke vi. 15, Acts i. 13), Clopas (the husband or father or son of Mary, Joh. xix. 25), and Cleopas (the disciple journeying to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 18), it is considered that the two former are probably identical, and the two latter certainly distinct. Both positions may be disputed with some reason. In forming a judgment, the following points deserve to be considered; (1) In the Greek text there is no variation of reading worth mentioning; Clopas is certainly the reading in St John, and Cleopas in St Luke. (2) The versions however bring them together. Cleopas (or Cleophas) is read in the Peshito, Old Latin, Memphitic, Vulgate, and Armenian text of St John. (3) Of these the evidence of the Peshito is particularly important in a matter relating to Aramaic names. While for ‘Alphaios in all five places it restores what was doubtless the original Aramaic form Klephai; on the other hand, it gives the same word Klephai (i.e., Kleopas) in Luke xxiv. 18 and in John xix. 25, if the printed texts may be trusted. The Jerusalem Syriac too renders Kleophas by Kleophai, Kleopas by Kleophai. (4) The form Kleopas, which St John’s text gives, is confirmed by Hegesippus (Euseb. H.E. iii. 11), and there is every reason to believe that this was a common mode of writing some proper name or other with those acquainted with Aramaic; but it is difficult to see why, if the word intended to be represented were Chalphai, they should not have reproduced it more exactly in Greek. The name Xalphi in fact does occur in 1 Mac. xi. 70. (5) It is true that Kleopas is strictly a Greek name contracted from Kleopas, like ‘Artiadas from ‘Artiadas, etc. But it was a common practice with the Jews to adopt the genuine Greek name which bore the closest resemblance in sound to their own Aramaic name, either side by side with it or in place of it, as Simon for Symeon, Jason for Jesus, and thus a man, whose real Aramaic name was Clopas, might grecize the word and call himself Cleopas. On these grounds it appears to me that, viewing the question as one of names merely, it is quite as reasonable to identify Clopas with Cleopas as with...
The names are common. But, whether they were cousins or not, does the fact of two families having two or three names in common constitute any real difficulty? Is not this a frequent occurrence among ourselves? It must be remembered too that the Jewish names in ordinary use at this time were very few, and that these three, James, Joses, and Symeon, were among the most common, being consecrated in the affections of the Jews from patriarchal times. In the list of the Twelve the name of James appears twice, Symeon twice. In the New Testament no less than twelve persons bear the name of Symeon or Simon, and nearly as many that of Joseph or Joses.

Alphæus. But the identification of names does not carry with it the identification of persons. St Paul’s Epaphras for instance is probably a different person from his Epaphroditus.

A Jewish name ‘Alfius’ occurs in an inscription ALFIVS • IVDA • ARCON • ARCOCHNAGOSOS (Inscr. Gudii, p. ccxxiii. 5), and possibly this is the Latin substitute for Chalphai or Chalphi, as ‘Alexias’ is the Greek; Alfius being a not uncommon Latin name. One would be tempted to set down his namesake also, the ‘fenerator Alfius’ or ‘Alphius’ of Horace (Epod. ii. 67, see Columella i. 7. 2), for a fellow-countryman, if his talk were not so pagan.

1 I am arguing on the supposition that Joses and Joseph are the same name, but this is at least doubtful. In St Matthew, according to the best authorities, the Lord’s brother (xiii. 55) is ‘Iωσηφ, the son of Mary (xxvii. 56) ‘Iωσηφ. In St Mark on the other hand the latter word is found (the genitive being differently written ‘Iωσηφ or ‘Iωσηφ, though probably Tregelles is right in preferring the former in all three passages), whether referring to the Lord’s brother (vi. 3) or to the son of Mary (xv. 40, 47). Thus if existing authorities in the text of St Mark are to be trusted, there is no distinction between the names. Yet I am disposed to think with Wieseler (die Bohne Zebedäi etc. p. 678) that St Matthew’s text suggests the real difference, and that the original reading in Mark vi. 3 was ‘Iωσηφ; but if so, the corruption was very ancient and very general, for ‘Iωσηφ is found in N alone of the uncial manuscripts. A similar confusion of these names appears in the case of Bar-sabbas, Acts i. 23, and Barnabas, iv. 36; in the former case we find a various reading ‘Joses’ for ‘Joseph,’ in the latter we should almost certainly read ‘Joseph’ for ‘Joses’ of the received text. I am disposed to think the identification of the names Joses and Joseph improbable for two reasons: (1) It seems unlikely that the same name should be represented in Greek by two such divergent forms as ‘Iωσηφ, making a genitive ‘Iωσηφος, and ‘Ιωσηφ or ‘Ιωσηφος, which perhaps (replaced by a genuine Greek name) became ‘Ηγησηππος. (2) The Peshito in the case of the commoner Hebrew or Aramaic names restores the original form in place of the somewhat disfigured Greek equivalent, e.g. Joseph for ‘Ιωνησηππος, Zabdiel for ‘Ζαβδαίς, following this rule, it ought, if the names were identical, to have restored ‘Ιωσηφ (Joseph) for the Greek ‘Ιωσηφ, in place of which it has ‘Ιωσηφ (Jōsi, Jānai, or Jāsī). In Matt. xxvii. 56, Mark xv. 40, the Memphitico Version separates Μαρτά [η του] Ἰακώβου [του μικρού] and ‘Ιωσηφ[του] μύτηρ, making them two different persons. [On the other hand, similar instances of abbreviation, e.g. Ash for Asher, Jochana for Jochanan, Shabba for Shabbath, are produced; see Delitzsch in Laurent Neutest. Stud. p. 168.]
In the index to Josephus may be counted nineteen Josephs, and twenty-five Simons.

And moreover is not the difficulty, if difficulty there be, diminished rather than increased on the supposition of the cousinhood of these two families? The name of a common ancestor or a common relative naturally repeats itself in households connected with each other. And from this point of view it is worthy of notice that the names in question actually occur in the genealogies of our Lord. Joseph's father is Jacob or James in St Matthew (i. 15, 16); and in St Luke's table, exclusively of our Lord's reputed father, the name Joseph or Joses occurs twice at least in a list of thirty-four direct ancestors.

(2) When a certain Mary is described as 'the mother of James,' is it not highly probable that the person intended should be the most celebrated of the name—James the Just, the bishop of Jerusalem, the Lord's brother? This objection to both the Epiphanian and Helvidian theories is at first sight not without force, but it will not bear examination. Why, we may ask, if the best known of all the Jameses were intended here, should it be necessary in some passages to add the name of a brother Joses also, who was a person of no special mark in the Church (Matt. xxvii. 56, Mark xv. 40)? Why again in others should this Mary be designated 'the mother of Joses' alone (Mark xv. 47), the name of his more famous brother being suppressed? In only two passages is she called simply 'the mother of James'; in Mark xvi. 1, where it is explained by the fuller description which has gone before 'the mother of James and Joses' (xv. 40); and in Luke xxiv. 10, where no such explanation can be given. It would seem then that this Mary and this James, though not the most famous of their respective names and therefore not at once distinguishable when mentioned alone,

1 The popularity of this name is probably due to Simon Maccabaeus.

2 And perhaps not more than twice 'Ἰωσήφ (vv. 24, 30). In ver. 26 'Ἰωσήχ seems to be the right reading, where the received text has 'Ἰωσήφ; and in ver. 29 'Ἰωσά, where it has 'Ἰωσῆ. Possibly 'Ἰωσήχ may be a corruption for 'Ἰωσήφ through the confusion of η and γ, which in their older forms resemble each other closely; but if so, it is a corruption not of St Luke's text, but of the Hebrew or Aramaic document from which the genealogy was derived.
were yet sufficiently well known to be discriminated from others, when their names appeared in conjunction.

The two theories compared.

The objections then which may be brought against both these theories in common are not very serious; and up to this point in the investigation they present equal claims to acceptance. The next step will be to compare them together, in order to decide which of the two must yield to the other.

1. The Epiphanian view assumes that the Lord's brethren had really no relationship with Him; and so far the Helvidian has the advantage. But this advantage is rather seeming than real. It is very natural that those who called Joseph His father should call Joseph's sons His brethren. And it must be remembered that this designation is given to Joseph not only by strangers from whom at all events the mystery of the Incarnation was veiled, but by the Lord's mother herself who knew all (Luke ii. 48). Even the Evangelist himself, about whose belief in the miraculous conception of Christ there can be no doubt, allows himself to speak of Joseph and Mary as 'His father and mother' and 'His parents'. Nor again is it any argument in favour of the Helvidian account as compared with the Epiphanian, that the Lord's brethren are found in company of Mary rather than of Joseph. Joseph appears in the evangelical history for the last time when Jesus is twelve years old (Luke ii. 43); during the Lord's ministry he is never once seen, though Mary comes forward again and again. There can be little doubt therefore that he had died meanwhile.

2. Certain expressions in the evangelical narratives are said to imply that Mary bore other children besides the Lord, and it is even asserted that no unprejudiced person could interpret them otherwise. The justice of this charge may be fairly questioned. The context in each case seems to suggest another explanation of these expressions, which does not decide anything one way or the other. St Matthew writes that Joseph 'knew not' his wife 'till (ἐως οὖν)

1 Luke ii. 33 ὁ ἔνεντος ἀπὸ τοῦ καὶ ἦ μὴ μὴ ὑπὲρ, ii. 41, 43 of γορέων ἀπὸ τοῦ, the correct reading. Later transcribers have taken offence and substituted 'Joseph and Mary,' 'Joseph and His mother,' in all three places.
she brought forth a son’ (i. 25)\(^1\); while St Luke speaks of her bringing forth ‘her firstborn son’ (ii. 7). St Matthew’s expression however, ‘till she brought forth,’ as appears from the context, is intended simply to show that Jesus was not begotten in the course of nature; and thus, while it denies any previous intercourse with her husband, it neither asserts nor implies any subsequent intercourse\(^2\). Again, the prominent idea conveyed by the term ‘firstborn’ to a Jew would be not the birth of other children, but the special consecration of this one. The typical reference in fact is foremost in the mind of St Luke, as he himself explains it, ‘Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord’ (ii. 23). Thus ‘firstborn’ does not necessarily suggest ‘later-born,’ any more than ‘son’ suggests ‘daughter.’ The two words together describe the condition under which in obedience to the law a child was consecrated to God. The ‘firstborn son’ is in fact the Evangelist’s equivalent for the ‘malo that openeth the womb.’

It may indeed be fairly urged that, if the Evangelists had considered the perpetual virginity of the Lord’s mother a matter of such paramount importance as it was held to be in the fourth and following centuries, they would have avoided expressions which are at least ambiguous and might be taken to imply the contrary; but these expressions are not in themselves fatal to such a belief.

Whether in itself the sentiment on which this belief was founded be true or false, is a fit subject of enquiry; nor can the present question be considered altogether without reference to it. If it be true, then the Epiphanian theory has an advantage over the Helvidian, as respecting or at least not disregarding it; if false, then it may be thought to have suggested that theory, as it certainly did the Hieronymian, and to this extent the theory itself must lie under suspicion. Into this enquiry however it will not be necessary to enter. Only let me say that it is not altogether correct to represent this belief as suggested solely by the false asceticism of the early Church which exalted virginity at the expense of married life. It appears in fact to be due quite as much to another sentiment which the fathers fantastically expressed by a comparison between the conception and the burial of our Lord. As after death His body was placed in a sepulchre 'wherein never man before was laid,' so it seemed fitting that the womb consecrated by His presence should not thenceforth have borne any offspring of man. It may be added also, that the Epiphanian view prevailed especially in Palestine where there was less disposition than elsewhere to depreciate married life, and prevailed too at a time when extreme ascetic views had not yet mastered the Church at large.

---

\(^1\) τὸν πρώτον εγκεκριναν ought to be rejected from St Matthew’s text, having been interpolated from Luke ii. 7.

\(^2\) For parallel instances see Mill, p. 324 sq.

3. But one objection has been hurled at the Helvidian theory with great force, and as it seems to me with fatal effect, which is powerless against the Epiphanian\(^1\). Our Lord in His dying moments commended His mother to the keeping of St John; 'Woman, behold thy son.' The injunction was forthwith obeyed, and 'from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home' (John xix. 26, 27).
Yet according to the Helvidian view she had no less than four sons besides daughters living at the time. Is it conceivable that our Lord would thus have snapped asunder the most sacred ties of natural affection? The difficulty is not met by the fact that her own sons were still unbelievers. This fact would scarcely have been allowed to override the paramount duties of filial piety. But even when so explained, what does this hypothesis require us to believe?
Though within a few days a special appearance is vouchsafed to one of these brethren, who is destined to rule the mother Church of Jerusalem, and all alike are converted to the faith of Christ; yet she, their mother, living in the same city and joining with them in a common worship (Acts i. 14), is consigned to the care of a stranger of whose house she becomes henceforth the inmate.

Thus it would appear that, taking the scriptural notices alone, the Hieronymian account must be abandoned; while of the remain ing t wo the balance of the argument is against the Helvidian and in favour of the Epiphanian. To what extent the last-men-

\(^1\) This argument is brought forward not only by Jerome, but also by Hilary of Poitiers, Ambrose, and Epiphanius, who all held the view which I have designated by the name of the last of the three.
tioned theory can plead the prestige of tradition, will be seen from the following catena of references to the fathers and other early Christian writings.

1 The testimony of Papias is frequently quoted at the head of the patristic authorities, as favouring the view of Jerome. The passage in question is an extract, to which the name of this very ancient writer is prefixed, in a Bodleian ms, no. 2397, of the date 1302 or 1303. It is given in Grabe's Spicil. ii. p. 16, and runs as follows: 'Maria mater Domini: Maria Cleophae, sive Alphei uxor, quae fuit mater Jacoti episcopi et apostoli et Thadei et cujusdam Joseph: Maria Salome uxor Zebedei mater Joanis evangelistae et Jacobi: Maria Magdalene: istae quattuor in Evangelio reperintur. Jacobus et Judas et Joseph filii erant materterae Domini; Jacobus quoque et Joannes alius materterae Domini fuerunt filii. Maria Jacobi minoris et Joseph mater, uxor Alphei, soror fuit Mariae matris Domini, et cujusdam Joseph: Marie. Sallome uxor Zebedei mater Iacobii et Josephi: Marie. Salome a vico vel a viro dicitur: hanc eandem Cleophae quidam dicunt quod duos viros habuerit. Maria dicitur illuminaatrix sive stella maris, gennit enim lumen mundi; sermone autem Syro Domina nuncupatur, quia genuit Dominum.' Grabe's description 'ad marginem expresse adscriptum! ego Papia' is incorrect; the name is not in the margin but over the passage as a title to it. The authenticity of this fragment is accepted by Mill, p. 138, and by Dean Alford on Matt. xiii. 55. Two writers also in Smith's Biblical Dictionary (s. vv. 'Brother' and 'James'), respectively impugning and maintaining the Hieronymian view, refer to it without suspicion. It is strange that able and intelligent critics should not have seen through a fabrication which is so manifestly spurious. Not to mention the difficulties in which we are involved by some of the statements, the following reasons seem conclusive: (1) The last sentence 'Maria dicitur etc.' is evidently very late, and is, as Dr Mill says, 'justly rejected by Grabe.' Grabe says, 'ad didit is qui descripsit ex suo'; but the passage is continuous in the ms, and there is neither more nor less authority for assigning this to Papias than the remainder of the extract. (2) The statement about 'Maria uxor Alphei' is taken from Jerome (adv. Helvid.) almost word for word, as Dr Mill has seen; and it is purely arbitrary to reject this as spurious and accept the rest as genuine. (3) The writings of Papias were in Jerome's hands, and eager as he was to claim the support of authority, he could not have failed to refer to testimony which was so important and which so entirely confirms his view in the most minute points. Nor is it conceivable that a passage like this, coming from so early a writer, should not have impressed itself very strongly on the ecclesiastical tradition of the early centuries, whereas in fact we discover no traces of it.

For these reasons the extract seemed to be manifestly spurious; but I might have saved myself the trouble of examining the Bodleian ms and writing these remarks, if I had known at the time, that the passage was written by a medieval namesake of the Bishop of Hierapolis, Papias the author of the 'Elementarium,' who lived in the 11th century. This seems to have been a standard work in its day, and was printed four times in the 15th century under the name of the Lexicon or Vocabulist. I have not had access to a printed copy, but there is a ms of the work (marked Kk. 4. 1) in the Cambridge University Library, the knowledge of which I owe to Mr Bradshaw, the librarian. The variations from the Bodleian extract are unimportant. It is strange that though Grabe actually mentions the later Papias the author of the Dictionary, and Routh copies his note, neither the one nor the other got on the right track.
1. The Gospel According to the Hebrews, one of the earliest and most respectable of the apocryphal narratives, related that the Lord after His resurrection 'went to James and appeared to him; for James had sworn that he would not eat bread from that hour in which the Lord had drunk the cup (biberat calicem Dominus), till he saw Him risen from the dead.' Jesus therefore 'took bread and blessed it and brake it and gave it to James the Just and said to him, My brother, eat thy bread, for the Son of Man has risen from the dead' (Hieron. de Vir. Illustr. 2). I have adopted the reading 'Dominus,' as the Greek translation has Κύριος, and it also suits the context better; for the point of time which we should naturally expect is not the institution of the eucharist but the Lord's death. Our Lord had more than once spoken of His sufferings under the image of draining the cup (Matt. xx. 22, 23, xxvi. 39, 42, Mark x. 38, 39, xiv. 36, Luke xxi. 42); and He is represented as using this metaphor here. If however we retain 'Domini,' it must be allowed that the writer represented James the Lord's brother as present at the last supper, but it does not follow that he regarded him as one of the Twelve. He may have assigned to him a sort of exceptional position such as he holds in the Clementines, apart from and in some respects superior to the Twelve, and thus his presence at this critical time would be accounted for. At all events this passage confirms the tradition that the James mentioned by St Paul (1 Cor. xv. 7) was the Lord's brother; while at the same time it is characteristic of a Judaic writer whose aim it would be to glorify the head of his Church at all hazards, that an appearance, which seems in reality to have been vouchsafed to this James to win him over from his unbelief, should be represented as a reward for his devotion.

2. The Gospel According to Peter was highly esteemed by the Docete of the second century. Towards the close of that century, Serapion, bishop of Antioch, found it in circulation at Rhossus a Cilician town, and at first tolerated it: but finding on examination that, though it had much in common with the Gospels recognised by the Catholic Church, there were sentiments in it favourable to the heretical views that were secretly gaining ground there, he forbade its use. In the fragment of Serapion preserved by Eusebius (H. E. vi. 12)¹, from which our information is derived, he speaks of this apocryphal work as if it had been long in circulation, so that its date must be about the middle of the second century at the latest, and probably somewhat earlier. To this gospel Origen refers, as stating that the Lord's brethren were Joseph's sons by a former wife and thus maintaining the virginity of the Lord's mother².

3. Protevangelium Jacobi, a purely fictitious but very early narrative, dating probably not later than the middle of the second century, represents Joseph as an old man when the Virgin was espoused to him, having sons of his own (§ 9, ed. Tisch. p. 18) but no daughters (§ 17, p. 31), and James the writer of the account apparently as grown up at the time of Herod's death (§ 25, p. 48). Following in this track, subsequent apocryphal narratives give a similar account with various modifications, in some cases naming Joseph's daughters or his wife. Such are the Pseudo-Matthaei Evang. (§ 32, ed. Tisch. p. 104), Evang. de Nativ. Mar. (§ 8, ib. p. 111), Historia Joseph. (§ 2, ib. p. 116), Evang. Thomas (§ 16, p. 147), Evang. Infant. Arab. (§ 35, p. 191), besides the apocryphal Gospels mentioned by Jerome (Comm. in Matth. T. vii. p. 86) which were different from any now extant³. Doubtless these accounts, so far as they step beyond the incidents narrated in the Canonical Gospels, are pure fabrications, but the fabrications would scarcely have taken this form, if the Hieronymian view of the Lord's brethren had been received or even known when they were written. It is to these sources that Jerome refers when he taunts the holders of the Epiphanian view with following 'deliramenta apocryphorum.'

4. The Earliest Versions, with the exception of the Old Latin Older Versions.

¹ For this fragment see Routh's Rel. Sacr. t. p. 451, and Westcott History of the Canon, p. 385.
² See below, p. 281.
³ As appears from the fact mentioned by Jerome; see above, p. 266, note 3.

18—2
and Memphitic which translate the Greek literally and preserve the same ambiguities, give renderings of certain passages bearing on the subject, which are opposed to the Hieronymian view. The Curetonian Syriac translates Ἀπαφία Ιακώβου (Luke xxiv. 10) 'Mary the daughter of James.' The Peshito in John xix. 25 has, 'His mother and His mother's sister and Mary of Cleopha and Mary Magdalene'; and in Luke vi. 16, Acts i. 13, it renders 'Judas son of James.' One of the old Egyptian versions again, the Thébaïc, in John xix. 25 gives 'Mary daughter of Clopas,' and in Luke vi. 16, Acts i. 13 'Judas son of James.'

5. The Clementine Homilies, written, it would appear, not late in the second century to support a peculiar phase of Ebionism, speak of James as being 'called the brother of the Lord' (ὁ λεζθεὶς διδακτὸς τοῦ Κυρίου, xi. 35), an expression which has been variously interpreted as favouring all three hypotheses (see Blom, p. 88: Schlieemann Clement, pp. 8, 213), and is indecisive in itself. It is more important to observe that in the Epistle of Clement prefixed to this work and belonging to the same cycle of writings James is styled not Apostle, but Bishop of Bishops, and seems to be distinguished from and in some respects exalted above the Twelve.

6. In the portion of the Clementine Recognitions, which seems to have been founded on the Ascents of James, another very early Ebionite writing, the distinction thus implied in the Homilies is explicitly stated. The Twelve Apostles after disputing severally with Caiaphas give an account of their conference to James the chief of Bishops; while James the son of Alpheus is distinctly mentioned among the Twelve as one of the disputants (i. 59).

7. Hegesippus (about 160), a Hebrew Christian of Palestine, writes as follows: 'After the martyrdom of James the Just on the same charge as the Lord, his paternal uncle's child Symeon the son of Clopas is next made bishop, who was put forward by all as the second in succession, being cousin of the Lord' (μετὰ τὸ μαρτυρησαί Ιάκωβον

---

1 The word λεζθείς is most naturally taken, I think, to refer to the reputed brotherhood of James, as a consequence of the reputed fatherhood of Joseph, and thus to favour the Epiphanian view. See the expressions of Hegesippus, and of Eusebius, pp. 277, 278.

2 See the next dissertation.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

If the passage be correctly rendered thus (and this rendering alone seems intelligible*), Hegesippus distinguishes between the relationships of James the Lord’s brother and Symeon His cousin. So again, referring apparently to this passage, he in another fragment (Euseb. H. E. iii. 32) speaks of ‘the child of the Lord’s paternal uncle, the aforesaid Symeon son of Clopas’ (ο ἐκ θελον τοῦ Κυρίου ὁ προειρημένος Συμεών υἱὸς Κλωπᾶ), to which Eusebius adds, ‘for Hegesippus relates that Clopas was the brother of Joseph.’ Thus in Hegesippus Symeon is never once called the Lord’s brother, while James is always so designated. And this argument powerful in itself is materially strengthened by the fact that, where Hegesippus has occasion to mention Jude, he too like James is styled ‘the Lord’s brother’; ‘There still survived members of the Lord’s family (οἱ ἀπὸ γένους τοῦ Κυρίου) grandsons of Judas who was called His brother according to the flesh’ (τοῦ κατὰ σάρκα λεγομένου αὐτοῦ ἄδελφοῦ); Euseb. H. E. iii. 20. In this passage the word ‘called’ seems to me to point to the Epiphanian rather than the Helvidian view, the brotherhood of these brethren, like the fatherhood of Joseph, being reputed but not real. In yet another passage (Euseb. H. E. ii. 23) Hegesippus relates that ‘the Church was committed in conjunction with the Apostles* to the charge of (διαδίχεται τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μετὰ τῶν ἀποστόλων) the Lord’s brother James,

2 A different meaning however has been assigned to the words: πάλιν and δεότερον being taken to signify ‘another child of his uncle, another cousin,’ and thus the passage has been represented as favouring the Hieronymian view. So for instance Mill p. 253, Schaf p. 64. On the other hand see Credner Einl. p. 575, Neander Pflanz. p. 559 (4te aufl.). To this rendering the presence of the definite article alone seems fatal (ὁ ἐκ τοῦ θελον not ἐτέρος τῶν ἐκ τοῦ θελον); but indeed the whole passage appears to be framed so as to distinguish the relationships of the two persons; whereas, had the author’s object been to represent Symeon as a brother of James, no more circuitous mode could well have been devised for the purpose of stating so very simple a fact. Let me add that Eusebius (l.c.) and Epiphanius (Haer.) pp. 636, 1039, 1046, ed. Petav.) must have interpreted the words as I have done.

Whether αὐτῶς should be referred to Ἰακώβου or to Κύριος is doubtful. If to the former, this alone decides the meaning of the passage. This seems the more natural reference of the two, but the form of expression will admit either.

* Jerome (de Vir. Ill. § 2) renders it ‘post apostulos,’ as if μετὰ τῶν ἀποστόλων; Rufinus correctly ‘cum apostolis.’
who has been entitled Just by all from the Lord's time to our own day; for many bore the name of James.' From this last passage however no inference can be safely drawn; for, supposing the term 'Apostles' to be here restricted to the Twelve, the expression \( \mu v \tau \omega v \alpha \pi o s t o l o v \) may distinguish St James not from but among the Apostles; as in Acts v. 29, 'Peter and the Apostles answered.'

Thus the testimony of Hegesippus seems distinctly opposed to the, Hieronymian view, while of the other two it favours the Epiphanian rather than the Helvidian. If any doubt still remains, the fact that both Eusebius and Epiphanius, who derived their information mainly from Hegesippus, gave this account of the Lord's brethren materially strengthens the position. The testimony of an everal Palestinian writer who made it his business to collect such traditions is of the utmost importance.

Tertullian's authority was appealed to by Helvidius, and Jerome is content to reply that he was not a member of the Church ('de Tertulliano nihil amplius dico quam ecclesiae hominem non fuisse,' \textit{adv. Helvid.} § 17). It is generally assumed in consequence that Tertullian held the Lord's brethren to be sons of Joseph and Mary. This assumption, though probable, is not absolutely certain.
The point at issue in this passage is not the particular opinion of Helvidius respecting the Lord's brethren, but the virginity of the Lord's mother. Accordingly in reply Jerome alleges on his own side the authority of others', whose testimony certainly did not go beyond

\[ \text{\textsuperscript{1} 'Numquid non possum tibi totam veterum scriptorum seriem commo-vere: Ignatium, Polycarpum, Irenaeum, Justinum Martyrem, multosque alios apostolicos et eloquentes viros?'} (\textit{adv. Helvid.} 17). \]
I have already (p. 130, note 3) mentioned an instance of the unfair way in which Jerome piles together his authorities. In the present case we are in a position to test him.
Jerome did not possess any writings of Ignatius which are not extant now;
and in no place does this apostolic father maintain the perpetual virginity of St Mary. In one remarkable passage indeed (\textit{Ephes.} 19), which is several times quoted by subsequent writers, he speaks of the virginity of Mary as a mystery, but this refers distinctly to the time before the birth of our Lord.
To this passage which he elsewhere quotes (Comment. \textit{in Matth.} T. vii.
p. 12), Jerome is doubtless referring here.

In Cowper's \textit{Syriac Miscell.} p. 61, I find an extract, 'Justin one of the authors who were in the days of Augustus and Tiberius and Gaius wrote in the third discourse: That Mary the Gal-lean, who was the mother of Christ who this one point and had no reference to the relationship of the Lord's brethren. Thus too the more distinct passages in the extant writings of Tertullian relate to the virginity only (de Carn. Christ. c. 23 and passim, de Monog. c. 8). Elsewhere however, though he does not directly state it, his argument seems to imply that the Lord's brethren were His brothers in the same sense in which Mary was His mother (adv. Marc. iv. 19, de Carn. Christ. 7). It is therefore highly probable that he held the Helvidian view. Such an admission from one who was so strenuous an advocate of asceticism is worthy of notice.

9. Clement of Alexandria (about A.D. 200) in a passage of the Clement Hypotyposeis preserved in a Latin translation by Cassiodorus (the authorship has been questioned but without sufficient reason) puts forward the Epiphanian solution; 'Jude, who wrote the Catholic Epistle, being one of the sons of Joseph and [the Lord's] brother, a Latin man of deep piety, though he was aware of his relationship to the Lord, nevertheless did not say he was His brother; but what said he? Jude the servant of Jesus Christ, because He was his Lord, but brother of James; for this is true; he was his brother, being Joseph's [son]' (ed. Potter, p. 1007). This statement is explicit.

was crucified in Jerusalem, had not been with a husband. And Joseph did not repudiate her, but Joseph continued in holiness without a wife, he and his five sons by a former wife: and Mary continued without a husband. The editor assigns this passage to Justin Martyr; but not to mention the anachronism, the whole tenor of the passage and the immediate neighbourhood of similar extracts shows that it was intended for the testimony (unquestionably spurious) of some contemporary heathen writer to the facts of the Gospel.

1 We read in Cassiodorus (de Inst. Div. Lit. 8), 'In epistolas autem canonicas Clemens Alexandrinus presbyter, qui et Stromateus vocatur, id est, in epistola (-am?) S. Petri prima (-am?) S. Johannis prima (-am?) et secunda (-am?) et Jacobiquaedam Attico sermone declaravit. Ubi multa quidem subtiliter sed aliqua incaute loquitus est, quae nos ita transferri fecimus in Latinum, ut exclusis quibusdam offendi-lis purificata doctrina ejus securior possit hauriri.' If 'Jude' be substituted for 'James,' this description exactly applies to the Latin notes extant under the title Adumbrationes. This was a very easy slip of the pen, and I can scarcely doubt that these notes are the same to which Cassiodorus refers as taken from the Hypotyposeis of Clement. Dr Westcott (Canon, p. 401) has pointed out in confirmation of this, that while Clement elsewhere directly quotes the Epistle of St Jude, he never refers to the Epistle of St James. Bunsen has included these notes in his collection of fragments of the Hypotyposeis, Anal. Anten. 1. p. 325. It should be added that the statement about the relationship of Jude must be Clement's own and cannot have been inserted by Cassiodorus, since Cassiodorus in common with the Latin Church would naturally hold the Hieronymian hypothesis.

2 'Frater erat ejus filius Joseph.' The insertion of 'filius' (with Bunsen) is necessary for the sense, whether Cassiodorus had it or not. Perhaps the Greek words were ἄδελφος αὐτοῦ τῶν Ἰουσαήφ, which would account for the omission.
On the other hand, owing to an extract preserved in Eusebius, his authority is generally claimed for the Hieronymian view; 'Clement,' says Eusebius, 'in the sixth book of the Hypotyposeis gives the following account: Peter and James and John, he tells us, after the resurrection of the Saviour were not ambitious of honour, though the preference shown them by the Lord might have entitled them to it, but chose James the Just Bishop of Jerusalem. The same writer too in the seventh book of the same treatise gives this account also of him (James the Lord's brother); The Lord after the resurrection delivered the gnosis to James the Just 1 and John and Peter. These delivered it to the rest of the Apostles; and the rest of the Apostles to the seventy, of whom Barnabas was one. Now there are two Jameses, one the Just who was thrown down from the pinnacle (of the temple) and beaten to death with a club by a fuller, and another who was beheaded' (H. E. ii. 1). This passage however proves nothing. Clement says that there were two of the name of James, but he neither states nor implies that there were two only.

1 Credner, Einf. p. 585, condemns the words τὸ διάκαθω as spurious. Though it might be inferred from the previous extract given by Eusebius that the son of Zebedee is meant here, I believe nevertheless that they are genuine. For (1) They seem to be required as the motive for the explanation which is given afterwards of the different persons bearing the name James. (2) It is natural that a special prominence should be given to the same three Apostles of the Circumcision who are mentioned in Gal. ii. 9 as the pillars of Jewish Christendom. (3) Eusebius introduces the quotation as relating to James the Just (καὶ ἄπρο), which would not be a very good description if the other James were the prominent person in the passage. (4) I find from Hippolytus that the Ophite account singled out James the Lord's brother as a possessor of the esoteric gnosis, καὶ ἐκ τῶν Ἀπολλόν πάνω λόγων τὰ κεφάλαια ἃ φησιν παραδεδοκέναι Μαριαμματών Ἰδάκωβον τοῦ Κυρίου τῶν ἀδελφῶν, Haeres. x. 6, p. 95. Clement seems to have derived his information from some work of a Jewish Gnostic complexion, perhaps from the Gospel of the Egyptians with which he was well acquainted (Strom. iii. pp. 529 sqq. 553, ed. Potter); and as Hippolytus tells us that the Ophites made use of this Gospel (ὡς ἐξαλλάξας τάς τὰς πολλὰς ἐν τῷ ἐπιγραφώμενῳ κατ' Ἀλγυπτίους εὐαγγελίῳ κείμενα ἔχουσιν, ιθ. ν. 7, p. 98), it is probable that the account of Clement coincided with that of the Ophites. The words τὸ διάκαθω are represented in the Syriac translation of Eusebius of which the existing MS (Brit. Mus. add. 14,639) belongs to the 6th century.

I hold τὸ διάκαθω therefore to be the genuine words of Clement, but I do not feel so sure that the closing explanation δόο ὧσ ἐγείρασαν Ἰδάκωβον κ.τ.λ. is not an addition of Eusebius. This I suppose to be Bunsen's opinion, for he ends his fragment with the preceding words ι. p. 321.
His sole object was to distinguish the son of Zebedee from the Lord's brother; and the son of Alpheus, of whom he knew nothing and could tell nothing, did not occur to his mind when he penned this sentence. There is in this passage nothing which contradicts the Latin extract; though indeed in a writer so uncritical in his historical notices such a contradiction would not be surprising.

10. ORIGEN († A.D. 253) declares himself very distinctly in favour of the Epiphanian view, stating that the brethren were sons of Joseph by a deceased wife. Elsewhere indeed he says that St Paul 'calls this James the Lord's brother, not so much on account of his kinsmanship or their companionship together, as on account of his character and language,' but this is not inconsistent with the explicit statement already referred to. In one passage he writes at some length on the subject; 'Some persons, on the ground of a tradition in the Gospel according to Peter, (i.e. the Protevangelium), say that the brothers of Jesus were Joseph's sons by a former wife to whom he was married before Mary. Those who hold this view wish to preserve the honour of Mary in virginity throughout...And I think it reasonable that as Jesus was the first-fruit of purity and chastity among men, so Mary was among women: for it is not seemly to ascribe the first-fruit of virginity to any other woman but her' (in Matt. xiii. 55, iii. p. 462). This passage

1 For instance he distinguished Cephas of Gal. ii. 9 from Peter (see above, p. 129), and represented St Paul as a married man (Euseb. H. E. iii. 30).

2 On the supposition that Clement held the Hieronymian theory, as he is represented even by those who themselves reject it, the silence of Origen, who seems never to have heard of this theory, is quite inexplicable. Epiphanius moreover, who appears equally ignorant of it, refers to Clement while writing on this very subject (Haereses. p. 119, Petav.). Indeed Clement would then stand quite alone before the age of Jerome.

3 In Joann. ii. 12 (Catena Corder. p. 75) ἰδελθοῦσι μὲν ὅσι ἐκεῖ φίλου, ὅτε τῆς παρθένου τεκόσης ἐτερον οὖδὲ αὐτὸς ἐκ τοῦ Ἰωσὴφ τυφκτῶν· νῦν τοιαυτῶν ἐξημαίστων αὐτῶν ἄδελφοι, νιῶτο Ἰωσὴφ ὡς τούτο προτεσθυμένως γυναικός: Hom. in Luc. 7 (iii. p. 940, ed. Delarue) 'Hi enim filii qui Joseph dicebantur non erant orti de Maria, neque est ulla scriptura quae ista commemorat.' In this latter passage either the translator has been confused by the order in the original or the words in the translation itself have been displaced accidentally, but the meaning is clear.

4 c. Cels. i. 47 (i. p. 363) ὁ τοσοῦτον διὰ τὸ πρὸς ἀλματος συγγενὲς ἡ γῆν κοίνων αὐτῶν ἀναστροφῆν δοῦν διὰ τὸ ἥθος καὶ τῶν λόγων.

5 Op. iii. p. 463 sq. Mill, pp. 261, 273, has strangely misunderstood the purport of this passage. He speaks of shows not only that Origen himself favoured the Epiphanian view which elsewhere he has directly maintained, but that he was wholly unaware of the Hieronymian, the only alternative which presented itself being the denial of the perpetual virginity¹.

11. The APOTOLICAL CONSTITUTIONS, the main part of which may perhaps be regarded as a work of the third century, though they received considerable additions in later ages, distinguish James the Lord's brother from James the son of Alphæus, making him, like St Paul, a supernumerary apostle, and thus counting fourteen in all (vi. 12, 13, 14; compare ii. 55; vii. 46; viii. 4).

12. VICTORINUS PETAVIONENSIS (about 300) was claimed by Helvidius as a witness in his own favour. Jerome denied this and put in a counter claim. It may perhaps be inferred from this circumstance that Victorinus did little more than repeat the statements of the evangelists respecting the Lord's brethren (adv. Helvid. 17).

13. EUSEBIUS OF CÆSAREA († about 340) distinguished James the Lord's brother from the Twelve, representing him as a supernumerary apostle like St Paul (Comm. in Isai. in Montfaucon's Coll. Nov. Patr. ii. p. 422; Hist. Eccl. i. 12; comp. vii. 19). Accordingly in another

Origen here as 'teaching the opinion of his (James the Just) being the son of Joseph, both as the sentiment of a minority among right-minded Christians and as founded on apocryphal traditions'; and so considers the note on John ii. 12, already referred to, as 'standing strangely contrasted' to Origen's statement here. If Dr Mill's attention however had been directed to the last sentence, $καὶ$ $οἵμαι$ ὁ $νόμος$ $ἐκεῖνος$ $κ.τ.λ.$, which, though most important, he has himself omitted in quoting the passage, he could scarcely have failed to see Origen's real meaning.

¹ The authority of Hippolytus of Portus, a contemporary of Origen, has sometimes been alleged in favour of Jerome's hypothesis. In the treatise De XII Apostolis ascribed to this author (ed. Fabric. i. app. p. 30) it is said of James the son of Alphæus, $κηρώσων$ ὑπὸ Ἰεροσολύμων καταλευθερεῖται καὶ ἄκομη $τὰ$ $παῦτα$ $τὰ$ $καὶ$. He is thus confused or identified with James the Lord's brother. But this blundering treatise was certainly not written by the bishop of Portus; see Le Moyne in Fabricius i. p. 84, and Bunsen's Hippol. i. p. 456 (ed. 2). On the other hand in the work De LXX Apostolis (Fabricius i. app. p. 41), also ascribed to this writer, we find among the $τὰ$ $τὸ$ the name of Ἰάκωβος ὁ ἀδελφός ὁ ἐπισκόπος Ἰηροσολύμων, who is thus distinguished from the Twelve. This treatise also is manifestly spurious. Again Nicephorus Callistus, H. E. ii. 3, cites as from Hippolytus of Portus an elaborate account of our Lord's brethren following the Epiphanian view (Hippol. Op. i. app. 43, ed. Fabric.); but this account seems to be drawn either from Hippolytus the Theban, unless as Bunsen (l. c.) supposes this Theban Hippolytus be a mythical personage, or from some forged writings which bore the name of the older Hippolytus.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

passage he explains that this James was called the Lord's brother, because Joseph was his reputed father (Hist. Eccl. ii. 1). 1

14. Cyril of Jerusalem († 386) comments on the successive appearances of our Lord related by St Paul, first to Peter, then to the Twelve, then to the five hundred, then to James His own brother, then to Paul His enemy; and his language implies that each appearance was a step in advance of the testimony afforded by the former (Catech. xiv. 21, p. 216, ed. Toutée). It may be gathered thence that he distinguished this James from the Twelve. As this however is only an inference from his language, and not a direct statement of his own, too much stress must not be laid on it. In another passage also (Catech. iv. 28, p. 65, Kai tois ἀποστόλοις καὶ Ἰακώβῳ τῷ ταύτῃ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἐπισκόπῳ) Cyril seems to make the same distinction, but here again the inference is doubtful.

15. Hilary of Poitiers († 368) denounces those who 'claim authority for their opinion (against the virginity of the Lord's mother) from the fact of its being recorded that our Lord had several brothers'; and adds, 'yet if these had been sons of Mary and not rather sons of Joseph, the offspring of a former marriage, she would never at the time of the passion have been transferred to the Apostle John to be his mother' (Comm. in Matth. i. 1, p. 671, ed. Bened.).

1 Πάκαβων τὸν τοῦ Κυρίου λεγόμενον ἀληθινὸν, διό δὴ καὶ οὗτος τοῦ Ἰωσήφ ὀνόματο παῖς, τοῦ δὲ Χριστοῦ πατὴρ ὁ Ιωσήφ, ὃς μεμενεθείνα ἡ παρθένος κ.τ.λ. On the whole this passage seems to be best explained by referring οὗτος to Κύριος. But this is not necessary; for ὀνομάζεσθαι (or καλεῖσθαι) παῖς τυόν is a good Greek phrase to denote real as well as reputed sonship: as Ἀesch. Fragm. 285 ἄδι δὴ Ἀλαυτός παῖδες ὄνομαζοντα, Soph. Trach. 1105 δὲ τῆς ᾠλητῆς μητρὸς ὄνομαζον. Eur. Elect. 935: comp. Ephes. iii. 15 τὸν πατέρα ὥσ πάσα πατρίλ ὀνομάζεται. The word ὀνόμαστο cannot at all events, as Mill (p. 273) seems disposed to think, imply any doubt on the part of Eusebius about the parentage of James, for the whole drift of the passage is plainly against this. The other reading, διὸ δὴ καὶ οὗτος τοῦ Ἰωσήφ τοῦ νομίζομενον ολοκλ. πατρὸς τοῦ Χριστοῦ, found in some mss and in the Syriac version, and preferred by Blom. p. 98, and Credner Einl. p. 585, I cannot but regard as an obvious alteration of some early transcriber for the sake of clearness.

Compare the expressions in i. 12 δὲ καὶ οὗτος τῶν ἐφοροῦν ἐπὶ ἀδελφῶν ἦν, and iii. 7 τοῦ Κυρίου χρηματίζων ἀδελ. φός. He was a reputed brother of the Lord, because Joseph was His reputed father. See also Eusebius On the Star, 'Joseph and Mary and Our Lord with them and the five sons of Hannah (Anna) the first wife of Joseph' (p. 17, Wright's Transl.). The account from which this passage is taken professes to be founded on a document dating A.D. 119.
Thus he not only adopts the Epiphanian solution, but shows himself entirely ignorant of the Hieronymian.

16. Victorinus the Philosopher (about 360) takes διον in Gal. i. 19 as expressing not exception but opposition, and distinctly states that James was not an Apostle: 'Cum autem fratrem dixit, apostolum negavit.'

17. The Ambrosian Hilary (about 75) comments on Gal. i. 19 as follows; 'The Lord is called the brother of James and the rest in the same way in which He is also designated the son of Joseph. For some in a fit of madness impiously assert and contend that these were true brothers of the Lord, being sons of Mary, allowing at the same time that Joseph, though not His true father, was so called nevertheless. For if these were His true brothers, then Joseph will be His true father; for he who called Joseph His Father also called James and the rest His brothers.' Thus his testimony entirely coincides with that of his greater namesake. He sees only the alternative of denying the perpetual virginity as Helvidius did, or accepting the solution of the Protevangelium; and he unhesitatingly adopts the latter.

18. Basil the Great († 379), while allowing that the perpetual virginity is not a necessary article of belief, yet adheres to it himself 'since the lovers of Christ cannot endure to hear that the mother of God ever ceased to be a virgin' (Hom. in Sanct. Christ. Gen. ii. p. 600, ed. Garn.). As immediately afterwards he refers, in support of his view, to some apocryphal work which related that Zacharias was slain by the Jews for testifying to the virginity of the mother of Jesus (a story which closely resembles the narrative of his death in the Protevangel. §§ 23, 24), it may perhaps be inferred that he accepted that account of the Lord's brethren which ran through these apocryphal gospels.

19. His brother Gregory Nyssen († after 394) certainly adopted the Epiphanian account. At the same time he takes up the very untenable position that the 'Mary who is designated in the other

---

1 This very moderate expression of opinion is marked by the editors with a caute legendum in the margin; and in Garnier's edition the treatise is assigned to an appendix as of doubtful authenticity. The main argument urged against it is the passage here referred to. (See Garnier, II. pref. p. xv.)
Evangelists (besides St John) the mother of James and Joses is the mother of God and none else; being so called because she undertook the education of these her stepsons; and he supposes also that this James is called 'the little' by St Mark to distinguish him from James the son of Alpheus who was 'great,' because he was in the number of the Twelve Apostles, which the Lord's brother was not (in Christ. Resurr. ii. Opp. iii. pp. 412, 413, ed. Paris, 1638).

20. The Antidicomarianites, an obscure Arabian sect in the Antidicomarianites, latter half of the fourth century, maintained that the Lord's mother bore children to her husband Joseph. These opinions seem to have produced a reaction, or to have been themselves reactionary, for we read about the same time of a sect called Collyridians, likewise in Arabia, who going to the opposite extreme paid divine honours to the Virgin (Epiphan. Haeres. lxxviii, lxxix).

21. Epiphanius a native of Palestine became bishop of Constantia in Cyprus in the year 367. Not very long before Jerome wrote in defence of the perpetual virginity of the Lord's mother against the Helvidians at Rome, Epiphanius came forward as the champion of the same cause against the Antidicomarianites. He denounced them in an elaborate pastoral letter, in which he explains his views at length, and which he has thought fit to incorporate in his subsequently written treatise against Heresies (pp. 1034—1057).

* The names are plainly terms of ridicule invented by their enemies. Augustine supposes the 'Antidicomarianites' of Epiphanius (he writes the word 'Antidicomarianites') to be the same as the Helvidians of Jerome (adv. Haer. 84, viii. p. 24). They held the same tenets, it is true, but there seems to have been otherwise no connexion between the two. Considerations of time and place alike resist this identification.

Epiphanius had heard that these opinions, which he held to be derogatory to the Lord's mother, had been promulgated also by the elder Apollinaris or some of his disciples; but he doubted about this (p. 1034). The report was probably circulated by their opponents in order to bring discredit upon them.

1 Similarly Chrysostom, see below, p. 289, note r. This identification of the Lord's mother with the mother of James and Joses is adopted and similarly explained also in one of the apocryphal gospels: Hist. Joseph, 4 (Tisch. p. 117). Possibly Gregory derived it from some such source. It was also part of the Helvidian hypothesis, where it was less out of place, and gave Jerome an easy triumph over his adversary (adv. Helvid. 12 etc.). It is adopted moreover by Cave (Life of St James the Less, § 2), who holds that the Lord's brethren were sons of Joseph, and yet makes James the Lord's brother one of the Twelve, identifying Joseph with Alpheus. Fritzche also identifies these two Maries (Matth. p. 822, Marc. p. 697).
ed. Petav.). He moreover discusses the subject incidentally in other parts of his great work (pp. 115, 119, 432, 636), and it is clear that he had devoted much time and attention to it. His account coincides with that of the apocryphal gospels. Joseph, he states, was eighty years old or more when the Virgin was espoused to him; by his former wife he had six children, four sons and two daughters, the names of the daughters were Mary and Salome, for which names by the way he alleges the authority of Scripture (p. 1041); his sons, St James especially, were called the Lord's brethren because they were brought up with Jesus; the mother of the Lord remained for ever a virgin; as the lioness is said to exhaust her fertility in the production of a single offspring (see Herod. iii. 108), so she who bore the Lion of Judah could not in the nature of things become a mother a second time (pp. 1044, 1045). These particulars with many other besides he gives, quoting as his authority 'the tradition of the Jews' (p. 1039). It is to be observed moreover that, though he thus treats of the subject several times and at great length, he never once alludes to the Hieronymian account; and yet I can scarcely doubt that one who so highly extolled celibacy would have hailed with delight a solution which, as Jerome boasted, saved the virginity not of Mary only but of Joseph also, for whose honour Epiphanius shows himself very jealous (pp. 1040, 1046, 1047).

Helvidius, Bonosus, and Jovinianus.

22. Somewhere about the year 380 Helvidius, who resided in Rome, published a treatise in which he maintained that the Lord's brethren were sons of Joseph and Mary. He seems to have succeeded in convincing a considerable number of persons, for contemporary writers speak of the Helvidians as a party. These views were moreover advocated by Bonosus, bishop of Sardica in Illyria, about the same time, and apparently also by Jovinianus a monk probably of Milan. The former was condemned by a synod assembled at Capua (A.D. 392), and the latter by synods held at Rome and at Milan (about A.D. 390; see Hefele Conciliengesch. II. pp. 47, 48).1

1 The work ascribed to Dorotheus Tyrius is obviously spurious (see Cave Hist. Lit. i. p. 163); and I have therefore not included his testimony in this...
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

In earlier times this account of the Lord's brethren, so far as it was the badge of a party, seems to have been held in conjunction with Ebionite views respecting the conception and person of Christ. For, though not necessarily affecting the belief in the miraculous Incarnation, it was yet a natural accompaniment of the denial thereof. The motive of these latter impugners of the perpetual virginity was very different. They endeavoured to stem the current which had set strongly in the direction of celibacy; and, if their theory was faulty, they still deserve the sympathy due to men who in defiance of public opinion refused to bow their necks to an extravagant and tyrannous superstition.

We have thus arrived at the point of time when Jerome's answer to Helvidius created a new epoch in the history of this controversy. And the following inferences are, if I mistake not, fairly deducible from the evidence produced. First: there is not the slightest indication that the Hieronymian solution ever occurred to any individual or sect or church, until it was put forward by Jerome himself. If it had been otherwise, writers like Origen, the two Hilaries, and Epiphanius, who discuss the question, could not have failed to notice it. Secondly: the Epiphanian account has the highest claims to the sanction of tradition, whether the value of this sanction be great or small. Thirdly: this solution seems especially to represent the Palestinian view.

In the year 382 (or 383) Jerome published his treatise; and the effect of it is visible at once.

AMBROSE in the year 392 wrote a work De Institutione Virginis, Ambrose.
in which he especially refutes the impugners of the perpetual virginity of the Lord's mother. In a passage which is perhaps intentionally obscure he speaks to this effect: 'The term brothers has a wide application; it is used of members of the same family, the same race, the same country. Witness the Lord's own words I will declare thy name to my brethren (Ps. xxii. 22). St Paul too says: I could wish to be accursed for my brethren (Rom. ix. 3). Doubtless they might be called brothers as sons of Joseph, not of Mary. And if any one will go into the question carefully, he will find this to be the true account. For myself I do not intend to enter upon this question: it is of no importance to decide what particular relationship is implied; it is sufficient for my purpose that the term 'brethren' is used in an extended sense (i.e. of others besides sons of the same mother)'. From this I infer that St Ambrose had heard of, though possibly not read, Jerome's tract in which he discourses on the wide meaning of the term: that, if he had read it, he did not feel inclined to abandon the view with which he was familiar in favour of the novel hypothesis put forward by Jerome; and lastly, that seeing the importance of cooperation against a common enemy he was anxious not to raise dissensions among the champions of the perpetual virginity by the discussion of details.

PELAGIUS, who commented on St Paul a few years after Jerome, adopts his theory and even his language, unless his text has been tampered with here (Gal. i. 19).

Augustine. At the same time Jerome's hypothesis found a much more weighty advocate in ST AUGUSTINE. In his commentary on the Galatians indeed (i. 19), written about 394 while he was still a presbyter, he offers the alternative of the Hieronymian and Epiphanian accounts. But in his later works he consistently maintains the view put forward...

Thus supported, it won its way to general acceptance in the Latin Western Church; and the Western Services recognise only one James besides the son of Zebedee, thus identifying the Lord’s brother with the son of Alpheus.

In the East also it met with a certain amount of success, but this Chrysostom was only temporary. Chrysostom wrote both before and after Jerome’s treatise had become generally known, and his expositions of the New Testament mark a period of transition. In his Homilies on the earlier books he takes the Epiphanian view: St James, he says, was at one time an unbeliever with the rest of the Lord’s brethren (on Matth. i. 25, vii. p. 77; John vii. 5, viii. p. 284; see also on 1 Cor. ix. 4, x. p. 181 E); the resurrection was the turning-point in their career; they were called the Lord’s brethren, as Joseph himself was reputed the husband of Mary (on Matth. i. 25, l. c.)

Hitherto he betrays no knowledge of the Hieronymian account.

1 A comment attributed to Chrysostom in Cramer’s Catena on 1 Cor. ix. 4—7, but not found in the Homilies, is still more explicit: ‘Ἀδελφοὺς τοῦ Κυ­ρίου λέγει τοὺς νομοθέτας εἶναι αὐτοῦ ἀδελφοί, ἐπειδὴ γὰρ αὐτοὶ ὡς χρηματίζουν καὶ αὐτὸς κατὰ τὴν κοινὴν δόθηκε ἐπὶ αὐτῶν* τοὺς δὲ υἱοὺς Ἰωσὴφ λέγει, οἱ ἀδελφοὶ τοῦ Κυρίου ἔχρημαται διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὴν θεοτόκον μνημεῖον τοῦ Ἰωσὴφ. Λέγει δὲ Ἰάκωβος ἔπλακοτον Ἱεροσολύμων καὶ Ἰωσὴφ ὁμώνυμον τῷ πατέρι καὶ Σι­μῶνα καὶ Ἰούδα. Τοιούτῳ δὲ παρατίθηκεν τὸν Ἰσαάκων τῆς Μαρίας τῶν εὐαγγελίων. Ποίησε δὲ τὴν ἔρωτα τοῦτον πρὸς τὴν Ἰουδαίαν τὸν Ἄρμαν, τὸν Ἀρχιμανδρίτην, τὸν Ἡροδοτόν τοῦ Πωλ. Καὶ τοὺς Ἰωσὴφ πατέρας δὲ τοὺς τοῖς πατρίδι τούτοις. Ταῦτα δὲ τίποτε προσέδρασεν τῇ καθήκοντι ἡμῖν τῇ Μαρίᾳ τὴς Μαρίας Ἱησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου. Διὰ τοῦτο δὲ τοῦτον τὸν Ἰσαάκων τὴν Ἰουδαίαν παρατίθηκεν τῷ τοῦ Κυρίου λόγῳ τῷ Κυρίῳ λόγῳ. Τὸ θαυμάσιον δὲ τοῦτον τὸν Ἰσαάκων τῆς Μαρίας τῶν εὐαγγελίων οὕτως παρατίθηκεν τῷ τοῦ Κυρίου λόγῳ τῷ Κυρίου λόγῳ. Τὸ δὲ τοῦτον τὸν Ἰσαάκων τῆς Μαρίας τῶν εὐαγγελίων οὕτως παρατίθηκεν τῷ τοῦ Κυρίου λόγῳ τῷ Κυρίου λόγῳ.

The note reappears almost word for word in the Ecumenian catena and in Theophylact. If Chrysostom be not the author, then we gain the testimony of some other ancient writer on the same side. Compare also the pseudo-Chrysostom, Op. ii. p. 797.

The passages referred to in the text show clearly what was Chrysostom’s earlier view. To these may be added the comments on 1 Cor. xv. 7 (x. 355 D), where he evidently regards James as not one of the Twelve; on Matth. x. 2 (vii. pp. 368, g), where he makes James the son of Alpheus a tax­gatherer like Matthew, clearly taking them to be brothers; and on Matth. xxvii. 55 (vii. p. 827 A), where, like Gregory Nyssen, he identifies Μαρία Ιακώβου with the Lord’s mother. The accounts of Chrysostom’s opinion on this subject given by Blom p. 111 sq, and Mill p. 284 note, are unsatisfactory.

The Homilies on the Acts also take the same view (ix. pp. 23 B, 26 A), but though these are generally ascribed to Chrysostom, their genuineness is very questionable. In another spurious work, Opus imp. in Matth., vi. p. clxiv E, the Hieronymian view appears; ‘Jacobum Alphaei lapidantes: propter quae omnia Jerusalem de­structa est a Romanis.’
But in his exposition of the Epistle to the Galatians (i. 19) he not only speaks of James the Lord’s brother as if he were an apostle (which proves nothing), but also calls him the son of Clopas. Thus he would appear meanwhile to have accepted the hypothesis of Jerome and to have completed it by the identification of Clopas with Alphæus. And Theodoret, who for the most part closely follows Chrysostom, distinctly repudiates the older view: ‘He was not, as some have supposed, a son of Joseph, the offspring of a former marriage, but was son of Clopas and cousin of the Lord; for his mother was the sister of the Lord’s mother.’

But with these exceptions the Epiphanian view maintained its ground in the East. It is found again in Cyril of Alexandria for instance (Claphyr. in Gen. lib. vii. p. 221), and seems to have been held by later Greek writers almost, if not quite, universally. In Theophylact indeed (on Matth. xiii. 55, Gal. i. 19) we find an attempt to unite the two accounts. James, argues the writer, was the Lord’s reputed brother as the son of Joseph and the Lord’s cousin as the son of Clopas; the one was his natural, and the other his legal father; Clopas having died childless, Joseph had raised up seed to his brother by his widow according to the law of the levirate.

This novel suggestion however found but little favour, and the Eastern Churches continued to distinguish between James the Lord’s brother and James the son of Alphæus. The Greek, Syrian, and Coptic Calendars assign a separate day to each.

The table on the next page gives a conspectus of the patristic and early authorities.

---

1 τὸν τοῦ Κλοπᾶ, διπέρ καὶ ὁ εὐαγγελιστὴς Φλεγεν. He is referring, I suppose, to the lists of the Apostles which mention James the son of Alpheus. See above, p. 267. This portion of his exposition however is somewhat confused, and it is difficult to resist the suspicion that it has been interpolated.

2 See the remarks of Mill, p. 228.
THE BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A. Sons of Joseph and Mary.</th>
<th>TERTULLIAN, HELVIDIUS, BONOSUS, JOVINIANUS (?), ANTIDICOMARIANITES.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>B. Sons of Joseph by a former wife.</th>
<th>GOSPEL OF PETER, PROTEVANGELIUM etc., CLEMENT OF ALEX., ORIGEN, EUSEBIUS, HILARY OF POITIERS, AMBROSIASTER, GREGORY OF NYSSA, EPIPHANIUS, AMBROSE, [CHRYSOSTOM], CYRIL OF ALEX., EASTERN SERVICES (Greek, Syrian, and Coptic), LATER GREEK WRITERS.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>C. Sons of the Virgin's sister.</th>
<th>JEROME, PELAGIUS, AUGUSTINE, [CHRYSOSTOM], THEODORET, WESTERN SERVICES, LATER LATIN WRITERS.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

A. or B. 'Brethren' in a strict sense. James the Just not one of the Twelve.

B or C. Perpetual Catholic virginity of Mary.

Uncertain. HEBREW GOSPEL, VICTORINUS PETAVIONENSIS.

Levirate. THEOPHYLACT.

---

EARLY VERSIONS, CLEMENTINE HOMILIES (?), ASCENTS OF JAMES, HEGESIPPUS, APOST. CONSTIT., CYRIL OF JERUSALEM (?), VICTORINUS THE PHILOSOPHER.
THREE and three only of the personal disciples and immediate followers of our Lord hold any prominent place in the Apostolic records—James, Peter, and John; the first the Lord's brother, the two latter the foremost members of the Twelve. Apart from an incidental reference to the death of James the son of Zebedee, which is dismissed in a single sentence, the rest of the Twelve are mentioned by name for the last time on the day of the Lord's Ascension. Thenceforward they disappear wholly from the canonical writings.

And this silence also extends to the traditions of succeeding ages. We read indeed of St Thomas in India, of St Andrew in Scythia; but such scanty notices, even if we accept them as trustworthy, show only the more plainly how little the Church could tell of her earliest teachers. Doubtless they laboured zealously and effectively in the spread of the Gospel; but, so far as we know, they have left no impress of their individual mind and character on the Church at large. Occupying the foreground, and indeed covering the whole canvas of early ecclesiastical history, appear four figures alone, St Paul and the three Apostles of the Circumcision.

Once and, it would appear, not more than once, these four great teachers met together face to face. It was the one great crisis in the history of the Church, on the issue of which was staked her future progress and triumph. Was she to open her doors wide and receive all comers, to declare her legitimate boundaries coextensive with the limits of the human race? Or was she to remain for ever narrow and sectarian, a national institution at best, but most probably a suspected minority even in her own nation?

Not less important, so far as we can see, was the question at issue, when Paul and Barnabas arrived at Jerusalem to confer with the Apostles of the Circumcision on the subject of the Mosaic ritual which then distracted the youthful Church. It must therefore be an intensely interesting study to watch the attitude of the four great leaders of the Church at this crisis, merely as a historical lesson. But the importance of the subject does not rest here. Questions of much wider interest are suggested by the accounts of this conference: What degree of coincidence or antagonism between Jewish and Gentile converts may be discerned in the Church? What were the relations existing between St Paul and the Apostles of the Circumcision? How far do the later sects of Ebionites on the one hand and Marcionites on the other, as they appear in direct antagonism in the second century, represent opposing principles cherished side by side within the bosom of the Church and sheltering themselves under the names, or (as some have ventured to say) sanctioned by the authority, of the leading Apostles? What in fact is the secret history—if there be any secret history—of the origin of Catholic Christianity?

On this battle-field the most important of recent theological controversies has been waged: and it is felt by both sides that the Epistle to the Galatians is the true key to the position. In the first place, it is one of the very few documents of the Apostolic ages, whose genuineness has not been seriously challenged by the opponents of revelation. Moreover, as the immediate utterance of one who himself took the chief part in the incidents recorded, it cannot be discredited as having passed through a coloured medium or gathered accretions by lapse of time. And lastly, the very form in which the information is conveyed—by partial and broken allusions rather than by direct and continuous statement—raises it beyond the reach of suspicion, even where suspicion is most active. Here at least both combatants can take their stand on common ground.
Nor need the defenders of the Christian faith hesitate to accept the challenge of their opponents and try the question on this issue. If it be only interpreted aright, the Epistle to the Galatians ought to present us with a true, if only a partial, solution of the problem.

Thus the attempt to decipher the relations between Jewish and Gentile Christianity in the first ages of the Church is directly suggested by this epistle; and indeed any commentary would be incomplete which refused to entertain the problem. This must be my excuse for entering upon a subject, about which so much has been written and which involves so many subsidiary questions. It will be impossible within my limits to discuss all these questions in detail. The objections, for instance, which have been urged against the genuineness of a large number of the canonical and other early Christian writings, can only be met indirectly. Reasonable men will hardly be attracted towards a theory which can only be built on an area prepared by this wide clearance of received documents. At all events there is, I think, no unfairness in stating the case thus; that, though they are supported by arguments drawn from other sources, the general starting-point of such objections is the theory itself. If then a fair and reasonable account can be given both of the origin and progress of the Church generally, and of the mutual relations of its more prominent teachers, based on these documents assumed as authentic, a general answer will be supplied to all objections of this class.

I purpose therefore to sketch in outline the progressive history of the relations between the Jewish and Gentile converts in the early ages of the Church, as gathered from the Apostolic writings, aided by such scanty information as can be got together from other sources. This will be a fit and indeed a necessary introduction to the subject with which the Epistle to the Galatians is more directly concerned, the positions occupied by St Paul and the three Apostles of the Circumcision respectively.

This history falls into three periods which mark three distinct stages in its progress: (1) The Extension of the Church to the Gentiles; (2) The Recognition of Gentile Liberty; (3) The Emancipation of the Jewish Churches.

1. The Extension of the Church to the Gentiles.

It appears from the Apostolic history that the believers in the earliest days conformed strictly to Jewish customs in their religious life, retaining the fixed hours of prayer, attending the temple worship and sacrifices, observing the sacred festivals. The Church was still confined to one nation and had not yet broken loose from the national rites and usages. But these swathing bands, which were perhaps needed to support its infancy, would only cripple its later growth, and must be thrown off, if it was ever to attain to a healthy maturity. This emancipation then was the great problem which the Apostles had to work out. The Master Himself had left no express Our Lord's instructions. He had charged them, it is true, to preach the Gospel to all nations, but how this injunction was to be carried out, by what changes a national Church must expand into an universal Church, they had not been told. He had indeed asserted the sovereignty of the spirit over the letter; He had enunciated the great principle—as wide in its application as the law itself—that 'Man was not made for the sabbath, but the sabbath for man'; He had pointed to the fulfilment of the law in the Gospel. So far He had discredited the law, but He had not deposed or abolished it. It was left to the Apostles themselves under the guidance of the Spirit, moulded by circumstances and moulding them in turn, to work out this great change.

1 Important works treating of the relation between the Jewish and Gentile Christians are Lechler's Apostolisches und Nachapostolisches Zeitalter (3rd ed. 1857), and Ritschl's Entstehung der Altkatholischen Kirche (5th ed. 1857). I am indebted to both these works, but to the latter especially, which is very able and suggestive. Ritschl should be read in his second edition, in which with a noble sacrifice of consistency to truth he has abandoned many of his former positions, and placed himself in more direct antagonism to the Tübingen school in which he was educated. The historical speculations of that school are developed in Baur's Paulus and Christenthum und die Christliche Kirche der drei ersten Jahrhunderte, in Schwegler's NachapostolischesZeitalter.
And soon enough the pressure of events began to be felt. The dispersion was the link which connected the Hebrews of Palestine with the outer world. Led captive by the power of Greek philosophy at Athens and Tarsus and Alexandria, attracted by the fascinations of Oriental mysticism in Asia, swept along with the busy whirl of social life in the city and court of the Caesars, these outlying members of the chosen race had inhaled a freer spirit and contracted wider interests than their fellow-countrymen at home. By a series of insensible gradations—proselytes of the covenant—proselytes of the gate\(^1\)—superstitious devotees who observed the rites without accepting the faith of the Mosaic dispensation—curious lookers-on who interested themselves in the Jewish ritual as they would in the worship of Isis or of Astarte—the most stubborn zealot of the law was linked to the idolatrous heathen whom he abhorred and who despised him in turn. Thus the train was unconsciously laid, when the spark fell from heaven and fired it.

The very baptism of the Christian Church opened the path for its extension to the Gentile world. On the first day of Pentecost were gathered together Hellenist Jews from all the principal centres of the dispersion. With them were assembled also numbers of incorporated Israelites, proselytes of the covenant. The former of these by contact with Gentile thought and life, the latter by the force of early habits and associations\(^2\), would accept and interpret the new revelation in a less rigorous spirit than the Hebrew zealot of Jerusalem. Each successive festival must have been followed by similar though less striking results. The stream of Hellenists and proselytes, constantly ebbing and flowing, must have swept away fragments at least of the \(^1\) The distinction between proselytes of the covenant or of righteousness and proselytes of the gate is found in the Gemara: the former were circumcised, and observed the whole law; the latter acknowledged the God of Israel and conformed to Jewish worship in some respects, but stood without the covenant, not having been incorporated by the initiatory rite. The former alone, it would appear, are called \(\pi\rho\omicron\sigma\tau\iota\nu\omicron\) in the New Testament; the latter, who hardly form a distinct class, are \(\sigma\epsilon\omicron\beta\omicron\omicron\nu\omicron\ \tau\omicron\ \Theta\omicron\omicron\ \omega\omicron\ \epsilon\omicron\sigma\epsilon\omicron\iota\omicron\) etc. In speaking therefore of 'proselytes of the gate' I am using a convenient anachronism.

---

\(^2\) 'Trust not a proselyte,' said one of the rabbis, 'till twenty-four generations; for he holds his leaven.' Yalkut (Shimoni) on Ruth i. 11, 12, § 601. See also the passages given by Danz in Meuschen Test. Illustr. p. 651.
new truth, purging it of some local encumbrances which would gather about it in the mother country, and carrying it thus purged to far distant shores.

Meanwhile at Jerusalem some years passed away before the barrier of Judaism was assailed. The Apostles still observed the Mosaic ritual; they still confined their preaching to Jews by birth, or Jews by adoption, the proselytes of the covenant. At length a breach was made, and the assailants as might be expected were Hellenists. The first step towards the creation of an organised ministry was also the first step towards the emancipation of the Church. The Jews of Judea, 'Hebrews of the Hebrews,' had ever regarded their Hellenist brethren with suspicion and distrust; and this estrangement reproduced itself in the Christian Church. The interests of the Hellenist widows had been neglected in the daily distribution of alms. Hence 'arose a murmuring of the Hellenists against the Hebrews (Acts vi. 1),' which was met by the appointment of seven persons specially charged with providing for the wants of these neglected poor. If the selection was made, as St Luke's language seems to imply, not by the Hellenists themselves but by the Church at large (vi. 2), the concession when granted was carried out in a liberal spirit. All the names of the seven are Greek, pointing to a Hellenist rather than a Hebrew extraction, and one is especially described as a proselyte, being doubtless chosen to represent a hitherto small but growing section of the community.

By this appointment the Hellenist members obtained a status in the Church; and the effects of this measure soon became visible. Two out of the seven stand prominently forward as the champions of emancipation, Stephen the preacher and martyr of liberty, and Philip the practical worker.

1 In Nicolas, the only one of the remaining five whose name reappears in history, liberty is degraded into licence. I see no valid reason for doubting the very early tradition that the Nicolaitans (Apoc. ii. 6, 15) derived their name from him. If there was a traitor among the Twelve, there might well be a heresiarch among the Seven. Nor is it likely that an account so discreditable to one who in the New Testament is named only in connexion with his appointment to an honourable office would have been circulated unless there were some foundation in fact. At the same time the Nicolaitans may have exaggerated and perverted the teaching of Nicolas. Irenæus (i. 26, 3) and Hippolytus (Haer.
Stephen's testimony.  Stephen is the acknowledged forerunner of the Apostle of the Gentiles. He was the first to 'look steadfastly to the end of that which is abolished,' to sound the death-knell of the Mosaic ordinances and the temple worship, and to claim for the Gospel unfettered liberty and universal rights. 'This man,' said his accusers, 'ceaseth not to speak words against the holy place and the law; for we have heard him say that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us (vi. 13, 14). The charge was only false as misrepresenting the spirit which animated his teaching. The accused attempts no denial, but pleads justification. To seal this testimony the first blood of the noble army of martyrs is shed.

Indirect consequences. The indirect consequences of his martyrdom extend far beyond the immediate effect of his dying words. A persecution 'arose about Stephen.' The disciples of the mother Church 'were scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judæa and Samaria (viii. 1). Some of the refugees even 'travelled as far as Phenice and Cyprus and Antioch (xi. 19). This dispersion was, as we shall see, the parent of the first Gentile congregation. The Church of the Gentiles, it may be truly said, was baptized in the blood of Stephen.

Philip converts. The doctrine, which Stephen preached and for which he died, was carried into practice by Philip. The sacred narrative mentions two incidents in his career, each marking an onward stride in the free development of the Church. It is therefore not without significance that years afterwards we find him styled 'the Evangelist' (xxi. 8), as if he had earned this honourable title by some signal service rendered to the Gospel.

1. The Samaritan occupied the border land between the Jew and the Gentile. Theologically, as geographically, he was the connecting link between the one and the other. Half Hebrew by race, half Israelite in his acceptance of a portion of the sacred canon, he held an anomalous position, shunning and shunned by the Jew, yet clinging to the same promises and looking forward to the same hopes. With a bold venture of faith Philip offers the Gospel to this mongrel people. His overtures are welcomed with joy, and 'Samaria receives the word of God.' The sacred historian relates moreover, that his labours were sanctioned by the presence of the chief Apostles Peter and John, and confirmed by an outpouring of the Holy Spirit (viii. 14—17). 'He who eats the bread of a Samaritan,' said the Jewish doctor, 'is as one who eats swine's flesh.' 'No Samaritan shall ever be made a proselyte. They have no share in the resurrection of the dead.' In opening her treasures to this hated race, the Church had surmounted the first barrier of prejudice behind which the exclusiveness of the nation

1 Mishnah Shebiith viii. 10.
2 Pirke Rabbi Elieser 38. The passage so well illustrates the statement in the text, that I give it in full: 'What did Ezra and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel and Jehoshua the son of Jehozadak? (They went) and they gathered together all the congregation into the temple of the Lord, and they brought 300 priests and 300 children and 300 trumpets and 300 scrolls of the law in their hands, and they blew, and the Levites sang and played, and they banned the Cuthmans (Samaritans) by the mystery of the ineffable name and by the writing which is written on the tables and by the anathema of the upper (heavenly) court of justice and by the anathema of the nether (earthly) court of justice, that no one of Israel should eat the bread of a Cuthman for ever. Hence they (the elders) said: Whosoever eats the bread of a Cuthman is as if he ate swine's flesh; and no Cuthman shall ever be made a proselyte: and they have no share in the resurrection of the dead; for it is said (Ezra iv. 3) Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God, (that is) neither in this world nor in the future. And that they should have neither portion nor inheritance in Jerusalem, as it is said (Neh. ii. 20), But ye had no portion nor right nor memorial in Jerusalem. And they communicated the anathema to Israel which is in Babylon. And they put upon them anathema upon anathema. And king Cyrus also decreed upon them an everlasting anathema as it is said (Ezra vi. 12), And the God that has caused His name to dwell there etc.' Several passages bearing on this subject are collected in the article 'Samaritan Pentateuch,' by Mr E. Deutsch, in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.
had entrenched itself. To be a Samaritan was to have a devil, in the eyes of a rigid Jew (John viii. 48, comp. iv. 9).

2. Nor was it long before Philip broke through a second and more formidable line of defence. The blood of the patriarchs, though diluted, still flowed in the veins of the Samaritans. His next convert had no such claim to respect. A descendant of the accursed race of Ham\(^1\), shut out from the congregation by his physical defect (Deut. xxiii. 1), the Ethiopian chamberlain laboured under a two-fold disability. This double line is assailed by the Hellenist preacher and taken by storm. The desire of the Ethiopian to know and to do God's will is held by Philip to be a sufficient claim. He acts boldly and without hesitation. He accosts him, instructs him, baptizes him then and there.

The venture of the subordinate minister however still wanted the sanction of the leaders of the Church. At length this sanction was given in a signal way. The Apostles of the Circumcision, even St Peter himself, had failed hitherto to comprehend the wide purpose of God. With their fellow-countrymen they still 'held it unlawful for a Jew to keep company with or to come near an alien' (x. 28). The time when the Gospel should be preached to the Gentiles seemed not yet to have arrived; the manner in which it should be preached was still hidden from them. At length a divine vision scatters the dark scruples of Peter, teaching him to call no man 'common or unclean.' He goes himself and seeks out the devout Roman centurion Cornelius, whose household he instructs in the faith. The Gentile Church, thus founded on the same 'rock' with the Jewish, receives also the same divine confirmation. As Peter began to speak, 'the Holy Ghost fell on them, as it did' on the Jewish disciples on the first day of Pentecost (xi. 15). As if the approval of God could not be too prompt or too manifest, the usual sequence is reversed and the outpouring of the Spirit precedes the rite of baptism (x. 44—48).

The case of Cornelius does not, I think, differ essentially from the case of the Ethiopian eunuch. There is no ground for assuming that the latter was a proselyte of the covenant. His mutilation excluded him from the congregation by a Mosaic ordinance, and it is an arbitrary conjecture that the definite enactment of the law was overruled by the spiritual promise of the prophet (Is. lvi. 3—5). This liberal interpretation at all events accords little with the narrow and formal spirit of the age. Both converts alike had the inward qualification of 'fearing God and working righteousness' (x. 35); both alike were disabled by external circumstances, and the disabilities of the Ethiopian eunuch were even greater than those of the Roman centurion. If so, the significance of the conversion of the latter consists in this, that now in the case of the Gentile, as before in the case of the Samaritan, the principle asserted by the Hellenist Philip is confirmed by the Apostles of the Circumcision in the person of their chief and sealed by the outpouring of the Spirit.

\(^1\) Amos ix. 7, 'Are ye not as the children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel?'

Meanwhile others were asserting the universality of the Church elsewhere, if not with the same sanction of authority, at all events with a larger measure of success. With the dying words of Stephen, the martyr of Christian liberty, still ringing in their ears, the persecuted brethren had fled from Jerusalem and carried the tidings of the Gospel to distant lands. At first they 'preached the word to none but to the Jews only' (xi. 19). At length others bolder than the rest, 'when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Gentiles', preaching the Lord Jesus.' Probably this was an advance even on the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch and of Cornelius. These two converts at all events recognised the God of the old covenant. Now for the first time, it would seem, the Gospel was offered to heathen idolaters. Here, as before, the innovators were not Hebrews but Hellenists, 'men of Cyprus and Cyrene' (xi. 20). Their success was signal: crowds flocked to hear them; and at Antioch first the brethren were called by a new name—a term of ridicule and contempt then, now the pride and glory of the civilized world. Hitherto the believers had been known as 'Galileans' or 'Nazarenes'; now they were called 'Christians.' The transition from

---

1 xi. 20. I cannot doubt that Ἐλληνας requires it; but external authority preponderates in favour of Ἐλληνιστας.
a Jewish to a heathen term marks the point of time when the Church of the Gentiles first threatens to supersede the Church of the Circumcision.

Thus the first stage in the emancipation of the Church was gained. The principle was broadly asserted that the Gospel received all comers, asking no questions, allowing no impediments, insisting on no preliminary conditions, if only it were found that the petitioner 'feared God and worked righteousness.'

2. The Recognition of Gentile Liberty.

It is plain that the principle, which had thus been asserted, involved consequences very much wider than were hitherto clearly foreseen and acknowledged. But between asserting a principle and carrying it out to its legitimate results a long interval must necessarily elapse, for many misgivings have to be dissipated and many impediments to be overcome.

So it was with the growth of Gentile Christendom. The Gentiles were no longer refused admission into the Church unless first incorporated with Israel by the initiatory rite. But many questions remained still unsettled. What was their exact position, when thus received? What submission, if any, must they yield to the Mosaic law? Should they be treated as in all respects on an equality with the true Israelite? Was it right for the Jewish Christian so far to lay aside the traditions of his race, as to associate freely with his Gentile brother? These must necessarily in time become practical questions, and press for a solution.

At this point in the history of the Church a new character appears on the scene. The mantle of Stephen has fallen on the persecutor of Stephen. Saul has been called to bear the name of Christ to the Gentiles. Descended of pure Hebrew ancestry and schooled in the law by the most famous of living teachers, born and residing in a great university town second to none in its reputation for Greek wisdom and learning, inheriting the privileges and the bearing of a Roman citizen, he seemed to combine in himself all those varied qualities which would best fit him for this work. These wide experiences, which had lain dormant before, were quickened into thought and life by the lightning flash on the way to Damascus; and stubborn zeal was melted and fused into large-hearted and comprehensive charity. From his conversion to the present time we read only of his preaching in the synagogues at Damascus (ix. 20, 22) and to the Hellenists at Jerusalem (ix. 29). But now the moment was ripe, when he must enter upon that wider sphere of action for which he had been specially designed. The Gentile Church, founded on the 'rock,' must be handed over to the 'wise master-builder' to enlarge and complete. So at the bidding of the Apostles, Barnabas seeks out Saul in his retirement at Tarsus and brings him to Antioch. Doubtless he seemed to all to be the fittest instrument for carrying out the work so auspiciously begun.

Meanwhile events at Jerusalem were clearing the way for his great work. The star of Jewish Christendom was already on the wane, while the independence of the Gentiles was gradually asserting itself. Two circumstances especially were instrumental in reversing the positions hitherto held by these two branches of the Church.

1. It has been seen that the martyrdom of Stephen marked an epoch in the emancipation of the Church. The martyrdom of James the son of Zebedee is scarcely less important in its influence on her progressive career. The former persecution had sown the disciples broadcast over heathen lands; the latter seems to have been the signal for the withdrawal of the Apostles themselves from Jerusalem. The twelve years, which according to an old tradition our Lord had assigned as the limit of their fixed residence there, had drawn to a close. So, consigning the direction of the mother Church to James the Lord's brother and the presbytery, they depart thence to enter upon a wider field of action. Their withdrawal must have deprived the Church of Jerusalem of half her prestige and more than half her influence. Henceforth she remained indeed the mother Church of the nation, but she was no longer the mother Church of the world.

1 See above, p. 127, n. 1.
2. About the same time another incident also contributed to lessen her influence. A severe famine devastated Palestine and reduced the Christian population to extreme want. Collections were made at Antioch, and relief was sent to the brethren in Judæa. By this exercise of liberality the Gentile Churches were made to feel their own importance: while the recipients, thus practically confessing their dependence, were deposed from the level of proud isolation which many of them would gladly have maintained. This famine seems to have ranged over many years, or at all events its attacks were several times repeated. Again and again the alms of the Gentile Christians were conveyed by the hands of the Gentile Apostles, and the Churches of Judæa laid themselves under fresh obligations to the heathen converts.

Events being thus ripe, Saul still residing at Antioch is set apart by the Spirit for the Apostleship of the Gentiles to which he had been called years before.

The Gospel thus enters upon a new career of triumph. The primacy of the Church passes from Peter to Paul—from the Apostle of the Circumcision to the Apostle of the Gentiles. The centre of evangelical work is transferred from Jerusalem to Antioch. Paul and Barnabas set forth on their first missionary tour.

Though they give precedence everywhere to the Jews, their mission is emphatically to the Gentiles. In Cyprus, the first country visited, its character is signally manifested in the conversion of the Roman proconsul, Sergius Paulus. And soon it becomes evident that the younger Church must supplant the elder. At Antioch in Pisidia matters are brought to a crisis: the Jews reject the offer of the Gospel; the Gentiles entreat to hear the message. Thereupon the doom is pronounced: 'It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo we turn to the Gentiles' (xiii. 46). The incidents at Pisidian Antioch foreshadow the destiny which awaits the Gospel throughout the world. Everywhere the Apostles deliver their message to the Jews first, and everywhere the offer rejected by them is welcomed by the heathen. The mission of Paul and Barnabas is successful, but its success is confined almost wholly to the Gentiles. They return to Antioch.

Hitherto no attempt had been made to define the mutual relations of Jewish and Gentile converts. All such questions, it would seem, had been tacitly passed over, neither side perhaps being desirous of provoking discussion. But the inevitable crisis at length arrives. Certain converts, who had imported into the Church of Christ the rigid and exclusive spirit of Pharisaism, stir up the slumbering feud at Antioch, starting the question in its most trenchant form. They desire to impose circumcision on the Gentiles, not only as a condition of equality, but as necessary to salvation (xv. 1). The imposition of this burden is resisted by Paul and Barnabas, who go on a mission to Jerusalem to confer with the Apostles and elders.

I have already given what seems to me the probable account of the part taken by the leading Apostles in these controversies, and shall have to return to the subject later. Our difficulty in reading this page of history arises not so much from the absence of light as from the perplexity of cross lights. The narratives of St Luke and St Paul only then cease to conflict, when we take into account the different positions of the writers and the different objects they had in view.

At present we are concerned only with the results of this conference. These are twofold: First, the settlement of the points of dispute between the Jewish and Gentile converts: Secondly, the recognition of the authority and commission of Paul and Barnabas by the Apostles of the Circumcision. It will be necessary, as briefly as possible, to point out the significance of these two conclusions and to examine how far they were recognised and acted upon subsequently.

1. The arrangement of the disputed points was effected by a mutual compromise. On the one hand it was decided once and for ever that the rite of circumcision should not be imposed on the Gentiles. On the other, concessions were demanded of them in turn; they were asked to ‘abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication.’

1 See above, p. 136 sq, and the notes on ii. 1—10.
The first of these decisions was a question of principle. If the initiatory rite of the old dispensation were imposed on all members of the Christian Church, this would be in effect to deny that the Gospel was a new covenant; in other words to deny its essential character. It was thus the vital point on which the whole controversy turned. And the liberal decision of the council was not only the charter of Gentile freedom but the assertion of the supremacy of the Gospel.

On the other hand it is not so easy to understand the bearing of the restrictions imposed on the Gentile converts. Their significance in fact seems to be relative rather than absolute. There were certain practices into which, though most abhorrent to the feelings of their Jewish brethren, the Gentile Christians from early habit and constant association would easily be betrayed. These were of different kinds: some were grave moral offences, others only violations of time-honoured observances, inwrought in the conscience of the Israelite. After the large concession of principle made to the Gentiles in the matter of circumcision, it was not unreasonable that they should be required in turn to abstain from practices which gave so much offence to the Jews. Hence the prohibitions in question. It is strange indeed that offences so heterogeneous should be thrown together and brought under one prohibition; but this is perhaps sufficiently explained by supposing the decree framed to meet some definite complaint of the Jewish brethren. If, in the course of the hot dispute which preceded the speeches of the leading Apostles, attention had been specially called by the Pharisaic party to these detested practices, St James would not unnaturally take up the subject and propose to satisfy them by a direct condemnation of the offences in question.

It would betray great ignorance of human nature to suppose that a decision thus authoritatively pronounced must have silenced all

---

1 See Ritschl, p. 127.
2 This seems to me much simpler than explaining the clauses as enforcing the conditions under which proselytes of the gate were received by the Jews. In this latter case πορεία will perhaps refer to unlawful marriage, e.g. within the prohibited degrees of kindred (Levit. xviii. 18), as it is interpreted by Ritschl p. 129 sq, who ably maintains this view. These difficulties of interpretation are to my mind a very strong evidence of the genuineness of the decree.
opposition. If therefore we should find its provisions constantly disregarded hereafter, it is no argument against the genuineness of the decree itself. The bigoted minority was little likely to make an absolute surrender of its most stubborn prejudices to any external influence. Many even of those, who at the time were persuaded by the leading Apostles into acquiescence, would find their misgivings return, when they saw that the effect of the decree was to wrest the sceptre from their grasp and place it in the hands of the Gentile Church.

Even the question of circumcision, on which an absolute decision had been pronounced, was revived again and again. Long after, the Judaizing antagonists of St Paul in Galatia attempted to force this rite on his Gentile converts. Perhaps however they rather evaded than defied the decree. They may for instance have no longer insisted upon it as a condition of salvation, but urged it as a title to preference. But however this may be, there is nothing startling in the fact itself.

But while the emancipating clause of the decree, though express and definite, was thus parried or resisted, the restrictive clauses were with much greater reason interpreted with latitude. The miscellaneous character of these prohibitions showed that, taken as a whole, they had no binding force independently of the circumstances which dictated them. They were a temporary expedient framed to meet a temporary emergency. Their object was the avoidance of offence in mixed communities of Jew and Gentile converts. Beyond this recognised aim and the general understanding implied therein the limits of their application were not defined. Hence there was room for much latitude in individual cases. St James, as the head of the mother Church where the difficulties which it was framed to meet were most felt, naturally refers to the decree seven years after as still regulating the intercourse between Jewish and Gentile converts (xxi. 25). At Antioch too and in the neighbouring Churches of Syria and Cilicia, to which alone the Apostolic letter was addressed and on which alone therefore the enactments were directly binding (xv. 23), it was doubtless long observed.
tion between these churches and Jerusalem would at once justify and secure its strict observance. We read also of its being delivered to the brotherhoods of Lycaonia and Pisidia, already founded when the council was held, and near enough to Palestine to feel the pressure of Jewish feelings (xvi. 4). But as the circle widens, its influence becomes feebler. In strictly Gentile churches it seems never to have been enforced. St Paul, writing to the Corinthians, discusses two of the four practices which it prohibits without any reference to its enactments. Fornication he condemns absolutely as defiling the body which is the temple of God (1 Cor. v. 1—13, vi. 18—20). Of eating meats sacrificed to idols he speaks as a thing indifferent in itself, only to be avoided in so far as it implies participation in idol worship or is offensive to the consciences of others. His rule therefore is this: 'Do not sit down to a banquet celebrated in an idol's temple. You may say that in itself an idol is nothing, that neither the abstaining from meat nor the partaking of meat commends us to God. All this I grant is true: but such knowledge is dangerous. You are running the risk of falling into idolatry yourself, you are certainly by your example leading others astray; you are in fact committing an overt act of treason to God, you are a partaker of the tables of devils. On the other hand do not officiously inquire when you make a purchase at the shambles or when you dine in a private house: but if in such cases you are plainly told that the meat has been offered in sacrifice, then abstain at all hazards. Lay down this rule, to give no offence either to Jews or Gentiles or to the churches of God' (1 Cor. viii. 1—13, x. 14—22). This wise counsel, if it disregards the letter, preserves the spirit of the decree, which was framed for the avoidance of offence. But St Paul's language shows that the decree itself was not held binding, perhaps was unknown at Corinth: otherwise the discussion would have been foreclosed. Once again we come across the same topics in the apocalyptic message to the Churches of Pergamos and Thyatira. The same irregularities prevailed here as at Corinth: there was the temptation on the one hand to impure living, on the other to acts of conformity with heathen worship which compromised their allegiance to the one true God. Our Lord in St John's vision denounces them through the symbolism of the Old Testament history. In the Church of Pergamos, were certain Nicolaitans 'holding the doctrine of Balaam who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols and to commit fornication' (ii. 14). At Thyatira the evil had struck its roots deeper. The angel of that Church is rebuked because he 'suffers his wife Jezebel who calls herself a prophetess, and she teacheth and seduceth God's servants to commit fornication and to eat things sacrificed to idols.' I see no reason for assuming a reference here to the Apostolic decree. The two offences singled out are those to which Gentile churches would be most liable, and which at the same time are illustrated by the Old Testament parallels. If St Paul denounces them independently of the decree, St John may have done so likewise¹. In the matter of sacrificial meats indeed the condemnation of the latter is more absolute and uncompromising. But this is owing partly to the epigrammatic terseness and symbolic reference of the passage, partly, also, we may suppose, to the more definite form which the evil itself had assumed².

In both cases the practice was justified by a vaunted knowledge which held itself superior to any such restrictions³. But at Corinth this temper

¹ Yet the expression of βάλλω ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἄλλα βήροι (ii. 24) looks like a reference to the decree.
² The coincidence of the two Apostles extends also to their language. (1) If St John denounces the offence as a following of Balaam, St Paul uses the same Old Testament illustration, i Cor. x. 7, 8, 'Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play: neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand.' (2) If St John speaks of 'casting a stumbling block (σκώδαλον) before the children of Israel,' the whole purport of St Paul's warning is 'to give no offence' (μὴ σκωδάλιζων, viii. 13, ἀπράκτος γίνεσθαι, x. 32). With all these coincidences of matter and language, it is a strange phenomenon that any critic should maintain, as Baur, Zeller, and Schwegler have done, that the denunciations in the Apocalypse are directed against St Paul himself.
³ Comp. Apoc. ii. 24 δοὺς ὅσον ἔγος τὴν διδαχὴν ταύτην, ἀπείρε ὅσον ἔγνωσαν τὰ βαθὰ τοῦ Σατάνα, ὡς λέ­γουσιν. The false teachers boasted a knowledge of the deep things of God; they possessed only a knowledge of the deep things of Satan. St John's meaning is illustrated by a passage in Hippolytus (Haer. v. 6, p. 94) relating to the Ophites, who offer other striking resemblances to the heretics of the Apostolic age; ἐπεκάλεσαν δαυτοὺς γνωστικοὺς, φάνταστε μόνον τὰ βαθὺ γνώσε­σειν: see also Iren. ii. 28. 9. St Paul's rebuke is very different in form, but the same in effect. He begins each time in a strain of noble irony. 'We all have knowledge'; 'I speak as to wise men'; he appears to concede, was still immature and under restraint: while in the Asiatic churches it had outgrown shame and broken out into the wildest excesses.

Thus then the decree was neither permanently nor universally binding. But there was also another point which admitted much latitude of interpretation. What was understood to be the design of these enactments? They were articles of peace indeed, but of what nature was this peace to be? Was it to effect an entire union between the Jewish and Gentile churches, a complete identity of interest; or only to secure a strict neutrality, a condition of mutual toleration? Were the Gentiles to be welcomed as brothers and admitted at once to all the privileges of sons of Israel: or was the Church hereafter to be composed of two separate nationalities, as it were, equal and independent; or lastly, were the heathen converts to be recognised indeed, but only as holding a subordinate position like proselytes under the old covenant? The first interpretation is alone consistent with the spirit of the Gospel: but either of the others might honestly be maintained without any direct violation of the letter of the decree. The Church of Antioch, influenced doubtless by St. Paul, took the larger and truer view; Jewish and Gentile converts lived freely together as members of one brotherhood. A portion at least of the Church of Jerusalem, 'certain who came from James,' adopted a narrower interpretation and still clung to the old distinctions, regarding their Gentile brethren as unclean and refusing to eat with them. This was not the Truth of the Gospel, it was not the Spirit of Christ; but neither was it a direct breach of compact.

2. Scarcely less important than the settlement of the disputed to defer, to sympathize, even to encourage: and then he turns round upon the laxity of this vaunted wisdom and condemns and crushes it: 'I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend'; 'I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils.'

1 The subject of εἰσωλείουρα does not disappear with the apostolic age: it turns up again for instance in the middle of the second century, in Agrippa Castor (Euseb. H. E. iv. 7) writing against Basilides, and in Justin (Dial. 35, p. 253 D) who mentions the Basilideans among other Gnostic sects as 'participating in lawless and godless rites': comp. Orac. Sib. ii. 96. Both these writers condemn the practice, the latter with great severity. When the persecution began, and the Christians were required to deny their faith by participating in the sacrifices, it became a matter of extreme importance to avoid any act of conformity, however slight.
points was the other result of these conferences, the recognition of St Paul's office and mission by the Apostles of the Circumcision. This recognition is recorded in similar language in the narrative of the Acts and in the epistle to the Galatians. In the Apostolic circular inserted in the former Paul and Barnabas are commended as 'men who have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ' (xv. 26). In the conferences, as related in the latter, the three Apostles, James, Peter, and John, seeing that 'the Gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto him,' and 'perceiving the grace that was given unto him, gave to him and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, that they should go unto the heathen' (ii. 7—10).

This ample recognition would doubtless carry weight with a large number of Jewish converts: but no sanction of authority could overcome in others the deep repugnance felt to one who, himself a 'Hebrew of the Hebrews,' had systematically opposed the law of Moses and triumphed in his opposition. Henceforth St Paul's career was one life-long conflict with Judaizing antagonists. Setting aside the Epistles to the Thessalonians, which were written too early to be affected by this struggle, all his letters addressed to churches, with but one exception¹, refer more or less directly to such opposition. It assumed different forms in different places: in Galatia it was purely Pharisaic; in Phrygia and Asia it was strongly tinged with speculative mysticism; but everywhere and under all circumstances zeal for the law was its ruling passion. The systematic hatred of St Paul is an important fact, which we are too apt to overlook, but without which the whole history of the Apostolic ages will be misread and misunderstood.

3. The Emancipation of the Jewish Churches.

We have seen hitherto no signs of waning affection for the law in the Jewish converts to Christianity as a body. On the contrary, the danger which threatened it from a quarter so unexpected seems to have fanned their zeal to a red heat. Even in the churches of St Paul's own founding his name and authority were not powerful enough to check the encroachments of the Judaizing party. Only here and there, in mixed communities, the softening influences of daily intercourse must have been felt, and the true spirit of the Gospel insensibly diffused, inculcating the truth that 'in Christ was neither Jew nor Greek.'

¹ This exception, the Epistle to the Ephesians, may be explained by its character as a circular letter to the Asiatic churches, in which special references would be out of place.

But the mother Church of Jerusalem, being composed entirely of Jewish converts, lacked these valuable lessons of daily experience. Moreover the law had claims on a Hebrew of Palestine wholly independent of his religious obligations. To him it was a national institution, as well as a divine covenant. Under the Gospel he might consider his relations to it in this latter character altered, but as embodying the decrees and usages of his country it still demanded his allegiance. To be a good Christian he was not required to be a bad citizen. On these grounds the more enlightened members of the mother church would justify their continued adhesion to the law. Nor is there any reason to suppose that St Paul himself took a different view of their obligations. The Apostles of the Circumcision meanwhile, if conscious themselves that the law was fulfilled in the Gospel they strove nevertheless by strict conformity to conciliate the zealots both within and without the Church, were only acting upon St Paul's own maxim, who 'became to the Jews a Jew that he might gain the Jews.' Meanwhile they felt that a catastrophe was impending, that a deliverance was at hand. Though they were left in uncertainty as to the time and manner of this divine event, the mysterious warnings of the Lord had placed the fact itself beyond a doubt. They might well therefore leave all perplexing questions to the solution of time, devoting themselves meanwhile to the practical work which lay at their doors.

And soon the catastrophe came which solved the difficult problem. The storm which had long been gathering burst over the devoted city. Jerusalem was razed to the ground, and the Temple-worship ceased, never again to be revived. The Christians foreseeing the calamity had fled before the tempest; and at Pella, a city of the Decapolis, in the midst of a population chiefly Gentile the Church of the Circumcision was reconstituted. They were warned to flee, said the story, by an oracle: but no special message from heaven was needed at this juncture; the signs of the times, in themselves full of warning, interpreted by the light of the Master's prophecies plainly foretold the approaching doom. Before the crisis came, they had been deprived of the counsel and guidance of the leading Apostles. Peter had fallen a martyr at Rome; John had retired to Asia Minor; James the Lord's brother was slain not long before the great catastrophe; and some thought that the horrors of the Flavian war were the just vengeance of an offended God for the murder of so holy a man. He was succeeded by his cousin Symeon, the son of Clopas and nephew of Joseph.

Under these circumstances the Church was reformed at Pella. The church Its history in the ages following is a hopeless blank; and it would be vain to attempt to fill in the picture from conjecture. We cannot doubt however that the consequences of the fall of Jerusalem, direct or indirect, were very great. In two points especially its effects Effects 1 Euseb. H. E. iii. 5 Κατά τινα Χρησαύον τούς αυτούς δόκιμους δι' ἅποκαλύψεως ἐκδόθη τα κ.τ.λ.
2 Hegesippus in Euseb. H. E. ii. 23 καὶ εὐθὸς Ὀσεππασίαν τούς πολιορκεῖ αὐτούς, καὶ τὸν Παρασκευήν τινα ἐκδίκησαν Ιακώβου τοῦ δικαίου κ.τ.λ.
3 The Church of Pella however contributed one author at least to the ranks of early Christian literature in Ariston, the writer of an apology in the form of a dialogue between Jason a Hebrew Christian and Papiscus an Alexandrian Jew: see Routh i. p. 93. One of his works however was written after the Bar-cochba rebellion, to which it alludes (Euseb. H. E. iv. 6); and from the purport of the allusion we may infer that it was this very dialogue. The expulsion of the Jews by Hadrian was a powerful common-place in the treatises of the Apologists; see e.g. Justin Martyr Apol. i. 47. On the other hand it cannot have been written long after, for it was quoted by Celsus (Orig. c. Cels. iv. 52, p. 544, Delarue). The shade of doubt which rests on the authorship of this dialogue is very slight. Undue weight seems to be attributed to the fact of its being quoted anonymously; e.g. in Westcott's Canon, p. 93, Donaldson's Christian Literature etc. ii. p. 58. If I am right in conjecturing that the reference to the banishment of the Jews was taken from this dialogue, Eusebius himself directly attributes it to Ariston. The name of the author however is of little consequence, for the work was clearly written by a Hebrew Christian not later than the middle of the second century. Whoever he may have been, the writer was no Ebionite, for he explained Gen. i. 1, 'In filio fecit Deus caelum et terram' (Hieron. Quaest. Hebr. in Gen., iii. p. 305, ed. Vall.); and the fact is important, as this is the earliest known expression of Hebrew Christian doctrine after the canonical writings, except perhaps the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs.
would be powerfully felt, in the change of opinion produced within the Church itself and in the altered relations between the converted and unconverted Jews.

(1) The loss of their great leader at this critical moment was compensated to the Church of the Circumcision by the stern teaching of facts. In the obliteration of the Temple services they were brought at length to see that all other sacrifices were transitory shadows, faint emblems of the one Paschal Lamb, slain once and for ever for the sins of the world. In the impossibility of observing the Mosaic ordinances except in part, they must have been led to question the efficacy of the whole. And besides all this, those who had hitherto maintained their allegiance to the law purely as a national institution were by the overthrow of the nation set free henceforth from any such obligation. We need not suppose that these inferences were drawn at once or drawn by all alike; but slowly and surely the fall of the city must have produced this effect.

(2) At the same time it wholly changed their relations with their unconverted countrymen. Hitherto they had maintained such close intercourse that in the eyes of the Roman the Christians were as one of the many Jewish sects. Henceforth they stood in a position of direct antagonism. The sayings ascribed to the Jewish rabbis of this period are charged with the bitterest reproaches of the Christians, who are denounced as more dangerous than the heathen, and anathemas against the hated sect were introduced into their daily prayers. The probable cause of this change is not far to seek. While the catastrophe was still impending, the Christians seem to have stood forward and denounced the national sins which had brought down the chastisement of God on their country. In the traditional notices at least this feature may be discerned. Nor could they fail to connect together as cause and effect the stubborn rejection of Messiah and the coming doom which He Himself had foretold. And when at length the blow fell, by withdrawing from the city and refusing to share the fate of their countrymen they declared by an overt act that henceforth they were strangers, that now at length their hopes and interests were separate.

1 See especially Graetz Geschichte der Juden iv. p. 112 sq. The antagonism between the Jews and Christians at this period is strongly insisted upon by this writer, whose account is the more striking as given from a Jewish point of view.

These altered relations both to the Mosaic law and to the Jewish people must have worked as leaven in the minds of the Christians of the Circumcision. Questions were asked now, which from their nature could not have been asked before. Difficulties hitherto unfelt seemed to start up on all sides. The relations of the Church to the synagogue, of the Gospel to the law, must now be settled in some way or other. Thus diversities of opinion, which had hitherto been lulled in a broken and fitful slumber, suddenly woke up into dangerous activity. The Apostles, who at an earlier date had moderated extreme tendencies and to whom all would have looked instinctively for counsel and instruction, had passed away from the scene. One personal follower of the Lord however still remained, Symeon the aged bishop, who had succeeded James. At length he too was removed. After a long tenure of office he was martyred at a very advanced age in the ninth year of Trajan. His death, according to Hegesippus, was the signal for a shameless outbreak of multitudinous heresies which had hitherto worked underground, the Church having as yet preserved her virgin purity undefiled.

Though this early historian has interwoven many fabulous details in his account, there seems no reason to doubt the truth of the broad statement, confirmed as it is from another source, that this epoch was the birth-time of many forms of dissent in the Church of the Circumcision.

How far these dissensions and diversities of opinion had ripened meanwhile into open schism, to what extent the majority still conformed to the Mosaic ordinances (as for instance in the practice of circumcision and the observance of the sabbath), we have no data to determine. But the work begun by the fall of Jerusalem was only

1 Hegesippus in Euseb. H. E. iv. 22. This writer also mentions grandsons of Jude the Lord’s brother as ruling over the Churches and surviving till the time of Trajan; H. E. iii. 31.
2 Euseb. H. E. iii. 31 ἐπιλέγει ὃς ἀρα μέχρι τῶν τῆς χρόνων παράλοιπος καθαρὰ καὶ ἀδιάφθερος ἐμεινεν ἡ ἐκκλησία, ἐν ὁδήγῳ τοῦ σκότα φωτεινώτων εἰσέτε τότε τῶν, εἰ καὶ τιμῆς ὕψηρχον, παραφθείρειν ἐπίχειροντων κ.τ.λ.: comp. iv. 22.
3 See below, p. 325, note 5.
Rebellion of Bar-cochba.

A.D. 132—135.

A revolution of the Jews broke out in all the principal centres of the dispersion. The flame thus kindled in the dependencies spread later to the mother country. In Palestine a leader started up, professing himself to be the long promised Messiah, and in reference to the prophecy of Balaam styling himself ' Bar-cochba,' ' the son of the Star.' We have the testimony of one who wrote while these scenes of bloodshed were still fresh in men's memories, that the Christians were the chief sufferers from this rebel chieftain. Even without such testimony this might have been safely inferred. Their very existence was a protest against his claims: they must be denounced and extirpated, if his pretensions were to be made good. The cause of Bar-cochba was taken up as the cause of the whole Jewish nation, and thus the antagonism between Judaism and Christianity was brought to a head. After a desperate struggle the rebellion was trampled out and the severest vengeance taken on the insurgents. The practice of circumcision and the observance of the sabbath—indeed all the distinguishing marks of Judaism—were visited with the severest penalties. On the other hand the Christians, as the avowed enemies of the rebel chief, seem to have been favourably received. On the ruins of Jerusalem Hadrian had built his new city Ælia Capitolina. Though no Jew was admitted within sight of its walls, the Christians were allowed to settle there freely.

Now for the first time a Gentile bishop was appointed, and the Church of Jerusalem ceased to be the Church of the Circumcision.

The account of Eusebius seems to imply that long before this Ælia Capitolina.

The church

1 Justin Apol. i. 31, p. 72 n, ἐν τῷ νῦν γεγενημένῳ Ἰουδαϊκῷ πολέμῳ Βαρχα-χζασ ὁ τῷ Ἰουδαίῳ ἀποστάτες ἀρ-χητής Χριστιανός μόνως ἐς τιμωρίας δεισά, ἐλ ἀφωντῷ θησοῦν τὸν Χριστόν καὶ χλασμοῖς, ἐκείνους ἐπάγαγεν.
2 Justin Apol. i. 47, p. 84 n, Dial. τιο, p. 337 D; Ariston of Pella in Euseb. H. E. iv. 6; Celsus in Orig. c.
3 Sulpicius Severus (H. S. ii. 31) speaking of Hadrian's decree says, 'Quod quidem Christianae fidei proficiebat, quia tum pene omnes Chris- tum Deum sub legis observatione credebant; nimimum id Domino ordinante dispositum, ut leges servitus a libertate fidei atque ecclesiae tolleretur.'

Cels. viii. 69.
disastrous outbreak of the Jews the main part of the Christians reconstituted. At all events he traces the succession of bishops of Jerusalem in an unbroken line from James the Lord's brother until the foundation of the new city'. If so, we must imagine the Church once more scattered by this second catastrophe, and once more reformed when the terror was passed. But the Church of Ælia Capito-linia was very differently constituted from the Church of Pella or the Church of Jerusalem; a large proportion of its members at least were Gentiles2. Of the Christians of the Circumcision not a few doubtless accepted the conqueror's terms, content to live henceforth as Gentiles, and settled down in the new city of Hadrian. But Judaizing there were others who clung to the law of their forefathers with a stubborn grasp which no force of circumstances could loosen: and henceforward we read of two distinct sects of Judaizing Christians, observing the law with equal rigour but observing it on different grounds3.

1 H. E. iii. 32, 35, iv. 5. Eusebius seems to narrate all the incidents affecting the Church of the Circumcision during this period, as taking place not at Pella but at Jerusalem.

2 Euseb. H. E. iv. 6 ηδής αὐτοῦ ἐκ-κλησιας ἐξ ἔνων συγκοντροθείσης.
3 As early as the middle of the second century Justin Martyr distinguishes two classes of Judaizers; those who retaining the Mosaic law themselves did not wish to impose it on their Gentile brethren, and those who insisted upon conformity in all Christians alike as a condition of communion and a means of salvation (Dial. c.
Tryph. § 47; see Schliemann Clement.
p. 553 sq). In the next chapter Justin alludes with disapprobation to some Jewish converts who held that our Lord was a mere man; and it seems not unreasonable to connect this opinion with the second of the two classes before mentioned. We thus obtain a tolerably clear view of their distinctive tenets. But the first direct and definite account of both sects is given by the fathers of the fourth century especially Epiphanius and Jerome, who distinguish them by the respective names of 'Nazarenes' and 'Ebionites.' Irenæus (i. 26. 1), Tertullian (de Praescr. 33), and Hippolytus (Haer.
vii. 34, p. 257), contemplate only the second, whom they call Ebionites.
The Nazarenes in fact, being for the most part orthodox in their creed and holding communion with Catholic Christians, would not generally be included in the category of heretics; and moreover, being few in number and living in an obscure region, they would easily escape notice. Origen (c. Cel.
v. 61) mentions two classes of Christians who observe the Mosaic law, the one holding with the Catholics that Jesus was born of a Virgin, the other that he was conceived like other men; and both these he calls Ebionites. In another passage he says that both classes of Ebionites ('Εβιονίων ἀγάθευτοι) reject St Paul's Epistles (v. 65). If these two classes correspond to the 'Nazarenes' and 'Ebionites' of Jerome, Orgen's information would seem to be incorrect. On the other hand it is very
i. The NAZARENES appear at the close of the fourth century as a small and insignificant sect dwelling beyond the Jordan in Pella and the neighbouring places. Indications of their existence however occur in Justin two centuries and a half earlier; and both their locality and their name carry us back to the primitive ages of Jewish Christianity. Can we doubt that they were the remnant of the fugitive Church, which refused to return from their exile with the majority to the now Gentile city, some because they were too indolent or too satisfied to move, others because the abandonment of the law seemed too heavy a price to pay for Roman forbearance?

The account of their tenets is at all events favourable to this inference. They held themselves bound to the Mosaic ordinances, rejecting however all Pharisaic interpretations and additions. Nevertheless they did not consider the Gentile Christians under the same obligations or refuse to hold communion with them; and in the like spirit, in this distinguished from all other Judaizing sectarians, they fully recognised the work and mission of St Paul. It is stated moreover that they mourned over the unbelief of their fellow-countrymen, praying for and looking forward to the time possible that he entirely overlooks the Nazarenes and alludes to some differences of opinion among the Ebionites properly so called; but in this case it is not easy to identify his two classes with the Pharisaic and Essene Ebionites of whom I shall have to speak later. Eusebius, who also describes two classes of Ebionites (H. E. iii. 27), seems to have taken his account wholly from Irenæus and Origen. If, as appears probable, both names 'Nazarenes' and 'Ebionites' were originally applied to the whole body of Jewish Christians indiscriminately, the confusion of Origen and others is easily explained. In recent times, since Gieseler published his treatise Ueber die Nazarer und Ebioni-ten (Ständlin u. Tschirner Archiv für Kirchengesch. iv. p. 279 sq, 1819), the distinction has been generally recognised. A succinct and good account of these sects of Judaizers will be found in Schliemann Clement. p. 449 sq, where the authorities are given; but the discovery of the work of Hippolytus has since thrown fresh light on the Essene Ebionites. The portion of Ritschl's work (p. 152 sq) relating to these sects should be consulted.

1 Epiphan. Haer. xxix. 7; comp. Hieron. de Vir. Ill. § 3.
2 See the account in Schleemann, p. 445 sq, with the authorities there given and compare Ritsch p. 152 sq.
3 Hieron. in Is. ix. 1 (iv. p. 130), 'Nazarei...hunc locum ita explanare conantur : Adveniente Christo et prae- dicatione illius coruscante prima terra Zabulon et terra Nophthali scribarum et Pharisaeorum est erroribus liberata et gravissimum traditionum Judaicarum jugum excussit de cervicibus suis. Postea autem per evangelium apostoli Pauli, qui novissimus apostolorum omnium fuit, ingravata etiam universi maris Christi evangelium splenduit.'
when they too should be brought to confess Christ. Their doctrine of the person of Christ has been variously represented; but this seems at all events clear that, if it fell short of the Catholic standard, it rose above the level of other Judaic sects. The fierce and indiscriminate verdict of Epiphanius indeed pronounces these Nazarenes ‘Jews and nothing else’; but his contemporary Jerome, himself no lenient judge of heresy, whose opinion was founded on personal intercourse, regards them more favourably. In his eyes they seem to be separated from the creeds and usages of Catholic Christendom chiefly by their retention of the Mosaic law.

Thus they were distinguished from other Judaizing sects by a loftier conception of the person of Christ and by a frank recognition of the liberty of the Gentile Churches and the commission of the Gentile Apostle. These distinguishing features may be traced to the lingering influence of the teaching of the Apostles of the Circumcision. To the example of these same Apostles also they might have appealed in defending their rigid observance of the Mosaic law. But herein, while copying the letter, they did not copy the spirit of their model; for they took no account of altered circumstances.

Of this type of belief, if not of this very Nazarene sect, an early document still extant furnishes an example. The book called the ‘Testaments of the twelve Patriarchs’ was certainly written after 1 Haer. xxx. 9.

2 It is printed in Grabe’s Spicil. SS. Patr. i. p. 145 sq (ed. 2, 1700), and in Fabricius Cod. Pseudepigr. Vet. Test. i. p. 519 sq (ed. 2, 1721), and has recently been edited with an introductory essay by Sinker (Cambridge, 1869). Ritschl in his first edition had assigned this work to a writer of the Pauline school. His opinion was controverted by Kayser in the Strassburg. Betr. z. den Theol. Wissensch. iii. p. 107 (1851), and with characteristic honesty he withdrew it in his second edition, attributing the work to a Nazarene author (p. 172 sq). Meanwhile Ritschl’s first view had been adopted in a monograph by Vorstman Disquis. de Test. sit. Patr. (Rotterod. 1857), and defended against Kayser. The whole tone and colouring of the book however seem to show very plainly that the writer was a Jewish Christian, and the opposite view would probably never have been entertained but for the preconceived theory that a believer of the Circumcision could not have written so liberally of the Gentile Christians and so honorably of St Paul. Some writers again who have maintained the Judaic authorship (Kayser for instance, whose treatise I only know at second hand) have got over this assumed difficulty by rejecting certain passages as interpolations. On the other hand Ewald pronounces it ‘mere folly to assert that Benj. c. ii (the prophecy about St Paul) was a later the capture of Jerusalem by Titus and probably before the rebellion of Bar-cochba, but may be later. With some alien features, perhaps stamped upon it by the individual writer, it exhibits generally the characteristics of this Nazarene sect. In this respect at least it offers a remarkable parallel, that to a strong Israelite feeling it unites the fullest recognition of the Gentile Churches. Our Lord is represented as the renovator of the law: the imagery and illustrations are all Hebrew: certain virtues are strongly commended and certain vices strongly denounced by a Hebrew standard: many incidents in the lives of the patriarchs are derived from some unknown legendary Hebrew source. Nay more; the sympathies of the writer are not only Judaic but Levitical. The Messiah is represented as a descendant not of Judah only but of Levi also; thus he is high priest as well as king; but his priestly office is higher than his kingly, as Levi is greater than Judah: the dying patriarchs one

1 The following dates have been assigned to it by recent critics; A.D. 100-135 (Dorner), 100-120 (Wieseler), 133-163 (Eayser), 100-153 (Nitzsch, Lücke), 117-193 (Gieseler), 100-200 (Hase), about 150 (Reuss), 90-110 (Ewald). These dates except the last are taken from Vorstman p. 19 sq, who himself places it soon after the fall of Jerusalem (A.D. 70). The frequent references to this event fix the earliest possible date, while the absence of any allusion to the rebellion of Bar-cochba seems to show that it was written before that time. It is directly named by Origen (Hom. in Jos. xv. 6), and

2 Levi το ον εκ των νύμφων εν δινάμει ψήστου. 'The law of God, the law of the Lord,' are constant phrases with this writer; Levi 13, 19, Judas 18, 26, Issach. 5, Zabul. 10, Dan 6, Gad 3, Aser 2, 6, 7, Joseph 11, Benj. 10: see also Nepht. 8. His language in this respect is formed on the model of the Epistle of St James, as Ewald remarks (p. 329). Thus the Law of God with him is one with the revealed will of God, and he never therefore understands it in the narrow sense of a Jew or even of an Ebionite.

5 See Ewald Gesch. 1. p. 490.

6 Simeon 5, 7, Issach. 5, Dan 5, Nepht. 6, 8, Gad 8, Joseph 19, besides the passages referred to in the next note.

7 Reuben 6 πρὸς τον Δεον ἐγγίσατε... αὐτὸν γὰρ εὐλογήσει τὸν Ἰσραήλ καὶ τὸν Ἰούδα, Judas 21 καὶ τὸν ἑαυτόν, ἢμοι γὰρ ἔσοκε Κόρος τῆς βασιλείας κάκειψα τὴν ἱερατείαν καὶ ὑπέταξε τὴν βασιλείαν τὴν ἱερωσύνην ἢμοι ἔσοκε τά ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς κάκειψα τά ἐν after another enjoin obedience to Levi: to the Testament of Levi are consigned the most important prophecies of all: the character of Levi is justified and partially cleansed of the stain which in the Old Testament narrative attaches to it. Yet notwithstanding all this, the admission of the Gentiles into the privileges of the covenant is a constant theme of thanksgiving with the writer, who mourns over the falling away of the Jews but looks forward to their final restitution. And into the mouth of the dying Benjamin he puts a prophecy foretelling an illustrious descendant who is to ‘arise in after days, beloved of the Lord, listening to His voice, enlightening all the Gentiles with new knowledge’; who is to be ‘in the synagogues of the Gentiles until the completion of the ages, and among their rulers as a musical strain in the mouth of all’; who shall ‘be written in the holy books, he and his work and his word, and shall be the elect of God for ever’.

2. But besides these Nazarenes, there were other Judaizing Ebionites, sects, narrow and uncompromising, to whose principles or prejudices language such as I have just quoted would be most abhorrent.

The Ebionites were a much larger and more important body than the Nazarenes. They were not confined to the neighbourhood of Pella or even to Palestine and the surrounding countries, but were found in Rome and probably also in all the great centres of the dispersion. Not content with observing the Mosaic ordinances themselves, they maintained that the law was binding on all Christians alike, and regarded Gentile believers as impure because they refused to conform. As a necessary consequence they rejected the authority and the writings of St Paul, branding him as an apostate and pursuing his memory with bitter reproaches. In their theology also they were far removed from the Catholic Church, holding our

1 Levi 6, 7.
2 Benj. 11. Besides this prophecy the work presents several coincidences of language with St Paul (see Vorstman p. 115 sq), and at least one quotation, Levi 6 επίθεται δι' ἂργη Ἰησοῦ εἰς τέλος, from 1 Thess. ii. 16. On the whole however the language in the moral and didactic portions takes its colour from the Epistle of St James, and in the prophetic and apocalyptic from the Revelation of St John.

GAL.
Lord to be a mere man, the son of Joseph and Mary, who was justified, as any of themselves might be justified, by his rigorous performance of the law.

If the Nazarenes might have claimed some affinity to the Apostles of the Circumcision, the Ebionites were the direct spiritual descendants of those false brethren, the Judaizers of the apostolic age, who first disturbed the peace of the Antiochene Church and then dogged St Paul's footsteps from city to city, everywhere thwarting his efforts and undermining his authority. If Ebionism was not primitive Christianity, neither was it a creation of the second century. As an organization, a distinct sect, it first made itself known, we may suppose, in the reign of Trajan; but as a sentiment, it had been harboured within the Church from the very earliest days. Moderated by the personal influence of the Apostles, soothed by the general practice of their church, not yet forced into declaring themselves by the turn of events, though scarcely tolerant of others these Judaizers were tolerated for a time themselves. The beginning of the second century was a winnowing season in the Church of the Circumcision.

Another form of Ebionism, which is most prominent in early writers and which I have hitherto had in view, is purely Pharisaic; but we meet also with another type, agreeing with the former up to a certain point but introducing at the same time a new element, half ascetic, half mystical.

This foreign element was probably due to Essene influences. The doctrines of the Christian school bear so close a resemblance to the

1. For the opinions of these Ebionites see the references in Schleierm. p. 481 sq. and add Hippol. Haer. vii. 3 eî γάρ καὶ ἔτερος τις πεποιήκε τὰ ἐν νόμῳ προσταταγμένα, ἵνα ἐν ἑκείνοις ὁ Χριστὸς δύνασθαι δὲ καὶ εαυτοῦ δόμοις ποιήσαντας Χριστὸν γενέσθαι καὶ γὰρ καὶ αὐτῶν δόμων ἀνθρώπων εἶναι πάσων λέγουσιν.

2. The following opinions were shared by all Ebionites alike: (1) The recognition of Jesus as Messiah; (2) The denial of His divinity; (3) The universal obligation of the law; (4) The rejection and hatred of St Paul. Their differences consisted in (1) Their view of what constituted the law, and (2) Their conception of the Person of Christ; e.g. whether He was born of a Virgin or in the course of nature; what supernatural endowments He had and at what time they were bestowed on Him, whether at His birth or at His baptism, etc.

The Ebionites of earlier writers, as Irenaeus and Hippolytus, belong to the Pharisaic type; while those of Epiphanius are strongly Essene.
characteristic features of the Jewish sect as to place their parentage almost beyond a doubt: and moreover the head-quarters of these heretics—the countries bordering on the Dead Sea—coincide roughly with the head-quarters of their prototype. This view however does not exclude the working of other influences more directly Gnostic or Oriental: and as this type of Ebionism seems to have passed through different phases at different times, and indeed to have comprehended several species at the same time, such modifications ought probably to be attributed to forces external to Judaism. Having regard then to its probable origin as well as to its typical character, we can hardly do wrong in adopting the name Essene or Gnostic Ebionism to distinguish it from the common type, Pharisaic Ebionism or Ebionism proper.

If Pharisaic Ebionism was a disease inherent in the Church of the Circumcision from the first, Essene Ebionism seems to have been its later a later infection caught by external contact. In the Palestinian Church at all events we see no symptoms of it during the apostolic age. It is a probable conjecture, that after the destruction of Jerusalem the fugitive Christians, living in their retirement in the neighbourhood of the Essene settlements, received large accessions to their numbers from this sect, which thus inoculated the Church with its peculiar views. It is at least worthy of notice, that in a religious work emanating from this school of Ebionites the ‘true Gospel’ is reported to have been first propagated ‘after the destruction of the holy place’.

This younger form of Judaic Christianity seems soon to have eclipsed the elder. In the account of Ebionism given by Epiphanius the Pharisaic characteristics are almost entirely absorbed in the Essene.

1 See especially the careful investigation of Ritschl p. 204 sq.
2 Ritschl (p. 223), who adopts this view, suggests that this sect, which had stood aloof from the temple-worship and aborted sacrifices, would be led to welcome Christ as the true prophet, when they saw the fulfilment of His predictions against the temple. In Clem. Hom. iii. 15 great stress is laid on the fulfilment of these prophecies: comp. also Clem. Recogn. i. 37 (especially in the Syriac).
3 Clem. Hom. ii. 17 μετὰ καθαίρεσιν τοῦ ἁγίου τόπου εὐαγγέλιον ἀληθὸς κρόφα διαπεμφθήσαι εἰς ἑπαναφέρων τῶν ἐσο-μενῶν ἀλήθειας: comp. Clem. Recogn. i. 37, 64, iii. 61 (in the Syriac, as below, p. 330, note 1). See also Epiph. Haer. xxx. 2.
This prominence is probably due in some measure to their greater literary capacity, a remarkable feature doubtless derived from the speculative tendencies and studious habits of the Jewish sect to which they traced their parentage. Besides the Clementine writings which we possess whole, and the book of Elchasai of which a few fragmentary notices are preserved, a vast number of works which, though no longer extant, have yet moulded the traditions of the early Church, emanated from these Christian Essenes. Hence doubtless are derived the ascetic portraits of James the Lord's brother in Hegesippus and of Matthew the Apostle in Clement of Alexandria, to which the account of St Peter in the extant Clementines presents a close parallel.

And with greater literary activity they seem also to have united greater missionary zeal. To this spirit of proselytism we owe much important information relating to the tenets of the sect.

One of their missionaries early in the third century brought to Rome a sacred book bearing the name of Elchasai or Elxai, whence also the sect were called Elchasaites. This book fell into the hands of Hippolytus the writer on heresies, from whom our knowledge of it is chiefly derived. It professed to have been obtained from the Seres, a Parthian tribe, and to contain a revelation which had been first made in the third year of Trajan (A.D. 100). These Seres hold the same place in the fictions of Essene Ebionism, as the Hyperbo reans in Greek legend: they are a mythical race, perfectly pure and therefore perfectly happy, long-lived and free from pain, scrupulous in the performance of all ceremonial rites and thus exempt from the penalties attaching to their neglect.

Elchasai, an Aramaic word...
signifying the 'hidden power'; seems to be the name of the divine messenger who communicated the revelation, and probably the title of the book itself: Hippolytus understands it of the person who received the revelation, the founder of the sect. 'Elchasai,' adds this father, 'delivered it to a certain person called Sobiai.' Here again he was led astray by his ignorance of Aramaic: Sobiai is not the name of an individual but signifies 'the sworn members'; to whom alone the revelation was to be communicated and who perhaps, like their Essene prototypes, took an oath to divulge it only to the brotherhood. I need not follow this strange but instructive notice farther. Whether this was the sacred book of the whole sect or of a part only, whether the name Elchasaism is coextensive with Essene Ebionism or not, it is unimportant for my purpose to enquire. The Its pretended era of this revelation is of more consequence. Whether the book itself was really as early as the reign of Trajan or whether the date was part of the dramatic fiction, it is impossible to decide. Even in the latter case, it will still show that according to their own tradition this epoch marked some striking development in the opinions or history of the sect; and the date given corresponds, it will be remembered, very nearly with the epoch mentioned by Hegesippus as the birthtime of a numerous brood of heresies.

The passage which most strikingly illustrates this fact (Geogr. Graec. Min. ii. p. 514, ed. Müller), the name disappears when the text is correctly read ('se regentes,' and not 'Serae gentes').

Epiphanius correctly explains it δόναμι κεκλημένη, Haer. xix. 2. See Ritschl l. c. p. 581, and Altkath. Kirche p. 245. Other explanations of the word, given in Hilgenfeld l. c. p. 156, in M. Nicolas Evangelia Apocrypha p. 108 (1866), and by Geiger Zeitisch. der Deutsch. Morgenl. Gesellsch. xviii. p. 824 (1864), do not recommend themselves. The name is differently written in Greek, Ἠλχασα, Ἐλκασα and Ἡλξα. The first, which is most correct, is found in Hippolytus who had seen the book.

1 From γνωστός. Accordingly Hippolytus (ix. 17) relates that the Elchasaite missionary Alcibiades made a mystery of his teaching, forbidding it to be divulged except to the faithful; see Ritschl l. c. p. 589. Ewald however (Gesch. vii. p. 159) derives Sobiai from Ἀλκιβιάς, i.e. βαρυτατός. See also Chwolson die Sababier etc. l. p. 111.

2 Joseph. B. J. ii. 8. 7. 3 Joseph. B. J. ii. 8. 7. 4 Hilgenfeld (p. xxi) maintains the early date very positively against Ritschl. Lipsius (l. c.) will not pronounce an opinion.

5 See above, p. 315 sq. In the passage there quoted Hegesippus speaks of these heresies as living underground, burrowing (φολερωτούς) until the reign of Trajan. This agrees with the statement in the Homilies (ii. 17) already referred to (p. 315, note 3), that the true Gospel (i.e. Essene Ebionism) was Without attempting to discriminate the different forms of doctrine which this Essene Ebionism comprised in itself—to point out for instance the distinctive features of the book of Elchasai, of the Homilies, and of the Recognitions respectively—it will be sufficient to observe the broad line of demarcation which separates the Essene from the Pharisaic type\(^1\). Laying almost equal stress with the others on the observance of the law as an essential part of Christianity, the Essene Ebionites undertook to settle by arbitrary criticism what the law was\(^2\). By this capricious process they eliminated from the Old Testament all elements distasteful to them—the doctrine of sacrifices especially, which was abhorrent to Essene principles—cutting down the law to their own standard and rejecting the prophets wholly. As a compensation, they introduced certain ritual observances of their own, on which they laid great stress; more especially lustral washings and abstinence from wine and from animal food. In their Christology also they differed widely from the Pharisaic Ebionites, maintaining that the Word or Wisdom of God had been incarnate more than once, and that thus there had been more Christs than one, of whom Adam was the first and Jesus the last. Christianity in fact was regarded by them merely as the restoration of the primeval religion: in other words, of pure Mosaism before it had been corrupted by foreign accretions. Thus equally with the Pharisaic Ebionites they denied the Gospel the character of a new covenant; and, as a natural consequence, equally with them they rejected the authority and reviled the name of St Paul\(^3\).

If the Pharisaic Ebionites are the direct lineal descendants of the 'false brethren' who seduced St Paul's Galatian converts from their allegiance, the Essene Ebionites bear a striking family likeness

---

1 The chief authorities for the Essene Ebionites are Epiphanius (Haer. xix, xxx); Hippolytus (Haer. ix. 13—17) and Origen (Euseb. H. E. vi. 38), whose accounts refer especially to the book of Elchasai; and the Clementine writings.

2 See Colossians p. 372.

3 See Epiphan. Haer. xxx. 16, 25, Orig. ap. Euseb. l. c. τίνι ἀπὸ τοῦ τῆς θείας ἰδέας; besides the passages in the Clementine writings quoted in the text.
to those other Judaizers against whom he raises his voice as endangering the safety of the Church at Colossae.

Of the hostility of these Christian Essenes to St Paul, as of their other typical features, a striking example is extant in the fictitious writings attributed to the Roman bishop Clement. These are preserved in two forms: the Homilies, extant in the Greek, apparently an uniform work, which perhaps may be assigned to the middle or latter half of the second century; and the Recognitions, a composite production probably later than the Homilies, founded, it would appear, partly on them or some earlier work which was the common basis of both and partly on other documents, and known to us through the Latin translation of Rufinus, who avowedly altered his original with great freedom.

In the Homilies Simon Magus is the impersonation of manifold heresy, and as such is refuted and condemned by St Peter. Among other false teachers, who are covertly denounced in his person, we cannot fail to recognise the lineaments of St Paul. Thus St Peter

1 See Colossians p. 73 sq.
2 The only complete editions of the Homilies are those of Dressel, Clementis Romani quaeritur Homiliae Viginti (1853), and of Lagarde, Clementina (1865); the end of the 19th and the whole of the 20th homily having been published for the first time by Dressel. The Recognitions which have been printed several times may be read most conveniently in Gersdorf's edition (Lips. 1838). A Syriac version lately published by Lagarde (Clementis Romani Recognitones Syriac, Lips. et Lond. 1861) is made up partly of the Recognitions (i, ii, iii, iv), and partly of the Homilies (x, xi, xii, xiii, xiv, the xth book being imperfect). The older of the two extant ms of this version was actually written A.D. 411, the year after the death of Rufinus; but the errors of transcription, which it exhibits, show that it was taken from an earlier ms. We are thus carried back to a very remote date. The first part, containing the early books of the Recognitions, is extremely valuable, for it enables us to measure the liberties which Rufinus took with his original. An important instance of his arbitrary treatment will be given below, p. 330, note 1. Two abridgments of the Homilies are extant. These have been edited by Dressel, Clementinorum Epitomae duae (Lips. 1859), one of them for the first time. Of those monographs which I have read on the relations between the different Clementine writings, the treatise of Uhlhorn, Die Homilien und Recognitionen etc. (Gottingen, 1854), seems to me on the whole the most satisfactory. It is dangerous to express an opinion where able critics are so divided; and the remarks in the text are not hazarded without some hesitation. Baur, Schliemann, Schweger, and Uhlhorn, give the priority to the Homilies, Hilgenfeld and Ritschl to the Recognitions, Lehmann partly to the one and partly to the other, while Reuss and others decline to pronounce a decided opinion.
3 See on this subject Schliemann Clement. pp. 96 sq, 534 sq: comp. Stanley's Corinthians, p. 366 sq.
charges his hearers, 'Shun any apostle, or teacher, or prophet, who does not first compare his preaching with James called the brother of my Lord and entrusted with the care of the Church of the Hebrews in Jerusalem, and has not come to you with witnesses'; lest the wickedness, which contended with the Lord forty days and prevailed not, should afterwards fall upon the earth as lightning from heaven and send forth a preacher against you, just as he suborned Simon against us, preaching in the name of our Lord and sowing error under the pretence of truth; wherefore He that sent us said, Many shall come to me in sheep's clothing, but within they are ravening wolves (xi. 35). The allusions here to St Paul's rejection of 'commendatory letters' (2 Cor. iii. 1) and to the scene on the way to Damascus (Acts ix. 3) are clear. In another passage St Peter, after explaining that Christ must be preceded by Antichrist, the true prophet by the false, and applying this law to the preaching of Simon and himself, adds: 'If he had been known (eι γνωστόν) he would not have been believed, but now being not known (αγνωστόν) he is wrongly believed...being death, he has been desired as if he were a saviour...and being a deceiver he is heard as if he spake the truth (ii. 17, 18). The writer seems to be playing with St Paul's own words, 'as deceivers and yet true, as unknown and yet well known, as dying and behold we live (2 Cor. vi. 8, 9). In a third passage there is a very distinct allusion to the Apostle's account of the conflict at Antioch in the Galatian Epistle: 'If then,' says St Peter to Simon, 'our Jesus was made known to thee also and conversed with thee being seen in a vision, He was angry with thee as an adversary, and therefore He spake with thee by visions and dreams, or even by outward revelations. Can any one be made wise unto doctrine by visions? If thou sayest he can, then why did the Teacher abide and converse with us a whole year when we were awake? And how shall we ever believe thee in this, that He was seen of thee? Nay, how could He have been seen of thee, when thy thoughts are contrary to His teaching? If having been seen and instructed of

---

1 καὶ μετὰ μαρτυρῶν προφεταθήσεται. It is needless to insert μή with Schleimann and Schwegler: the negative is carried on from the former clause μη..."
Him for a single hour thou wast made an Apostle, then preach His words, expound His teaching, love His Apostles, do not fight against me His companion. For thou hast withstood and opposed me (ἐναρτίος ἀνθέσεις μου), the firm rock, the foundation of the Church. If thou hadst not been an adversary, thou wouldest not have calumniated and reviled my preaching, that I might not be believed when I told what I had heard myself in person from the Lord, as though forsooth I were condemned (καταγγειωθέντος) and thou wert highly regarded¹. Nay, if thou callest me condemned (καταγγειωμένον), thou accusest God who revealed Christ to me and assailest Him that called me blessed in my revelation² (xvii. 19).¹ In this same bitter spirit the writer would rob him of all his missionary triumphs and transfer them to his supposed rival: the Apostleship of the Gentiles, according to the Homilies, belongs not to St Paul but to St Peter: Barnabas is no more the companion nor Clement the disciple of St Paul but of St Peter⁴.

Again in the letter of Peter to James prefixed to the Homilies, in the Letter of Peter, emanating from the same school though perhaps not part of the work itself, and if so, furnishing another example of this bitterness of feeling, St Peter is made to denounce those Gentile converts who repudiate his lawful preaching, welcoming a certain lawless and foolish doctrine of the enemy (τοῦ ἑχθροῦ ἀνθρώπων ἄνομῶν τινα καὶ φιλαρωδή διασκαλίαν), complaining also that ‘certain persons attempted by crafty interpretations to wrest his words to the abolishing of the law, pretending that this was his opinion, but that he did not openly preach it,’ with more to the same effect (§ 2).

In the Recognitions, probably a later patch-work⁴, the harsher in the features of the Essene-Ebionite doctrine, as it appears in the Homilies, Recognitions, are softened down, and these bitter though indirect attacks on St Paul

¹ The existing text has καὶ ἐμὸν εὔδοκιμοῦντος, for which some have proposed to read καὶ μὴ εὔδοκιμοῦντος. It is better perhaps to substitute σῶς or σωλήνως for ἐμὸν, though neither is a neat emendation. Some change however is absolutely needed.

² τοῦ ἐπὶ ἀποκαλύφη μακαρισαντοῦ με. The allusion is to Matt. xvi. 17, μακαρισάτω εἰς κ.τ.λ.

³ See also other references to St Paul noted above, p. 61.

⁴ Not much earlier than the middle of the third century; for a portion of the treatise de Fato, written probably by a disciple of Bardesanes, is worked up in the later books; unless indeed this is itself borrowed from the Recognitions.
omitted; whether by the original redactor or by his translator Rufinus, it is not easy to say. Thus in the portions corresponding to and probably taken from the Homilies no traces of this hostility remain. But in one passage adapted from another work, probably the 'Ascents of James', it can still be discerned, the allusion having either escaped notice or been spared because it was too covert to give offence. It is there related that a certain enemy (homo quidam inimicus) raised a tumult against the Apostles and with his own hands assaulted James and threw him down from the steps of the temple, ceasing then to maltreat him, only because he believed him to be dead; and that after this the Apostles received secret information from Gamaliel, that this enemy (inimicus ille homo) had been sent by Caiaphas on a mission to Damascus to persecute and slay the disciples, and more especially to take Peter who was supposed to have fled thither (i. 70, 71). The original work, from which this portion of the Recognitions seems to have been borrowed, was much more violent and unscrupulous in its attacks on St Paul; for in the 'Ascents of James' Epiphanius read the story, that he was of Gentile parentage, but coming to Jerusalem and wishing to marry the high-priest's daughter he became a proselyte and was circumcised: then, being disappointed of his hope, he turned round and furiously attacked the Mosaic ordinances (Haer. xxx. 16).

1 In one instance at least the change is due to Rufinus himself. His translation of Clem. Recog. iii. 61 contains a distinct recognition of St Paul's Apostleship, 'Nonum (par) omnium gentium et illius qui mittetur seminare verbum inter gentes.' (On these φυγαδι of the false and the true see above, p. 328.) But the corresponding passage in the Syriac version (p. 115, 1. 20, Lagarde) is wholly different, and translated back into Greek will run thus: ἡ δὲ ἐνάτη (φυγάδι) τοῦ στέρματος τῶν χιτῶν καὶ τοῦ εὔαγγελίου τοῦ πεπε­μένου εἰς ἐπίστροφιν, διὰς ἐκρίσθη τὸ ἄγιον καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐρήμωσιν αὐτοῦ ἔσωσε ν τὸ βῆληγμα: see Dan. ix. 27, and compare Clem. Hom. ii. 17 (quoted above, p. 323, note 3). Thus the commendation of St Paul, which is wholly alien to the spirit of these Clementine writings, disappears.

2 Uhlhorn, p. 366. Epiphanius mentions this book, ἀναθημα Ἰακώβων, as being in circulation among the Ebionites (xxx. 16). It was so called doubtless as describing the ascents of James up the temple-stairs, whence he harangued the people. The name and the description of its contents in Epiphanius alike favour the view that it was the original of this portion of the Recognitions. But if so, the redactor of the Recognitions must have taken the same liberties with it as he has done with the Homilies.

3 This passage is substantially the same in the Syriac.
In the earlier part of the third century these Gnostic Ebionites seem to have made some futile efforts to propagate their views. An emissary of the sect, one Alcibiades of Apamea in Syria, appeared in Rome with the pretended revelation of Elchasai, and (thinking at Rome, himself the better juggler of the two, says Hippolytus) half succeeded in cajoling the pope Callistus, but was exposed and defeated by the zealous bishop of Portus who tells the story (Haer. ix. 13—17). Not many years after another emissary, if it was not this same Alcibiades, appears to have visited Cæsarea, where he was confronted and denounced by Origen.

This display of activity might lead to an exaggerated estimate of the influence of these Judaizing sects. It is not probable that they left any wide or lasting impression west of Syria. In Palestine itself they would appear to have been confined to certain localities lying for the most part about the Jordan and the Dead Sea. After the reconstitution of the mother Church at Ælia Capitolina the Christianity of Palestine seems to have been for the most part neither Ebionite nor Nazarene. It is a significant fact, implying more than appears at first sight, that in the Paschal controversy which raged in the middle and later half of the second century the bishops of Cæsarea and Jerusalem, of Tyre and Ptolemais, ranged themselves, not with the Churches of Asia Minor which regulated their Easter festival by the Jewish passover without regard to the day of the week, but with those of Rome and Alexandria and Gaul which observed another rule; thus avoiding even the semblance of Judaism. But we have more direct testimony to the main features of Palestinian doctrine about the middle of the second century in the known opinions of two writers who lived at the time—Justin as representative of the Samaritan, and Hegesippus of the Hebrew Christianity of their day. The former of these declares himself distinctly against the two characteristic tenets of Ebionism. Against their humanitarian views Justin, he expressly argues, maintaining the divinity of Christ. On the 1 Euseb. H. E. vi. 38. This extract is taken from Origen's Homily on the 82nd Psalm, which appears to have been delivered in Cæsarea about A.D. 219—223.

3 Dial. co. 48, 127.
universal obligation of the law he declares, not only that those who maintain this opinion are wrong, but that he himself will hold no communion with them, for he doubts whether they can be saved. If, as an apologist for the Gospel against Gentile and Jew, he is precluded by the nature of his writings from quoting St Paul, whose name would be received by the one with indifference and by the other with hatred, he still shows by his manner of citing and applying the Old Testament that he is not unfamiliar with this Apostle's writings. The testimony of Hegesippus is still more important, for his extant fragments prove him to have been a thorough Hebrew in all his thoughts and feelings. This writer made a journey to Rome, calling on the way at Corinth among other places; he expresses himself entirely satisfied with the teaching of the churches which he thus visited; 'Under each successive bishop,' he says, 'and in each city it is so as the law and the prophets and the Lord preach.' Was the doctrine of the whole Christian world at this

---

1 Dial. ec. 47, 48.
2 See Westcott's argument (Canon p. 116 sq) drawn from the usage of other apologists, Tertullian for instance, who does not quote even the Gospels in his Apology.
3 See the introduction, p. 60, and the notes on iii. 28, iv. 27.
4 In Euseb. H. E. iv. 22. The extract ends, γενέσκω δὲ ἐν Ρώμῃ διαδοχὴν ἑωρημάτων μέχρις Διοικητοῦ οὗ διάκονος ἦν 'Ἐλευθέρος' καὶ παρὰ Διοικητοῦ διαδέχεται Σωτῆρ, μεθ’ ὑπ’ 'Ἐλευθέρος' ἐν ἑκάστῃ δὲ διαδοχῇ καὶ ἐν ἑκάστῃ πόλει ὁ δὲ ἡσυχασμένος οὖν ἐμφανίζεται καὶ ὁ προφήτης καὶ ὁ Κύριος. If the text be correct, διαδοχὴν ἑωρημάτων must mean 'I drew up a list or an account of the successive bishops' (see Pearson in Routh t. p. 168 sq); and in this case Hegesippus would seem to be referring to some earlier work or earlier portion of this work, which he now supplements. Possibly however the conjectural reading διαρροήν ἑωρημάτων, 'I continued to reside,' may be correct: but the translation of Rufinus, 'permanei inibi (i.e. Romae) donee Aniceto Soter et Soteri successit Eleutherus,' is of little or no weight on this side; for he constantly uses his fluency in Latin to gloss over his imperfect knowledge of Greek, and the evasion of a real difficulty is with him the rule rather than the exception. If we retain διαδοχὴν, the words of Hegesippus would still seem to imply that he left Rome during the episcopate of Anicetus. Eusebius indeed (H. E. iv. 11) infers, apparently from this passage, that he remained there till Eleutherus became bishop; and Jerome (de Vir. Ill. 22), as usual, repeats Eusebius. This inference, though intelligible, seems hardly correct; but it shows almost conclusively that Eusebius did not read διαρροήν. The early Syriac translator of Eusebius (see above, p. 280, note) certainly read διαδοχὴν. The dates of the accession of the successive bishops as determined by Lipsius are, Pins 141 (at the latest), Anicetus 154—156, Soter 166 or 167, Eleutherus 174 or 175, Victor 189, Zephyrinus 198 or 199, Callistus 217, Urbanus 222; Chron. der Röm. Bisch. p. 363. But there is considerable variation in the authorities, the actime (A.D. 150) Ebionite, or was the doctrine of Hegesippus Catholic? There is no other alternative. We happen to possess information which leaves no doubt as to the true answer. Eusebius not an Ebionite. He speaks of Hegesippus as 'having recorded the unerrng tradition of the apostolic preaching' (H. E. iv. 8); and classes him with Dionysius of Corinth, Melito, Irenæus, and others, as one of those in whose writings 'the orthodoxy of sound faith derived from the apostolic tradition had been handed down'. In this Eusebius could not have been mistaken, for he himself states that Hegesippus 'left the fullest record of his own opinions in five books of memoirs' which were in his hands (H. E. iv. 22). It is surely a bold effort of recent criticism in the face of these plain facts to set down Hegesippus as an Ebionite and to infer thence that a great part of Christendom was Ebionite also. True, this writer gives a traditional account of St James which represents him as a severe and rigorous ascetic; but between this stern view of life and Ebionite doctrine the interval may be wide enough; and on this showing how many fathers of the Church, Jerome and Basil for instance in the fourth century, Bernard and Franscis of Assisi in later ages, must plead guilty of Ebionism. True, he used the Hebrew Gospel; but what authority he attributed to it, or whether it was otherwise than orthodox, does not appear. True also, he appeals in a passage already quoted to the authority of 'the law and the prophets and the Lord'; but this is a natural equivalent for 'the Old and New Tes-

1. H. E. iv. 21 ὄν καὶ Ἐβιονή τῆς ἄποστολικῆς παράδοσεως ἢ τῆς ἐκ νόσῳ πιστεύων ἀγ्रαφῶν καθήδεν ὀρθόδοξια.
2. Euseb. H. E. ii. 23. See the account of St James below.
3. See the passage quoted above, p. 332, note 4. For the inferences of the Tübingen school see Schwengler Nachapost. Zeitalter i. p. 355, Baur Christenthum etc. p. 78. A parallel instance will serve the purpose better than much argument. In a poem by the late Prof. Selwyn (Winfrid, afterwards called Boniface, Camb. 1864) the hero is spoken of as 'Printing heaven's message deeper in his soul, By reading holy writ, Prophet and Law, And fourfold Gospel.' Here, as in Hegesippus, the law is mentioned and 'the Apostle' is not. Yet who would say that this passage savours of Ebionism? Comp. Irenæus Haer. ii. 30. 6 'Belinquentes eloquia Domini et Moysen et reliquis prophetas,' and again in Spicil. Solesm. i. p. 3, and the Clementine Epistles to Virgins i. 12 'Sicut ex lega ac prophetis et a Domino nostro Jesu Christo didicimus' (Westcott Canon p. 185, 4th ed.). So too Apost. Const. ii. 39 μετὰ τῆς ἀποστολῆς τοῦ νόμου καὶ τῶν tament,' and corresponding expressions would not appear out of place even in our own age. True lastly, he condemns the use made of the text, 'Eye hath not seen nor ear heard' etc., as contradicting our Lord's words, 'Blessed are your eyes for ye see, etc.'; but he is here protesting against its perverted application by the Gnostics, who employed it of the initiated few, and whom elsewhere he severely denounces; and it is a mere accident that the words are quoted also by St Paul (1 Cor. ii. 9). Many of the facts mentioned point him out as a Hebrew, but not one brands him as an Ebionite. The decisive evidence on the other side is fatal to this inference. If Hegesippus may be taken as a type of the Hebrew Church in his day, then the doctrine of that Church was Catholic.

And if the Palestinian Churches of the second century held Catholic doctrine, we shall see little or no reason to fix the charge of Ebionism on other communities farther removed from the focus

---

The fragment to which I refer is preserved in an extract from Stephanus Gobarus given in Photius Bibliothek, c. 231. After quoting the words τὰ ἄκουσαν τῶν δικαίων ἀγάθα οὕτω ἀφθαρσῶς εἰς ὑμᾶς οὐκ ἔχουσα ἐντεῦθεν ἐκ καρδιῶν ἀνθρώπου αὐτῆς, Stephanus proceeds, Ἡγεσίππους μεταφέρει ἥμαρσα, καὶ ἀνήφη καὶ ἀποταλάθη, ἐν τῷ πέμπτῳ ὑπομνήματι, οὐκ οὖν ἐνθαρρύνσα ταῦτα λέγει καὶ καταφεύγει τοῦτο ἑαυτῷ φανέρων τῶν τε θειών ἱερατῶν καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου λέγοντος Μακάριοι οἱ οὐρανοῖ ὑμών κ.τ.λ. It is not surprising that this writer, who lived when Gnosticism had passed out of memory, should be puzzled to 'know what had come to Hegesippus': but modern critics ought not to have gone astray. Hegesippus can hardly be objecting to the passage itself, which is probably a quotation from Is. lxiv. 4. His objection therefore must be to some application of it. But whose application? Even had there been no direct evidence, it might have been gathered from the argument which follows that he referred to the esoteric teaching of the Gnostics; but the lately discovered treatise of Hippolytus establishes the fact that it was a favourite text of these heretics, being introduced into the form of initiation: see v. 24, 26, 27 (of Justin the Gnostic), vi. 24 (of Valentinus). This is the opinion of Lechler p. 463, Ritschl p. 267, Westcott Canon pp. 206, 281, Bunsen Hippolytus i. p. 132 (2nd ed.), and Hilgenfeld Apost. Vater p. 121, but otherwise Zeitschr. f. Wiss. Theol. 1876, p. 203 sqq. Yet Baun (Christenthum p. 77, Paulus p. 221), and Schwegler (p. 351), forcing an unnatural meaning on the words, contend that Hegesippus is directly denying St Paul's claim to a revelation and asserting that this privilege belongs only to those who have seen and heard Christ in the flesh. It is worth noticing that the same quotation, 'eye hath not seen etc.,' is found in the Epistle of Clement (c. 34); and this epistle was referred to by Hegesippus, as the notice of Eusebius seems to imply (H. E. iv. 22), with approval. This very mention of Clement's epistle is in itself secondary evidence that Hegesippus recognised the authority of St Paul.
of Judaic influences. Here and there indeed Judaism seems to have made a desperate struggle, but only to sustain a signal defeat. At Antioch this conflict began earlier and probably continued longer than elsewhere; yet the names of her bishops Ignatius, Theophilus, and Serapion, vouch for the doctrine and practice of the Antiochene Church in the second century. In Asia Minor the influence first of St Paul and then of St John must have been fatal to the ascendency of Ebionism. A disproportionate share indeed of the faint light which glimmers over the Church of the second century is concentrated on this region: and the notices, though occasional and fragmentary, are sufficient to establish this general fact. The same is true with regard to Greece: similar influences were at work and with similar results. The Churches of Gaul took their colour from Asia Minor which furnished their greatest teachers: Irenaeus bears witness to the Catholicity of their faith. In Alexandria, when at length the curtain rises, Christianity is seen enthroned between Greek philosophy and Gnostic speculation, while Judaism is far in the background. The infancy of the African Church is wrapt in hopeless darkness: but when she too emerges from her obscurity, she comes forward in no uncertain attitude, with no deep scars as of a recent conflict, offering neither a mutilated canon nor a dwarfed theology. The African Bible, as it appears in the old Latin version, contains all the books which were received without dispute for two centuries after. The African theology, as represented by Tertullian, in no way falls short of the standard of Catholic doctrine maintained in other parts of Christendom.

But the Church of the metropolis demands special attention. At the Church of Rome, if anywhere, we should expect to see very distinct traces of these successive phenomena, which are supposed to have extended throughout or almost throughout the Christian Church—first the supremacy of Ebionism—then the conflict of the Judaic with the Pauline Gospel—lastly, towards the close of the second century, the triumph of a modified Paulinism and the consequent birth of Catholic Christianity. Yet, even if this were the history of Catho-

1 The episcopate of Victor (about A.D. 190—200) is fixed by the Tübin- gen critics (see Schweiger II. p. 206 sq) as the epoch of the antijudaic revolulicity at Rome, it would still be an unfounded assumption to extend the phenomenon to other parts of Christendom. Rome had not yet learnt to dictate to the Church at large. At this early period she appears for the most part unstable and pliant, the easy prey of designing or enthusiastic adventurers in theology, not the originator of a policy and a creed of her own. The prerogative of Christian doctrine and practice rests hitherto with the Churches of Antioch and Asia Minor.

But the evidence lends no countenance to the idea that the tendencies of the Roman Church during this period were towards Ebionism. Her early history indeed is wrapt in obscurity. If the veil were raised, the spectacle would probably not be very edifying, but there is no reason to imagine that Judaism was her characteristic taint. As late heathen Rome had been the sink of all Pagan superstitions, so early Christian Rome was the meeting-point of all heretical creeds and philosophies. If the presence of Simon Magus in the metropolis be not a historical fact, it is still a carrying out of the typical character with which he is invested in early tradition, as the father of heresy. Most of the great heresiarchs—among others Valentinus, Marcion, Praxeas, Theodotus, Sabellius—taught in Rome.
Ebionism alone would not be idle, where all other heresies were active. But the great battle with this form of error seems to have been fought out at an early date, in the lifetime of the Apostles themselves and in the age immediately following.

The last notice of the Roman Church in the apostolic writings seems to point to two separate communities, a Judaizing Church and a Pauline Church. The arrival of the Gentile Apostle in the metropolis, it would appear, was the signal for the separation of the Judaizers, who had hitherto associated with their Gentile brethren coldly and distrustfully. The presence of St Paul must have vastly strengthened the numbers and influence of the more liberal

Heresics congregate there.

The father of heresy. Most of the great heresiarchs—among others
Valentinus, Marcion, Praxeas, Theodotus, Sabellius—taught in Rome.
Ebionism alone would not be idle, where all other heresies were active. But the great battle with this form of error seems to have been fought out at an early date, in the lifetime of the Apostles themselves and in the age immediately following.

The last notice of the Roman Church in the apostolic writings
seems to point to two separate communities, a Judaizing Church and a Pauline Church. The arrival of the Gentile Apostle in the metropolis, it would appear, was the signal for the separation of the Judaizers, who had hitherto associated with their Gentile brethren coldly and distrustfully. The presence of St Paul must have vastly strengthened the numbers and influence of the more liberal

Secession of Judaizers.

in the Roman Church. This date follows necessarily from their assumption that Hegesippus was an Ebionite; for his approval of this church extends to the episcopate of Eleutherus, the immediate predecessor of Victor; see above, p. 332, note 4. They suppose however that the current had been setting in this direction some time before.
and Catholic party; while the Judaizers provoked by rivalry redoubled their efforts, that in making converts to the Gospel they might also gain proselytes to the law. Thus 'in every way Christ was preached.'

If St Peter ever visited Rome, it must have been at a later date than these notices. Of this visit, far from improbable in itself, there is fair if not conclusive evidence; and once admitted, we may reasonably assume that important consequences flowed from it. Where all is obscurity, conjecture on one side is fairly answered by conjecture on the other. We may venture therefore to suggest this, as a not unlikely result of the presence of both Apostles in Rome. As they had done before in the world at large, so they would agree to do now in the metropolis: they would exchange the right hand of fellowship, devoting themselves the one more especially to the Jewish, the other to the Gentile converts. Christian Rome was large enough to admit two communities or two sections in one community, until the time was ripe for their more complete amalgamation. Thus either as separate bodies with separate governments, or as a confederation of distinct interests represented each by their own officers in a common presbytery, we may suppose that the Jewish and Gentile brotherhoods at Rome were organized by the combined action of the two Apostles. This fact possibly underlies the tradition that St Peter and St Paul were joint founders of the Roman Church: and it may explain the discrepancies in the lists of the early bishops, which perhaps point to a double succession. At all events, the presence of the two Apostles must have tended to tone down antipathies and to draw parties closer together. The Judaizers seeing that the Apostle of the Circumcision, whose name they had venerated at a distance but whose principles they had hitherto imperfectly understood, was associating on terms of equality with the 'hated one,' the subverter of the law, would be led to follow his example slowly and suspiciously; and advances on the one side would be met eagerly by advances on the other. Hence at the close of the first century we see no more traces of a twofold Church. The work of the Apostles, now withdrawn from the scene, has passed into the hands of no unworthy disciple. The liberal and catholic spirit of Clement eminently fitted him for the task of conciliation; and he appears as the first bishop or presiding elder of the one Roman Church. This amalgamation however could not be effected without some opposition; the extreme Judaizers must necessarily have been embittered and alienated: and, if a little later we discern traces of Ebionite sectarianism in Rome, this is not only no surprise, but the most natural consequence of a severe but short-lived struggle.

1 The inferences in the text are drawn from Phil. i. 15-18, compared with Col. iv. 11. 'These only (i.e. of the circumcision) are my fellow-workers etc.'

The Epistle to the Corinthians written by Clement in the name of the Roman Church cannot well be placed after the close of the first century and may possibly date some years earlier. It is not unreasonable to regard this as a typical document, reflecting the comprehensive principles and large sympathies which had been impressed upon the united Church of Rome, in great measure perhaps by the influence of the distinguished writer. There is no early Christian writing which combines more fully than this the distinctive features of all the Apostolic Epistles, now asserting the supremacy of faith with St Paul, now urging the necessity of works with St James, at one time echoing the language of St Peter, at another repeating the very words of the Epistle to the Hebrews 1. Not without some show of truth, the authority of Clement was claimed in after generations for writings of very different tendencies. Belonging to no party, he seemed to belong to all.

Not many years after this Epistle was written, Ignatius now on his way to martyrdom addresses a letter to the Roman brethren. It contains no indications of any division in the Church of the metropolis or of the prevalence of Ebionite views among his readers. On the contrary, he lavishes epithets of praise on them in the opening salutation; and throughout the letter there is not the faintest shadow of blame. His only fear is that they may be too kind to him and deprive him of the honour of martyrdom by their intercessions. To 1 See Westcott History of the Canon p. 24 sq.

---

ST PAUL AND THE THREE.

the Ephesians, and even to Polycarp, he offers words of advice and warning; but to the Romans he utters only the language of joyful satisfaction.

But in a church thus formed we might expect to meet with other and narrower types of doctrine than the Epistle of Clement exhibits. Traditional principles and habits of thought would still linger on, modified indeed but not wholly transformed by the predominance of a Catholicity which comprehended all elements in due proportion. One such type is represented by an extant work which emanated from the Roman Church during the first half of the second century.

In its general tone the Shepherd of Hermas confessedly differs from the Epistle of Clement; but on the other hand the writer was certainly no Ebionite, as he has been sometimes represented. If he dwells almost exclusively on works, he yet states that the 'elect of God will be saved through faith': if he rarely quotes the New Testament, his references to the Old Testament are still fainter and scantier: if he speaks seldom of our Lord and never mentions Him by name, he yet asserts that the 'Son of God was present with His Father in counsel at the founding of creation,' and holds that the world is 'sustained by Him.' Such expressions no Ebionite could have used. Of all the New Testament writings the Shepherd most resembles in tone the Epistle of St James, whose language it some-

1 This is the case, even though we should accept only the parts preserved in the Syriac as genuine; but the Greek (Vossian) Epistles are still more explicit. They distinctly acquit the Romans of any participation in heresy; speaking of them as 'united in flesh and spirit with every commandment of Christ, filled with the grace of God inseparably, and strained clear of every foreign colour' (ἀποτυπωμένος ἀπὸ παντὸς ἄλλοτριον χρώματος). At the same time the writer appears in other passages as a stubborn opponent of Judaism, Magn. 8, 10, Philad. 6.

2 On the date of the Shepherd see above, p. 99, note 3.

3 Vit. iii. 8: comp. Mand. viii.

4 Sim. ix. 12. The whole passage is striking: Προτού, φημί, πάντων, κύρε, τούτου μοι δήλωσον· ἡ πέτρα καὶ ἡ πύλη τίς ἔστιν; Ἡ πέτρα, φημί, αὐτὴ καὶ ἡ πύλη οὐκ εἶναι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστὶ. Ποθὲ, φημί, κύρε, ἡ πέτρα παλαιὰ ἔστιν, οὐ δὲ πύλη καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶ. Αὐτὲς, φημί, καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶ, αὐτὸν ἐστὶ. Ὡ μὲν γὰρ τοῦ Θεοῦ πάσης τῆς κτίσεως αὐτοῦ προγενέστερον ἐστὶν, ὡστε σύμβουλον αὐτὸν γενέσθαι τῷ πατρὶ τῆς κτίσεως αὐτοῦ· διὰ τούτο καὶ παλαιὰς ἔστιν. Ἡ δὲ πύλη διὰ τί καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶ, φημί, κύρε; ὡς, φημί, εἰ ἡ ἐκκλησία τῶν ἡμῶν τῆς συντελείας φανερὸς ἑγένετο, διὰ τούτο. καὶ ἑκάστη ἑγένετο ἡ πύλη, ἵνα ὁ μέλλων σώζεσθαι δι' αὐτῆς εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν εἰσ- ἔλθωσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ.

5 Sim. ix. 14 tὸ ὄνομα τοῦ νῦν τοῦ Θεοῦ μέγα ἐστὶ καὶ ἰχθύρητον καὶ τὸν κόσμον δεικεῖ· ἐπὶ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ. On the whole subject see Dörner Lehre s. t. p. 186 sq., Westcott Canon p. 200 sq.
times reflects: but the teaching of St James appears here in an exaggerated and perverted form. The author lays great stress on works, and so far he copies his model: but his interpretation of works is often formal and ritualistic, and in one passage he even states the doctrine of supererogation. Whether the tone of this writing is to be ascribed to the traditional feelings of Judaism yet lingering in the Church, or to the influence of a Judaic section still tolerated, or to the constitution of the author's own mind, it is impossible to say. The view of Christian ethics here presented deviates considerably, it is true, from St Paul's teaching; but the deviation is the same in kind and not greater in degree than marks a vast number of mediæval writings, and may in fact be said to characterize more or less distinctly the whole mediæval Church. Thus it affords no ground for the charge of Ebionism. Hermas speaks of law indeed, as St James speaks of it; yet by law he means not the Mosaic ordinances but the rule introduced by Christ. On the other hand his very silence is eloquent. There is not a word in favour of Judaic observances properly so called, not a word of denunciation direct or indirect against either the doctrine or the person of St Paul or his disciples. In this respect the Shepherd presents a marked contrast to the truly Ebionite work, which must be taken next in order.

The Clementine writings have been assigned with great confidence by most recent critics of ability to a Roman authorship. Of the truth of this view I am very far from convinced. The great argument—indeed almost the only argument—in its favour is the fact that the plot of the romance turns upon the wanderings of this illustrious bishop of Rome, who is at once the narrator and the hero of the story. But the fame of Clement reached far beyond the limits of his own jurisdiction. To him, we are specially told by a contemporary writer, was assigned the task of corresponding with

1 Sim. v. 3: comp. Mand. iv. 4.
2 So for instance Baur, Schliemann, Ritschl, Hilgenfeld: and this view is adopted by Dean Milman Latin Christianity i. p. 31, who speaks of it as 'the unanimous opinion of those who in later days have critically examined the Clementina.' Uhlhorn is almost alone among recent critics in raising his voice against this general verdict: p. 370 sq.
foreign churches. His rank and position, his acknowledged wisdom and piety, would point him out as the best typical representative of the Gentile converts: and an Ebionite writer, designing by a religious fiction to impress his views on Gentile Christendom, would naturally single out Clement for his hero, and by his example enforce the duty of obedience to the Church of the Circumcision, as the prerogative Church and the true standard of orthodoxy. At all events it is to be noticed that, beyond the use made of Clement’s name, these writings do not betray any familiarity with or make any reference to the Roman Church in particular. On the contrary, the scenes are all laid in the East; and the supreme arbiter, the ultimate referee in all that relates to Christian doctrine and practice, is not Peter, the Clementine Apostle of the Gentiles, the reputed founder of the Roman Church, but James the Lord’s brother, the bishop of bishops, the ruler of the mother Church of the Circumcision.

If the Roman origin of these works is more than doubtful, the time of writing also is open to much question. The dates assigned to the Homilies by the ablest critics range over the whole of the second century, and some place them even later. If the Roman authorship be abandoned, many reasons for a very early date will fall to the ground also. Whenever they were written, the Homilies are among the most interesting and important of early Christian writings, but they have no right to the place assigned them in the system of a modern critical school, as the missing link between the Judaism of the Christian era and the Catholicism of the close of the second century, as representing in fact the phase of Christianity taught at Rome and generally throughout the Church during the early ages.

1 Hermas Vis. ii. 4 πέμψει οὖν Κλη­μήνις εἰς τὰς ἥπειρας· ἔκεινω γὰρ ἐπι­τέραπται.
2 The Epistle of Clement to James, prefixed to the work, is an exception; for it gives an elaborate account of the writer’s appointment by St Peter as his successor. The purpose of this letter, which is to glorify the see of Rome, shows that it was no part of and probably is later than the Homilies themselves.

If the Homilies had really been written by a Roman Christian, the slight and incidental mention of St Peter’s sojourn in Rome (i. 16, comp. Recogn. i. 74) would have thrown considerable doubt on the fact. But if they emanated from the East, from Syria for instance, no explanation of this silence is needed.
The very complexion of the writer's opinions is such, that they can hardly have been maintained by any large and important community, at least in the West. Had they presented a purer form of Judaism, founded on the Old Testament Scriptures, a more plausible case might have been made out. But the theology of the Clementines does not lie in a direct line between the Old Testament and Catholic Christianity; it deviates equally from the one and the other. In its rejection of half the Mosaic law and much more than half of the Old Testament, and in its doctrine of successive avatars of the Christ, it must have been as repugnant to the religious sentiments of a Jew trained in the school of Hillel, as it could possibly be to a disciple of St Paul in the first century or to a Catholic Christian in the third. Moreover the tone of the writer is not at all the tone of one who addresses a sympathetic audience. His attacks on St Paul are covert and indirect; he makes St Peter complain that he has been misrepresented and libelled. Altogether there is an air of deprecation and apology in the Homilies. If they were really written by a Roman Christian, they cannot represent the main body of the Church, but must have emanated from one of the many heresies with which the metropolis swarmed in the second century, when all promulgators of new doctrine gathered there, as the largest and therefore the most favourable market for their spiritual wares.

There is another reason also for thinking that this Gnostic Ebionism cannot have obtained any wide or lasting influence in the Church of Rome. During the episcopate of Callistus (A.D. 219—223) a heretical teacher appears in the metropolis, promulgating Elchasaite doctrines substantially, though not identically, the same with the creed of the Clementines, and at first seems likely to attain some measure of success, but is denounced and foiled by Hippolytus. It is clear that this learned writer on heresies regarded the Elchasaite doctrine as a novelty, against which therefore it was the more necessary to warn the faithful Christian. If the Ebionism of the Clementines had ever prevailed at Rome, it had passed into oblivion when Hippolytus wrote.
The few notices of the Roman Church in the second century point to other than Ebionite leanings. In their ecclesiastical ordinances the Romans seem anxious to separate themselves as widely as possible from Jewish practices. Thus they extended the Friday's fast over the Saturday, showing thereby a marked disregard of the sabbatical festival. Thus again they observed Easter on a different day from the Jewish passover; and so zealous were they in favour of their own traditional usage in this respect, that in the Paschal controversy their bishop Victor resorted to the extreme measure of renouncing communion with those churches which differed from it.

This controversy affords a valuable testimony to the Catholicity of Christianity at Rome in another way. It is clear that the churches ranged on different sides on this question of ritual are nevertheless substantially agreed on all important points of doctrine and practice. This fact appears when Anicetus of Rome permits Polycarp of Smyrna, who had visited the metropolis in order to settle some disputed points and had failed in arranging the Paschal question, to celebrate the eucharist in his stead. It is distinctly stated by Irenaeus when he remonstrates with Victor for disturbing the peace of the Church by insisting on non-essentials. In its creed the Roman Church was one with the Gallic and Asiatic Churches; and that this creed was not Ebionite, the names of Polycarp and Irenaeus are guarantees. Nor is it only in the Paschal controversy that the Catholicity of the Romans may be inferred from their intercourse

1 Tertull. de Jejun. 14; see Neander Ch. Hist. i. p. 410 (Bohn).
2 On the Paschal controversy see Euseb. H. E. v. 23—25. Polycrates on behalf of the Asiatic Churches claimed the sanction of St John; and there seems no reason to doubt the validity of this claim. On the other hand a different rule had been observed in the Roman Church at least as far back as the episcopate of Xystus (about 120—129) and perhaps earlier. It seems probable then that the Easter festival had been established independently by the Romans and those who followed the Roman practice. Thus in the first instance the difference of usage was no index of Judaic or antijudaic leanings: but when once attention was called to its existence, and it became a matter of controversy, the observance of the Christian anniversary on the same day with the Jewish festival would afford a handle for the charge of Judaism; and where it was a matter of policy or of principle to stand clear of any sympathy with Jewish customs (as for instance in Palestine after the collision of the Jews with the Romans), the Roman usage would be adopted in preference to the Asiatic.

3 In Euseb. H. E. v. 24, ἡ διαφωνία ἡς ἡμετέρας ἡς ὄρθως ἡς πιστεοτέρως συνήθησαν, and the whole extract.
with other Christian communities. The remains of ecclesiastical literature, though sparse and fragmentary, are yet sufficient to reveal a wide network of intercommunication between the churches of the second century; and herein Rome naturally holds a central position. The visit of Hegesippus to the metropolis has been mentioned already. Not very long after we find Dionysius bishop of Corinth, whose 'orthodoxy' is praised by Eusebius, among other letters addressed to foreign churches, writing also to the Romans in terms of cordial sympathy and respect.

On the Catholicity of the African Church I have already remarked: and the African Church was a daughter of the Roman, from whom therefore it may be assumed she derived her doctrine.

The gleams of light which break in upon the internal history of the Roman Church at the close of the second and beginning of the third century exhibit her assailed by rival heresies, compromised by the weakness and worldliness of her rulers, altogether distracted and unsteady, but in no way Ebionite. One bishop, whose name is not given, first dallies with the fanatical spiritualism of Montanus; then suddenly turning round, surrenders himself to the patripassian speculations of Praxeas. Later than this two successive bishops, Zephyrinus and Callistus, are stated, by no friendly critic indeed but yet a contemporary writer, the one from stupidity and avarice, the other from craft and ambition, to have listened favourably to the heresies of Noetus and Sabellius. It was at this point in her history that the Church of Rome was surprised by the novel doctrines of the Elchasaite teacher, whom I have already mentioned more than once. But no one would maintain that at this late date Ebionism predominated either at Rome or in Christendom generally.

Ebionites indeed there were at this time and very much later.

1 In Euseb. H. E. iv. 23.
2 Tertull. de Præserc. 36. Cyprian Epist. 48 (ed. Fell) writing to Cornelius speaks of Rome as 'Ecclesiæ catholicae radicem et matricem,' in reference to the African Churches.
3 Tertull. adv. Prax. 1. Tertullian, now a Montanist, writes of Praxeas who had persuaded this nameless bishop of Rome to revoke his concessions to Montanism, 'ita duo negotia diaboli Praxeas Romæ procuravit, prophetiam expulit et haeresim intulit, paracletum fugavit et patrem crucifixit.' For speculations as to the name of this bishop see Wordsworth's Hippolytus pp. 131, 132.
4 Hippol. Haer. ix. 7 sq.
Even at the close of the fourth century, they seem to have mustered in considerable numbers in the east of Palestine, and were scattered through the great cities of the empire. But their existence was not prolonged much later. About the middle of the fifth century they had almost disappeared. They would gradually be absorbed either into the Catholic Church or into the Jewish synagogue: into the latter probably, for their attachment to the law seems all along to have been stronger than their attachment to Christ.

Thus then a comprehensive survey of the Church in the second century seems to reveal a substantial unity of doctrine and a general recognition of Jewish and Gentile Apostles alike throughout the greater part of Christendom. At the same time it could hardly happen, that the influence of both should be equally felt or the authority of both estimated alike in all branches of the Church. St Paul and the Twelve had by mutual consent occupied distinct spheres of labour; and this distribution of provinces must necessarily have produced some effect on the subsequent history of the Church.

The communities founded by St Paul would collect and preserve the letters of their founder with special care; while the brotherhoods evangelized by the Apostles of the Circumcision would attribute a superior, if not an exclusive, value to the writings of these 'pillars' of the Church. It would therefore be no great surprise if we should find that in individual writers of the second century and in different parts of the early Church, the Epistles of St Paul on the one hand, the Apocalypse of St John or the letter of St James on the other, were seldom or never appealed to as authorities.

1 Theodoret, Haer. Fab. ii. 11, mentions the Ebionites and the Elchasaites among those of whom οὐδὲ βραχὺ διέμενε λευφάνον.
2 Gal. ii. 9; see Westcott's History of the Canon p. 77 sq, ed. 4.
3 Many false inferences however, affecting the history of the Canonical writings, have been drawn from the silence of Eusebius, which has been entirely misapprehended: see Contemporary Review, January, 1875, p. 169 sq, Colossians p. 52 sq.

The phenomenon exhibited in the Ancient Syriac Documents (edited by Cureton, 1864) is remarkable. Though they refer more than once to the Acts of the Apostles (pp. 15, 27, 33) as the work of St Luke and as possessing canonical authority, and though they allude incidentally to St Paul's labours (pp. 35, 61, 62), there is yet no reference to the epistles of this Apostle, where the omission cannot have been accidental (p. 33), and the most important churches founded by him,
The equable circulation of all the apostolic writings was necessarily the work of time.

Use of the foregoing account. The foregoing account of the conflict of the Church with Judaism has been necessarily imperfect, and in some points conjectural; but it will prepare the way for a more correct estimate of the relations between St Paul and the leading Apostles of the Circumcision. We shall be in a position to view these relations no longer as an isolated chapter in history, but in connexion with events before and after; and we shall be furnished also with means of estimating the value of later traditional accounts of these first preachers of the Gospel.

St Paul. St Paul himself is so clearly reflected in his own writings, that a distorted image of his life and doctrine would seem to be due only to defective vision. Yet our first impressions require to be corrected or rather supplemented by an after consideration. Seeing him chiefly as the champion of Gentile liberty, the constant antagonist of Jew and Judaizer, we are apt to forget that his character has another side also. By birth and education he was a Hebrew of the Hebrews: and the traditions and feelings of his race held him in honourable captivity to the very last.

Of this fact the narrative of the Acts affords many striking examples. It exhibits him associating with the Apostles of the Circumcision on terms of mutual respect and love, celebrating the festivals and observing the rites of his countrymen, everywhere giving the precedence to the Jew over the Gentile.

But the character of the witness has been called in question. This narrative, it is said, is neither contemporary nor trustworthy. It was written long after the events recorded, with the definite purpose of uniting the two parties in the Church. Thus the incidents are forged or wrested to subserve the purpose of the writer. It was part of his plan to represent St Peter and St Paul as living on friendly terms, in order to reconcile the Petrine and Pauline factions.

As Ephesus, Thessalonica, Corinth, etc., are stated to have received 'the Apostles' Hand of Priesthood from John the Evangelist' (p. 34).
The Acts of the Apostles in the multiplicity and variety of its details probably affords greater means of testing its general character for truth than any other ancient narrative in existence; and in my opinion it satisfies the tests fully. But this is not the place for such an investigation. Neither shall I start from the assumption that it has any historical value. Taking common ground with those whose views I am considering, I shall draw my proofs from St Paul's Epistles alone in the first instance, nor from all of these, but from such only as are allowed even by the extreme critics of the Tübingen school to be genuine, the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, and Galatians. It so happens that they are the most important for my purpose. If they contain the severest denunciations of the Judaizers, if they display the most uncompromising antagonism to Judaism, they also exhibit more strongly than any others St Paul's sympathies with his fellow-countrymen.

These then are the facts for which we have St Paul's direct personal testimony in the epistles allowed by all to be genuine. (1) Position of the Jews. He assigns to them the prerogative over the Gentiles; a prior right to the privileges of the Gospel, involving a prior reward if they are accepted and, according to an universal rule in things spiritual, a prior retribution if they are spurned (Rom. i. 16, ii. 9, 10). In the same spirit he declares that the advantage is on the side of the Jew, and that this advantage is 'much every way' (Rom. iii. 1, 2). (2) His affection for his countrymen. His earnestness and depth of feeling are nowhere more striking than when he is speaking of the Jews: 'Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved: for I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge' (Rom. x. 1, 2). Thus in spite of their present stubborn apostasy he will not allow that they have been cast away (xi. 1), 1 These four epistles alone were accepted as genuine by Baur and Schwegler. Hilgenfeld, who may now be regarded as the chief of the Tübingen school, has in this, as in many other points, deserted the extreme position of Baur whom he calls the 'great master.' He accepts as genuine 1 Thessalonians, Philippians, and Philemon; thus substituting, as he expresses it, the sacred number Seven for the heathen Tetractys of his master: see Zeitsch. für wissensch. Theol. v. p. 226 (1862).

but looks forward to the time when 'all Israel shall be saved' (xi. 26). So strong indeed is his language in one passage, that commentators regarding the letter rather than the spirit of the Apostle's prayer, have striven to explain it away by feeble apologies and unnatural interpretations: 'I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart: for I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ (ἀνάθεμα εἶναι αὐτῶς ἐγὼ ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ) for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh' (Rom. ix. 1—3). (3) His practical care for his countrymen. The collection of alms for the poor brethren of Judea occupies much of his attention and suggests messages to various churches (Rom. xv. 25, 26; 1 Cor. xvi. 1—6; 2 Cor. viii, ix; Gal. ii. 10). It is clear not only that he is very solicitous himself on behalf of the Christians of the Circumcision, but that he is anxious also to inspire his Gentile converts with the same interest. (4) His conformity to Jewish habits and usages. St Paul lays down this rule, to 'become all things to all men that he may by all means save some' (1 Cor. ix. 22). This is the key to all seeming inconsistencies in different representations of his conduct. In his epistles we see him chiefly as a Gentile among Gentiles; but this powerful moral weapon has another edge. Applying this maxim, he himself tells us emphatically that 'unto the Jews he became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jews; unto them that are under the law as under the law, that he might gain them that are under the law' (1 Cor. ix. 20). The charges of his Judaizing opponents are a witness that he did carry out his maxim in this direction, as in the other. With a semblance of truth they taunt him with inconsistency, urging that in his own practice he had virtually admitted their principles, that in fact he had himself preached circumcision. (5) His reverence for the Old Testament Scriptures. This is a strongly marked feature in the four epistles which I am considering. They teem with quotations, while there are comparatively few in his remaining letters. For metaphor, allegory, example, argument, confirmation, he draws upon this inexhaustible store. However widely he may have differed from his rabbinical teachers in other respects, he at least did not yield to them in reverence for 'the law and the prophets and the psalms.'

1 See above, p. 28 sq, and notes on i. 10, ii. 3, v. 2, 11.

These facts being borne in mind (and they are indisputable) the portrait of St Paul in the Acts ought not to present any difficulties. It records no one fact of the Apostle, it attributes no sentiment to him, which is not either covered by some comprehensive maxim or supported by some practical instance in his acknowledged letters. On the other hand the tone of the history confessedly differs somewhat from the tone of the epistles. Nor could it possibly have been otherwise. Written in the heat of the conflict, written to confute unscrupulous antagonists and to guard against dangerous errors, St Paul's language could not give a complete picture of his relations with the Apostles and the Church of the Circumcision. Arguments directed against men, who disparaged his authority by undue exaltation of the Twelve, offered the least favourable opportunity of expressing his sympathy with the Twelve. Denunciations of Judaizing teachers, who would force their national rites on the Gentile Churches, were no fit vehicle for acknowledging his respect for and conformity with those rites. The fairness of this line of argument will be seen by comparing the differences observable in his own epistles. His tone may be said to be graduated according to the temper and character of his hearers. The opposition of the Galatian letter to the Mosaic ritual is stern and uncompromising. It was written to correct a virulent form of Judaism. On the other hand the remonstrances in the Epistle to the Romans are much more moderate, guarded by constant explanations and counterpoised by expressions of deep sympathy. Here he was writing to a mixed church of Jews and Gentiles, where there had been no direct opposition to his authority, no violent outbreak of Judaism. If then we picture him in his intercourse with his own countrymen at Jerusalem, where the claims of his nation were paramount and where the cause of Gentile liberty could not be compromised, it seems most natural that he should have spoken and acted as he is represented in the Acts. Luther denouncing the pope for idolatry and Luther rebuking Carstadt for iconoclasm writes like two different persons. He bids the timid and gentle Melancthon 'sin and sin boldly'; he would have cut his right hand off sooner than pen such words to the antinomian rioters of Munster. It is not that the man or his principles were changed: but the same words addressed to persons of opposite tempers would have conveyed a directly opposite meaning.

St Paul's language then, when in this epistle he describes his relations with the Three, must be interpreted with this caution, that it necessarily exhibits those relations in a partial aspect. The purport of this language, as I understand it, is explained in the notes: and I shall content myself here with gathering up the results.

(1) There is a general recognition of the position and authority of the elder Apostles, both in the earlier visit to Jerusalem when he seeks Peter apparently for the purpose of obtaining instruction in the facts of the Gospel, staying with him a fortnight, and in the later visit which is undertaken for the purpose, if I may use the phrase, of comparing notes with the other Apostles and obtaining their sanction for the freedom of the Gentile Churches. (2) On the other hand there is an uncompromising resistance to the extravagant and exclusive claims set up on their behalf by the Judaizers. (3) In contrast to these claims, St Paul's language leaves the impression (though the inference cannot be regarded as certain), that they had not offered a prompt resistance to the Judaizers in the first instance, hoping perhaps to conciliate them, and that the brunt of the contest had been borne by himself and Barnabas. (4) At the same time they are distinctly separated from the policy and principles of the Judaizers, who are termed false brethren, spies in the Christian camp. (5) The Apostles of the Circumcision find no fault with St Paul's Gospel, and have nothing to add to it. (6) Their recognition of his office is most complete. The language is decisive in two respects: it represents this recognition first as thoroughly mutual, and secondly as admitting a perfect equality and independent position. (7) At the same time a separate sphere of labour is assigned to each: the one are to preach to the heathen, the other to the Circumcision. There is no implication, as some have represented, that the Gospel preached to the Gentile would differ from the Gospel preached to the Jew. Such an idea is alien to the whole spirit of the passage. Lastly, (8) Notwithstanding their distinct spheres of work, St Paul is requested by the Apostles of the Circumcision to collect the alms of the Gentiles for the poor brethren of Judaea, and to this request he responds cordially.

With the exception of the incident at Antioch, which will be considered presently, the Epistle to the Galatians contains nothing more bearing directly on the relations between St Paul and the Apostles of the Circumcision. Other special references are found in the Epistles to the Corinthians, but none elsewhere. These notices, slight though they are, accord with the view presented by the Galatian letter. St Paul indeed says more than once that he is 'not a whit behind the very chiefest Apostles' (τῶν ὑπηρετῶν ἀποστόλων, 2 Cor. xi. 5, xii. 11), and there is in the original a slight touch of irony which disappears in the translation: but the irony loses its point unless the exclusive preference of the elder Apostles is regarded as an exaggeration of substantial claims. Elsewhere St Paul speaks of Cephas and the Lord's brethren as exercising an apostolic privilege which belonged also to himself and Barnabas (1 Cor. ix. 5), of Cephas and James as witnesses of the Lord's resurrection like himself (1 Cor. xv. 5, 7). In the last passage he calls himself (with evident reference to the elder Apostles who are mentioned immediately before) 'the least of the Apostles, who is not worthy to be called an Apostle.' In rebuking the dissensions at Corinth, he treats the name of Cephas with a delicate courtesy and respect which has almost escaped notice. When he comes to argue the question, he at once drops the name of St Peter; 'While one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal? What then is Apollos, and what is Paul?' Apollos was so closely connected with him (1 Cor. xvi. 12), that he could use his name without fear of misapprehension. But in speaking of Cephas he had to observe more caution: certain persons persisted in regarding St Peter as the head of a rival party, and therefore he is careful to avoid any seeming depreciation of his brother Apostle.
In all this there is nothing inconsistent with the character of St Paul as drawn in the Acts, nothing certainly which represents him as he was represented by extreme partisans in ancient times, by Ebionites on the one hand and Marcionites on the other, and as he has been represented of late by a certain school of critics, in a position of antagonism to the chief Apostles of the Circumcision. I shall next examine the scriptural notices and traditional representations of these three.

1. The author of the Clementine Homilies makes St Peter the mouth-piece of his own Ebionite views. In the prefatory letter of Peter to James which, though possibly the work of another author, represents the same sentiments, the Apostle complains that he has been misrepresented as holding that the law was abolished but fearing to preach this doctrine openly. 'Far be it,' he adds, 'for to act so is to oppose the law of God which was spoken by Moses and to which our Lord bare witness that it should abide for ever. For thus He said, Heaven and earth shall pass away: one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the law. And this He said that all things might be fulfilled. Yet these persons professing to give my sentiments (τῶν ἵμων νοῦν ἵππαγγελλόμενοι) I know not how, attempt to interpret the words that they have heard from me more cleverly (φρονμωτέρον) than myself who spoke them, telling their pupils that this is my meaning (φρόνησα), though it never once entered into my mind (ὡ ἵγω σφης ἐνεπιθυμήθην). But if they dare to tell such falsehoods of me while I am still alive, how much more will those who come after me venture to do it when I am gone (§ 2).'

It has been held by some modern critics that the words thus put into the Apostle's mouth are quite in character; that St Peter did maintain the perpetuity of the law; and that therefore the traditional account which has pervaded Catholic Christendom from the writing of the Acts to the present day gives an essentially false view of the Apostle.

I think the words quoted will strike most readers as betraying a consciousness on the part of the writer that he is treading on hollow and dangerous ground. But without insisting on this, it is im-
Important to observe that the sanction of this venerated name was and also claimed by other sectarians of opposite opinions. Basilides (about A.D. 130), the famous Gnostic teacher, announced that he had been instructed by one Glaucias an ‘interpreter’ of St Peter\(^1\). An early apocryphal writing moreover, which should probably be assigned to the beginning of the second century and which expressed strong anti-Judaic views\(^2\), was entitled the ‘Preaching of Peter.’ I do not see why these assertions have not as great a claim to a hearing as the opposite statement of the Ebionite writer. They are probably earlier; and in one case at least we have more tangible evidence than the irresponsible venture of an anonymous romance writer. The probable inference however from such conflicting statements would be, that St Peter’s true position was somewhere between the two extremes.

\(^1\) Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. p. 896, Potter.

\(^2\) On this work, the κήρυγμα Πέτρου, see Schwegler Nachap. Zeit., p. 30 sq. Its opposition to Judaism appears in an extant fragment preserved in Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. p. 760, μηδὲ κατὰ Ἰουδαῖον σέβεσθε…οὐτε καὶ ὑµεῖς ὑστεροὶ καὶ δικαιω οὐ μανθάνοιτε ἀ παραδίκαζεν ὑµῶν φυλασσεσθε, καὶ οὐ τὸ ἔθνος διὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ σεβόμενοι εὐθυμοι γὰρ ἐν ταῖς γραφαῖς καθὼς ὁ Κύριος λέγει· ἵθελ διαστείμα τῷ καὶ κύριῳ διαθήκῃ κ.τ.λ. The fragments of this work are collected by Grabe, Spicil. 1. p. 62 sq. It was made use of by Heracleon the Valentinian, and is quoted more than once, apparently as genuine, by Clement of Alexandria.

The identity of this work with the Praedicatio Pauli quoted in the treatise De Baptismo Haereticorum printed among Cyprian’s works (App. p. 30, Fell) seems to me very doubtful, though maintained by several able critics. The passage there quoted is strangely misinterpreted by Baur (Christenthum p. 53). I give his words, lest I should have misunderstood him: ‘Auch die kirchliche Sage, welche die Apostel wieder zusammenbrachte, läßt erst am Ende nach einer langen Zeit der Trennung die gegenseitige Anerkennung zu Stande kommen. Post tanta tempora, hiess es in der Praedicatio Pauli in der Stelle, welche sich in der Cyprians Werken angehängten Schrift de rebaptismate erhalten hat (Cypr. Opp. ed. Baluz. s. 365 f.), Petrum et Paulum post conlationem evangeli in Jerusalem et mutuam cogitationem (?) et alterationem et rerum agendarum dispositionem postremo in urbe, quasi tunc primum, invicem sibi esse cognitores.’ Baur thus treats the comment of the writer as if it were part of the quotation. In this treatise the writer denounces the Praedicatio Pauli as maintaining ‘adulterinum, imo internecinum baptisma’; in order to invalidate its authority, he proceeds to show its thoroughly unhistorical character; and among other instances he alleges the fact that it makes St Peter and St Paul meet in Rome as if for the first time, forgetting all about the congress at Jerusalem, the collision at Antioch, and so forth. Schwegler takes the correct view of the passage, p. 32.

Other early apocryphal works attributed to the chief Apostle of the Circumcision are the Gospel, the Acts, and the Apocalypse of Peter; but our information respecting these is too scanty to throw much light on the present question: on the Gospel of Peter see above, p. 274.
But we are not to look for trustworthy information from such sources as these. If we wish to learn the Apostle’s real attitude in the conflict between Jewish and Gentile converts, the one fragmentary notice in the Epistle to the Galatians will reveal more than all the distorted and interested accounts of later ages: ‘But when Cephas came to Antioch I withstood him to the face, for he was condemned (his conduct condemned itself). For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles, but when they came, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing those of the circumcision: and the rest of the Jews also dissembled with him, so that even Barnabas was carried away with their dissimulation (συμπαραχθη αύτῶν τῷ ὑποκρίσει). But when I saw that they walked not straight according to the truth of the Gospel, I said unto Cephas before all, If thou, being born a Jew (Ἰουδαῖος ὑπάρχων), livest after the manner of the Gentiles and not after the manner of the Jews, how compellest thou the Gentiles to live like the Jews? etc. (ii. 11—14).’

Now the point of St Paul’s rebuke is plainly this: that in sanctioning the Jewish feeling which regarded eating with the Gentiles as an unclean thing, St Peter was untrue to his principles, was acting hypocritically and from fear. In the argument which follows he assumes that it was the normal practice of Peter to live as a Gentile (ἐθνικὸς ἥγε and not ἐθνικὸς ἥγε), in other words, to mix freely with the Gentiles, to eat with them, and therefore to disregard the distinction of things clean and unclean: and he argues on the glaring inconsistency and unfairness that Cephas should claim this liberty himself though not born to it, and yet by hypocritical compliance with the Jews should practically force the ritual law on the Gentiles and deprive them of a freedom which was their natural right.

1 I do not see how this conclusion can be resisted. According to the Tübingen view of St Peter’s position, his hypocrisy or dissimulation must have consisted not in withdrawing from, but in holding intercourse with the Gentiles; but this is not the view of St Paul on any natural interpretation of his words; and certainly the Ebionite writer already quoted (p. 353) did not so understand his meaning. Schwegler (τ. p. 129) explains συμπαραχθησαν αὑτῷ ‘were hypocritical enough to side with him,’ thus forcing the expression itself and severing it from the context; but even then he is obliged to acquit the other Jewish Christians at Antioch of Ebionism. Hilgenfeld (Galater p. 61 sq) discards Schwegler’s interpretation and explains ὑποκρίσις of the self-contradiction, the unconscious inconsistency of Jewish Christian or Ebionite
ST PAUL AND THE THREE.

How St Peter came to hold these liberal principles, so entirely opposed to the narrow traditions of his age and country, is explained by an incident narrated in the Acts. He was at one time as rigid and as scrupulous as the most bigoted of his countrymen: 'nothing common or unclean had at any time entered into his mouth (x. 14, xi. 8).’ Suddenly a light bursts in upon the darkness of his religious convictions. He is taught by a vision ‘not to call any man common or unclean (x. 28).’ His sudden change scandalizes the Jewish brethren: but he explains and for the moment at least convinces (xi. 18).

And if his normal principles are explained by the narrative of the Acts, his exceptional departure from them is illustrated by his character as it appears in the Gospels. The occasional timidity and weakness of St Peter will be judged most harshly by those who have never themselves felt the agony of a great moral crisis, when not their own ease and comfort only, which is a small thing, but the spiritual welfare of others seems to clamour for a surrender of their principles. His true nobleness—his fiery zeal and overflowing love and abandoned self-devotion—will be appreciated most fully by spirits which can claim some kindred however remote with his spirit.

Thus the fragmentary notices in the Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistles of St Paul, combine to form a harmonious portrait of a character, not consistent indeed, but—to use Aristotle's significant phrase—consistently inconsistent (ὁμολογούσαν ἁνώμολον); and this is a much safer criterion of truth. But there is yet another source of information to be considered—his own letters. If the deficiency of external evidence forbids the use of the Second Epistle in controversy, the First labours under no such disabilities; for very few of the apostolical writings are better attested.

To this epistle indeed it has been objected that it bears too manifest traces of Pauline influence to be the genuine writing of St Peter. The objection however seems to overlook two important principles: but inconsistency is not dissimulation or hypocrisy, and this interpretation, like the former, loses sight of the context which denounces St Peter for abandoning a certain line of conduct from timidity.
considerations. First. If we consider the prominent part borne by St Paul as the chief preacher of Christianity in countries Hellenic by race or by adoption; if we remember further that his writings were probably the first which clothed the truths of the Gospel and the aspirations of the Church in the language of Greece; we shall hardly hesitate to allow that he 'had a great influence in moulding this language for Christian purposes, and that those who afterwards trod in his footsteps could hardly depart much from the idiom thus moulded.' Secondly. It is begging the whole question to assume that St Peter derived nothing from the influence of the Apostle of the Gentiles. The one was essentially a character to impress, the other to be impressed. His superior in intellectual culture, in breadth of sympathy, and in knowledge of men, his equal in love and zeal for Christ, St Paul must have made his influence felt on the frank and enthusiastic temperament of the elder Apostle. The weighty spiritual maxims thrown out during the dispute at Antioch for instance would sink deep into his heart: and taking into account the many occasions when either by his writings or by personal intercourse St Paul's influence would be communicated, we can hardly doubt that the whole effect was great.

But after all the epistle bears the stamp of an individual mind quite independent of this foreign element. The substratum of the thoughts is the writer's own. Its individuality indeed appears more in the contemplation of the life and sufferings of Christ, in the view taken of the relations between the believer and the world around, in the realisation of the promises made to the chosen people of old, in the pervading sense of a regenerate life and the reiterated hope of a glorious advent, than in any special development of doctrine: but it would be difficult to give any reason why, prior to experience, we should have expected it to be otherwise.

---

2 See 1 Pet. ii. 24 τὰς ἀμαρτίας ἡμῶν αὐτὸς ἀνίσχυκεν ἐν τῷ σώματι αὐτοῦ ἐκ τοῦ θύλου, ἵνα ταῖς ἀμαρτίαις ἀπογενόμενοι τῇ δικαιώσω ἰδοὺς. This is the most striking instance which the epistle exhibits of coincidence with St Paul's doctrinal teaching (though there are occasionally strong resemblances of language). With it compare Gal. ii. 20 Χριστῷ συνεστάθημα: τί δὲ οὐκέτι ἄγα, τί δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστὸς κ.τ.λ.
Altogether the epistle is anything but Ebionite. Not only is the of a mind Hebrew but not Ebionite. ‘law’ never once named, but there is no allusion to formal ordinances of any kind. The writer indeed is essentially an Israelite, but he is an Israelite after a Christian type. When he speaks of the truths of the Gospel, he speaks of them through the forms of the older dispensation; he alludes again and again to the ransom of Christ’s death, but the image present to his mind is the paschal lamb without spot or blemish; he addresses himself to Gentile converts, but he transfers to them the cherished titles of the covenant race; they are the true ‘dispersion (i. 1)’; they are ‘a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people (ii. 9).’ The believer in Christ is the Israelite; the unbeliever the Gentile (ii. 12).

Corresponding to the position of St Peter as he appears in the apostolic history, this epistle in its language and tone occupies a place midway between the writings of St James and St Paul. With St James it dwells earnestly on the old: with St Paul it expands to the comprehension of the new. In its denunciation of luxurious wealth, in its commendation of the simple and homely virtues, in its fond reference to past examples in Jewish history for imitation or warning, it recalls the tone of the head of the Hebrew Church: in its conception of the grace of God, of the ransom of Christ’s death, of the wide purpose of the Gospel, it approaches to the language of the Apostle of the Gentiles.

With St Paul too the writer links himself by the mention of two names, both Christians of the Circumcision, and both companions of the Gentile Apostle; Mark who, having accompanied him on his first missionary tour, after some years of alienation is found by his side once more (Col. iv. 10), and Silvanus who shared with him the labours and perils of planting the Gospel in Europe. Silvanus is the bearer or the amanuensis of St Peter’s letter; Mark joins in the salutations (v. 12, 13).

Thus the Churches of the next generation, which were likely to be well informed, delighted to unite the names of the two leading Apostles as the greatest teachers of the Gospel, the brightest examples of Christian life. At Rome probably, at Antioch certainly, both these
ST PAUL AND THE THREE.

Apostles were personally known. We have the witness of the one church in Clement; of the other in Ignatius. The former classes them together as the two ‘noble ensamples of his own generation,’ ‘the greatest and most righteous pillars’ of the Church, who ‘for hatred and envy were persecuted even unto death (§ 5).’ The latter will not venture to command the Christians of Rome, ‘as Peter and Paul did; they were Apostles, he a convict; they were free, he a slave to that very hour.’

Clement wrote before the close of the first century, Ignatius at the beginning of the second. It seems probable that both these fathers had conversed with one or other of the two Apostles. Besides Antioch and Rome, the names of St Peter and St Paul appear together also in connexion with the Church of Corinth (1 Cor. iii. 22). This church again has not withheld her voice, though here the later date of her testimony detracts somewhat from its value. Dionysius bishop of Corinth, writing to the Romans during the episcopate of Soter (c. 166—174), claims kindred with them on the ground that both churches alike had profited by the joint instruction of St Peter and St Paul.

But though the essential unity of these two Apostles is thus recognised by different branches of the Catholic Church, a disposition to sever them seems early to have manifested itself in some quarters. Even during their own lifetime the religious agitators at Corinth would have placed them in spite of themselves at the head of rival parties. And when death had removed all fear of contradiction, extreme partisans boldly claimed the sanction of the one or the other

1 Rom. 4. The words οἷς Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος διατάσσομαι ὑμῖν gain force, as addressed to the Romans, if we suppose both Apostles to have preached in Rome.

2 The language of Clement however implicitly contains the testimony of this church at an earlier date: for he assumes the acquiescence of the Corinthians when he mentions both Apostles as of equal authority (§§ 5, 47).

3 In Euseb., H. E. ii. 25 τὴν ἀπὸ Πέτρου καὶ Παύλου ψυχῆς γεννηθέντας "Ρωμαίον τε καὶ Κορινθίων συνεκεράστε. καὶ γὰρ ἄμφω καὶ εἰς τὴν ἀνετέραν Κυρίων φωτισθέντες ἡμῖν ἦμοις ἐδίδασκαν, ἡμοὶ δὲ καὶ εἰς τὴν Ἰταλίαν ἡμῶι ἐδίδασκαν ἐκπαρόθησαν κατὰ τῶν αὐτῶν καιρῶν. All the Mss and the Syriac version here have φωτισθέντες; but φωτισθέντες is read by Georgius Syn- cellulius, and Rufinus has ‘adventantes’; the sense too seems to require it. In any case it is hardly a safe inference that Dionysius erroneously supposed the Churches of Rome and Corinth to have been founded by both Apostles jointly.
for their own views. The precursors of the Ebionites misrepresented the Israelite sympathies of St Peter, as if he had himself striven to put a yoke upon the neck of the Gentiles which neither their fathers nor they were able to bear. The precursors of Marcionism exaggerated the antagonism of St Paul to the Mosaic ritual, as if he had indeed held the law to be sin and the commandment neither holy nor just nor good. It seems to have been a subsidiary aim of St Luke's narrative, which must have been written not many years after the martyrdom of both Apostles, to show that this growing tendency was false, and that in their life, as in their death, they were not divided. A rough parallelism between the career of the two reveals itself in the narrative when carefully examined. Recent criticism has laid much stress on this 'conciliatory' purpose of the Acts, as if it were fatal to the credit of the narrative. But denying the inference we may concede the fact, and the very concession draws its sting. Such a purpose is at least as likely to have been entertained by a writer, if the two Apostles were essentially united, as if they were not. The truth or falsehood of the account must be determined on other grounds.

2. While St Peter was claimed as their leader by the Judaizers, no such liberty seems to have been taken with the name of St John\(^1\). Long settled in an important Gentile city, surrounded by a numerous school of disciples, still living at the dawn of the second century, he must have secured for his teaching such notoriety as protected it from gross misrepresentation.

His last act recorded in St Luke's narrative is a visit to the newly founded Churches of Samaria, in company with St Peter (viii.
His position in the apostolic history.

\(^1\) In the portion of the first book of the Recognitions, which seems to have been taken from the 'Ascents of James,' the sons of Zebedee are introduced with the rest of the Twelve confuting heres-sies, but the sentiments attributed to them are in no way Ebionite (i. 57).
It is this work perhaps to which Epi-phanius refers (xxx. 23), for his notice does not imply anything more than a casual introduction of St John's name in their writings. In another passage Epiphanius attributes to the sons of Ze-bedee the same ascetic practices which distinguished James the Lord's brother (Haer. lxxviii. 13); and this account
he perhaps derived from some Essene Ebionite source. But I do not know that they ever claimed St John in the same way as they claimed St Peter and St James.
14). He thus stamps with his approval the first movement of the Church in its liberal progress. From the silence of both St Paul and St Luke it may be inferred that he took no very prominent part in the disputes about the Mosaic law. Only at the close of the conferences we find him together with St Peter and St James recognising the authority and work of St Paul, and thus giving another guarantee of his desire to advance the liberties of the Church. This is the only passage where he is mentioned in St Paul's Epistles. Yet it seems probable that though he did not actually participate in the public discussions, his unseen influence was exerted to promote the result. As in the earliest days of the Church, so now we may imagine him ever at St Peter's side, his faithful colleague and wise counsellor, not forward and demonstrative, but most powerful in private, pouring into the receptive heart of the elder Apostle the lessons of his own inward experience, drawn from close personal intercourse and constant spiritual communion with his Lord.

At length the hidden fires of his nature burst out into flame. When St Peter and St Paul have ended their labours, the more active career of St John is just beginning. If it had been their task to organize and extend the Church, to remove her barriers and to advance her liberties, it is his special province to build up and complete her theology. The most probable chronology makes his withdrawal from Palestine to Asia Minor coincide very nearly with the martyrdom of these two Apostles, who have guided the Church through her first storms and led her to her earliest victories. This epoch divides his life into two distinct periods: hitherto he has lived as a Jew among Jews; henceforth he will be as a Gentile among Gentiles. The writings of St John in the Canon probably mark the close of each period. The Apocalypse winds up his career in the Church of the Circumcision; the Gospel and the Epistles are the crowning result of a long residence in the heart of Gentile Christendom.

Both the one and the other contrast strongly with the leading features of Ebionite doctrine; and this fact alone would deter the Judaizers from claiming the sanction of a name so revered.

Of all the writings of the New Testament the Apocalypse is ST PAUL AND THE THREE.

most thoroughly Jewish in its language and imagery. The whole book is saturated with illustrations from the Old Testament. It speaks not the language of Paul, but of Isaiah and Ezekiel and Daniel. Its tone may be well described by an expression borrowed from the book itself; 'the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy (xix. 10).' The doctrine of Balaam, the whoredoms of Jezebel, the song of Moses, the lion of Judah, the key of David, the great river Euphrates, the great city Babylon, Sodom and Egypt, Gog and Magog, these and similar expressions are but the more striking instances of an imagery with which the Apocalypse teems. Nor are the symbols derived solely from the canonical Scriptures; in the picture of the New Jerusalem the inspired Apostle has borrowed many touches from the creations of rabbinical fancy. Up to this point the Apocalypse is completely Jewish and might have been Ebionite. But the same framing serves only to bring out more strongly the contrast between the pictures themselves. The two distinctive features of Ebionism, its mean estimate of the person of Christ and its extravagant exaltation of the Mosaic law, are opposed alike to the spirit and language of St John. It might have been expected that the beloved disciple, who had leaned on his Master's bosom, would have dwelt with fond preference on the humanity of our Lord: yet in none of the New Testament writings, not even in the Epistles of St Paul, do we find a more express recognition of His divine power and majesty. He is 'the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning (the source) of the creation of God (iii. 14).' 'Blessing, honour, glory, and power' are ascribed not 'to Him that sitteth on the throne' only, but 'to the Lamb for ever and ever (v. 13).' His name is 'the Word of God (xix. 13).' Therefore he claims the titles and attributes of Deity. He declares himself 'the Alpha and Omega, the first and last, the beginning and the end (xxii. 13; comp. i. 8).’ He is ‘the Lord of lords and the King of kings (xvii. 14, xix. 16).’ And so too the Ebionite reverence for the law as still binding has no place in the Apocalypse. The law. The word does not occur from beginning to end, nor is there a single allusion to its ceremonial as an abiding ordinance. The Paschal Lamb indeed is ever present to St John’s thought; but with him it signifies not the sacrifice offered in every Jewish home year by year, but the Christ who once ‘was slain, and hath redeemed us to God by his blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation (vii. 9).’ All this is very remarkable, since there is every reason to believe that up to this time St John had in practice observed the Jewish law1. To him however it was only a national custom

1 Certain traditions of St John’s residence at Ephesus, illustrating his relation to the Mosaic law, deserve notice here. They are given by Polycrates who was himself bishop of Ephesus (Euseb. H. E. v. 24). Writing to pope Victor, probably in the last decade of the second century, he mentions that he ‘numbers sixty-five years in the Lord’ (whether he refers to the date of his birth or of his conversion, is uncertain, but the former seems more probable), and that he has had seven relations bishops, whose tradition he follows. We are thus carried back to a very early date. The two statements with which we are concerned are these, (1) St John celebrated the Paschal day on the 14th of the month, coinciding with the Jewish passover. It seems to me, as I have said already (see p. 343), that there is no good ground for questioning this tradition. The institution of such an annual celebration by this Apostle derives light from the many references to the Paschal Lamb in the Apocalypse; and in the first instance it would seem most natural to celebrate it on the exact anniversary of the Passover. It is more questionable whether the Roman and other Churches, whose usage has passed into the law of Christendom, had really the apostolic sanction which they vaguely asserted for celebrating it always on the Friday. This usage, if not quite so obvious as the other, was not unnatural and probably was found much more convenient. (2) Polycrates says incidentally of St John that he was ‘a priest wearing the mitre and a martyr and teacher (ὁ ἐγεννηθεὶς ἤρως τὸ πῖσταλον πεθορικῶς καὶ μάρτυς καὶ διδάσκαλος).’ The reference in the πῖσταλον is doubtless to the metal plate on the high-priest’s mitre (Exod. xxviii. 35 πῖσταλον χρυσοῦ καθαρόν, comp. Protevang. a. 5 τὸ πῖσταλον τοῦ ἱεροῦ); but the meaning of Polycrates is far from clear. He has perhaps mistaken metaphor for matter of fact (see Stanley Apostolical Age p. 285); in like manner as the name Theophorus assumed by Ignatius gave rise to the later story that he was the child whom our Lord took in his arms and blessed. I think it probable however that the words as they stand in Polycrates are intended for a metaphor, since the short fragment which contains them has several figurative expressions almost, if not quite, as violent; e.g. μεγάλα στοιχεία κεκοιμηται (where στοιχεία means ‘luminaries,’ being used of the heavenly bodies); Μελίνως τὸν εὐνοήχον (probably a metaphor, as Rufinus translates it, ‘propter regnum dei eunuchum’; see Matt. xix. 12 and comp. Athenag. Suppl. 33, 34, Clem. Alex. Paed. iii. 4, p. 269, Strom. iii. 1. p. 509 sq); τὸν μενόν μου ἄθρωτον (‘my insignificance’; comp. Rom. vi. 6 ὃ παλαιὸν ἦμων ἄθρωτος, 2 Cor. iv. 16 ὃ ἐξ ἦμων ἄθρωτος, 1 Pet. iii. 4 ὃ κρύπτω τῆς καρδιάς ἄθρωτος). The whole passage is a very rude specimen of the florid ‘Asiatic’ style, which even in its higher forms Cicero condemns as suited only to the ears of a people wanting in polish and good taste (‘minimepolitae minimeque elegantae,’ Orator, 25) and which is described by another writer as κομπωδὸς καὶ φυγαματιας καὶ κνηφος γαλαμάτως καὶ φιλοτυπίας ἄνωμάλων μετέτοις, Plut. Vit. Anton. 2; see Bernhardy Griech. Litt. i. p. 465. On the other hand it is possible—I think not probable—that St John did wear and not an universal obligation, only one of the many garbs in which religious worship might clothe itself, and not the essence of religious life. In itself circumcision is nothing, as uncircumcision also is nothing; and therefore he passes it over as if it were not. The distinction between Jew and Gentile has ceased; the middle wall of partition is broken down in Christ. If preserving the Jewish imagery which pervades the book, he records the sealing of twelve thousand from each tribe of Israel, his range of vision expands at once, and he sees before the throne 'a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues (vii. 9).’ If he denounces the errors of heathen speculation, taking up their own watchword 'knowledge (γνῶσις)' and retorting upon them that they know only 'the depths of Satan (ii. 24),’ on the other hand he condemns in similar language the bigotry of Jewish prejudice, denouncing the blasphemy of those ‘who say they are Jews and are not, but are a synagogue of Satan’ (ii. 9; comp. iii. 9).

A lapse of more than thirty years spent in the midst of a Gentile population will explain the contrast of language and imagery between the Apocalypse and the later writings of St John, due allowance being made for the difference of subject. The language and colouring of the Gospel and Epistles are no longer Hebrew; but so far as a Hebrew mind was capable of the transformation, Greek or this decoration as an emblem of his Christian privileges; nor ought this view to cause any offence, as inconsistent with the spirituality of his character. If in Christ the use of external symbols is nothing, the avoidance of them is nothing also. But whether the statement of Polycrates be metaphor or matter of fact, its significance, as in the case of the Paschal celebration, is to be learnt from the Apostle’s own language in the Apocalypse, where not only is great stress laid on the priesthood of the believers generally (i. 6, v. 10, xx. 6), but even the special privileges of the high-priest are bestowed on the victorious Christian (Rev. ii. 17, as explained by Züllig, Trench, and others: see Stanley i. c. p. 285; comp. Justin Dial. 116 ἄρχιερατικὸν τὸ ἀληθινὸν γένος ἐσμὲν τοῦ Οὐαὸ, and see Philippians p. 253). The expression is a striking example of the lingering power not of Ebionite tenets but of Hebrew imagery.

1 See above, p. 309, note 3.
2 Owing to the difference of style, many critics have seen only the alternative of denying the apostolic authorship either of the Apocalypse or of the Gospel and Epistles. The considerations urged in the text seem sufficient to meet the difficulties, which are greatly increased if a late date is assigned to the Apocalypse. Writers of the Tübingen school reject the Gospel and Epistles but accept the Apocalypse. This book alone, if its apostolical authorship is conceded, seems to me to furnish an ample refutation of their peculiar views.
rather Greco-Asiatic. The teaching of these latter writings it will be unnecessary to examine; for all, I believe, will allow their general agreement with the theology of St Paul; and it were a bold criticism which should discover in them any Ebionite tendencies. Only it seems to be often overlooked that the leading doctrinal ideas which they contain are anticipated in the Apocalypse. The passages which I have quoted from the latter relating to the divinity of Christ are a case in point: not only do they ascribe to our Lord the same majesty and power; but the very title 'the Word,' with which both the Gospel and the first Epistle open, is found here, though it occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. On the other hand, if the Apocalypse seems to assign a certain prerogative to the Jews, this is expressed equally in the sayings of the Gospel that Christ 'came to his own (i. 11),' and that 'Salvation is of the Jews (iv. 22),' as it is involved also in St Paul's maxim 'to the Jew first and then to the Gentile.' It is indeed rather a historical fact than a theological dogma. The difference between the earlier and the later writings of St John is not in the fundamental conception of the Gospel, but in the subject and treatment and language. The Apocalypse is not Ebionite, unless the Gospel and Epistles are Ebionite also.

3. St James occupies a position very different from St Peter or St John. If his importance to the brotherhood of Jerusalem was greater than theirs, it was far less to the world at large. In a foregoing essay I have attempted to show that he was not one of the Twelve. This result seems to me to have much more than a critical interest. Only when we have learnt to regard his office as purely local, shall we appreciate the traditional notices of his life or estimate truly his position in the conflict between Jewish and Gentile Christians.

A disbeliever in the Lord's mission to the very close of His earthly life, he was convinced, it would seem, by the appearance of the risen Jesus¹. This interposition marked him out for some special work. Among a people who set a high value on advantages of race and blood, the Lord's brother would be more likely to win his way than a teacher who would claim no such connexion. In a state of religious feeling where scrupulous attention to outward forms was held to be a condition of favour with God, one who was a strict observer of the law, if not a rigid ascetic, might hope to obtain a hearing which would be denied to men of less austere lives and wider experiences. These considerations would lead to his selection as the ruler of the mother Church. The persecution of Herod which obliged the Twelve to seek safety in flight would naturally be the signal for the appointment of a resident head. At all events it is at this crisis that James appears for the first time with his presbytery in a position though not identical with, yet so far resembling, the 'bishop' of later times, that we may without much violence to language give him this title (Acts xii. 17, xxi. 18).

¹ See above, p. 265.

As the local representative then of the Church of the Circumcision we must consider him. To one holding this position the law must have worn a very different aspect from that which it wore to St Peter or St John or St Paul. While they were required to become 'all things to all men,' he was required only to be 'a Jew to the Jews.' No troublesome questions of conflicting duties, such as entangled St Peter at Antioch, need perplex him. Under the law he must live and die. His surname of the Just is a witness to his rigid observance of the Mosaic ritual. A remarkable notice in the Acts shows how he identified himself in all external usages with those 'many thousands of Jews which believed and were all zealous of the law (xxi. 20).’ And a later tradition, somewhat distorted indeed but perhaps in this one point substantially true, related how by his rigid life and strict integrity he had won the respect of the whole Jewish people.

A strict observer of the law he doubtless was; but whether to this he added a rigorous asceticism, may fairly be questioned. The account of Hegesippus, referred to in the following note, δ ἰδιαος 'Justus' is used almost as a proper name. Two later bishops of Jerusalem in the early part of the second century also bear the name 'Justus' (Euseb. H. E. iv. 5), either in memory of their predecessor or in token of their own rigid lives; compare also Acts i. 23, xviii. 7, Col. iv. 11 (with the note).

1 In the account of Hegesippus, referred to in the following note, δ ἰδιαος 'Justus' is used almost as a proper name. Two later bishops of Jerusalem in the early part of the second century also bear the name 'Justus' (Euseb. H. E. iv. 5), either in memory of their predecessor or in token of their own rigid lives; compare also Acts i. 23, xviii. 7, Col. iv. 11 (with the note).

2 Hegesippus in Euseb. H. E. ii. 23.
account to which I have just referred, the tradition preserved in Hegesippus, represents him as observing many formalities not enjoined in the Mosaic ritual. 'He was holy,' says the writer, 'from his mother's womb. He drank no wine nor strong drink, neither did he eat flesh. No razor ever touched his head; he did not anoint himself with oil; he did not use the bath. He alone was allowed to enter into the holy place (εἰς τὰ ἁγια). For he wore no wool, but only fine linen. And he would enter into the temple (ναός) alone, and be found there kneeling on his knees and asking forgiveness for the people, so that his knees grew hard like a camel's knees, because he was ever upon them worshipping God and asking forgiveness for the people.' There is much in this account which cannot be true: the assigning to him a privilege which was confined to the high-priest alone, while it is entangled with the rest of the narrative, is plainly false, and can only have been started when a new generation had grown up which knew nothing of the temple services. Moreover the account of his testimony and death, which follows, not only contradicts the brief contemporary notice of Josephus, but is in itself not trustworthy.

1 It is perhaps to be explained like the similar account of St John: see above, p. 362, note. Compare Stanley Apostolical Age p. 324. Epiphanius (Haer.lxxviii.14) makes the same statement of St James which Polycrates does of St John, πέταλον ἕν τίς κεφαλής ἐφόρεε.
2 Josephus (Antig. xx. 9. 1) relates that in the interregnum between the death of Festus and the arrival of Albinus, the high-priest Ananus the younger, who belonged to the sect of the Sadducees (notorious for their severity in judicial matters), considering this a favourable opportunity καθιζεν συνέδριον κράτων, καὶ παρασαγων εἰς αὐτὸ τὸν ἀδελφὸν Ἰησοῦ τοῦ λεγομένου Χριστοῦ, ἠκούον δύομα αὐτῷ, καὶ τινὰς ετέρους, ὡς παρακολουθοῦντων κατηγορίαν ποιητικῶς παραδομένους. This notice is wholly irreconcilable with the account of Hegesippus. Yet it is probable in itself (which the account of Hegesippus is not), and is such as Josephus might be expected to write if he alluded to the matter at all. His stolid silence about Christianity elsewhere cannot be owing to ignorance, for a sect which had been singled out years before he wrote as a mark for imperial vengeance at Rome must have been only too well known in Judæa. On the other hand, if the passage had been a Christian interpolation, the notice of James would have been more laudatory, as is actually the case in the spurious passage of Josephus read by Origen and Eusebius (H. E. ii. 23, see above, p. 313, note 2), but not found in existing copies. On these grounds I do not hesitate to prefer the account in Josephus to that of Hegesippus. This is the opinion of Neander (Planting I. p. 367, Eng. Trans.), of Ewald (Geschichte vi. p. 547), and of some few writers besides (so recently Gerlach Römische Statthalter etc. p. 81, 1865): but the majority take the opposite view.
so melodramatic and so full of high improbabilities, that it must throw discredit on the whole context¹.

We are not therefore justified in laying much stress on this He was perhaps an ascetic. It is interesting as a phenomenon, but not trustworthy as a history. Still it is possible that James may have been a Nazarite, may have been a strict ascetic. Such a representation perhaps some will view with impatience, as unworthy an Apostle of Christ. But this is unreasonable. Christian devotion does not assume the same

¹ The account is briefly this. Certain of the seven sects being brought by the preaching of James to confess Christ the whole Jewish people are alarmed. To counteract the spread of the new doctrine, the scribes and Pharisees request James, as a man of acknowledged probity, to 'persuade the multitude not to go astray concerning Jesus.' In order that he may do this to more effect, on the day of the Passover they place him on the pinnacle (περίπλοκον) of the temple. Instead of denouncing Jesus however, he preaches Him. Finding their mistake, the scribes and Pharisees throw him down from the height; and as he is not killed by the fall, they stone him. Finally he is despatched by a fuller's club, praying meanwhile for his murderers. The improbability of the narrative will appear in this outline, but it is much increased by the details. The points of resemblance with the portion of the Recognitions conjectured to be taken from the 'Ascents of James' (see above, p. 330) are striking, and recent writers have called attention to these as showing that the narrative of Hegesippus was derived from a similar source (Uhlhorn Clement. p. 367, Ritschl p. 216 sq). May we not go a step farther and hazard the conjecture that the story of the martyrdom, to which Hegesippus is indebted, was the grand finale of these 'Ascents,' of which the earlier portions are preserved in the Recognitions? The Recognitions record how James with the Twelve refuted the Jewish sects; the account of Hegesippus makes the conversion of certain of these sects the starting-point of the persecution which led to his martyrdom. In the Recognitions James is represented ascending the stairs which led up to the temple and addressing the people from these: in Hegesippus he is placed on the pinnacle of the temple whence he delivers his testimony. In the Recognitions he is thrown down the flight of steps and left as dead by his persecutors, but is taken up alive by the brethren; in Hegesippus he is hurled from the still loftier station, and this time his death is made sure. Thus the narrative of Hegesippus seems to preserve the consummation of his testimony and his sufferings, as treated in this romance, the last of a series of 'Ascents,' the first of these being embodied in the Recognitions.

If Hegesippus, himself no Ebionite, has borrowed these incidents (whether directly or indirectly, we cannot say) from an Ebionite source, he has done no more than Clement of Alexandria did after him (see above, p. 324), than Epiphanius, the scourge of heretics, does repeatedly. The religious romance seems to have been a favourite style of composition with the Essene Ebionites: and in the lack of authentic information relating to the Apostles, Catholic writers eagerly and unsuspiciously gathered incidents from writings of which they repudiated the doctrines. It is worthy of notice that though the Essenes are named among the sects in Hegesippus, they are not mentioned in the Recognitions; and that, while the Recognitions lay much stress on baptisms and washings (a cardinal doctrine of Essene Ebionism), this feature entirely disappears in the account of James given by Hegesippus.
outward garb in all persons, and at all times; not the same in James as in Paul; not the same in medieval as in protestant Christianity. In James, the Lord's brother, if this account be true, we have the prototype of those later saints, whose rigid life and formal devotion elicits, it may be, only the contempt of the world, but of whom nevertheless the world was not and is not worthy.

But to retrace our steps from this slippery path of tradition to firmer ground. The difference of position between St James and the other Apostles appears plainly in the narrative of the so-called Apostolic council in the Acts. It is Peter who proposes the emancipation of the Gentile converts from the law; James who suggests the restrictive clauses of the decree. It is Peter who echoes St Paul's sentiment that Jew and Gentile alike can hope to be saved only 'by the grace of the Lord Jesus'; James who speaks of Moses having them that preach him and being read in the synagogue every sabbath day. I cannot but regard this appropriateness of sentiment as a subsidiary proof of the authenticity of these speeches recorded by St Luke.

And the same distinction extends also to their own writings. St Peter and St John, with a larger sphere of action and wider obligations, necessarily took up a neutral position with regard to the law, now carefully observing it at Jerusalem, now relaxing their observance among the Gentile converts. To St James on the other hand, mixing only with those to whom the Mosaic ordinances were the rule of life, the word and the thing have a higher importance. The neutrality of the former is reflected in the silence which pervades their writings, where 'law' is not once mentioned. The respect of the latter appears in his differential use of the term, which he employs almost as a synonyme for 'Gospel'.

But while so using the term 'law,' he nowhere implies that the Mosaic ritual is identical with or even a necessary part of Chris-

1 As regards St John this is true only of the Epistles and the Apocalypse: in the Gospel the law is necessarily mentioned by way of narrative. In 1 Joh. iii. 4 it is said significantly, ἀμαρτία ἐστὶν ἡ ἀμωμα. In St Peter neither πάπας nor ἀμωμα occurs.

2 The words εὐαγγελιον, εὐαγγελιζο-σθαι, do not occur in St James.
tianity. On the contrary he distinguishes the new dispensation as the perfect law, the law of liberty (I. 25, ii. 12), thus tacitly implying imperfection and bondage in the old. He assumes indeed that his readers pay allegiance to the Mosaic law (ii. 9, 10, iv. 11), and he accepts this condition without commenting upon it. But the mere ritual has no value in his eyes. When he refers to the Mosaic law, he refers to its moral, not to its ceremonial ordinances (ii. 8—11). The external service of the religionist who puts no moral restraint on himself, who will not exert himself for others, is pronounced deceitful and vain. The external service, the outward garb, the very ritual, of Christianity is a life of purity and love and self-devotion. What its true essence, its inmost spirit, may be, the writer does not say, but leaves this to be inferred.

Thus, though with St Paul the new dispensation is the negation of law, with St James the perfection of law, the ideas underlying these contradictory forms of expression need not be essentially different. And this leads to the consideration of the language held by both Apostles on the subject of faith and works.

The real significance of St James's language, its true relation to the doctrine of St Paul, is determined by the view taken of the persons to whom the epistle is addressed. If it is intended to counteract any modification or perversion of St Paul's teaching, then there is, though not a plain contradiction, yet at all events a considerable divergency in the mode of dealing with the question by the two Apostles. I say the mode of dealing with the question, for antinomian inferences from his teaching are rebuked with even greater severity by St Paul himself than they are by St James. If on the other hand the epistle is directed against an arrogant and barren orthodoxy, a Pharisaic self-satisfaction, to which the Churches of the Circumcision would be most exposed, then the case is considerably altered. The language of the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians

1 James i. 26, 27. Coleridge directs attention to the meaning of ὑποκείμενα, and the consequent bearing of the text, in a well-known passage in Aids to Reflection, Introd. Aphor. 23. For the significations of ὑποκείμενα both in the New Testament and elsewhere, as the 'cultus exterior,' see Trench Synon. § iviiii.

2 e.g. Rom. vi. 15—23, i Cor. vi. 9—20, Gal. v. 13 sq.
at once suggests the former as the true account. But further consideration leads us to question our first rapid inference. Justification and faith seem to have been common terms, Abraham's faith a common example, in the Jewish schools. This fact, if allowed, counteracts the prima facie evidence on the other side, and leaves us free to judge from the tenour of the epistle itself. Now, since in this very passage St James mentions as the object of their vaunted faith, not the fundamental fact of the Gospel 'Thou believest that God raised Christ from the dead', but the fundamental axiom of the law 'Thou believest that God is one'; since moreover he elsewhere denounces the mere ritualist, telling him that his ritualism is nothing worth; since lastly the whole tone of the epistle recalls our Lord's denunciations of the scribes and Pharisees, and seems directed against a kindred spirit; it is reasonable to conclude that St James is denouncing not the moral aberrations of the professed disciple of St Paul (for with such he was not likely to be brought into close contact), but the self-complacent orthodoxy of the Pharisaic Christian, who, satisfied with the possession of a pure monotheism and vaunting his descent from Abraham, needed to be reminded not to neglect the still 'weightier matters' of a self-denying love. If this view be correct, the expressions of the two Apostles can hardly be compared, for they are speaking, as it were, a different language. But in either case we may acquiesce in the verdict of a recent able writer, more free than most men both from traditional and from reactionary prejudices, that in the teaching of the two Apostles 'there exists certainly a striking difference in the whole bent of mind, but no opposition of doctrine.'

Thus the representation of St James in the canonical Scriptures differs from its Ebionite counterpart as the true portrait from the caricature. The James of the Clementines could not have acquiesced in the apostolic decree, nor could he have held out the right hand of fellowship to St Paul. On the other hand, the Ebionite picture was not drawn entirely from imagination. A scrupulous observer

---

1 See above, p. 164.
2 Rom. x. 9.
4 Bleek (Einl. in das N. T. p. 550), who however considers that St James is writing against perversions of St Paul's teaching.
of the law, perhaps a rigid ascetic, partly from temper and habit, partly from the requirements of his position, he might, without any very direct or conscious falsification, appear to interested partisans of a later age to represent their own tenets, from which he differed less in the external forms of worship than in the vital principles of religion. Moreover during his lifetime he was compromised by those with whom his office associated him. In all revolutionary periods, whether of political or religious history, the leaders of the movement have found themselves unable to control the extravagances of their bigoted and short-sighted followers: and this great crisis of all was certainly not exempt from the common rule. St Paul is constantly checking and rebuking the excesses of those who professed to honour his name and to adopt his teaching: if we cannot state this of St James with equal confidence, it is because the sources of information are scantier.

Of the Judaizers who are denounced in St Paul’s Epistles this much is certain; that they exalted the authority of the Apostles of the Circumcision: and that in some instances at least, as members of the mother Church, they had direct relations with James the Lord’s brother. But when we attempt to define these relations, we are lost in a maze of conjecture.

The Hebrew Christians whose arrival at Antioch caused the Antioch rupture between the Jewish and Gentile converts are related to have ‘come from James’ (Gal. ii. 12). Did they bear any commission from him? If so, did it relate to independent matters, or to this very question of eating with the Gentiles? It seems most natural to interpret this notice by the parallel case of the Pharisaic brethren, who had before troubled this same Antiochene Church, ‘going forth’ from the Apostles and insisting on circumcision and the observance of the law, though they ‘gave them no orders’ (Acts xv. 24). But on the least favourable supposition it amounts to this, that St James, though he had sanctioned the emancipation of the Gentiles from the law, was not prepared to welcome them as Israelites and admit them as such to full communion: that in fact he had not yet overcome scruples which even St Peter had only relinquished after many years and by a special revelation; in this, as in his recognition of Jesus as the Christ, moving more slowly than the Twelve.

Galatia. Turning from Antioch to Galatia, we meet with Judaic teachers who urged circumcision on the Gentile converts and, as the best means of weakening the authority of St Paul, asserted for the Apostles of the Circumcision the exclusive right of dictating to the Church. How great an abuse was thus made of the names of the Three, I trust the foregoing account has shown: yet here again the observance of the law by the Apostles of the Circumcision, especially by St James, would furnish a plausible argument to men who were unscrupulous enough to turn the occasional concessions of St Paul himself to the same account. But we are led to ask, Did these false teachers belong to the mother Church? had they any relation with James? is it possible that they had ever been personal disciples of the Lord Himself? There are some faint indications that such was the case; and, remembering that there was a Judas among the Twelve, we cannot set aside this supposition as impossible.

Corinth. In Corinth again we meet with false teachers of a similar stamp; whose opinions are less marked indeed than those of St Paul's Galatian antagonists, but whose connexion with the mother Church is more clearly indicated. It is doubtless among those who said 'I am of Peter, and I of Christ,' among the latter especially, that we are to seek the counterpart of the Galatian Judaizers'. To the latter class St Paul alludes again in the Second Epistle: these must have been the men who 'trusted to themselves that they were of Christ' (x. 7), who invaded another's sphere of labour and boasted of work

---

1 Several writers representing different schools have agreed in denying the existence of a 'Christ party.' Possibly the word 'party' may be too strong to describe what was rather a sentiment than an organization. But if admissible at all, I cannot see how, allowing that there were three parties, the existence of the fourth can be questioned. For (1) the four watchwords are co-ordinated, and there is no indication that ὁ Ἰησοῦς Χριστός is to be isolated from the others and differently interpreted. (2) The remonstrance immediately following (μετὰ παραγωγῆς Χριστοῦ) shows that the name of Christ, which ought to be common to all, had been made the badge of a party. (3) In 2 Cor. x. 7 the words δὲ τοῦτον ἐπετυλθεῖν ἐν διαφοράς Χριστοῦ εἶναι and the description which follows gain force and definiteness on this supposition. There is in fact more evidence for the existence of a party of Christ than there is of a party of Peter.
which was ready to hand (x. 13—16), who were 'false apostles, crafty workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ' (xi. 13), who 'commended themselves' (x. 12, 18), who vaunted their pure Israelite descent (xi. 21—23). It is noteworthy that this party of extreme Judaizers call themselves by the name not of James, but of Christ. This may perhaps be taken as a token that his concessions to Gentile liberty had shaken their confidence in his fidelity to the law. The leaders of this extreme party would appear to have seen Christ in the flesh: hence their watchword 'I am of Christ'; hence also St Paul's counter-claim that 'he was of Christ' also, and his unwilling boast that he had himself had visions and revelations of the Lord in abundance (xii. 1 sq). On the other hand, of the party of Cephas no distinct features are preserved; but the passage itself implies that they differed from the extreme Judaizers, and we may therefore conjecture that they took up a middle position with regard to the law, similar to that which was occupied later by the Nazarenes. In claiming Cephas as the head of their party they had probably neither more nor less ground than their rivals who sheltered themselves under the names of Apollos and of Paul.

Is it to these extreme Judaizers that St Paul alludes when he mentions 'certain persons' as 'needing letters of recommendation to the Corinthians and of recommendation from them' (2 Cor. iii. 1)? If so, by whom were these letters to Corinth given? By some half-Judaic, half-Christian brotherhood of the dispersion? By the mother Church of Jerusalem? By any of the primitive disciples? By James the Lord's brother himself? It is wisest to confess plainly that the facts are too scanty to supply an answer. We may well be content to rest on the broad and direct statements in the Acts and Epistles, which declare the relations between St James and St Paul. A habit of suspicious interpretation, which neglects plain facts and dwells on doubtful allusions, is as unhealthy in theological criticism as in social life, and not more conducive to truth.

Such incidental notices then, though they throw much light on the practical difficulties and entanglements of his position, reveal nothing or next to nothing of the true principles of St James. Only so long as we picture to ourselves an ideal standard of obedience, where the will of the ruler is the law of the subject, will such notices cause us perplexity. But, whether this be a healthy condition for any society or not, it is very far from representing the state of Christendom in the apostolic ages. If the Church had been a religious machine, if the Apostles had possessed absolute control over its working, if the manifold passions of men had been for once annihilated, if there had been no place for misgiving, prejudice, treachery, hatred, superstition, then the picture would have been very different. But then also the history of the first ages of the Gospel would have had no lessons for us. As it is, we may well take courage from the study. However great may be the theological differences and religious animosities of our own time, they are far surpassed in magnitude by the distractions of an age which, closing our eyes to facts, we are apt to invest with an ideal excellence. In the early Church was fulfilled, in its inward dissensions no less than in its outward sufferings, the Master's sad warning that He came 'not to send peace on earth, but a sword.'
INDEX.

Abraham, the faith of, p. 158 sq (passim) accusative, for other objective cases, v. 7, 26
Acichorius, p. 248
Acts of the Apostles, its scope and character, p. 346 sq, 359; its relation to St Paul's Epistles, ii. 1 sq, p. 91 sq, 123 sq (passim), 305 sq, 346 sq, 359
Acts, passages commented on; (ix. 20-26) p. 89; (xv. 29) p. 305 sq; (xvi. 6) p. 20, 22; (xxviii. 21) p. 93
Aelia Capitolina, foundation of, p. 316;
Church of, p. 317
Aegons, the two, i. 4
Africa, the Church of, p. 335, 344
Alcibiades of Apamea, p. 331
Alcuin founds a school of biblical interpretation, p. 235
Alexandria, the Church of, p. 335
Alfred's (king) malady, p. 190 sq
Alphæus, to be identified with Clopas? p. 256 sq, 267, 290; with Alōs? p. 268
Ambrose (the friend of Origen), a treatise by, p. 60
Ambrose (St), commentary wrongly ascribed to, p. 229, 232; on the Lord's brethren, p. 287 sq
Ambrosiaster: see Hilary
Ancient Syriac Documents (Cureton's), p. 60, 100, 345
Ancyra, p. 6, 8, 11, 13, 20 sq, 32, 34 sq, 242, v. 20
Andronicus and Junia (-as), p. 96, 98 angels administering the law, iii. 19
Anselm, commentary ascribed to, p. 236
Antidicomarianites, p. 285
Antioch, foundation of the Church at, p. 301; the new metropolis of Christendom, p. 304; St Peter reputed bishop of, ii. 11; catholicity of, p. 335, 341; Judaizers at, ii. 12 sq, p. 371; biblical school of, p. 228; see Paul (St)
Antioch in Pisidia, St Paul preaches at, p. 304 apostle, uses of, v. 4, 24, vi. 2; epistolary, vi. 11
Apocryphal Gospels, on the Lord's brethren, p. 260, 274 sq
Apollos, not an Apostle, p. 96, 98 apologists, references to Galatians in, p. 59 sq Apostle, meaning of the term, p. 92 sq; not limited to the twelve, p. 93 sq, 260; qualifications and functions of, p. 97 sq (passim)
apostolic congress and decree, ii. 1 sq. (passim), p. 125 sq., 305 sq (passim), 350 Apostolical Constitutions, mention of Philip in, p. 100; on the Jameses, p. 283 apostolic fathers, references to Galatians in, p. 58 sq; use of the term 'Apostle' in, p. 99
Arabia, meaning of, p. 88; St Paul's visit to, p. 87 sq, 194
Arabians, called Hagarenes, iv. 25; their enmity to the Jews, iv. 29
Arabic version of the New Testament, p. 87 sq Ariston of Pella, p. 153 sq article, the definite, i. 4, 7, io, 13, 23, iii. 20, 21, iv. 6, 31, v. 14, p. 193; see also ἄνω Artotyrtae, p. 31
Ascents of James, p. 276, 330, 359, 367
Ascodrobi, etc., p. 32
Asia, meaning of, in N.T., p. 19
aspirates, anomalous, ii. 14
Atto Vercellensis, his commentary on St Paul, p. 236
Augustine (St), his dispute with Jerome, p. 131 sq; commentary on Galatians, p. 232; on the Lord's brethren, p. 288 sq áββα, iv. 6
άγαθονίας, καλότοιν, vi. 9
άγαθωσθῇ, χριστότητη, v. 22
δὲλφολ, emphatic, iii. 15, vi. 1, 18
δέστειν, ii. 21
άλεσις, v. 20
άλων, i. 4
άκαθαρσίας, v. 19
άκος, iii. 2
άλθεων, ἣ ἁλ. τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, ii. 5
άλληγορῶν (γορία), iv. 24
άλλος, ἔτερος, i. 6
άμαρτλος, ii. 14, 15, 17, 18
ἄν omitted, iii. 19, iv. 15
ἀναβαίνειν, i. 17
ἀνάθεμα, ἀνάθημα, i. 8
ἀνακόπτειν, v. 7
ἀναστατοῦν; v. 12
ἀνατιθέον, ii. 2
ἀνέρχεσθαι, i. 17
ἀνῆκεξεσθαι, v. 5
ἄνυ, ἄνα, i. 1
ἀνό, παρά, i. 12
ἀνοκόπτεσθαι, v. 12
ἀνολαμβάνειν, iv. 5
ἀπορεῖν (ῥείθαι), iv. 20
ἀπόστολος, p. 92 sq
ἄρα, v. 11; (ἄρα), ii. 17
ἄρτη, i. 9
ἀστληγίας, ν. 19
ἀστιτίζειν, p. 193
ἀντὸ τοῦτο, ii. 10
ἀφορίζειν, ii. 15
ἀφορμή, ν. 13
Barcochba, rebellion of, p. 313, 316
Barnabas, an apostle, p. 96, 98, 100; Jo- seph, not Joses, p. 268; his estrangement from St Paul, ii. 13
Barsabas, Joseph or Joses? p. 268; identified with Matthias, p. 97
Basil (St), on the Lord's brethren, p. 284
Basilides, and οἰδολοβοτα, p. 310
Bede, commentary wrongly ascribed to, p. 236
Belgae, a Celtic people, p. 244
Belka (el), p. 87, 196 biblical studies, Antiochene School of, p. 228; revival of, under Charlemagne, p. 235 Bolgius, p. 248
Bonosus, p. 286
branding among the ancients, vi. 17
Brennus, p. 247
brethren of the Lord, p. 252 sq (passim)
'brother,' wide use of the term, p. 256, 261, 288
Bruno Carthusianus, his commentary on St Paul, p. 236 βασκαίνειν, iii. 1
βασταίειν, vi. 17
Cassiodorus, his notes on St Paul, p. 233; he expurgates the commentary of Pelagius, ib.; he translates the notes of Clement of Alexandria, p. 279
Catena (Cramer's), on Galatians, p. 234 causa, 'a thing,' early use of, p. 194
Celsus quotes Galatians, p. 61
Celtae, the name, p. 2 sq; its use in Dion Cassius, p. 240; migrations of the, p. 4 sq (passim), 241; distinguished from Germans, p. 240 sq
Cephas, use of the name, i. 18; falsely assigned to different persons, p. 129 Cerethrius, p. 248
chiasm, the figure, iv. 5
Christian, the name, p. 301 chronology of the exodus, iii. 177 of St Paul, see Paul Chrysostom (St), his homily on St Peter at Antioch, p. 131, 229; his commentary on Galatians, p. 228 sq; on INDEX.

377

St Paul's infirmity, p. 187; on Hagar, p. 195; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 257, 389 sq.
circumcision, the question of, p. 305 sq (passim), ii. 1 sq (passim)
Claudius Altissiodorensis (or Taurinensis), his commentary on St Paul, p. 335
Clement of Alexandria, on Cephas at Antioch, p. 129; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 279 sq; on the Nicolaitans, p. 298; his use of the word ‘apostle,’ p. 100; his commentary on the Catholic Epistles, p. 279
Clement of Rome, his position in the Church, p. 100, 338, 341; his Epistle, p. 338, 358
Clementine Homilies, their scope and complexion, p. 340 sq; editions and epitomes of, etc. p. 327; their Roman origin doubtful, p. 340 sq; their representation of St James, p. 274, 276, 370 sq; attacks on St Paul, ii. 11, 13, iv. 10, 16, 24, p. 61 sq, 129, 327 sq; limitation of the term ‘apostle’ in, p. 100; letter of Peter prefixed to, p. 339; letter of Clement prefixed to, p. 341
Clementine Recognitions, composition of, p. 329 sq; editions and translations of, p. 327; Ascents of James incorporated in, p. 276, 330, 359, 367; allusion to St Paul in, iv. 16; arbitrary alteration of Rufinus in, p. 330
Cleopas, the name, p. 267
Clopas, p. 256 sq, 267 sq, 277; to be identified with Alphaeus? p. 257, 267, 290 collection of alms for Judæa, p. 25, 55, 304, ii. 10, vi. 7
Collyridians, p. 285
Corinth, the Church of, its catholicity, p. 359; parties in, p. 372 sq; Judaizers in, ib.; the offender in, p. 54, vi. 1
Corinthians, 1st Epistle to the, when written, p. 38; compared with Galatians, p. 51 sq, 64; passages commented on, (i. 12) p. 372, (ii. 9) p. 334, (viii. i—13, x. 14—22) p. 308
Corinthians, 2nd Epistle to the, when written, p. 39; tone of, p. 51; compared with Galatians, p. 44, 49, 64
Cornelius, conversion of, p. 300 sq
Cramer’s Cæliena, on Galatians, p. 234
Crescens, p. 31
cross, offence of the, p. 153 sq
Crucifixion, not a Jewish punishment, p. 154
Crucifying with Christ, ii. 20, vi. 14
Cyril of Alexandria, on the Lord’s brethren, p. 250
Cyril of Jerusalem, on the Lord’s brethren, p. 290 Cæsarea, ii. 5
kal éan, òan kal, i. 8
kauï̂ õtía, vi. 15
kaipoi, iv. 10
kalétev, ð kaléð (kalémat), i. 6, v. 8; kalétev évi, v. 13
kaloscei̇tv, vi. 9
kauòv, vi. 16
katā ādōrotov, i. 11, iii. 15
kataβalainv, i. 17
kataprí̂ xenv, vi. 1
kataxokeiv, ii. 4
katéreçóthai̇, i. 17
kapphêiv, vi. 6
kai̇ óxhmat, kai̇ óxhma, vi. 4
kénóðoç (ΔΩXAI), v. 26
klla, i. 21
kallás (ελ), i. 15
konomíaiv, vi. 6
krȧ feiv, iv. 6
kríma (κρίμα), v. 10
χαρι, iii. 19
χειρ, εν χειρ, iii. 19
χαριτόθης (γ'αδωνον), v. 22
Damasenus (Johannes), his commentary on St Paul, p. 234 dative, uses of, ii. 19, v. 16, 25, vi. 12, 16
Deuteronomy, passages commented on;
(xxi. 23) p. 152 sq; (xxvii. 30) iii. 10; (xxxii. 1) iii. 19
Didymus of Alexandria, on St Peter at
INDEX.

Antioch, p. 130; his commentary on St Paul, p. 232 Dionysius of Corinth, p. 344
dispersion, the, p. 396
Dorotheus Tyrrius, the pseudo-, p. 286
Drynaemetum, p. 247
dying and being buried with Christ, ii. 20
deκατέντε, i. 18
deκάς δούναι, λαμβάνειν, ii. 9
did with gen., i. 1; did (€κ) πίστεως, ii. 16; with accus., iv. 13
διαβήκη, iii. 15
dικείων εἰσα αὐτῷ (71 (71)), ii. 6, vi. 3: δικονυτε διώκεις, iii. 5
δορφάν, ii. 21
Eastern Churches, testimony respecting the Jameses, p. 290
Ebionites, different classes of, p. 317, 321 sq (passim)
Egyptians, Gospel of; saying ascribed to our Lord in, iii. 28; tradition respecting gnosis in, p. 280
Elchasai or Elxai, book of, p. 324 sq; see Hippolytus Elieser (Rabbi), on the Samaritans, p. 299 eclipse, after ἔως, ii. 9; with μόνον, ii. 10, vi. 12; with μη, v. 13; of the name of God, i. 6, 15, v. 8
Ephesians, ii. 20, iii. 5, commented on, p. 97
Ephraem Syrus, his commentary on St Paul, p. 227; on Hagar, p. 194
Epiphanius, on the Lord’s brethren, p. 253 sq (passim); on the Nazarenes, p. 319
Esdras, 4th book of, on faith, p. 161
Essene Ebionism, p. 322 sq (passim)
Ethiopian eunuch, conversion of, p. 300
Eusebius of Caesarea, Syriac translation of, p. 280, 283, 321, 358; the passage H. E. ii. 1 commented on, p. 280; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 282; his silence misinterpreted, P. 345
Eusebius of Emesa, his commentary on St Paul, p. 37, 228
Euthalius, his edition of St Paul, p. 230
Euthymius Zigabenus, his commentary, p. 234 evil eye, iii. 1
Exodus, xii. 40 commented on, iii. 17
Exodus, chronology of the, iii. 17 ἐὰν καλ, καὶ ἐὰν, i. 8
ἐνυνθ, v. 14
ἐγκακεῖν (ἐκκακεῖν), vi. 9
ἐγκόπτειν, v. 7
ἐγ, επερ, iii. 4
ἐκ ὑπ (ἐκ ὑπ), i. 19, ii. 16
εἰδέναι, see γνωσκεῖν εἰσωλύστα, p. 308 sq
eis, v. 10, vi. 4
ἐκ, did, with πίστεως, ii. 16; ol ἐκ πίστεως, iii. 7; ἐκ κοιλιᾶς, i. 15
ἐκκλησία, i. 22
ἐκλεεσθαί, vi. 10
ἐξάλη, ii. 3
eπιτ, v. 5
ἐν ἐμοί, i. 16
ἐνάρχεσθαί, iii. 3
ἐνδέεσθαί, iii. 27
ἐνεργεῖν, ii. 8, iii. 5, v. 6 ἐνεστῶ, i. 4
ἐν, iii. 28
ἐξαγοράζων, iii. 13
ἐπαγγελα, iii. 14
ἐπιδιακόσσαςθαί, iii. 15
ἐπιεικεῖσθαί, iii. 3
ἐπιτρόπος, v. 2
ἐπιχοργεῖν, iii. 5
ἐρεθίζω, v. 20
ἐρεθίζῃ, iii. 16
ἐπερ, ἔλλος, i. 16; ἐπερ, vi. 4 ἐτι, i. 10, v. 11
ἐφαγγελίζομαι, i. 9
ἐυνύχως, p. 362
ἐυπροσώπως, vi. 12
ἐφαρμόζω, ii. 17
ἔμερα, p. 89

Faith, words denoting, p. 154 sq; not in the O.T., p. 155, 158 sq; of Abraham, p. 158 sq; Philo on, p. 159 sq, INDEX.

163; rabbinical teachers on, p. 161 sq; see James the Lord’s brother fascination, iii. 1
fides, fidelis, fidentia, fiducia, p. 158
first-born, meaning of, p. 271
Florus Magister, his commentary on St. Paul, p. 235
Francis (St) of Assisi, his stigmata,
vi. 17
fulness of time, iv. 4
future tense, uses of, vi. 5, 16

Gaezatodiastus, p. 248
Galatae, the name, p. 2 sq
Galatia, geographical limits of, p. 6, 7, 18 sq; mixed population of, p. 8 sq; Jews in, p. 9 sq, 25 sq; Romans in, p. 6 sq; trade of, p. 10; fertility of, ib.; used of European Gaul, p. 3, 31
Galatia, the people of, alien to Asia., p. 1; their origin, migrations, and early history, p. 4 sq (passim); their language, p. 12, 246 sq; their three tribes, p. 7, 248; their national character, p. 12 sq; their religion, p. 8, 11, 16 sq, 21, 23, 30; mutilation among, p. 16, v. 12; witchcraft among, v. 20; were they Celts or Teutons? p. 239 sq (passim); supposed German affinities explained, p. 250 sq; names among, p. 246
Galatia, the Churches of, their locality, p. 20 sq; composition of, p. 26; St. Paul’s intercourse with, p. 21 sq (passim), 41; Judaism in, p. 27 sq, 373 sq; persecutions of, iii. 4; later history of, p. 31 sq; heresies of, p. 32 sq; martyrs of, p. 33 sq
Galatians, Epistle to, the date of, p. 36 sq (passim); St. Paul’s companions at the time, i. 2; object of, p. 31; style and features of, p. 43 sq, 63 sq, i. 1, 6; its resemblance to 2 Cor., p. 43 sq; and to Rom., p. 45 sq; genuineness of, p. 57 sq; external testimony to, p. 58 sq; analysis of, p. 65 sq; postscript to, p. 65, vi. 11; commentaries on, p. 227 sq (passim); its importance in modern controversy, p. 68, 293
Galli, Gallia, the names, p. 2 sq
Gauls: see Celtae, Galatae, Galli
Gelasius (Pope), commentary falsely ascribed to, p. 233
Genesis, passages commented on, (xv. 6) p. 159 sq; (xv. 13) iii. 17; (xxi. 9, 10) iv. 29, 30
Gennadius, his commentary on St. Paul, p. 231
Gentiles, the Gospel preached to, p. 295 sq (passim); emancipation and progress of, p. 302 sq (passim)
Germanopolis, p. 250 sq
Glossa Ordinaria, p. 236
Gordium, p. 10, 20
Gregory Nazianzen, on St Peter at Antioch, p. 130
Gregory Nyssen, on the Lord’s brethren, p. 284 guardianship, ancient laws respecting, iv. 1 gutturals interchanged in the Semitic languages, p. 197

gέννατο, iv. 24
γαλατία, ελθανατί, iii. 7, iv. 9
γαφή, iii. 8, 22
Habakkuk, ii. 4 commented on, p. 156, iii. 11
Hadrian, his treatment of Jews and Christians, p. 316 sq
Hagar, meaning of, p. 87 sq, 193 sq; places bearing the name, p. 196; a synonyme for Sinai?, p. 89, 196 sq, iv. 25; doubtful reading, p. 192 sq
Hagarenes, iv. 25, 29
Harant, der Christliche Ulysses, p. 195; on Hagar, ib.
Haymo, commentary on St. Paul, p. 236
Hebrews, Gospel of the; account of our Lord appearing to James, p. 274 Hegesippus, his sojourn in Rome, p. 332; not an Ebionite, p. 333 sq; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 276 sq; on James the Lord’s brother, p. 365 sq; on hersies in the Church of Jerusalem, p. 315 sq, 325 sq
Hellenists, their influence in the Church, p. 297 sq
Helvidius, on the Lord’s brethren, p. 253 sq (passim), 286
Hermas, the Shepherd of, its date, p. 99; its character and teaching, p. 339 sq; use of the term ‘apostle’ in, p. 99
Herod, persecution of, p. 124, 127
Herveus Dolensis, commentary on St Paul, p. 236
Hilary (Ambrosiaster), commentary on St Paul, p. 229, 232; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 284
Hilary of Poitiers, on the Gauls, p. 242; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 283; commentary wrongly ascribed to, p. 130
Hippolytus on the Nicolaitans, p. 197 sq; on the book of Elchasai, p. 324 sq, 331, 342; St John illustrated from, p. 309; the pseudo- concerning the Lord’s brethren, p. 283
James the Lord’s brother, was he an apostle? i. 19, p. 95, 100, 261 sq (passim); our Lord’s appearance to him, p. 265 sq, 274, 364; his position, ii. 9, p. 364 sq (passim); his asceticism, p. 365 sq; his relation to the Judaizers, p. 29, 306, 365, 371 sq (passim); to St Peter and St John, p. 368; to St Paul (faith and works), p. 164, 369, v. 6; his death, p. 313, 366 sq; account of him in the Hebrew Gospel, p. 274; in the Clementines, p. 276; among the Ophites, p. 280; see also Ascents of James
James the son of Alphaeus, p. 254 sq (passim)
James the son of Mary, p. 255 sq (passim); why called ὁ μακρόθρευτος, p. 362, 285
James the son of Zebedee, martyrdom of, p. 303; was he a cousin of our Lord? p. 264
Jason and Papiscus, Dialogue of, p. 154 sq; see Aristeus
Idoils, things sacrificed to, p. 308 sq
Jerome, his commentary on the Galatians, p. 232; his disputes with Augustine, p. 130 sq; his visit to Gaul and Galatia, p. 242; his disingenuousness, p. 130, 278; his allegorizing, p. 90; on the Galatian language, p. 12, 243; on Galatian heresies, p. 32; on the origin of the Galatian people, p. 242 sq; on the Nazarenes, p. 317; on the Lord’s brethren, p. 253 sq (passim), 287; on the thorn in the flesh, p. 186, 187 sq; commentary of Pelagius ascribed to him, p. 233
Jerusalem, the fall of, p. 312 sq; the early Church of, p. 305 sq (passim); its waning influence, p. 303 sq (passim); outbreak of heresies in, p. 315 sq; reconstitution of, p. 316 sq; the new, heavenly, Jerusalem, iv. 26; see also Paul (St), collection of alms
Jewish names, exchanged for heathen, p. 267 sq; abbreviated, p. 268
Ignatius, his testimony to Galatians, p. 58 sq; to the Roman Church, p. 338; on St Peter and St Paul, p. 358 imperfect tense, iv. 20
John (St), was he the Lord’s cousin? p. 264; his position in the Church, p. 359 sq; on εἴδωλοντο, p. 399; traditions relating to, p. 362 sq; not claimed by Ebionites, p. 359; Gospel and Epistles of, p. 363; Apocalypse of, p. 360 sq
John, Gospel of, xix. 25 commented on, p. 264, 266
Joseph, a common name, p. 268; occurrence in our Lord’s genealogy, p. 269; the same with Joses? p. 268
Joseph, the Virgin’s husband, early death of, p. 270
Josephus, on the death of St James, p. 366 sq; the pseudo-, p. 373
Joses, the son of Mary, p. 268
Jovinianus, p. 286
Irenaeus, on the Paschal controversy, p. 343
Isaac, explained by Philo, p. 109
Ishmael, meaning of, p. 199; rabbinical accounts of, iv. 29
INDEX.

Israel (Israelite), force of, vi. 16; explained by Philo, p. 199
Judaizers, ii. 1 sq (passim), 14, vi. 12, 13, p. 17 sq, 305 sq (passim), 317 sq (passim), 349 sq (passim), 371 sq (passim)
Judas, the Apostle and the Lord’s brother the same? p. 95, 257 sq (passim)
Judas, a name of Thomas, p. 263
Julian and the Galatians, p. 33 sq
Juliopeolis (Gordium), p. 20
Justin Martyr, not an Ebionite, p. 331 sq; acquainted with St Paul’s Epistles, iii. 10, 13, iv. 6, p. 60: Orat. ad Graec. wrongly ascribed to, p. 60; a fragment wrongly ascribed to, p. 278 sq
Justus, the name, p. 365
the (θεός) δρέ, i. 20; the of θεί, v. 2
'Ιεροσολύμων, i. 18; (Ἰερουσαλήμ) iv. 16
καονός, p. 89
τω, with indic., ii. 4, iv. 17; ellipsis with, ii. 9; repeated, iii. 14, iv. 5
'Ιουδαίας, ii. 14
'Iουδαίως with aspirate, ii. 14
'Iουδαίως, i. 13
'Iστορίαν, i. 18

Lactantius, on the Galatian people, p. 242
Lanfranc, his commentary on St Paul, p. 236
Law, the; St Paul’s conception of, ii. 19 sq, iii. 10 sq, 19, 24, iv. 5, 11, 30, vi. 2. Our Lord’s teaching as regards, p. 295; zeal for and decline of, p. 311 sq (passim); relation of St Peter to, p. 352 sq; of St John to, p. 359 sq; of St James to, p. 365 sq: see Paul (St), and ὅμοιο leaven, a symbol, v. 9
Leonnorius, p. 5, 250 sq
Lutarius, p. 5, 250 sq
Luther, on the Epistle to the Galatians, p. 18; on the Galatian people, p. 239; on the thorn in the flesh, p. 188 sq; his different language at different times, p. 349 sq

λέγειν, λέγει impersonal, iii. 16; λέγω δέ, iv. 1 λοιπόν, difference of το λοιπον and τοι λοιπον, vi. 17
Maccabees, First Book of, viii. 2 commented on, p. 9
Marcion, the canon of; order of St Paul’s Epistles in, p. 36; Galatians in, p. 61; omissions in his text, i. 1, iii. 6
Mary, different persons bearing the name, p. 255 sq, 259 sq, 262, 269, 285, 289
Mary, the Lord’s mother; her virginity, p. 270 sq; commended to the keeping of St John, p. 272
Melito, p. 362
Moses, called a mediator, iii. 19; Revelation of, vi. 15
Muratorian Canon, order of St Paul’s Epistles in, p. 37 μαραθοσίους, iv. 15
μαρτυρομαι, v. 3
μετά, iii. 19
μεταστρέφεω, i. 7
μετατίθεσαι, i. 6
μὴ with indic., iv. 11
μὴ γένοιτο, ii. 17, vi. 14
μητρω, construction with, ii. 2 μικρός (δ), p. 262
μυκτηρίζων, vi. 7

Nazatenes, p. 317 sq
neighbour, meaning of, v. 14
Nervii, a Celtic people, p. 244
Nicolas and the Nicolaitans, p. 297 sq νίκην, iv. 1
νόμος and ὁ νόμος, ii. 19, iv. 4, 5, 21, v. 18, vi. 13

Oecumenius, Catena bearing his name, p. 234
Old Testament, interpretation of types in, iii. 16
Ophites, their use of Galatians, p. 61; reference to, in the Apocalypse, p. 309; their use of the Gospel of the Egyptians, p. 280
optative, not after final particles, ii. 2
INDEX.

Origen, his commentaries on Galatians, p. 227; on St Peter at Antioch, p. 130; on the Lord's brethren, p. 281 sq; on the Ebionites, p. 317, 331; misinterpretations of, iii. 19, v. 24; and ω confused, vi. 12

οκείων, vi. 10
οκονομίασ, iv. 2
δησ, iii. 15
δομάτεσθαι, p. 283
δοσιωδείς, ii. 14
δις, δι, distinguished, iv. 24, 26, v. 19
δι with quotations, i. 23 οδέ...οστε, i. 12
οδετι logical, iii. 18
ο θ μ μ with fut. ind., iv. 30
ο θ παρ for οδες, ii. 16
δρέθων, v. 12
ωτ, 'while,' vi. 10

Palestine, Churches of, 331 sq
Papias distinguishes other disciples from the Apostles, p. 99; passage wrongly ascribed to, p. 273
Papias (the mediaval), his Elementarium, p. 273
Paschal controversy, P. 331, 343
Passalorhynchites, p. 32

Paul (St), chronology of his early life, ii. 1, p. 124; his qualifications and conversion, p. 302 sq; date of his apostolic commission, i. 1, p. 98, 124; visit to Arabia, p. 87 sq; at Damascus, i. 17, 18, p. 89; first visit to Jerusalem, p. 91 sq, i. 21, 22; first missionary journey, p. 304 sq; third visit to Jerusalem, ii. 1 sq (passim), 123 sq (passim), 305 sq; conflict with St Peter at Antioch, ii. 11 sq, p. 128 sq, p. 354 sq; preaching in Galatia, p. 21 sq (passim), 41; sojourn at Ephesus, p. 38; history in the years 57, 58, p. 38 sq; his personal appearance, p. 192; eyesight, vi. 11, p. 191; thorn in the flesh, p. 23, 186 sq (passim), iv. 13 sq; on the support of the ministry, vi. 6; on εἰδολοθυτα, p. 308 sq; relation to the Apostles of the circumcision, p. 57, 91 sq, 126 sq, 292 sq (passim), 350 sq (passim), ii. 1 sq (passim), (see James, Peter, John); relations to his countrymen, p. 346 sq; accounts of him in the Acts, p. 346; in the Test. xii. Patr. p. 319, 321; attacks of Judaizers on, i. 10, p. 27 sq (see Judaizers, Clementine Homilies); his teaching compared with Philo, p. 163, 199; with rabbinical writers, p. 163; on the law (see Law); his use of metaphors, ii. 20, iv. 19, vi. 8

Paul (St), Epistles of; order in different canons, p. 36 sq; four chronological groups of, p. 42 sq; postscripts to, vi. 11; partial reception of, p. 345; questioned by modern critics, p. 347
Paulus Praedicitio, p. 353
Pelagius, his commentary on St Paul, p. 233; on the Lord's brethren, p. 388
Pella, Church of, p. 313 sq. 317: see Ariston perfect, uses of, ii. 7, iii. 18, iv. 23, v. 14
Pessinus, p. 6, 8, 10, 20, 21, 34, v. 12
Peter (St), his vision, and its effects, ii. 12, 14, p. 355; at Antioch, ii. 11 sq, p. 128 sq, 354 sq, 356; at Rome, p. 337 sq, 353; his character, p. 129, 355 sq; how regarded by St Paul, p. 351; how represented by the Clementines, ii. 11, 13, p. 324, 327 sq, 352; by Basilides, etc. p. 353; coupled with St Paul in early writers, p. 358; writings ascribed to, p. 353
Peter (St), 1st Epistle of; to whom written, p. 26; its character, etc., p. 356 sq; its resemblance to St Paul, p. 356 sq
Peter, Gospel of; its docetism, p. 274 sq; account of the Lord's brethren in, ib.

Peter, Preaching of; tradition preserved by, p. 127; influence of a passage in, iv. 3; not Ebionite, p. 353
Philip the deacon; his work, p. 298 sq; confused with the Apostle, p. 368

Philosophy, advanced by Christian missions, p. 243
Philo, his doctrine of faith, p. 159 sq, 163; allegory of Abraham, p. 166 sq; of Hagar and Sarah, p. 198 sq; on the
INDEX.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Hagar, p. 197; on those of Isaac and Ishmael, p. 199</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Photius, his commentary on St Paul, p. 231</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polycarp, the Epistle of, p. 59, iv. 26; at Rome, p. 343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Polycrates (of Ephesus), his date and style, p. 362; traditions preserved by, p. 343, 362 sq</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prausus, p. 248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Primus, his commentary on St Paul, p. 234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proselytes, different classes of, p. 296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protevangelium, on the Lord's brethren, p. 275, 281</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rabbanus Maurus, his commentary on St Paul, regeneration, vi. 15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romans, epistle to the; when written, p. 40; resemblance to Galatians, p. 45 sq (passim); contrast to Galatians, p. 349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romans xvi. 7 commented on, p. 96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rome, Church of; early history, p. 335 sq; succession of bishops, p. 332; recognition of St Peter and St Paul by, p. 358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rufinus, his translation of Eusebius, p. 332; of the Clementine Recognitions, p. 327, 330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salome, p. 264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samaritans, how regarded by the Jews, p. 299; conversion of, ib.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sarah (Sarai), meaning of the word, p. 198; typifies Jerusalem, iv. 27; see also Hagar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scripture and scriptures, iii. 22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sedulius, his commentary on St Paul, p. 235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Serapion, on the Gospel of Peter, p. 275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sires, mythical character of, p. 324 sq</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seven, appointment of the, p. 297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seventy, the; called apostles, p. 100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Severianus, his commentary on Galatians, p. 239; (?) on Hagar, p. 194</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silas, an apostle (?) p. 96, 98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simon or Symeon, different persons called, p. 257 sq, 266; a common name, p. 268 sq</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinai, St Paul at, p. 88; allegorical meaning of, iv. 25; see Hagar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spirit and the Spirit, v. 5, 17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stadium, St Paul's metaphor of the, ii. 2, v. 7</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX.

Stephanus Gobarus, on Hegesippus, p. 334
Stephen (St), influence and work of, p. 298, 301
Symeon, son of Clopas, p. 266 sq, 276 sq; his martyrdom, p. 375; see Simon Syriac translations; of the Clementines, p. 327, 330; of Ignatius, p. 339; of Eusebius, see Eusebius

σκάπαλων, v. 11
σκόλοφ, p. 187 sq
στερματα (plural), iii. 16
στήκεω, v. 1
στηματα, vi. 17
στοιχεια, iv. 3
στόλοι, usage and accent, ii. 9
συγγενείς, i. 14
συγκλείειν eis (υπό), iii. 22
συν- superfluous (συντακτικών), i. 14 συνανάγεονθαι with dative, ii. 13
συμπατάνειν, ii. 18
συνοστοιχεῖν (-χα), iv. 24, p. 239

Tavium, p. 6, 8, 10, 20
Tectosages (-gae), p. 6, 148 sq
Tertullian, charges against Marcion, p. 122, 129; on the Lord's brethren, p. 253, 258, 278 sq; on St Paul's infirmity, p. 186; on Praxeas, p. 344
Testaments of Twelve Patriarchs, p. 319 sq
Teutobodacii, p. 250 sq

Theodore of Mopsuestia, his commentary on St Paul's Epistles, p. 229 sq; error in the Greek text, p. 193; in the Latin translation, p. 230; on St Peter at Antioch, p. 132; on Hagar, p. 194, 196
Theodore, his commentary on St Paul's Epistles, p. 230; on St Peter at Antioch, p. 132; on Hagar, p. 194, 196; on the Lord's brethren, p. 257, 290
Theophylact, his commentary on St Paul's Epistles, p. 234; on the Lord's brethren, p. 254, 290
Thomas (St), his name Judas, p. 263

Timothetus, circumcision of, ii. 3; not an apostle, p. 96, 98
Timothy, Second Epistle to, iv. 10 commented on, p. 3, 31
Titus, mission of, ii. 1; circumcision of, etc. ii. 3, p. 122
Tolstobogii, p. 6, 248 sq Tolosa, p. 249
transcribers, fidelity of, ii. 12
Treveri, the name how written, p. 243; were Celts, not Germans, p. 243 sq; later German settlement among, p. 245
Trosi, p. 6, 249
tαράσσειν, i. 7, v. 10
tὰχέων, p. 41, 1. 6
tέκνα (viol) Θεοῦ, iii. 26
tεκυλα, iv. 19
tέχειν, see stadium
θυμοι (plural), v. 20

Versions, testimony respecting the Lord's brethren, p. 264, 275 sq; Itala, p. 122
Victor of Rome, p. 335 sq, 343
Victorinus the philosopher, his commentary on St Paul, p. 231; on the date of Galatians, p. 36; on the Lord's brethren, p. 284; he mistakes the Latin version, p. 90 Victorinus Petaviensis, on the Lord's brethren, p. 258, 282

υδεσία, iv. 5
υιος Θεου, iii. 26
υπάρχεων, ii. 14
υπέρ, περ, i. 4
υποστέλλειν, ii. 12

Walafradus Strabo, his commentary, p. 236
Western Services, testimony respecting the Jameses, p. 289

Zealots, i. 14
ζηλωτα, v. 20, 21
ζηλουν, iv. 17
ζηλωτη, i. 14