PREFACE

BY THE GENERAL EDITOR.

The General Editor does not hold himself responsible, except in the most general sense, for the statements, opinions, and interpretations contained in the several volumes of this Series. He believes that the value of the Introduction and the Commentary in each case is largely dependent on the Editor being free as to his treatment of the questions which arise, provided that that treatment is in harmony with the character and scope of the Series. He has therefore contented himself with offering criticisms, urging the consideration of alternative interpretations, and the like; and as a rule he has left the adoption of these suggestions to the discretion of the Editor.

The Greek Text adopted in this Series is that of Dr Westcott and Dr Hort. For permission to use this Text the thanks of the Syndics of the University Press and of the General Editor are due to Messrs Macmillan & Ca.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

Ar the end of the Introduction I have given a list of writings to which I have been much indebted in writing these notes upon the Second Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians; and other works are mentioned both in the notes and in the appendices. I have also to express my obligations to the General Editor for his untiring watchfulness in reading the proofs and for very many valuable suggestions and criticisms.

The theory advocated in the Introduction and in the notes respecting the last four chapters of the Epistle,-as having originally been part of another snd earlier letter,has been adopted with much reluctance. Years ago I wrote against it. I had then, and I have still, a great distrust of speculative dissections of documents, where the arguments for disintegration are based wholly upon internal evidence and receive no support from the history of the text. But, in the present case, minute study of the details at last produced a conviction which became too strong for this reasonable and deep-rooted objection. In the end I was brought to the belief, that the internal evidence, although it stood alone, was too often and too consistently in favour of separating the last four chapters from the first nine to be barred altogether by antecedent improbabilities. That one letter should lose its beginning and another letter lose its end, and that the two remaining portions should afterwards be put together as forming one letter, is a process which is certainly possible, and which is not so highly improbable as to be incapable of being rendered credible by evidence that is wholly internal. The amount of evidence which has been produced in favour of this theory seems to me to throw the balance of probability on the side of separation : and I believe that I have been able to add to the evidence.

It must be remembered that the theory of two mutilated letters being welded together is not a gratuitous hypothesis: it solves a very real difficulty, viz. the perplexing change of tone and tactics which suddenly takes place after the first nine chapters. And, for the reasons stated in the Introduction and in the notes, this theory has been adopted (not at all with a light heart) as the best solution of the difficulty. It is advocated, and rather strongly advocated, not as having been proved, but as being a very good working hypothesis for the explanation of some extremely puzzling facts.

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians bristles with difficulties. That the treatment of them in this commentary will in all cases win assent is much more than can be expected: but it has been the endeavour of those who are responsible for the production of the book not to shirk difficulties.

The Greek Index at the end of the volume is not a Concordance. It does not contain all the Greek words which occur in the Epistle; and, in the case of some common words, such as yivectac and funćrкciv, only a selection of references is given. The spelling in all cases follows the text of Westcott and Hort, and this in some cases determines the order of the words.

INTRODUCTION.

1. The Genuineness of the Epistle.

THE genuineness of this letter is as impregnable as that of 1 Corinthians, which imparts much of its own strength to the later letter. But the independent evidence in favour of 2 Corinthians is very strong, although the external testimony begins a little later than in the case of the earlier letter.

There is no evidence that the Second Epistle was known to Clement of Rome. The supposed reminiscences are very unconvincing: e.g. 2 Cor. i. 5 and Clem. ii. 1, 2 Cor. viii. 9 and Clem. xvi. 2, 2 Cor. x. 3, 4 and Clem. xxxvii. 1, 2 Cor. x. 13, 15, 16 and Clem. i. 3, 2 Cor. x. 17 and Clem. xiii. 1, 2 Cor, x. 18 and Clem. xxx. 6. There is much of 2 Corinthians that would have suited Clement's purpose very well; so much so, that we may believe that he would have made as free use of it as he does of 1 Corinthians, had he known the Second Epistle. But it need not be doubted that Polycarp knew both Epistles. It is possible that 'providing always for that which is honourable in the sight of God and of men' (Pol. vi. 1) comes from Prov. iii. 4 rather than from 2 Cor. viii. 21 : yet it differs from both in adding 'always' and in substituting 'God' for 'Lord.' But it does not stand alone: 'He that raised Him from the dead will raise us also' (Pol. ii. 2) is evidently a loose quotation from 2 Cor. iv. 14; and 'among whom the blessed Paul laboured, who were his letters in the beginning' (Pol. xi. 3) seems to be a clear allusion to 2 Cor. iii. 2. The last passage is one of which we have only a Latin translation, qui estis in principio epistulae ejus; but there is little doubt that epistulae is nom.
plur. and not gen. sing., and therefore the allusion is to 'letters of commendation' and 'ye are our epistle' in 2 Corinthians rather than to the beginning of the Epistle to the Philippians. Irenaeus quotes 2 Cor. repeatedly (rv. xxvi. 4, xxix. 1, xxxvi. 6, v. xiii. 4), and sometimes by name: Apostolus ait in epistola secunda ad Corinthios (Iv. xxviii. 3); in secunda quae est ad Corinthios dicens (v. iii. 1): and he quotes from chapters ii., iii., iv., v., and xiii. See Werner, Der Paulinismus des Irenaeus, Leiprig, 1889. Athenagoras ( $d_{e}$ Res. Mort.) quotes part of $\mathrm{\nabla} .10$. Theophilus of Antioch shows clear traces of 2 Cor., as of most of the Pauline Epistles. Clement of Alexandria quotes it more than forty times, and from every chapter of it, escepting i. and ix. Tertullian (adv. Marc. xi., xii.) goes through it, and elsewhere quotes it over seventy times: see especially de Pud. xiii. Cyprian quotes every chapter, excepting i. and x. Marcion admitted it to his arbitrarily select Canon. It is included in the Muratorian Fragment.

The internal evidence is even stronger. "The contents of this Epistle are the best guarantee of its genuineness. Not only do they fall in with what we know from other sources concerning the history of St Paul, but the animation of the style, the earnestness of the appeals, the variety and minuteness of the personal details with which the Epistle abounds, place it beyond the reach of the forger" (Lias). Correspondences with other Epistles of S. Paul (especially 1 Corinthians, Galatians, and Romans) and with Acts, are frequent and subtle. And the autobiographical touches which are peculiar to this letter are as convincing as those which are supported by other evidence: they are so intensely real and so unlikely to have been invented. To put this letter into the class of pseudepigrapha is to stultify oneself as a critic. "In its individuality of style, intensity of feeling, inimitable expression of the writer's idiosyncrasy, it may be said to stand at the head of all the Pauline Epistles, Galatians not excepted....It is the most personal, least doctrinal, of all the Epistles except Philemon; but at the same time it is saturated with the characteristic conceptions of St Paul" (Bishop Robertson, Hastings' DB. 1. p. 492).

2. Puace and Time, Occasion and Purpose.

The place and time can be fixed within narrow limits. The Apostle was in Macedonia (ii. 13, vii. 6, viii. 1, ix. 2-4); and the ancient subscription ( $B$, Peshitto) may be right which dates the Epistle from Philippi. S. Paul wrote 1 Corinthians at Ephesus about Easter in a year that was probably a.d. 57. C. H. Turner (Hastings' D. B. I. p. 424) prefers A.d. 55; and Harnack (Chronologis der altchr. Litt. p. 717) suggests A.D. 53, or even 52, as probable; but these early dates have not found general acceptance. S. Paul intended to remain at Ephesus until Pentecost (1 Cor, xvi. 8) ; but anxiety may have made him leave earlier. He had previously sent Timothy to Corinth; but he did not feel sure that Timothy would get so far (1 Cor. xvi. 9), and S. Luke does not know of Timothy's going further than Macedonia (Acts xix. 22). All that we know is that Timothy was in Macedonia with S. Paul when 2 Corinthians was written (i. 1). When S. Paul left Ephesus (presumably soon after Pentecost A.D. 57), he went to Troas, hoping there to meet Titus with news from Corinth. After waiting in vain for him, he went on to Macedonia (ii. 12, 13), where be found Titus returning from Corinth (vii. 5, 6). The satisfactory report of the Corinthian Church brought by Titus, especially as regards their reception of a severe lettor written to them by S. Paul, is the occasion of 2 Corinthians. It was probably written in the autumn, and the usual view is that it was written in the autumn of the same year as that in which 1 Corinthians was written. But it is possible that we ought to place, not six months, but about eighteen between 1 and 2 Corinthians. There are two reasons for this; but neither of them is decisive. (1) The expression à $\pi \dot{o}$ t $\pi \dot{\prime} \rho v \sigma \iota$ (viii. 10, ix. 2) may mean either 'last year' or 'a year ago.' If it means 'last year,' and if S . Paul reckoned by the Macedonian jear or the Jewish year, which began in the autumn, he might in the autumn speak of the previous spring as 'last year.' But if it means 'a year ago,' then we must have more than a year between 1 and 2 Corinthians. (2) As will be seen presently, there is a good deal that took place between the two letters; and, although it all might be compressed into six or seven months, yet a period of seventeen or eighteen months seems to be rather more probable. Whichever alternative is adopted, S. Paul probably did not leave Ephesus for Troas until considerably later than the Pentecost of the year in which he wrote 1 Corinthians. This involves an investigation of the course of events between the sending of the two letters.

The transition from the region of 1 Corinthians to that of 2 Corinthians has been compared to the passage from the clear, if somewhat intricate, paths of a laid-out park into the obscurity of a trackless forest. The vegetation is still much the same; but it is no longer easy to find one's way through it. Timothy is back again with S. Paul; but we do not know how far he has been, or what he has accomplished. The factions are still there; but they are much less distinguishable: indeed, only the 'Christ' party, i.e. the one most opposed to S. Paul, is clearly marked out (see Baur, Paul, his Life and Works, vol. I. p. 293, Eng. tr.). The letter teems with what seem to be allusions, polemical and otherwise; but it is not easy to interpret them or even to be sure of them. The Apostle frequently denies that he does this or that. These negative statements sometimes seem to mean that he has been accused of doing what he denies; e.g. i. 17, 24, iv. 5, v. 13, vii. 2, xi. 7, 9, 16, xiii. 6. Sometimes they rather imply that his opponents act in this way; e.g. i. 12, 19, ii. 17, iii. 3, 5, v. 16, x. 2, 4, 8, 12, 15. Sometimes perhaps both these points are implied ; e.g.iv. 2, x. 15. Chapters x.-xiii. are full of scathing insinuations.

It is evident that, since 1 Corinthians was written, there had been much opposition at Corinth to the authority of S. Paul. But the only event in the intervening period which can be said to be established beyond possibility of dispute is the journey of Titus to Corinth to put things on a better footing by inducing the rebellious party to submit ( 2 Cor. ii. 13, vii. 6, 7, 13-15).

Almost certainly Titus took with him a letter; not because he was unknown and needed a letter of commendation, for he may have been there before ( $\pi \rho o \epsilon \nu \dot{\eta} \rho \xi a r o$, viii. 6 , xii. 18), and very possibly he was the bearer of 1 Corinthians; but because of the gravity of the crisis. Evidently there was a letter, and a severe letter (ii. 3, 9, vii. 8, 12), about the effect of which S. Paul was very anxious; and, as Titus witnessed the good effects of the letter (vii. 7-15), the probability is that he was the bearer of it. This severe letter cannot be 1 Corinthians (see notes on ii. 3, vii. 8) ; and the fact of a severe letter between the two canonical Epistles is now accepted by a very large number of scholars ${ }^{1}$. The objections which have been urged against this intermediate letter are of little weight against the arguments for it: e.g. that what is stated in 2 Cor. i. 8 would have been stated in the earlier letter, if there had been one. That there is any improbability in part, or even the whole, of a letter from the A postle being lost cannot be maintained in the face of 1 Cor. v. 9 . The Corinthians would be less careful of a letter which was not very palatable to them, than of one which was gladly read and re-read.

One main topic in this intermediate letter was no doubt the incident referred to in 2 Cor. ii. $5-11$ and in vii. 8-12, which is probably the outrageous conduct of some rebellious Corinthian convert against S. Paul. It cannot well be the case of incest mentioned in 1 Cor. v. 1 (see notes on ii. 5-11, p. 44, and on vii. 12) : and $\delta \hat{a}^{\delta} \delta \kappa \eta \theta_{\epsilon} i s$ is either (1) the Apostle himself, or (2) Timothy, if he ever reached Corinth (1 Cor. xvi. 10; see note on 2 Cor. xii. 18), or (3) some unknown person who had been grossly outraged by a member of the Corinthian Church. That the great offender of 2 Corinthians is not the incestuous person but a personal opponent of S . Paul is a view as old as Tertullian (de Pudic. 12, 13), and is contended for by LL Davies in Smith's DB. II. pp. 449 ff. So also Ewald, Godet, Hilgenfeld, Jülicher, Neander, A. Robertson, Weizsäcker, and others.
${ }^{1}$ Beysohlag, Bleek, Credner, Ewald, Eylau, Findlay, Godet, Hilgenfeld, Klöpper, Krenkel, Lisco, Meyer, Neander, Olshausen, Reuss, Robertson, Sanday, Waite, Weizsäcker: to whom mast be added all those who regard chapters x.-xiii. as part of this severe letter; e.g. Adeney, Bacon, Brückner, Clemen, Davidson, Hausrath, Kennedy, König, McGiffert, Moffatt, Pfleiderer, Schmiedel.

But this intermediate letter was chiefly occupied with the Judaism which had been troubling the Church of Corinth, as it had been troubling the Churches of Galatia. Although the large majority of converts in Corinth were Gentiles, yet a Judaistic party may have existed in that Church from the first (comp. 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2). The 'Kephas' faction was probably Judaistic, and the 'Christ' faction still more so. But, since the writing of 1 Corinthians, the evil had greatly increased, apparently through the arrival of agitators from Palestine. These Judaistic leaders were born Jews (xi, 22), with letters of commendation from Christians in Judaea (iii. 1). They claimed to be disciples and ministers of Christ in some high and special manner (x. 7, xi. 23); and they insisted on their narrow Jewish view of the Messiah to an extent which made Him 'another Jesus' from the Christian Messiah (xi. 4). They also claimed to be 'Apostles,' while they denied that title to S. Paul (xi. 5, 13, xii. 11, 12)'. Yet when he calls them 'super-extra apostles' (inteдíav ámófrodot), he does not mean that they assumed this title, but that this was the idea which they had of themselves, and which they encouraged their supporters to have of them. Hence the arrogance of their conduct in tyrannizing over their submissive followers (xi. 20). That these agitators had any intimate connexion with James or any of the Twelve is not certain; but it is not impossible that some of them may have been hearers of the Apostles, or even of Jesus (see Pfleiderer, Paulinism, vol. II. p. 29 Eng. tr.). Perhaps they had twitted S. Paul with never having seen the Christ (x. 7). Influence in Jerusalem these Judaizing leaders in Corinth evidently possessed; and it was because of this that S . Paul was so anxious about the Palestine relief fund at Corinth. A generous contribution from this Gentile Church would prove to those at Jerusalem that the Apostle of the Gentiles and his Corinthian converts

[^0]were loyal to the Motber Church in Palestine (see introductory note to viii.).

The charges which these Judaistic agitators made against the Apostle are for the most part clear: that his conduct was 'according to the flesh' (кaг̀̀ $\sigma$ á $\rho \kappa a$ ), and that, however imposing he might be on paper, his personal influence was nil (x. 2-10); that he was rude in speech (xi. 6); that he refused Corinthian hospitality and support, because he was too proud to accept it, and because, not being a true Apostle, he knew that he had no right to it (xi. 7-12, xii. 13); that, although he professed to live by his own labour, he really supported himself out of the collections for Palestine (xii. 16-18); that he claimed to wield supernatural punishments, but did not venture to use them (xiii. 3, 4); that he was a reprobate (xiii. 6); that he was a man of levity (i. 17), who commended himself (iii. 1, v. 12) and preached himself (iv. 5); that in his visions and revelations he was a madman (v. 13) and a deceiver (vi. 8).

The charge that his was a mere paper authority, which, when he was face to face with them, he could not make effectual (x. 10), is connected with the brief visit which S. Paul paid to Corinth between 1 and 2 Corinthians. In 1 Cor. iv. 21 the Apostle contemplates the possibility of his next risit to Corinth being of a painful nature; 'Shall I come unto you with a rod $l$ ' And this short visit was a very painful one, marked by disaffection on their side, distress and failure on his; so much so that it was possible for his enemies to say that evidently he had no apostolic power (see notes on ii. 1, xii. 14, xiii. 1, where this second and painful visit is clearly alluded to; also note on i. 15). If the misconduct referred to in ii. $2-10$ and vii. 12 was some outrage to the Apostle himself, it probably took place during the painful visit. The fact that the allusion to the outrage (ii. 2-10) comes immediately after the allusion to the painful visit (ii. 1) is some evidence of a connexion between the two. It may have been an attack of his malady which prevented him from dealing with this and other acts of insubordination in a satisfactory manner. The objections which have been urged against this intermediate visit are as unconvincing as the objections against the intermediate letter. As Luke here condenses two years into one verse (Acts xix. 10), his silence respecting this visit creates no difficulty. See Lightfoot, Biblical Essays, p. 274.
In connexion with the charge of levity a great deal has been written about S. Paul's two plans respecting a visit to Corinth which he contemplated when he wrote 1 Corinthians. The first and simple plan was to go from Asia to Macedonia, and thence to Corinth ( 1 Cor. xvi. 5-8). This was the plan he was led by circumstances eventually to carry out; and he wrote 2 Corinthians from Macedonia on his way to Corinth. But in 2 Cor. i. 15 (see note) he speaks of a more complicated plan, according to which Corinth was to get a double visit, by his taking Corinth both on his way from Asia to Macedonia, and also on his way back from Macedonia to Asia. It is assumed that the Corinthians knew of this proposed double visit, regarded it as a promise, and when it was not paid taxed the Apostle with fickleness and breach of faith. But there is nothing to show that the Corinthians had ever heard of this proposal until they read in 2 Cor. i. 15 that it had been abandoned. He mentions it there, not in answer to a charge of fickleness, but to show them that, at the very time when they thought that he did not seriously care for them, he was wishing to pay them a double visit. He does not say (v. 17), 'When I abandoned this plan, did I show fickleness ?', but, ' When I was wishing this, did I at all exhibit levity?' It is not necessary to take into account this desired but unaccomplished double visit in fixing the time for S. Paul's short and painful visit. The surest evidence as to the date of the latter is the fact that the painful visit is not mentioned or alluded to in 1 Corinthians; and the most reasonable explanation of this silence is that, when 1 Corinthians was written, the painful visit had not yet taken place. The silence of 1 Corinthians might be explained by placing the visit before the letter alluded to in 1 Cor. v. 9 , and assuming that the visit had been mentioned in this lost letter, and did not require to be mentioned again. But this does not get rid of the difficulty. We have to explain, not only what 1 Corinthians omits, but what it contains Would $S$. Paul write as he does in 1 Cor. ii. 1-5 and iii. 1, 6, 10 about his first long stay in Corinth, if he had been there a second time under very different conditions? And would he appeal three times to what has been told him about the bad state of things in Corinth ( 1 Cor. i. 11, v. 1, xi. 18), if he had previously been at Corinth himself rebuking them for these disorders? It is much better to place this painful visit, about the fact of which there is really no doubt, between 1 and 2 Corinthians ${ }^{1}$. Since the time when 1 Corinthians was written the situation at Corinth had been affected by three things; the arrival of agitators from Palestine, a short visit from S. Paul, and a severe letter from S. Paul. About the effect of the last the Apostle was intensely ansious. But, having received very reussuring news from Titus, he wrote 2 Corinthians, with a double purpose ; (1) of re-establishing his own apostolic authority and the loyalty of the Corinthians; (2) of completing the collection for the peor saints in Palestine. The second purpose is subordinate to the first, but the Apostle is very much in earnest about it; and perhaps we may believe that he would have written in support of the relief fund, even if there had been no cause to vindicate his authority. See Harnack, Die Mission u. s. w., pp. 133 ff.
The following tentative scheme sets forth the probable sequence of events, according to the views which, on the whole, are preferred in this volume.

1. S. Paul spends a year and six months in Corinth teaching the word of God (Acts xviii. 11).
2. Apollos visits Corinth (Acts xviii. 27, xix. 1; 1 Cor. i. 12, iii. 4-6) and returns to S. Paul at Ephesus (1 Cor. xvi. 12).
3. S. Paul writes a letter, now lost, to Corinth (1 Cor. v. 9).
4. Chloe's people visit S. Paul at Ephesus (l Cor. i. 11).
5. Timothy starts from Ephesus for Macedonia and Corinth,
${ }^{1}$ This arrangement is preferred by Drescher, Ewald, Eylan, Jülicher, Kennedy, Krenkel, Mangold, Pfeiderer, Robertson, Weiffenbach, and Weizsäcker. Lightfoot, Sanday, and Waite place the visit before the lost letter of 1 Cor. v. 9. and reaches Macedonia (1 Cor. iv. 17, xvi. 10; Acts xix. 22; 2 Cor. i. 1).
6. Letter of the Corinthians to S . Paul (l Cor. vii. 1 ; comp. xvi. 17).
7. 1 Corinthians sent from Ephesus about Easter, probably by the hands of Titus and a brother.
8. Titus begins to organize at Corinth the collection for the saints (2 Cor. viii. 6, xii. 18), and then returns to S. Paul.
9. The 'Christ' party increases at Corinth and agitators from Palestine foment opposition to S. Paul (2 Cor. x. 7, xi. 23, &c.).
10. S. Paul from Ephesus pays a short and painful visit to Corinth (2 Cor. ii. 1, xii. 14, xiii. 1), during which he is grossly insulted by some Corinthian ( 2 Cor. ii. $5-8$, vii. 12).
11. Titus is sent from Ephesus to Corinth with a severe letter (ii. 3,9 , vii. 8,12 ), the greater part of which seems to be preserved in 2 Cor. x.-xiii.
12. S. Paul, in great anxiety about the effect of this letter, leaves Ephesus for Troas, and Troas for Macedonia, in order to meet Titus the sooner. Titus brings a very encouraging report ( 2 Cor. ii. 12, 13, vii. 6-15).
13. 2 Corinthians i.-ix. sent from Macedonia by Titus and two brothers (2 Cor. viii. 16-23).

3. Contents and Results.

The Epistle, as we have it, consists of three main parts, which are clearly marked off from one another: The Defence of his Conduct and Office (i.-vii.); The Collection for the Poor in Palestine (viii., ix.) ; and The Great Invective against his Enemies and their Followers (x.-xiii.). It is convenient to subdivide these parts into sections; but we must not assume that such subdivisions correspond to any plan which the writer had in his mind. The letter is written with all the freedom of a letter: it is not a treatise, but a string of informal addresses, dictated as opportunity for writing and the inclination to write arose (see Appendix D). It is not likely that the whole of even i.-vii. was written at one sitting: and, whatever view be taken of x--xiii. (see below on the Integrity), those chapters must have been written at a different time from the rest of the Epistle.
i. 1, 2. The Apostolic Salutation.
i. 3-11. Thanksgiving for Recent Deliverance.
i. 12-vii. 16. Apologia pro Vita sua.
i. 12-ii 17. Vindication of his Conduct, especially with regard to the Charge of Lightness and the Case of the Grievous Offender.
iii. 1-vi. 10. Vindication in detail of his Apostolic Office, of himself as an Apostle, and of the Gospel which he preaches.
vi. 11-vii. 16. Conclusion of the Appeal for Reconciliation; Exhortations to Holiness; His Comfort in the Happy Tidings brought from Corinth by Titus.
viii, ix. The Collection for the Poor Saints at Jerusalem.
viii. 1-7. The Example set by the Churches of Macedonia.
viii. 8-15. Exhortations and Inducements to give according to their Means.
viii. 16-ix. 5. Directions for the Management of the Collection.
ix. 6-15. Exhortation to give liberally and cheerfully.
x. 1-xiii. 10. Another Assertion of the Apostle's Position and a Final Rebuke and Warning to his Judaizing Opponents.
x. 1-18. The Apostle's Authority and the Extent of his Province.
xi. 1-xii. 10. The Apostle's Foolish Glorying.
xii. 10-xiii. 10. Retrospect of his Glorying; Warnings in connexion with his approaching Visit.
xiii. 11-13. Concluding Exhortation, Salutation, and Benediction.

As to the results of these appeals and exhortations we have no direct evidence; but we may infer that they were in the main successful. The Epistle to the Romans, written from Corinth a few months later, seems to have been composed in a tranquil atmosphere; and if the Church of Corinth had again given serious trouble to S . Paul, we should probably have some traces of the disaffection either in Romans or in other writings. When Clement of Rome wrote to the Church of Corinth c. A.D. 95 he has to criticize some failings, but nothing so grave as a rejection of Apostolic teaching. Hegesippus (c. A.d. 160) found it continuing in the faith, and says that he and they were mutually refreshed in the true doctrine (Eus. $\boldsymbol{H}$. $E$. IV. xxij. 1, 2). A little later the letters of Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, were so valued that heretics thought it worth their while to garble them (Eus. $\boldsymbol{H}, \boldsymbol{E}$. rv. xxiii. 12).

4. Language and Style.

It has been pointed out by others (e.g. by Sanday and Headlam, Romans, pp. liv ff.) how much resemblance, as regards both style and vocabulary, there is between the four great Epistles which form the second group among the letters of S . Paul; viz. 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, and Romans. All of them, and especially the first three, are written with great energy and vivacity. "There is a rush of words...the outcome of strongly moved feeling....The language is rapid, terse, incisive; the argument is conducted by a quick cut and thrust of dialectic; it reminds us of a fencer with his eye always on his antagonist."

One cause of this dialectical style was doubtless the fact that these four letters, and especially 1 and 2 Corinthians and Galatians, were written in an atmosphere of controversy. In particular, the short-lived, but (while it lasted) extremely bitter, controversy between Jewish and Gentile Christianity is very prominent in 2 Corinthians and Galatians. It comes to the surface only occasionally in 1 Corinthians, especially in connexion with the factions; and in Romans it is for the most part driven under by other subjects. But it is present in all four of these writings, and in 2 Corinthians and Galatians it rages. An examination of the language of these four letters, in comparison with the other Pauline Epistles, shows how much the four have in common. Although some instances in the following list are no doubt accidental, yet the list as a whole is significant. Words in thick type are found in the LXX.

 $\mu \hat{a} \lambda \lambda_{o v,} \pi d \lambda เ v, ~ \sigma \tau \epsilon \nu o x \omega p l a ~ m i g h t ~ r e a s o n a b l y ~ b e ~ a d d e d, ~ a s ~ r e f e r-~$ ence to a concordance will show．But，as it stands，the list is sufficient to prove that this group of Epistles has a characteristic vocabulary. It will be remarked that in the list only those words are included which occur in 2 Corinthians. The number would have been much larger, if words which are not found in 2 Corinthians, but are more common in 1 Corinthians, Galatians, and Romans than in the rest of the Pauline Epistles, had been added to it; and such words are, of course, characteristic of this group of Epistles.

The number of the words which, in the New Testament, are peculiar to 2 Corinthians is considerable. It will be useful to classify them according as they occur in the first nine chapters or in the last four chapters, and again to mark by thick type those which are certainly found in the LXX. The following are found in chapters $\mathrm{i} .-\mathrm{ix} .:-\mathrm{i} \gamma a v a ́ k т \eta \sigma t s$ (vii. 11), ádootís (viii.

 (viii. 10, ix. 2), троaıрєîv (ix. 7), $\pi \rho о є \nu a ́ \rho \chi є \sigma \theta a u ~(v i i i . ~ 6, ~ 10), ~ \pi \rho o-~$

 tor $\mu$ ós (iv. 4, 6).

Three such words are found in both these divisions of the

There are also words, which, although found elsewhere in the New Testament, ars not found elsewhere in the Pauline Epistles;
 (vi. 2), $\beta$ ov

 (vii. 7), тá入al (xii. 19), тavтокрátwp (vi. 18), тарá8кเซos (xii. 4), xwpeiv (vii. 2), quxps (xi. 27). Perhaps the most significant thing $^{\text {m }}$ in this list is that, with two exceptions ( $\theta a \rho \rho \in i \nu$ and $\pi \lambda \eta \gamma \dot{\eta}$ ), none of these words is found in both sections of the letter.

 of them are found in the LXX. Like 'ध $\pi \iota r \iota \mu i a$ in the list above, каталa入ıá is found only in Wisdom (i. 11), a book which S. Paul certainly knew. Comp. the use of à avтókpıros (vi. 6; Rom. xii. 9 ; 1 Tim. i. 5; 2 Tim. i. 5; Wisd. v. 18, xviii. 16, and nowhere else in the LXX.), à $\pi$ oró $\mu \omega s$ (xiii. 10 ; Tit. i. 13; Wisd. v. 22, and nowhere else in the LXX.), єvápearos (v. 9 ; Rom. xii. 1, 2, xiv. 19; Eph. v. 10; Phil. iv. 18; Col iii. 20; Tit. ii. 9; Wisd. iv. 10, ix. 10, and nowhere else in the LXX.), $\mu \omega \mu a \hat{\sigma} \theta a$, (vi. 3, viii. 20; Wisd. x. 14), maрр $\quad$ ria = 'confidence' (iii. 12, vii. 4; Wisd. v. 1), $\dot{\eta} \gamma \nu \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota s$ тov̂ $\theta_{\epsilon o \hat{v}}$ (x. 5; Wisd. xiv. 22): and comp. 2 Cor. v. 1, 4, with Wisd. ix. 15.

It is not, however, the words which are found in 2 Corinthians and nowhere else in the New Testament, or in 2 Corinthians and nowhere else in the Epistles of S. Paul, which give us the ideas that are the leading notes in this letter. These are rather to be found in the words and expressions, which, however common elsewhere, are specially frequent in 2 Corinthians. There are nearly twenty such; and abont the significance of most of them there can be little doubt. It will be instructive to group them according to their frequency in the two divisions of the letter.

The following belong exclusively to the first nine chapters; $0 \lambda$ íuss (i. 4, 8, ii. 4, iv. 17, vi. 4, vii. 4, viii. 2, 13 ; elsewhere in S. Paul 15 times), $\lambda v \pi \epsilon \hat{\varepsilon}$ (ii. 2, 4, 5, vi. 10 , vii. $8,9,11$; in all 12 times; elsewhere in S. Paul 3 times), $\lambda$ ú $\pi \eta$ (ii. 1, 3, 7, vii. 10, ix. 7; elsewhere in S. Paul twice), $\pi а \rho a к a \lambda \epsilon i v=' t o ~ c o m f o r t ' ~$ (i. 4, 6, ii. 7, vii. 6, 7, 13; elsewhere in S. Paul perhaps 10 times with this meaning), тарáк $\lambda \eta \sigma เ s=$ 'comfort' (i. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, vii. 4, 7, 13; elsewhere in S. Paul perhaps 5 times with this meaning), тєрเซбєข่єเข (i. 5, iii. 9, iv. 15, viii. 2, 7, ix. 8, 12; elsewhere in S. Paul 16 times), $\pi$ po日 $1 \mu \boldsymbol{\mu}$ (viii. 11, 12, 19, ix. 2; not elsewhere in S. Paul), नтov8t' (vii. 11, 12, viii. 7, 8, 16; elsewhere in S. Paul twice).

The following belong exclusively to the last four chapters; dंбө́véa (xi. 30, xii. 5, 9, 10, xiii. 4; elsewhere in S. Paul 6 times), dं $\theta_{\text {eveiv ( }}$ xi. 21, 29, xii. 10 , xiii. 3, 4, 9 ; elsewhere in S. Paul 10 times), d̈фрwy (xi. 16, 19, xii. 6, 11; elsewhere in S. Paul 3 times).

Some rather dominant words are found in both divisions of
 iv. 1 , v. 18 , vi. 3 , viii. 4 , ix. $1,12,13$; xi. 8 ), кavxâбӨal ( $\mathrm{v}_{\mathrm{t}} 12$, vii. 14 , ix. 2 ; x. $8,13,15,16,17$, xi. $12,16,18,30$, xi. $1,5,6,9$, iv. 4 ; x. 5 , xi. 3), $\pi \epsilon \rho \rho \iota \sigma \sigma o \tau \notin \rho \omega s$ (i. 12, ii. 4, vii. 13, 15; xi. 23, specially to the last four chapters, $\delta$ rakovia and ovvictavelv rather to the first nine.

As a general result, it is evident that the thought of comfort in affliction is prevalent in chapters i.-vii.; that of glorying in weakness, and that of the folly of glorying, in x.-xii.; while in the two chapters about the collection for the saints (viii., ix.) 'abounding,' 'readiness,' 'zeal,' and 'liberality' are frequent ideas.
It is partly because of the frequency of such words as $\langle\hat{\eta} \lambda$ os каú $\chi \eta \mu a$ ( v .12 , ix. 3), кav́ $\chi \eta \sigma \iota s$ (vii. 4, viii. 24) that the construction of $\boldsymbol{v} \boldsymbol{k} \ell \mathrm{p}$ c. gen. is so very frequent in this Epistle, nearly twice as often as in Romans, and more than three times as often as in 1 Corinthians. There (Rom. v. 6, 7,8 , viii. 32, xiv. 15; 1 Cor. xv. 3) it is often used in connexion with Christ's dying for sinners; as also in this letter (v. 15 ter, 21). But frequency of which is evidence of the deep sympathy which the Apostle feels with his converts, and which he confidently assumes as being returned: comp. i. 6,11, xii. 15, 19. There is also $\boldsymbol{v} \pi \grave{\epsilon} \rho \mathrm{X} \rho \iota \sigma \tau 0 \hat{v}$ ( v .20 , xii. 10), with other examples of a more general character (i. 8, viii. 23, xii. 8, xiii. 8).

5. Quotations from the Old Tebtament.

The lists of words given above show how mucl S. Paul's vocabulary has been influenced by the LXX. But besides making use of a large number of the less common Greek words which abound in the LXX., he frequently employs its thoughts and phrases. There are at least twenty quotations from the Old Testament in 2 Corinthians, although comparatively few of them are given as such. And those which are introduced with the formula, 'even as it is written,' kä̀s yé $\gamma \rho a \pi \tau a \mu$ (viii. 15, ix. 9), or, 'according to that which is written,' кarà rò $\gamma \in \gamma \rho a \mu-$ $\mu^{\prime}$ vov (iv. 13), or, 'He saith,' $\lambda$ ézet (vi. 2), or, 'even as God said,'
 At least nine different books are quoted; viz. Genasis (2 Cor.
si. 3), Exodus (2 Cor. iii. 3, 7, 10, 13, 16, 18, viii. 15), Leviticus (2 Cor. vi. 16), Deuteronomy (2 Cor. xiii. 1), 2 Samuel (2 Cor. vi. 18), Psalms (2 Cor. iv. 13, vi. 9, 11, ix. 9), Proverbs (2 Cor. iii. 3, viii. 21, ix. 7), Isaiah (2 Cor. v. 17, vi. 2, 17, ix. 10), and Jeremiah (2 Cor. x. 17). Perhaps we should add Ezekiel (2Cor. iii. 3, vi. 16, 17), Hosea (2 Cor. vi. 18, ix. 10), and Amos (2 Cor. vi. 18); but in these instances the precise source of the quotation is uncertain, and some may be a compound of several passages. In five cases (iv. $13=$ Ps. cxvi. 10 [crv. 1]; vi. $2=$ Is. xlix. 8 ; viii. $15=$ Exod. xvi. 18; ix. $9=$ Ps. cxii. [cxi.] 9; ix. $10=$ Is. lv. 10) there is exact agreement with the LXX. In five (viii. $21=$ Prov. iii. 4; ix. $7=$ Prov. xxii. 8 ; $x .17=$ Jer. ix. 24 ; xi. $3=$ Gen. iii. 13 ; xiii. $1=$ Deut. xix. 15) the agreement is close. In one case (vi. $17=$ Jer. li. 45; Is. lii, 11; Ezek. xx. 34) the quotation is perhaps influenced by the Hebrew against the LXX. Like most Hellenistic Jews, S. Paul commonly used the LXX., although he was quite familiar with the Hebrew. "The influence of the LXX. over the writings of the N.T. is continually shewn in combinations of words or in trains of thought which point to the presence of the version in the background of the writer's mind, even when he may not consciously allude to it....The writers of the N.T....were not only familiar with the LXX., but saturated with its language. They used it as Englishmen use the Authorized Version of the Bible, working it into the texture of their thoughts and utterances. It is impossible to do justice to their writings unless this fact is recognised, i.e., unless the reader is on the watch for unsuspected references to the Greek O.T., and able to appreciate its influence upon the author's mind" (Swete, Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, pp. 451, 452). Some of the suggestions made in the notes as to possible references to details in the Old Testament will perhaps seem to be rather fanciful or far-fetched; but it is well to practise oneself in being on the look-out for such things. Seeing that the New Testament writers themselves so constantly use the LXX. in quoting the O.T., it is no wonder that the Greek Fathers so constantly treat the LXX. as if it were the original, and argue from it as from a final authority.

6. The Greer Text.

The chief authorities for the text of 2 Corinthians may be grouped as follows:

i. Uncial MSS.

N, Codex Sinaiticus, fourth century, now at St Petersburg, first published in 1862 by Tischendorf, who discovered it in 1859. $\leqslant$ is the only codex which contains the Pauline Epistles complete. The symbols $\aleph^{1}, \aleph^{2}, \aleph^{3}$ indicate respectively the corrections made by three different scribes in the sixth and seventh centuries. Those of $\boldsymbol{N}^{1}$ are of great importance. Those of $\aleph^{3}$ are very numerous and often cancel those of $\aleph^{1}$.

A, Codex Alexandrinus, fifth century, now in the British Museum, the director of which, Sir E. Maunde Thompson, published a photographic simile of the New Testament portion, 1881-1883, with a full description of the ms. It is imperfect, and the three leaves containing from $\epsilon \pi i \sigma \tau \epsilon v \sigma a 2$ Cor. iv. 13 to ${ }^{\prime} \dot{\epsilon} \xi \dot{\epsilon} \mu 0 \hat{v}$ xii. 6 are among the missing portions.

B, Codex Vaticanus, fourth century, in the Vatican Library at Rome, the most valuable of all the mss, of the New Testament. In 1889-1890 a photographic simile of the whole ms. was published, and thereby all previous editions were superseded.

C, Codex Ephraemi rescriptus, fifth century, now in the National Library at Paris; sometimes called the Paris palimpsest. Like the preceding mss., it once contained the whole Greek Bible; but it is now very defective. Of 2 Corinthians the last part, from x. 8 onwards, is missing.

D, Codex Claromontanus, sixth century, now in the National Library at Paris. Like Codex Bezae, it is bilingual; and the Latin translation, which is akin to the Old Latin Version, is represented by the symbol $d$. It contains the whole of S . Paul's Epistles (with occasional lacunae) and nothing else. It has had many correctors, one of which, in the ninth or tenth century, has made more than 2000 alterations.

E, Codex Sangermanensis, is a ninth century copy of D; and, as being a mere transcript, is not quoted in this volume.

F, Codex Augiensis, ninth century, now at Trinity College, Cambridge; edited by Scrivener in 1859. It also is bilingual, and its Latin Version ( $f$ ), which is mainly the Vulgate, is sometimes of importance.

G, Codex Boernerianus, ninth century, now at Dresden ; published by Matthaei in 1791. It is bilingual, the Greek text being almost the same as that of F , but the Latin (g) exhibiting Old Latin elements.
H, Codex Coislinianus, sixth century, very valuable, but very incomplete. The fragments are in various libraries; 2 Cor. x. 18 to xi. 6 being at Athos, 2 Cor. iv. 2-7 at St Petersburg, and other leaves elsewhere.
I, fragments at St Petersburg, edited by Tischendorf. Two leaves, sixth century, contain 2 Cor. i. 20 to ii. 12.
K, Codex Mosquensis, ninth century, brought from Mount Athos to Moscow; edited by Matthaei in 1782. It contains the Catholic and the Pauline Epistles.
L, Codex Angelicus, ninth century, in the Angelica Library at Rome. Contains part of Acts, the Catholic and the Pauline Epistles.

M, Codex Ruber, ninth century, four leaves written in red ink, two at Hamburgh and two in the British Museum. The latter contain 2 Cor. x. 13-xii. .

P, Codex Porphyrianus, ninth century, at St Petersburg. Contains with lacunae Acts, Catholic and Pauline Epistles, and Revelation.
R, Codex Cryptoferratensis, eighth century. One leaf, containing 2 Cor. xi. $9-19$.

In the Pauline Epistles the type of text known sometimes as 'Western,' sometimes as 'Syro-Latin', sometimes as the ' $\delta$-text,' is not so strongly marked off from other types of text as in the Gospels and Acts. Its chief representatives are DFG, all of which appear to have sprung from one and the same ancestor. The Gothic Version and of course the Old Latin are connected with this group. But in the Pauline Epistles B exhibits 'Western' features (see Sanday and Headlam, Romans, pp. lxix. ff.); so that, when we have BDFG ranged against NAC, it is the latter group that may sometimes have the 'Neutral' or ' $\beta$-text' reading, i.e. the reading most likely to be original. Unfortunately, in 2 Corinthians, it is only from i. 1 to iv. 13 that the combination NAC is possible; for A is defective from iv. 13 to xii. 6, and C is defective after x. 8. But this small portion pields two illustrations: in iii. 7 є̇v $\gamma \rho a ́ \mu \mu a \sigma \iota \nu$ ( $\kappa \mathrm{ACLP}$ ) is to be preferred to èv $\gamma \rho a \dot{\mu} \mu \mu a r t$ ( BDFG ), and in $\mathbf{j i i} .1$ ovvıotávetv (KACLP) is to be preferred to ovvıotậע (BD) or ovplotával (FG). The combination אACLP is frequent, and generally represents 'Alexandrian' (Egyptian) readings or the ' $\gamma$-text.' Even when either $A$ or $C$ is absent, $\mathfrak{N C}$ or $\mathfrak{N} A$, especially when supported by other witness, may be of more weight than BDFG: e.g. in v. 3 є $\iota \boldsymbol{\gamma} \boldsymbol{\epsilon}$ (NCKLP) is more probable than єiлєр (BDFG), and in ix. $10 \sigma \pi \epsilon ́ \rho \mu a$ (NCKLP) than $\sigma \pi$ ópov (BDFG). Moreover the transfer of KLP to the other side will not turn the scale: e.g. in xii. $15 \dot{a} \gamma a \pi \bar{\omega}(\kappa A)$ is more probable (BDFGKLP). The late uncials KLP give the 'Syrian' or 'Antiochian' or 'a-text.' A reading which is purely Syrian cannot be right: such variants are not found in any writer earlier than Chrysostom (see critical notes on xi. 28, xii. 14): and, as has just been stated, a reading may be both 'Western' and 'Syrian' and be wrong.

ii. Minuscules or Cursive MSS.

These are very abundant. Although much less numerous than those of the Gospels, nearly five hundred cursive mss. of the Pauline Epistles are known. As a rule they are of weak authority: but a few are of considerable weight, while others for special reasons are of interest. The one numbered Paul 7 (at Basle) was used by Erasmus for his first edition (1517); but it is not one of the best. Paul $17=$ Evan. 33 (at Paris) is "the queen of the cursives": more than any other minuscule it agrees with BDL. Paul $37=$ Evan. 69 is the celebrated Leicester codex. Paul $67=$ Acts 66 (at Vienna) has valuable marginal readings akin to $B$ and Codex Ruber. Paul 56 (at Zurich) is worthless, being a copy made by Zwingli from the newly published printed text of Erasmus. Paul $30=$ Acts 53 (Emman. Coll. Camb.), Paul $31=$ Acts 25 (British Museum), Paul 33=Acts 27 (British Museum), are of some importance. Paul $73=$ Acts 68 (Upsala) resembles "the queen of the cursives." Paul $80=$ Acts 73 (Rome) is a good authority used by Caryophilus in 1625 for his edition (1673). Paul $89=$ Acts 78 (Strassburg) is of some weight, but lacks 2 Cor. xi. 15 to xii. 1. Paul $118=$ Acts 103 is a volume of scholia from Mount Athos. All of these, excepting 7 and 56 , are cited occasionally in the critical notes in this volume.

iii. Versions.

1. Latin. Of these, $\mathrm{d}, \mathrm{f}$, and g have been already mentioned as the Latin half of the bilingual uncials $\mathrm{D}, \mathrm{F}$, and G . They are not translations of the Greek text with which they are paired, the Latin being sometimes different from the Greek and representing a better text. This is specially true of $d$, which often agrees with the quotations in Lucifer of Cagliari ( $\dagger$ a.d. 370).
We have also of the Old Latin, Codex Frisingensis (r), fifth or sixth century, now at Munich. It contains the whole of 2 Corinthians and some other Pauline Epistles.
The abundant quotations in the Latin Irenaeus, in Tertullian, in Hilary, and in Cyprian, who is in some ways the most important witness of all, greatly augment the evidence for the Old Latin. But in the Pauline Epistles the difference between the Vulgate and the earlier versions is often very slight: in revising them Jerome altered very little.
2. Syriac. We have the Peshitto, which to the Syrian Churches is what the Vulgate has been to the Western. Its date is still a problem; perhaps third century. But the Peshitto is not the original Syriac of the Pauline Epistles, as is shown by the writings of Aphraates and Ephraim : and no ws. of the Old Syriac of the Pauline Epistles is extant. The Philosenian was a revision made in the sixth century, and the Harkleian is a revision of this made in the seventh.
3. Egyptian. We have the North Coptic or Bohairic, and the South Coptic or Sahidic. These versions are very early, but only the Bohairic is complete, and it is made from a better text than the Sahidic.
4. Armenian. It is exaggeration to call this "the queen of the versions," but recent investigations have shown that it has great interest and importance. It was made in the fourth, and revised in the fifth century. In the Pauline Epistles it has some interesting readings agreeing with $\aleph^{3} \mathrm{H}$. But of 2 Corinthians in $H$ we possess only a few verses.
5. Aethiopic. Made about the fifth, and revised in the twelfth century. It often agrees with the Coptic Versions. Information about it is much needed.
6. Gothic. Made in the fourth century by Ulfilas ('Wulfila'= 'Little Wolf'), Arian Bishop of the Goths. The Greek used seems to have been the 'Syrian' or ' $\alpha$-text.' But it has both ' $\beta$-text' and ' $\delta$-text' elements, and may have been influenced by Latin Versions.

7. The Integrity of the Epistle.

It has been suggested that in 2 Corinthians, as we have it, there are portions of two, or three, or even of four different letters. The parts in question are vi. 14-vii. 1; viii. ; ix.; and x.-xiii. Different critics would sever one or more of these parts from the remainder of the letter. The suggestion that any one of these parts was not written by S. Paul is not worth discussing; both external and internal evidence are overwhelmingly in favour of all four of them. We cannot doubt that the whole of 2 Corinthians comes from the Apostle himself. And it must be admitted that external evidence is wholly against any dissection of the Epistle. No ms. or Version or Father gives any indication that the Epistle ever existed in a form from which any one of these four portions was absent, or that any one of these portions ever existed apart from the rest. In this respect there is no analogy between any one of these parts and Rom. xv., xvi. or Jn vii. 53-viii. 11. And with regard to two of the four parts in question the theory of dissection may be dismissed without hesitation. The note at the end of chapter ix. shows that there is no sufficient reason for entertaining proposals to sever either viii. or ix. from the preceding chapters. The only two parts about which, upon internal evidence, reasonable doubts are raised are the first and last of the four mentioned above; vi. 14-vii. I and x.-xiii. Substantial reasons are urged for regarding vi. 14 -vii. 1 as part of a different letter, and possibly as part of the letter alluded to in 1 Cor. 7.9 . And still more substantial reasons are urged for regarding x.-xiii. as part of a different letter, and probably as part of the letter alluded to in 2 Cor. ii. 3, 9 , vii. 8 . The balance of arguments seems to be against the first of these two hypotheses, and in favour of the second.

It is true that internal evidence suggests the excision of vi. 14 -vii. 1 , not merely because the paragraph comes in somewhat awkwardly, but still more because vi. 13 fits on so well to vii. ${ }^{1}$. Hence Bacon, Clemen, Davidson, Hausrath, McGiffert, Moffatt, Pfleiderer, and Renan regard this paragraph as a fragment from another letter which has somehow become inserted here; while Franke, Hilgenfeld, Sabatier, and Whitelaw are persuaded that it is a fragment of the letter mentioned in 1 Cor. v. 9.

But the reasons urged for the excision scarcely counterbalance the unbroken textual evidence, combined, as it is, with the improbability of a fragment of one letter being inserted into the middle of another letter. If there has been interpolation, it is more reasonable to believe that $S$. Paul, after finishing the letter, inserted this exhortation before sending it. And yet even this hypothesis is not needed. How many letters would read more smoothly if a particular paragraph were struck out; and yet the paragraph which seems to interrupt the flow was written ! After what is said in v. 10 and vi. 1, 2, the exhortation in vi. 14 ff . comes not unnaturally, especially as it is the repetition of a warning which the Apostle must have given before. Before repeating it (vi. 3), and after repeating it (vii. 2), the Apostle claims their affection, an affection which earnest exhortation of this kind ought not to interrupt. See note ad loc. p. 105.

The case for separating x.-xiii. from i.-ix., and for believing x.-xiii. to be part of the severe letter (2 Cor. ii. 3, 9, vii. 8), about the effect of which $S$. Paul was so anxious, is much stronger
(1) We look in vain in 1 Corinthians for passages which the Apostle could have regretted having written (2 Cor. vii. 8); and we cannot believe that I Corinthians as a whole was written 'out of much affliction and anguish of heart...with many tears' (2 Cor. ii. 4). But the whole of x. 1-xiii. 10 (which is perhaps the most vigorous and forcible portion of all the Pauline Epistles) might well have been written in affliction and anguish: and there are bitter things in these four chapters which the Apostle might at times have wished that he had not written.
(2) It is difficult to believe that $S$. Paul, after (a) the agony of suspense in which he had waited for Titus' report of the way in which the Corinthians had taken the severe letter, and after (b) confirming their goodwill and obedience by the tenderness of i.-vii., and after (c) delicately feeling his way towards pressing them to make generous contributions to the Palestine Fund, would append to these affectionate and carefully worded appeals the biting sarcasms and lashing reproofs contained in x.-xiii. Such utterances would renew the former agony of suspense as to how the Corinthians would receive such severe words, would undo the recent reconciliation, and would risk the success of the Palestine Fund. To write a severe letter, then wish that one had not sent it, and then (when the severity has been smoothed over) write an equally or more severe letter, is not the conduct which we should expect from one so tactful and sympathetic as S. Paul. It is easier to believe that he wrote only one severe letter, that $x$.-xiii. is the latter part of it, and that (after it had brought about submission) it was followed by the conciliatory passages and affectionate pleadings of i.-ix. On this hypothesis all runs in a natural order. Those who hold that 1 Corinthians is the severe letter have to explain how the Apostle could be so intensely anxious about the effects of so moderate a letter as that, and then write the scathing severities of x .-xiii.
(3) There are passages in x .-xiii. which seem to be inconsistent with passages in $\mathrm{i} .-\mathrm{ix}$. , if the two portions are parts of one and the same letter. Could $\mathbf{S}$. Paul write 'by (your) faith ye stand,' i.e. 'so far as your belief goes, you are sound' (i. 24), and then say 'Try your own selves, whether ye be in the faith' (xiii. 5)? Or declare, 'I rejoice that in everything I am of good courage concerning you' (vii. 21), and then declare, 'I fear...lest by any means there should be strife, jealousy, wraths, factions, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults; lest...I should mourn for many of them that have sinned heretofore, and repented not of the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they committed' (xii, 20, 21)? Contrast 'My joy is the joy of you all' (ii. 3), 'Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts' (iii. 2), 'Great is my glorying in your behalf' (vii. 4), 'In everything ye approved yourselves to be pure in the matter' (vii. 11), and ' Ye abound in everything, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all earnestness, and in your love to us' (viii. 7) with the fear quoted above, and with such expressions as ' I fear, lest by any means...your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ' (xi. 3), 'Ye bear with the foolish gladly, being wise yourselves' (xi. 19), and 'I write these things while absent, that I may not when present deal sharply' (xiii. 10). If the grave doubts and fears about them were written first, while they were still recalcitrant, and the commendations of them were written later, after they had submitted, all would be in logical sequence.
(4) It is pointed out in the notes that there are passages in i.--ix. which look like direct allusions to passages in x.-xiii.; which implies that the passages in $x$.-xiii. were sent to Corinth before the passages which allude to them were written. In each case taken singly the apparent correspondence might be fortuitous; but there are too many apparent correspondences to make that explanation satisfactory. It will be useful to collect the instances and look at them as a whole. Let us assume that x.-xiii. was sent first, and that i.-ix. followed a little later. Then we seem to have expressions in the later letter which are intended to refer to expressions in the earlier one. See notes in each place.
x.-xiii.
x. 2. With the confidence ( $\pi \epsilon$ тoo( $\theta$ tocel) wherewith I count to be bold.
x. 6. Being in readiness to avenge all disobedience, when your obedience ( $\mathbf{v} \pi a \kappa \circ 力$ ) shall be fulfilled.
xii. 1-5. The Rapture.
xii. 16. But, being crafty ( $\pi a \nu$ oupros), I saught you with guile.
xii. 17. Did I take advantage ( $\epsilon \pi \lambda \epsilon о \nu \epsilon \kappa \tau \eta \sigma a)$ of you?
xiii. 2. If I come again, I will not spare (oú фelбонаl).
xiii, 10. I write these things while absent, that I may not when present deal sharply.
1.-ix.
viii. 22. By reason of much confidence ( $\pi \in \pi 0, \theta \dot{\eta} \sigma \varepsilon \iota$ ) to youwerd.
ii. 9. To this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether you are obedient ( $\dot{v} \pi \eta \mu_{k o o t}$ ) in all things.
v. 15. Whether we were beside ourselves ( $(\xi \xi \in \sigma \tau \eta \mu \epsilon \boldsymbol{P}$ ).
iv. 2. Not walking in craftiness ( $\pi \alpha \nu о \nu \rho \gamma / q$ ).
vii. 2. We took advantage ( $z$ $\pi \lambda \epsilon о \nu \epsilon \kappa \tau \dot{\eta} \sigma a \mu \epsilon \nu)$ of no one.
i. 23. To spare ( $\phi \epsilon \iota \delta \delta \mu \epsilon \nu 0 s$ ) you I forbore to come to Corinth.
ii. 3. I wrote this very thing, lest, when I came, I should have sorrow.

The last two instances are very strong; and they come close together in the later letter, in which the second instance above is close to them.

Besides these seven pairs, there are the cases in x.-xiii. in which he commends himself, and the passages in i.-ix. in which he assures the Corinthians that he is not going to do this again.
xi. 5. I am not a whit behind those pre-eminent apostles.
xi. 18. I will glory also.
xi. 23. I more.
xii. 12. Traly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you.
iii. 1. Are we beginning again to commend ourselves?
v. 12. We are not again com. mending ourselves to you.

We may say, therefore, that there are nine passages in i.-ix. in which there is a probable or possible reference to something in $x$.-xiii. That is a large number; especially when it is remembered that of the earlier letter we have got only four chapters, or less than 90 verses. If we had the whole of the severe letter, the case would probably be stronger.
(5) The severe letter, intermediate between 1 Corinthians and 2 Cor. i.-ix., would be written from Ephesus, whereas 2 Cor. i.-ix. was certainly written from Macedonia (ii. 13, vii. 5, viii. 1, ix. 2-4); and $\mathbf{x} .16$ is much more intelligible if we assume that the passage was written from Ephesus. 'To preach the gospel means unto Italy and Spain. Such a way of expressing oneself would be both natural and exact, if the writer was in Ephesus: but it would be neither natural nor exact, if he were in Macedonia. See Hausrath and Kennedy ad loc.

For all these five reasons the case for separating x.-xiii. from i.-ix., and for regarding $x$.-xiii, as part of the severe letter alluded to in i.-ix., is very strong. Indeed, if the fact of a severe letter between 1 and 2 Corinthians be admitted, it is not easy to resist this hypothesis, for, as has been pointed out already, it is not probable that $S$. Paul wrote two scathing letters, viz. one that has been entirely lost and what is contained in x .-xiii.

Those who maintain the integrity of 2 Corinthians as we have it have various ways of explaining the very marked change of temper and tone and tactics between i.-ix. and $x$. - xiii.

1. Bad news had arrived from Corinth after i.-ix. was written, and the Apostle's attitude was thereby greatly changed. Is this adequate to account for so complete a change? Let us grant that it is. The fact remains that there is not a hint of additional news from Corinth. The good news brought by Titus is mentioned with delight (vii. $6,7,13,14,16$ ): of any later communication there is no trace.
2. The two divisions of the letter are addressed to two different parties at Corinth; i.-ix. to the repentant and now loyal majority, $x$.-xiii. to a still rebellious minority. This is quite untenable.

That x .-xiii., equally with i .-ix., is addressed to the whole Corinthian Church admits of demonstration: see notes on $x .2$, xi. 2, 8, 9, and xii. 13. And, even if this could not be proved, is it credible that the Apostle would first speak tenderly and affectionately to the majority, and then severely lash a minority, without giving any intimation that he had turned from the one group to the other? If there were any such change it would be marked. In Mt. xxiii. the change from what is said to the multitudes and the disciples to what is said in denunciation of the Pharisees is clearly indicated. Moreover, if, when x.-xiii. was written, there was a majority which had submitted while a minority was still in rebellion, would not S. Paul have appealed to the example of the majority? It would have been a powerful argument; and yet it is not used. The impression produced by these four chapters is that, when they were written, the whole Corinthian Church was being led astray by the Judauzing leaders.
But that x.-xiii. is part of the severe letter alluded to in i.-ix. is doubted or denied by some critics of great eminence, and the chief arguments urged by them against the hypothesis require consideration.
(a) It is pointed out that all the arguments in favour of the hypothesis are based solely upon internal evidence, and receive no support from documents. There is no ms. or Version or Father that shows a trace of i ,-ix. having ever existed without x.-xiii., or x.-xiii. without i.--ix. ; and these two portions are never transposed.
This objection has great weight, but it is not conclusive. S. Paul wrote at least four letters to the Corinthians. Of these four, the first ( 1 Cor. v. 9) has perished entirely, unless porchance 2 Cor. vi. 14 -vii. I be a fragment of it,-an hypothesis which has been discussed above and rejected. The second (our 1 Corinthians) at once became famous and widely known; e.g. to Clement of Rome, Polycarp, Irenaeus, Athenagoras, &c. The third (2 Cor. ii. 3, 9, vii. 8, 12) has perished entirely, unless x.-xiii. be a fragment of it. The fourth (our 2 Corinthians, or the first nine chapters of it) did not become so quickly known as

1 Corinthians, for there is no evidence that Clement of Rome had heard of it, and traces of it in the Apostolic Fathers are rare. We may conjecture that at Corinth our 1 Corinthians was valued more than any of the other three letters, both on account of its length and of its contents, and that all the other letters were in danger of perishing. The first did perish. We have only to suppose that the third letter became mutilated at the beginning and the fourth letter at the end, and that the two were afterwards put together as one Epistle, and then we have a reasonable explanation of the genesis of our 2 Corinthians out of the first part of the conciliatory letter and the last part of a severe letter which had preceded the conciliatory letter. With regard to the complete change of tone, and the character of the change, between chapters ix. and x. we may compare T. K. Abbott's argument respecting Psalms ix. and x. (Essays on the Original Texts of the Old and New Testaments, p. 200): "They are treated as one Psalm by the LXX. and Vulgate, and by many moderns. There are, however, obvious difficulties in this view. In Ps. ix. the writer speaks with confidence and exultation of the destruction of the impious; whereas in Ps. x. the tone is one of complaint and supplication. Supplication followed by confident hope would be intelligible, not the reverse." So here; not only is there a great change, but the change is in the wrong direction: see introductory note to ch. $x$.
(b) It is urged that the severe letter is mentioned in x .10 , and that therefore $\mathbf{x}$-xiii. cannot be part of the severe letter. 'His letters, they say, are weighty and strong.' This includes the severe letter and refers specially to it.

If this objection could be substantiated, it would be decisive: but it is assertion without proof to say that the severe letter of 2 Cor. ii. 3,9 , vii. 8 is alluded to in x . 10. The lost letter of 1 Cor. $\mathbf{v} .9$ must have been of a stern character; and there are passages in 1 Corinthians (i. 11-13, iii. 1-4, iv. 14, 18-21, and especially v. 1-7) which are also stern. These two letters, combined with the painful and unsuccessful visit, are quite sufficient to explain the taunt alluded to in x. 10.
(c) It is urged that it is very difficult to bring this hypothesis into agreement with the more complicated plan of a double visit to Corinth (2 Cor. i. 15).

Difficulty arises if we suppose that S. Paul had promised the double visit. But he merely says that he was wishing (' $\mathrm{B}_{\mathrm{B}}$ oudo $\mu \eta \nu$ ) to pay it There is nothing to show that the Coriathians knew of the wish till they got this letter from Macedonia. He mentions the wish then, in order to show how much he had been thinking of them at the time when they were suspecting him of careless neglect.
(d) It is urged that the severe letter must have dealt with the case of the incestuous person; and in $\mathrm{x} .-\mathrm{xiii}$. he is not mentioned.

This objection has some force against those who think that x .-xiii is the whole of the severe letter. It has no force at all against those who hold that $x$-xiii. is only the concluding part of the severe letter: the offender may have been dealt with in the earlier part. And x. 1, which stands in no very clear relation to the close of ix. (see notes ad loc.), would be very intelligible if S . Paul had just boen speaking of the views or conduct of others. He would then go on very naturally, 'But $\dot{v} \mu a \mathrm{a}$ ). But, it is not so clear that the severe letter must have mentioned the incestuous person. Shortly before it was sent the Apostle had paid his brief painful visit to Corinth, and during that he would learn whether his instructions respecting this offender had been carried out. There may have been no need to say anything more on the subject.
(e) It is pointed out that words, some of them not common in the Pauline Epistles, are found in both i.-ix. and x.-xiii. The inference is that both are parts of one and the same letter. The coincidences of expression on which stress is laid are such as these; тaлtเขós of S. Paul himself (vii. 6; x. 1), өappeí
 (i. 15, iii. 4, viii. 22 ; x. 2), катà бápka (i. 17, v. 16 bis; x. 2, 3, xi. 18, always in reference to himself), ӧ $\pi \lambda a$ (vi. 7; x. 4), $\nu$ о́ $\boldsymbol{\eta} \mu a$
 (ix. 5; x. 6, 16). All these are in six verses, x. 1-6. Add $\pi \lambda \epsilon о \nu \epsilon к т \in i \nu$ (ii. 11, vii. 2; xii. 17, 18).

Let us give the argument full weight and add other examples; dyvorvs (vi. 6; xi. 3), àүpuпvia (vi. 5; xi. 27), àкатабтабia (vi. 5; xii. 20), д́лдór刀s (vii. 2, ix. 11, 13; xi. 3), סoкццă̧ctv (viii.
 xiii. 3), катє $\rho \gamma$ á $\zeta \epsilon \sigma \theta a t$ (iv. 17, v. 5, vii. 10, ix. 11 ; xii. 12), к кптоs (vi. 5; x. 15, xi. 23, 27), $\pi \epsilon \in \tau o \forall \theta a(i .9$, ii. 3; x. 7), $\pi \in \rho \iota \sigma \sigma \epsilon i a ~(v i i i . ~$ 13, 15 ; xi. 23 bis, xii. 15).

Yet, on the other hand, in i.-ix. woe find $\delta o \xi a 19$ times, $\theta$ iqus 9 times, $\pi a \rho a \kappa \lambda \hat{\eta} \sigma \iota s 11$ times, $\chi^{\text {apd }} 4$ or 5 times, and none of them in x.-xiii.; while in x.-xiii. ä $\sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \epsilon \hat{\nu}$ occurs 6 times and à $\sigma$ Óvela 6 times, and neither of them in i .-ix. Again, there are more than 30 words, not found elsewhere in the Pauline Epistles, which occur in x.-xxii., but not in i.-ix., and more than 50 words, not found elsewhere in the Pauline Epistles, which occur in i.-ix., but not in x.-xiii. (see above, p. xxvi).

Such facts prove very little either way. According to those who maintain the integrity of 2 Corinthians, there was a pause, possibly of some days, after writing i.-ix According to those who separate x -xiii. from i.-ix., the conciliatory i .-ix. was written soon after the severe x -xiii. Therefore, according to both hypotheses, the two portions were written (a) by the same person, $(\beta)$ to the same persons, $(\gamma)$ respecting the same subject, viz. the condition of the Corinthian Church, ( $\delta$ ) about the same time, i.e. with only a short interval between the writing of the one and of the other. In such circumstances, similarities and differences of expression cannot prove much as to whether the two portions belong to one and the same letter or not.

Perhaps the best defence of the traditional view is to say that we know too little about the details of the situation to decide what is credible or incredible. If we knew all the details, we might find the change of tone and tactics between i.-ix. and x-xiii. less surprising. Yet, even if this be admitted, the difficulty remains of supposing that S. Paul, after sending a letter so severe that he was afraid that it would prove fatally exasperating, nevertheless, as soon as his intense anxiety on this point was relieved, repeated the dangerous experiment by writing x.-xiii. This difficulty is not escaped by those who still think that 1 Corinthians can be the letter alluded to in 2 Cor. ii. 3, 9, vii. 8. If S. Paul could be in an agony of apprehension as to the possible effects of the sterner portions of 1 Corinthians, would he be likely to incur the far greater risk of sending such invective as 2 Cor. x.-xiii. 3 Proof is impossible ; but the hypothesis that S. Paul wrote only one severe letter to Corinth, and that x.-xiii. is part (and perhaps the greater part) of it, frees us from some grave difficulties, and involves us in none that are equally grave.

8. Commentaries.

These are very numerous, and a long list will be found in Meyer. Here a small selection will suffice, an asterisk being given to those which have been specially helpful in preparing this edition.

Patristic and Scholastic: Greek.

*Chrysostom. The Homilies on 1 and 2 Corinthians are "among the most perfect specimens of his mind and teaching."
*Theodoret. Migne, P. G. lxxxii. He follows Chrysostom closely, but is sometimes more definite and pointed.

Theophylact. Migne, P. G. cxxv. He follows the Greek Fathers, and is very superior to nearly all Latin Commentators of his period (eleventh and twelfth centuries).

Patristic and Scholastic: Latin.

Ambrosiaster or Pseudo-Ambrosius. An unknown commentator on S. Paul, a.d. 366-384. He uses an Old Latin text, which is important for textual criticism.
*Pseudo-Primasius. Migne, P. L. Lxviii A revision of Pelagius by Cassiodorus and his pupils.

Bede. His commentary is mainly a catena from Augustine.
*Atto Vercellensis. Migne, P. L. exxxiv. Bishop of Vercelli in Piedmont in the tenth century.
*Hervèius Burgidolensis. Migne, P. L. clxxzi. A Benedictine of the monastery of Bourg-Dieu or Bourg-Deols in Berry (d. 1149). Westcott says of his commentary on Hebrews, "for vigour and independence and sobriety and depth he is second to no mediaeval expositor." His notes on 2 Corinthians appear to be unknown to commentators. Atto is also very little known.

Among other mediaeval writers who have written notes on the Pauline Epistles may be mentioned Rabanus Maurus (d. 856), Peter Lombard (d. 1160), and Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274).

NOTES.

In the remarks on questions of textual criticism prefixed to the Notes on each Chapter, it is not intended to enter minutely into each point, but to indicate generally the principal errors and corrections, and occasionally to state the grounds on which a reading is preferred.
In the English renderings thick (Clarendon) type is used to indicate words in which the translation given differs from the A.V.

CHAPTER I.

The title of the Epistle exists in different forms, none of which is original. The earliest form is the simplest; $\pi$ pos copovelious $\beta$ (NABK) :

1. Xpıatoû 'I $\eta$ oov̂ (NBMP) rather than 'I. $\mathrm{X} \rho$. (ADGK).
$\pi$ âotv. Following the uncial mss., the best editors add $\nu$ दो $\phi e \lambda \kappa v$ $\sigma \tau \kappa \delta \nu$ before consonants and vowels alike: $\pi \hat{\alpha} \sigma \iota$ and $\delta v \sigma l$ are occasional exceptions.
2. The text is much confused as to the order of the clauses. Our (NACMP). The latter arrangement is preferable.

3. кal púveral ( KBC ) rather than kal púctal ( FGKL , Vulg.). $\mathrm{AD}^{1}$ omit both words. $\mathrm{BD}^{1} \mathrm{M}$ omit $\boldsymbol{8} \boldsymbol{\text { ot }}$.

4. For $\chi$ dpıv ( $\$ A C D$ ) we should perhaps read xapáv ( $\$^{3} B L P$ ), and we should read $\sigma \chi \eta \hat{\eta} \tau \epsilon$ ( NBC ) rather than $\epsilon_{\chi \eta \tau \varepsilon}(\mathrm{AD})$.

1. 1, 2. Tife Apostolic Salutation.

1. Пẫ入os duббтto入os Xp. 'I. The Apostle designates himself differently in different Epistles. In 1 and 2 Thessalonians and in Philippians he gives only his name. In Philemon he is $\delta \in \sigma \mu$ os $\mathbf{X} \rho$.' I.
 X $\rho \iota \sigma \tau 0 \hat{v}$ 'I. is the poss. gen., stating whose minister he is. The order of these two names differs in mss. here and elsewhere. -But, if we follow the best witnesses, it is clear that in his earlier Epistles (1 and 2 Thes., Gal.) S. Paul always wrote 'I. X $\rho$., and that in his later ones (Phil., Eph., Col., Philem., 1 and 2 'Tim.) he nearly always wrote Xp.'I. The ohange appears to have been made during the period in which Romans and 1 and 2 Corinthians were written, and it is in these three Epistles that the readings are less certain. Here and in iv. 5 X $\rho$. 'I. is probably correct; otherwise xiii. 5. The change is not oapricious. Originally 'I $\eta \sigma o u ̂ s$ was a name, and $\dot{o}$ रpıotós or Xpiotós was a title. Then 'I $\eta \sigma 0 \hat{s}$ X X $\quad$ tatós was a name with a title added. Then Xpiotbs became less and less of a title, and the two words in either order were used simply as a name (see Sanday, Bampton Lecturer, p. 289 and on Rom. i. 1). S. Peul was 'an Apostle of Christ Jesus,' not in the stricter sense in which the Lord Himself gave the title to the Twelve (Lk. vi. 13; Mk iii. 14), but in the wider sense in which the title of Apostle was applied to Barnabas (Acts xiv. 4, 14), Andronicus and Junias (Rom. xvi. 7), James the brother of the Lord (Gal. i. 19), and others (Eph. iv. 11). But in this Epistle, as in Gal. i. 1, he seems to claim an uniqueness of Apostleship which placed him on un equality with the Twelve.
 his thankfulness for the Divine call, and reminds the Corinthians that what he says deserves atteution.
 a Christian. In the papyri a $\delta \epsilon \lambda \phi \delta s$ occurs to signify a member of a heathen religious association (Deissmann, Bible Studies, pp. 87, 88). The $\mu a \theta \eta r a l$ of the Gospels become the $\dot{d} \delta \in \lambda \phi o l$ or the $a y t o r$ of the Epistles. In the Gospels $\mu a \partial \eta \tau \eta$ 's occurs about 238 times, in the were known by their relation to Him; after His Ascension, by their relation to one another or by their calling. In Acts we have the transition; there both $\mu a \theta \eta \tau a l$ and $\dot{a} \delta \epsilon \lambda \phi o l$ are fairly common, and ol äyoc beginning to be used (ix. 13, 32, 41, xxvi. 10). This consistent and intelligible usage is indirect confirmation of the early date of the Gospels. We may believe that Timothy had more to do with the composition of 2 Corinthians than the otherwise unknown Sosthenes had to do with that of 1 Corinthians; but after the first few verses he seems to be left out of sight. The coupling of his name with that of S. Paul shows the Corinthians that Timothy retains the Apostle's confidence. See Origen on Mt. xvi. 19. When S. Paul writes to Timothy, he calls him, not a ' brother' but a 'son' (1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2).
 he is addressing ( 1 Cor. i. 1, x. 32, xi. 16, 22, xv. 9; Gal. i. 13 ; 1 Thes. ii. 14; 2 Thes. i. 4). Comp. $\dot{\eta}$ бuvarivin Kuplov (Num. xvi. 3) and $\epsilon \kappa \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma i a$ Kuplou (Deut. xxiii. 8). Contrast $\tau 0 \hat{\theta} \theta \in 0 \hat{0}$ here with the preceding $\theta \in o \hat{v}$ : ó $\theta \in \dot{d}$ " brings before us the Personal God Who has been revealed to us in a personal relation to ourselves: the latter fixes our thoughts on the general conception of the Divine Character and Being " (Westcott on 1 Jn iv. 12). See on xii. 13.
 saints which are in the whole of Achaia (R.V.). This is no evidence of "a considerable body of believers": whatever the number may be, the Apostle addresses them all. Nor does it show that this is a circular letter to be sent to other Churches in Achaia. The letter to the Galatians is circular; but that is addressed $\pi a ? s$ e $\kappa \kappa \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma i a / s$ tîs Tadarias, each of which was to have the letter. There were Christians outside Corinth, e.g. at Cenchreae, who had heard of the disorders at Corinth, and perhaps taken part in them; and all these are included in the address. 'Achaia' is used in a rhetorically general sense. The Roman province included the Peloponnese and North Greece as far as Macedonia, which was a separate province; but S. Paul is thinking of those who were interested in the Corinthian community (vi. 11).

Both ỡ $\sigma \eta$ and ovi $\sigma \iota y$ might have been omitted, as in Col, i. 2, It is perhaps owing to Hebrew influence that the fuller expression is found here, Rom. i. 7; 1 Cor. i. 2; Eph. i. 1 ; Phil. i. 1.

By afoc is not meant that these Christians have already attained to holiness, but that they are 'consecrated' or set apart for a holy parpose,-the service of the Holy One. See Sanday and Headlam on Rom. i. 7.
 (Acts xv. 23, xxiii. 26; Jas i. 1) with the Hebrew Shalom (2 Sam. xviii. 28); in both cases with the meaning enriched: comp. Num. vi. 25, 26. The one is the favour of God, the other the blessing of being restored to His favour after being opposed to Him. This is the usual salutation in the Pauline, as in the Petrine Epistles, 1 and 2 Timothy being exceptions. In them and in 2 John we have $\chi \alpha \rho c s, \varepsilon_{\lambda \epsilon o s, ~ e l p \gamma p \eta \text {, and }}$
 tion of Jesus Christ as Lord with God as Father under one preposition is evidence, all the more powerful for being indirect, of the hold which the doctrine of the equality of Christ with the Father had on the Apostle's mind. In the earliest of all his letters (1 Thes. i. 1) we find the same phenomenon. Comp. v. 10; 1 Cor. i, 3 and the benediction at the end of this letter (xiii. 14) and of that to the Ephesians (vi. 23).

In the O.T. God is the Father of the nation (Deut. xxxii. 6 ; Is. lxiii. 16 ; Jer. iii. 4, 19, xxxi. 9 ; Mal. i. 6, ii. 10). In the Apocrypha individuals begin to speak of God as their Father (Wisd.ii. 16, xiv. 3; Ecclus. xxiii. 1, 4; Tohit xiii. 4; 3 Mac. vi. 3). Christ gave His disciples the right to do this (Jn i. 12, comp. iii. 3; Rom. viii. 23; Gal. iv. 5).

1. 3-11. Thanesgiving ror Recent Deliverance from Peril of Death.

The thanksgiving is a conspicuous feature in S. Paul's letters, and its absence in the severe letter to the Galatians is the more remarkable on that account : comp. 1 Thes. i. 2; 2 Thes. i. 3; 1 Cor. i. 4 ; Rom. i. 8 ; Eph. i. 3; Col. i. 3; Phil. i. 3; 1 Tim. i. 12 ; 2 Tim. i. 3 ; Philem. i. 4. This example is perhaps only an outburst of gratitude towards God, and of affection towards his readers. But he may be aiming at giving comfort to others. The word 'comfort' ( $\pi a \rho \alpha \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma / s$ six times, тарака入єiv four) occurs ten times in five verses, a fact which the A.V. obscures by substituting, four times, 'consolation.' Usually S. Paul thanks God for the condition of those whom he addresses; here for his own rescue from a terrible crisis, which he uses to win the sympathy of the Corinthians.
 be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ (R.V.), as in the A.V. of Eph. i. 3 and 1 Pet. i. 3. Comp. xi. 31; Rom. xy. 6. It is He Who is both the God of Jesus (Jn xx. 17) and the Father of Jesus (Jn ii. 16, v. 17, &c.) that is blessed by the Apostle. The Evangelist who teils us most about the Divinity of Christ tells us that He Himself spoke of the Father as His God, and we need not think that either S. Paul or S. Peter would shrink from expressing the same truth. Had they shrunk from it, they would have avoided language which is most naturally interpreted as meaning 'the God of Jesus

 2, 12). The wording here is identioal with Eph. i. 3 and 1 Pet. i. 3, where see Hort's note. S. Paul commonly says cuxaptotê (or cuxapaбтov̂ $\epsilon \epsilon \nu) \tau \hat{\varphi} \quad \theta \epsilon \hat{\varphi}$. Only here and Eph. i. 3 does he substitute than of men; in the N.T. always (eight times) of God. A benediction of God immediately after the address seems to have been common in Jewish letters. See Bigg, St Peter and St Jude, p. 16.

Not $\epsilon \sigma r l$, but $\ell \sigma \tau \omega$, is to be supplied with $\epsilon \dot{\lambda} \lambda \sigma \gamma \eta \tau b s$.
 merciful God who is the Source of all true comfort' is the meaning: but 'of mercies' is perhaps stronger than 'merciful.' Comp. o eeòs $\tau \hat{\eta} s$ è $\lambda \pi i \delta o s$ (Rom. xv. 13). 'Mcrcies ' (Rom. xii. 1) for 'mercy' is $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu$ ф ${ }^{\prime} \tau \omega \nu$ (Jas i. 17). See Ellicott on Eph. i. 8.
 $\theta \lambda l \psi \iota s(4,8$, ii. 4) and $\theta \lambda i \beta \omega$ (i. 6) as he repeats тара́к $\lambda \eta \sigma$ a and napaкa入civ, and the repetition should be preserved in translation.

The $\dot{\eta} \mu \hat{a} s$ and $\dot{\eta} \mu \omega \bar{y}$ are probably not a gentle substitute for $\mu \varepsilon$ and mov. Where he meuns himself exclusively he commonly uses the singular (vv. 15, 17, 23, ii. 1-13, vii. 4, 8-12, 14-16, ix. 1, 2, \&c.), sometimes with pronouns added which make the singular more emphatic ( $v .23$, ii. $2,10, \mathrm{x} .1$, xii. 13). Where he uses the plural he perhaps generally includes Timothy or others, according to the context: see Lightfoot on 1 Thes. ii. 4. But changes of number are frequent and rapid (vii. 3-16), sometimes in the same verse (i. 13). On the other hand, while the plural prevails i. 3-12 and ii. 14-vii. 1, in i. 15-17 and ii. 1-10 the singular is constant. It is more certain that the singular is always personal than that the plural commonly includes someone else. In vii. $5 \boldsymbol{\eta} \boldsymbol{\sigma} \dot{\alpha} \rho \xi \dot{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ must mean S . Paul only; comp. 1 Thes. iii. 1-5. Here $\dot{\eta} \mu \hat{a} s$ may mean all believers.
$\theta \lambda i \psi$ s implies being pressed down or in great straits. The Vulgate has trilulatio here, v. 8, iv. 8, 17, vi. 4, vii. 4, viii. 2; pressura next line, Jn xyi. 21, 33; Phil. i. 16; passio Col. i. 24, where it is used of the sufferings of Christ. It is under the influence of the Vulgate that the A.V. here has first 'tribulation' and then 'trouble.' In the first case it is afflection as a whole that is meant, in the second, every hind of affliction (M.t. iii. 10, 19, xij. 31; Lk. iv. 13) : Blass, Gram. N.T. § 47. 9. The $\bar{\pi} \pi i$ expresses the occasion on which the comfort is bestowed.
 in giving comfort, that it should be communicated to others. Dat ut demus. Community of feeling with others is the note of the Church (Jn xiii. 35). It was his intense sympathy which gave S. Paul such power in winning, regaining, and retaining converts. Note the attraction of $\dot{\eta} s$ for $\dot{\eta}$, as in Eph. i. 6, iv. 1, a form of attraction which is rare: attraction is common in the N.'T., but is not so varied as in olassical Greek.
 sufferings of the Messiah abound unto us,' which means 'in reference to us' or 'in our case'; so that the 'in us' of the A.V. is substantially correct: comp. Rom. v. 15, viii. 18. The comfort is given in proportion to the suffering, and this correspondence between comfort and suffering is effected in Christ. The sufferings of Christ's ministers are identified with His sufferings in that they have the same cause and the same end,-the opposition of evil and the vanquishing of evil. Comp. iv. 10; Rom. viii. 17; Phil. iii. 10 ; Heb. xiii. 13; 1 Pet. iv. 13. That Christ, now in glory, still suffers in His members, is a thought which has no place here, and perhaps nowhere in Scripture. For tà тaөضं $\mu a \tau a \tau$ r. $\chi$. comp. Lk. xxiv. 26, and see Hort on 1 Pet. i. 11.
alliws 8 เ̀̀ tov̂ Xpırtov̂. Even so our comfort also aboundeth through the Christ. The correspondence is exact, кa0 $\dot{\omega}$...obicus: 'just as, so' or 'as, even so.' 'Through the Christ,' who dwells in us through His Spirit; Eph. iii. 16-19. Comp. xiii. 4.

Somewhat different is Bishop Lightfoot's interpretation: "the sufferings of Christ are said to 'overflow' ( $\pi \varepsilon \rho / \sigma \sigma \epsilon \varepsilon^{\prime} \epsilon \nu$ ) upon the тô̂ $\chi$ рtotoû (Col. i. 24), a passage which he regards as similar in meaning to this verse, though not identical with it. According to this view the sufferings of the Messiah (rô $\chi$ peatov) overfiow on to those who belong to the Messianic people,-the new Israel,-of which the Apostle was marked out as a representative.
6. Respeating the text see critical note. It is possible that rîs but no authority omits it in both places. But whether we be afficted, it is for your comfort and salvation; or whether we be comforted, it is for your comfort, which worketh in the endurance of the same sufferings which we also suffer. But rather than 'and' for $\delta \epsilon$, because the connexion is that the Corinthians are gainers whichever be considered, the affliction or the comfort. So far from being a self-secking and domineering pretender, as the Apostle's enemies said, both his suffering and his consolation were for the good of his flock. Whenever the sufferings of the Christ abound in them, i.e. when they have to suffer in the conflict with evil, the Apostle's afflictions will be a help to them. This is a real communio sanctorum. For $\dot{v} \mu \omega \hat{v}$ see on xii. 19.

The alternative elre...elre...is common in all the groups of the Pauline Epistles, excepting the Pastorals; v. 9, 10, 13, viii. 23, xii. 2, 3; 1 Cor. twelve times; Rom. xii. 6, 7, 8; Eph. vi. 8; Phil. i. 18, 20, 27; Col. i. 16, 20; 1 Thes. v. 10; 2 Thes. ii. 15; elsewhere in N.T. 1 Pet. ii. 13 only. The passive of èefpein does not occur in the N.T., the middle only in S. Paul (iv. 12; Gal. v. 6; Eph. iii. 20; Col. i. 29; 1 Thes. ii. 13; 2 Thes. ii. 7) and S. James (v. 16). Which worketh means 'which makes itself felt in the patient enduring (R.V.) of the same sufferings.' Mere enduring of what cannot be avoided may be barren pain or worse. It is endurance without rebellion or reproach

This knowledge gives the sure hope that, when affliction comes, the Corinthians will take it in the right spirit and have their full measure of comfort; $\boldsymbol{\varepsilon} \sigma \tau \boldsymbol{\epsilon}$ is the timeless present, and is not to be understood of the moment of the Apostle's writing.

 aflliction which came to pass in Asia. The Roman province of Asia, which had been bequeathed to the Romans by Attalus III. in b.c. 133, is meant. In popular language 'Asia' meant the coastlands of Asia Minor on the Aegean (see Hort on 1 Pet. i. 1). It included the Seven Churches (Rev. i. 4). Comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 19; Rom. xvi, 5; 2 Tim. i. 15 .
 (Gal. i. 13), above strength, we were welghed down. The load in itself was an excessive one, and it was more than there was strength to sustain. Or $\kappa a \theta^{\prime} \dot{\text { ì }} \boldsymbol{\epsilon} \epsilon \rho \beta \circ \lambda \not \eta_{\nu}$ may qualify $\dot{u} \pi \epsilon \in \rho$ dúva $\mu \nu$, exceedingly above our strength, so that we utterly despaired even of life. In the N.T. imepBody is peculiar to this group of Epistles, where it occurs eight times; in the LXX. only once, in the phrase кa $\theta^{\prime} \dot{\psi} \pi \epsilon \rho \beta o \lambda \eta \nu(4$ Mac. iii. 18), which S. Paul ases iv. 17; 1 Cor. xii. 31; Gal. i. 13; Rom. vii. 13. Note the strong compound $\epsilon \xi a \pi \sigma \rho \eta \theta \hat{\eta}^{p a t}$ (here and iv. 8 only).

What is the terrible affiction which befell $$$. Paul (and Timothy?) in Asia? Not the outcry against the Apostle raised by Demetrius at Ephesus (Acts xix. 23-41), for S. Paul's life was scarcely in danger then; and, as soon as the uproar was over, he peacefally followed Timothy and Erastus to Macedonia (Acts xx. 1). And perhaps neither a shipwreck nor a severe illness would have been classed as 'sufferings of the Christ.' More probably he refers to the crushing news, which had been brought to him in Asia, of the state of things in Corinth, especially as regards repudiation of the Apostle's teaching and rebellion against his authority. As he does not specify what it is, it mast be something well known to the Corinthians. All that he tells them here is how severe it was. To the highly sensitive and tender-hearted missionsry, this revolt of the Church which he had founded in one of the most important centres in the world, and which he loved so well, was overwhelming. He did not expect, and perhaps he hardly wished, to survive it. The news of it may well have produced an amount of suffering such as is here described. Nor is there any improbability in his letting the Corinthians know how their conduct had affected him, especially after Titus, who would tel! them the nature of S. Paul's aflliction, had left him. It is part of the strong appeal which in this letter he makes to them; for it proves his intense interest and affection, and may convince them of the gravity of their conduct. It might well be counted among 'sufferings of the Cbrist.' Like those, it was the outcome of the conflict with evil, and (to a large extent) of conflict with Jewish hostility. When all the circumstances are considered, the language of $v v$. 8-10 does not seem extravagant for such a trial. But a combination of personal and official troubles may be meant.

 Nay, we ourselves within ourselves have got the answer of death. 'When we asked whether it was to be life or desth for us, our own presentiment said, death.' The $\dot{a} \lambda \lambda \alpha{ }^{\prime}$ does not mark opposition, but confirms what precedes: 'you may disbelieve this, but more than this is true': comp. viii. 7, x. 2; Jn xvi. 2. The A.V. has 'sentence' in the text and 'answer' in the margin; the R.V. transposes. Josephus and Polybius use $\dot{d} \pi \delta \kappa \rho, \mu a$ for a decision of the Roman Senate; and in an inscription dated A.D. 51, and therefore about the time of this letter, it is used of the decisions of the Emperor Claudius (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 257). Therefore 'sentence' or 'verdict' is admissible, although 'answer' is perhaps correct. Chrysostom gives as equivalents, $\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \psi \hat{\eta} \phi \sigma \nu, \tau \grave{\eta} \nu \kappa \rho / \sigma \nu \nu, \tau \grave{\eta} \nu \pi \rho \sigma \sigma \delta$ окíav... $\tau \grave{\eta} \nu \dot{\alpha} \pi \delta \phi \alpha \sigma \omega$. The Vulgate has responsum. The word occurs nowhere else in Biblical Greek. With the perfect, 系 $\sigma \chi_{j} \kappa a \mu \epsilon \nu$, which vividly recalls the situation and prolongs it into the present, comp. ii. 13 and vii. 5.

'Will still deliver' intimates that the peril is not entirely over, or that it may return. 'This is against the uproar at Ephesus and shipwreck. It fits severe illness; but it fits anxiety about Corintbian loyalty or a combination of troubles still better. In Biblical Greek $\tau \eta \lambda$ ккoùtos is rare; here only in S. Paul.
 helping together on our behalf by your supplication (R.V.). For different wonds for 'prayer' see Phil. iv. 6; 1 Tim. ii. 1: $\delta \in \eta \sigma$ oss is often used of intercession; ix. 14; Rom. x. 1; Phil. i. 4, 19; 2 Tim. i. 3; Heb. v. 7. See Trench, Synonyms of the N.T. §li. The misconduct of the Corinthians had nearly killed the Apostle: but, now that he has the good news brought by Titus, he feels sure of their help; and he tells them that his fature deliverance from similar danger depends upon their intercessions cooperating with his own tva $\ell_{k} \pi 0 \lambda \lambda \omega \hat{\omega} \pi \rho o \sigma \omega \pi \pi \omega v$. The general meaning of this clause is evident, however we may explain the details. Thankfulness for their deliverance is not to be confined to Paul and Timothy: their preservation will be recognized as a blessing by many, who will thank God for it. The iva depends upon $\sigma u y u \pi o v \rho \gamma o u ́ \nu \tau \omega \nu \dot{v} \mu \hat{\omega}$ rather than upon $\dot{\rho} \dot{\sigma} \sigma \epsilon \tau a l$. If $\delta i \grave{a} \pi 0 \lambda \lambda \hat{\omega} \nu$ is neuter, it mcans 'by many words'; but it is probably masculine, and yet is not the same group of persons as $\epsilon \kappa \pi 0 \lambda \lambda \omega \hat{\mu} \pi \rho o \sigma \omega \pi \omega \mu$. Rather, the latter refers to those who by their intercessions won the gift for the Apostle, while סid $\pi o \lambda \lambda \omega \nu$ refers to those who give thanks for it (A.V., R.V.). Probably $\pi \rho \sigma \sigma \omega \pi o \nu$ is here 'person' rather than 'face,' like persona $=(1)$ 'mask'; (2) 'person.' See on ii. 10. But it is possible to keep the literal meaning in the sense of the expression of gratitude beaming 'out from many faces.' In that case 'the many faces,' or mouthe, are those of the many by whom thanks are given: that out of many lips thanks may be given by many on our behalf for the blessing bestowed upon us. It is unlikely that the first $\pi 0 \lambda \lambda \hat{\omega} \nu$ is the genitive after $\pi \rho o \sigma \dot{\omega} \pi \omega \nu$, although the Vulgate takes it so: ut ex multorum personis ejus quae in nobis est donationis per multos gratiae agantur pro nobis. In the N.T. $\chi$ d́pıaцa is peculiar to S . Paul, excepting 1 Pet. iv. 10. Here, as there, it is used of an external blessing. It commonly means an internal gift of grace, especially some extraordinary power; 1 Cor. i. 7, xii. 4,

i. 12-vii. 16. Apologia pro Vita sua.

This is the first of the two (or three?) main divisions of the letter. In it he reminds the Corinthians of his relations with them, and enters into a variety of explanations of his conduct. He vindicates his apostolic walk and character, shows what the office, sufferings, and life of an Apostle are, and what claims he has upon them. Titus has convinced him that the Corinthians now recognize these claims, and that he may consider himself to be entirely reconciled to them.

For convenience we. may break up this first division into three sections; i. 12 -ii. 17; iii. 1 -vi. 10 ; vi. 11 -vii. 16.
i. 12-ii. 17. Vindication of his Condjct, especially with regard to the Charae of Lightness and to the Cabe of the Grieyous Offender.
 The triplet, каú $\chi \eta \sigma \iota s$ (vii. 4, 14, viii. 24, xi. 10, 17), каú $\eta \eta \mu$ (i. 14, v. 12, ix 3), and каv $\chi \hat{a} \sigma \theta a \iota$ ( 20 times), occurs more often in 2 Corinthians than in all the rest of the N.T. Outside the Pauline Epistles none of the three occurs more than twice. The A.V. is capricious; 'glorying,' vii. 4; 'boasting,' vii. 14, viii. 24, xi. 10, 17 ; 'rejoicing,' here. 'Rejoicing' is wrong, and 'boast' is wanted for aúxeiv (Jas iii. 5). The Apostle's repetition of the word must be preserved by 2 uniform translation. The $\gamma^{d} \rho$ closely connects this section with the preceding Thanksgiving. 'I feel sure of your intercessions, for my conscience tells me that I have done nothing to forfeit them.'
 the conscience is distinguished from the self as a power giving separate testimony. इuveínots is 'co-knowledge' (comp. 1 Cor. iv. 4): consciousness of one's acts is one knowledge; reflexion on their merit is another. Neither word nor thing was known to Plato or Aristotle; the use of the term seems to begin with the Stoics. Comp. Wisd. xvii. 10. In N.T. the word occurs only in the Pauline Epistles, S. Paul's speeches in Acts (xxiii. 1, xxiv. 16), Hebrews, 1 Peter, and [Jn] viii. 9. See Westcott on Heb. ix. 9 and Bigg on 1 Pet. ii. 19 ; also Cremer, Lex. p. 233.
 cerity. See critical note. 'Sincerity of God' is that which has its source in God, as is seen from what follows; but 'pleasing to God' and 'Godlike, Divine' are also possible. See Deissmann, Bible Studies, pp. 88, 194, where it is shown that this use of duaarpé $\phi \in \sigma \theta a u$ and $\dot{\alpha} \nu a \sigma \tau \rho 0 \phi \hat{\eta}$ of moral conduct is common in secular language.  not sincere, for I write nothing that is inconsistent with what you read in my other letters, or with your experience of my life and conduct.' The present, rodoopey, does not refer to this letter exclusively, and perhaps does not include it. He is appealing to what they already know of him. 'My letters are consistent with one another and with my behaviour, as you have known it in the past, and (I hope) as you will know it to the end.' The Corinthians had previously reccived three letters from him, the lost letter of 1 Cor. v. 9 , 1 Corinthians, and a third letter, very severe in tone, which is either lost or preserved in part in x.-xiii. So they had enough of his written words to judge him by. See on v. 23, ii. 3, 9.
 even acknowledge. Note the present tense: ' my meaning lies on the surface. You read it at once; you read it and you recognize it.' For the cbaracteristic play upon words comp. iii. 2, iv. 8, vi. 10 , vii. 10, x. 6, 12. In classical Greek àvaүıрஸَкєтe might mean 'recognize, admit'; and it has been proposed to go back to that meaning here: 'we write none other things than what ye recognize or even acknowledge,' or (imitating the play on words) 'than those things to which ye assent and even consent.' And it is proposed than thirty times in the N.T., and seems almays to mean 'read' (Eph. iii. 4; Col. iv. 16; 1 Thes. v. 27, &o.). In this Epistle it must mean 'read' in iii. 15, and almost certainly in iii. 2. It is safer to retain the usual N.T. meaning here, as Chrysostom does. Indeed the use of the word in connexion with the recipients of a letter, in contrast to the writer, seems to be decisive.
There is perhaps a mixture of constructions in "d $\lambda \lambda^{\prime}$ ' ${ }^{\prime}$, between oúк enticc. He is not quite confident : I hope you will acknowledge to the end. 'Even to the end' (A.V.) is from the false reading кal 'ws renous (D'5LMP). As in 1 Cor. i. 8, 'to the end' means to the end of the world. The expectation of Christ's speedy return was then so vivid that the difference between 'till I die' and 'until the day of the Lord Jesus' was not great.

15-24. The rest of this chapter and part of the next are taken up with the Apostle's defence of himself against a charge of 'lightness' (èappla), i.e. of not caring for the Corinthians or for his engagements to them. That he is disproving a charge of faithlessness, in having failed to visit them after promising that he would do so, is perhaps not correct. He tells them here that, at the very time when they were suspecting him of neglecting them and treating them lightly, he was intending to pay them a double visit. There is nothing to show that he had promised two visits, or that, until they read this letter, they had ever heard of his project of paying them two visits, although they had heard of his purpose of paying them one.
 is of late origin (Hatch, Biblical Greek, p. 13) and is exclusively Pauline in the N.T. (iii. 4, viii. 22, x. 2; Eph. iii. 12 ; Phil. iii. 4). Comp. v. 9, ii. 3, x. 7.
 He does not say, 'I promised.' It is possible to take $\pi \rho o ́ \tau \epsilon \rho o v$ with ' $\beta$ ovió $\mu \eta \nu$ : ' I was formerly desirous.' But it goes better with what follows: to come first unto you, viz. before going to Macedonia, where he is when he writes this letter. To this 'first' ( $\pi \rho \delta \quad$ repoy) the Sevtépav xapáv refers: that ye might have a second joy; the first on his way to Macedonia, the second on his way back. The reading $\chi$ doip may be correct; the two words being sometimes confused in mss., as in $3 \mathrm{Jn} \mathrm{4} .\mathrm{An} \mathrm{Apostle's} \mathrm{visit} \mathrm{would} \mathrm{bring} \mathrm{grace} \mathrm{(Rom}. \mathrm{i}. \mathrm{11}$, xv. 29) and produce joy (Phil. i. 25). In explaining $\delta \in u \tau \in \rho a y$ we must not count the first long visit, during which $S$. Paul founded the Corinthian Church, or the second short visit, in which $\epsilon \bar{\delta} \lambda \tilde{d} \pi \eta$ (ii. 1) he spoke sharply about some of the disorders. This second visit may be regarded as certain (Lightfoot, Biblical Essays, p. 274); but it is not alluded to here. The language here is simple and intelligible, if we interpret it of the Apostle's intended double visit to Corinth, before and after the visit to Macedonia. For other instances in which he tells his readers of intended visits, which he has not been able to carry out, comp. 1 Thes. ii. 18; Rom. i. 13, xp. 22. See also Acts xvi. 6. Atto of Vercelli understands the first grave of the Apostle's letter, the second of his visit, Epistola ejus imago fuit; praesentia corporis, veritas.
 (A.V.) suggests 'pass by without visiting you,' which is the opposite of the meaning. 'By you to pass into M.' (R.V.) suggests 'by your help to pass on to M.' which is not the meaning. The meaning is, through you to pass on unto M., and again from M. to come to you, and by you to be set forward on my way unto Judaea. The changes, cis... $\pi \rho \delta s$...sls should be marked in translation; ' unto...to...unto,' or 'into...unto...into': not 'into...unto...toward' (A. $\nabla$.), nor 'into... unto...unto' (R.  and be omitted in English, or mean 'that with which you charge me.' In the latter case it corresponds to our inverted commas; comp. Eph. iv. 9; Gal. iv. 25. The repetition is for emphasis, as in $\dot{\alpha} \mu \hat{\eta} \nu, \dot{\alpha} \mu \dot{\eta} \nu$; and the meaning possibly is that, in his levity of character, what he says cannot be relied upon. There may be allusion to something in his letters. In 1 Cor. xvi. $5-8$ he promised to come to them. In the second lost letter, between our First and Second, he may have said something different. See notes on ii. 3 and vii. 8. The conjectural reading, tò pai oo kal tò of pal (Baljon, Markland, Michaelis, Naber), has no authority.

Some commentators, both ancient and modern, interpret the ' yea yea' and 'nay nay' as meaning 'that out of proud self-will, when I decide to do a thing, $I$ do it, and when I decide not to do a thing, I refuse to do it, without considering the will of God.' Even if the words can mean this, it does not fit the context. He was not eharged with obstinacy, but with want of steadfastness: and there is no hint of an opposition between his will and God's will. Rather, he asks them, whether they think that, like an anscrupulous man of the world, he says Yes and No in the same breath. 'Do I follow mere whims, that there should be in my life a perpetual variation,-a decision to-day, an alteration to-morrow, refusal following on consent?'
 faithful, in that our word toward you is not yea and nay. Comp. I Cor. i. 9, x. 13; 1 Thes. v. 24; 2 Thes. iii. 3. Neither Wiclif, following the Vulgate, nor Tyndele, nor Cranmer takes the words as an adjuration (A.V., R.V.), 'as God is faithful.' Rom, xiv. 11 is urged in support of this ; but there we have a known form of adjuration, which this is not. It is safer not to turn either this or xi. 10 Gospel (v. 19): hence be quite naturally returns from the singular (vv. 15-17) to the plural (18-22). 'Our doctrine is plain enough. The faithfulness of God is reflected in it, and you can find no inconsistency there. If, then, we have been faithful in the greater things, why do jou distrust me in the less?' He says érriv, not $\dot{\epsilon} \gamma^{\prime} v \epsilon \tau o$ or $\tilde{\eta}^{\nu} \nu$ (see critical note), because the doctrine is still before them; they all know what he tanght month after month: autous $\kappa a \lambda \hat{\omega} \nu$ els $\mu a p r u p l a \nu$ (Theodoret). Possibly there is the further thought, 'This is more than my Judaizing opponents can say. They make God to be not faithful. He has promised salvation to all. They say, Yea, He has to the Jews; to the Gentiles, nay.'

'There was no inconsistency in our doctrine, for what we preached was One in whom inconsistency is impossible."  ing consistent with itself, it was also harmonious with that of his fellow-missioners. It was one and the same Christ that was preached always by all three.

There is not much doubt that the Silvanus of the Pauline Epistles (1 Thes. i. 1; 2 Thes. i. 1) is the Silvanus of 1 Pet. v. 12 and the Silas of Acta xv. 22, 27, 32 [not 34], 40, xvi. 19-29, xvii. 4-15, xviii. 5. As in the case of Saul and Paul, the relation of the name Silas to the name Silvanus is doubtful. Abbreviated names often ended in as, as Epaphras, Hermas, Nymphas, Zenas. But the usual abbreviation of Silvanus would be Silvas (Joseph. Bel. Jud. vir. viii. 1); and, if Silas be the original name, the common enlargement of that would be Silanus. But this is not conclusive, for experience shows that great freedom exists as to the modification of names. Silas may be the Aramaic Sili with a Greek termination. Silas was a Roman citizen (Acts xvi. 37), and as such, and in connexion with the Roman family of the Silvani, he may have got the name Silvanus. A Silvanus may have manumitted silas or one of his forefathers. In that case neither name is derived from the other. See Bigg, St Peter and St Jude, pp. 84, 85. We know nothing more of Silvanus or Silas after his working at Corinth with Paul and Timothy, except that he was the bearer or draughtsman of 1 Peter (v. 12). It is at Corinth that we lose sight of him. The agreement of Acts xviii. 5 with the mention of Silvanus and Timothy here is an undesigned coincidence which confirms both writings. The identification of Silvanus with Luke may be safely rejected: see Lightfoot's article on Acts in Smith's Dict. of the Bible, 2nd ed.
 whom we preached did not prove to be yea and nay, but in Him yea has come to be. He did not show Himself to be one who said both Yes and No to the promises of God, but in Him the fulfilment of them has come to pass. It is simplest to make $\bar{\nu} \nu$ aúr $\hat{\varphi}$ refer to Christ.
 soever be the promises of God, in Him is the yea (R.V.), or possibly, in Him is their yea, i.e. their fulfilment. Numerous as they have been, Christ has fulfilled them all, not merely those which affect the Jews. For here again ép aúrê probably means 'in Christ.' S. Paul says promises, not prophecies. He is not thinking of such fulfilments as $\mathbb{S}$. Matthew (i. 22, ii. $5,15,17,23$, \&o.) and $\mathbb{S}$. John (xii. 38, xiii. 18, xix. 24, 36) love to suggest, but of such as he points out Rom. ix. 25, 33, Gal. iii. 8, 22. Both e $\pi \pi a \gamma \gamma \in \lambda\left(a\right.$ and $\epsilon \pi a \gamma \gamma^{f} \lambda \lambda о \mu a c$ are used in the N.T. in two main senses: (1) the promises of the O.T. which are fulfilled by the Gospel (Aets xiii. 32, xxvi. 6; Rom. iv. 13-20, ix. 4, \&o.) ; (2) the promises made by Christ (Gal. iii. 14; Eph. i. 13). 'Etaryèia is one of the words which links the disputed passage, vi. 14-vii. 1 , to the rest of the letter.
 through Him ls the Amen (R.V.), viz. the Amen in public worship (1 Cor. xiv. 16; Deut. xxvii. 15 ff.; Neh. v. 13, viii. 6; Ps. xli. 14). By uttering the Amen in the -public services the Corinthians had given their assent to this preaching of Christ. It was through His (or God's) fulfilment of the promises that their Amen came to be uttered. Or perhaps better, the Nal refers to Christ's promise, the ' $A \mu \eta{ }^{\prime} \nu$ to the response of the disciple: comp. Rev. xxii. 20. The other reading seems to make 'the Amen' a mere repetition of 'the yea,' like ' $\Delta \mathrm{bba}$, Father.'
 instruments, as in $v$. 19. The emphasis is on $\tau \hat{\psi} \theta \epsilon \hat{\psi}$. The sequence runs thus: God made promises; Christ fulfilled them all; the Apostles preached Him as the fulfilment; the Corinthians said Amen to this; God was glorified (viii. 19) through this effectual preaching.
 The $\dot{\eta} \mu \mathrm{a} s$ may be the same throughout $v v .21,22,-$ - as teachers, us Apostles.' The $\sigma \dot{v} y \dot{v} \mu i \nu \nu$ need not be carried to the clauses which follow. Teachers and taught alike are continually being 'confirmed unto Christ' by God, and in this blessed fact he eagerly couples the Corinthians with himself; but the anointing and sealing may here refer to those who are set apart for a special office. No doubt there is a sense in which all Christians are anointed and sealed; but that is perhaps not what is meant here. The ohange of tense, and the omission of $\sigma \dot{\nu} \nu \dot{v} \mu \hat{\nu} \nu$ although $\dot{\eta} \mu a s$ is repeated, point to a distinction; and the aorists may refer to the definite occasion when the ministers were consecrated to their work, and should not, as in the A.V., be rendered as perfects. See Waite in the Speaker's Commentary. In Lk. iv. 18 and Acts $x .38$ exptrev and t $\chi$ ptras are used of God's sending Jesus as the Preacher of the good tidings; and here $\chi$ ploas may be meant to refer to X $\rho / \sigma \tau 6 \nu$ : 'who confirmeth us unto Christ and made us christs (anointed ones).' The anointing is with the Holy Spirit. Elisha is anointed ( 1 Kings xix. 16), and receives the spirit of Elijah ( 2 Kings ii. 9, 15). If $\sigma \dot{\nu} \nu \dot{u} \mu \hat{\nu}$ be carried on, and $\chi \rho l \sigma a s$ and $\sigma \phi \rho$. be understood of the whole body of believers, the change of tense may be explained as meaning that those whom God once for all consecrated and made His own, these He ever stablisheth. The closely parallel passages, Eph. i. 13, iv. 30, favour the application of $\sigma \phi \rho$. to all Christians. With the pregnant construction $\beta \in \beta a \iota \omega \nu$ eis X $\rho$. comp. Eph.iv. 15 and Ellicott's note; and with $\chi$ ploas comp. I Jn ii. 20, 27.

The sealing is not a mere change of metaphor; it continues and extends what has just been stated. Seals have had an euormous use in the East, and without a seal no document was valid.

This may be part of the meaning here; 'God stamped us as a guarantee of genuineness, especially by the signs of His power which we manifested ' (xii. 12; Rom. xv. 18, 19 ; Eiph. i. 13, iv. 30: comp. 1 Cór. ix. 2). ii. 1-17. The Vindication continued.

There should be no break here. The first chapter should have ended at $v$. 22, or atill better at $v$. 14. There is the closest connexion between i. 23, 24 and what follows, and from i. 15 to ii. 4 the answer to the charge of "lightness" continues unbroken.
 Tit. iii. 12) for myself this; the toivo anticipating what is coming (Rom. xiv. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 19; 2 Pet. iii. 8). He has just said that it was for their sakes that he gave up his visit to Corinth. He now adds that it was also better for himself that he should do so. 'With my-clanse is a substantive in apposition with roûro: not again in sorrow to come to you. Here and Rom. ix. $2 \lambda \nu \bar{\pi} \eta \boldsymbol{\eta}$ should be 'sorrow,' as in the A.V. of v. 3, ii. 7, vii. 10; \&c. In the A.V. $\lambda \dot{\prime} \pi \eta$ (Llv. xxii. 45), translated 'sorrow.' 'Again in sorrow' comes first with emphasis; and this is the point. He had been obliged to come in pain and griet once, and he decided that it was best not to do so again. If he had come to Corinth on his way to Macedonia, there would have been a second sorrowful visit. The former sorrowful visit cannot have been the first visit of all, when he brought the Gospel to Corinth. So there must have been a second visit. See on i. 15. This view is confirmed by xii. 14 and xiii. 1 , where he speaks of the coming visit as the third. We need not confine $\epsilon^{\prime} \nu \lambda u ́ \pi \eta$ either to the pain felt by the Apostle or to the pain inflicted by him. What follows shows that both are included: indeed each involved the other.

2. кal $\tau$ ls $\dot{\delta}$ ev่фpalvшv $\mu \in$; Who then is he that maketh me glad? The кal makes the question more emphatio, implying that in that case there would be distressing incongruity: comp. v. 16; Mk x. 26; Lk. xviii. 26 ; Jn ix. 36. Winer, p. 545.  regarded as passing out of ( $\epsilon \xi$ ) his heart into theirs: he is the source of the pain. The singular (which is necessary as coordinate with $\delta$ ejф $\rho$.) sums up the Corinthian Church as one individual. As yet there is no direct reference to the special offender. Had he been meant, the Apostle would have expressed himself very differently.
3. Е'үpaqa тоито av่тó. I wrote this very thing : see oritical note. The interpretation is important; but there are several uncertainties. For toito aürb may mean 'for this very reason': see Bigg on 2 Pet. i . 5; Winer, p. 178; Blass § 49. But had S. Paul meant 'for this very reason,' he would perhaps have written $\epsilon l s$ aútd $\tau 0 \hat{\tau} \tau 0$, as in Rom. ix. 17, xiii. 6. Then what does 'this very thing' mean? It may refer back to the tovto in $v .1$, his decision not to come in sorrow a second time. Or it may refer to the severe rebukes which he had been obliged to send: and with this interpretation $v .4$ is in harmony. In neither sase can the reference be to 1 Corinthians. For (1) in 1 Cor.
xvi. 5-7 there is no hint that $S$. Paul ever had any other plan than the one there aketched; and (2) the language here used in vv. 3,4 would be extravagant if applied to 1 Corinthians, which can scarcely то入入 $\omega \bar{\nu} \delta \alpha \kappa \rho \dot{v} \omega \nu$.

There is yet another possibility: ' 'Ypa and may refer to the present letter. We have $\mathbb{E}_{\pi} \epsilon \mu \psi a$ thus used (Acts xxiii. 30 ; Phil. ii. 28; Philem. 11; and 2 Cor. viii. 18, ix. 3). But in the N.T. there is no clear instance of eqpaya as an epistolary aorist. In the N.T. $\xi_{\text {ppa }} \boldsymbol{\psi}$ a refers either to former letter (1 Cor. v. 9; 2 Cor. vii. 12; 3 Jn 9); or to a whole letter just finished (Rom. xy. 15; Gal. vi. 11; Philem. 19, 21; 1 Pet. v. 12), perhaps marking the point at which the Apostle took the pen from the scribe and wrote himself; or to a passage in the letter just written ( 1 Cor. ix. 15 ; 1 Jn ii. 21, 26). But some of these, with 1 Cor. v . 11, may be epistolary aorists. Here ( $v v, 3,4,9$ ) the reference almost certainly is to a former letter; and, as this cannot be 1 Corinthians, we are once more (see on i. 23) directed to the hypothesis of a second lost letter, between 1 and 2 Corinthians, the first lost letter being that of 1 Cor. v. 9. This hypothesis may be held apart from the hypothesis that x .-xiii. is part of the second lost letter. But we seem to have here, as in i. 23, confirmation of the theory that x.-xiii. is part of this lost letter. In xiii. 10 he says $\tau \alpha \hat{v} \tau \alpha \dot{a} \pi \grave{\omega} \nu \gamma \rho \alpha \phi \omega, ~ q \nu a \pi a \rho \grave{\omega} \nu \mu \grave{\eta}$
 $\lambda i \pi \eta \nu \sigma \chi \hat{\omega}$. This looks like a direct reference to ziii. 10. There he says $\gamma \mathrm{p}$ d́ф $\omega$. In referring to this in a subsequent letter he naturally writes eypaqa. In the painful letter he speaks of 'dealing sharply.' In this conciliatory letter he speaks of 'having sorrow.' All this is consistent. Comp. the correspondence between v. 9 and x. 6. Scripsi, for the usual scribebam, is sometimes epistolary.

 ( 2 Thes, iii. 4 ; Mt. xxvii. 43). The dative (i. 9) is more common. In this affectionate outburst he does not care to remember that there may be some who have not yet been won over: he believes all things and hopes all things (1 Cor. xiii. 7).
 No doubt some had called his severe letter cruel. But had he not loved them so much, he either would have done nothing, or would not have abstained from coming and inflicting heavy punishment.

6-11. Having vindicated himself with regard to the charge of levity (i. 15-ii. 4), he now goes on to vindicate his treatment of the grievous offender. It used to be assumed that this referred to the incestuous person, whom the Apostle sentenced to excommunication ( 1 Cor. v. $1-8$ ); and this passage fits that one well in some respects. But there are difficulties which seem to be insuperable. (1) It is scarcely credible that S. Paul should speak of so heinous an offence as that of 1 Cor. V. 1 in the gentle way in which he speaks here. This is vehemently urged by Tertallian (De Pudic. xiri.), and it is hard to find an answer. (2) If this passage refers to it, its heinousness was even greater than appears from 1 Cor. v. 1. For vii. 12 refers to the same case as this passage; and if this and 1 Cor, v. 1 refer to the same case, then the incestuous man married his father's wife while his father was still living. In vii. 12, if $\tau 0 \hat{0}$ ádıरोंayzos is the incestuous person, tov̂ dं $\delta$ ck $\theta$ धिvios must be the lawful husband of the woman; and the latter is spoken of as alive when S. Paul wrote. Could the Apostle write as he does here of such an offender as that? (3) Would he speak of such a sin from the point of view of injuring an individual? In 1 Cor. v. it is the pollution of the whole Church which appals him. For these reasons the time-honoured and attractive reference of this passage to the incestuous person must be abandoned, and both this and vii. 8-12 must be interpreted of an offender about whom we know no more than is told us in this letter (see A. Robertson in Hastings' DB. i. p. 493, and Sanday in Cheyne's Enc. Bib. i. 902). He may have been a ringleader in the revolt against the Apostle's authority; and in that case $\dot{\delta} \dot{d} \delta \iota \kappa \eta \theta \in i s$ may be either S. Paul himself or (less probably) Timothy. Or he may have been the one who was in the wrong in some outrageons quarrel, about which nothing is said. Everything is uncertain, except that (1) in some particulars this passage fits the incestuous person very badly, and that (2) the case is treated with the utmost gentleness and reserve. No names are mentioned, and no needless particulars are given; and hence our perplexity. S. Paul eays just enough to make the Corinthians understand, and then leaves $\tau \delta$ т $\rho \bar{\alpha} \gamma \mu a$ (vii. 11).
 sorrow, he hath caused sorrow, not to me. The repetition of $\lambda \dot{\prime} \pi \eta$ and $\lambda \nu \pi \epsilon^{\epsilon} \omega$ must be preserved in translation here, as that of $\theta \lambda \ell \psi / s$ and $\theta \lambda \beta \omega$, тapáк $\lambda \eta \sigma \iota s$ and $\pi a \rho a \kappa a \lambda \epsilon \epsilon \omega$ in i. 4-8. E $l$ does not imply that there is doubt; it is a gentle way of putting it: comp. v. 10, vii. 14, x. 7.

As regards the construction of what follows there is much difference of opinion There are four renderings. (1) He hath not grieved me, but in part: that I may not overcharge you all (A.V.). This has the support of Tertullian and Luther, but it cannot be right. The di入גá does not mean 'except,' and ámò $\mu$ épous means 'some out of many' (i. 14). Moreover the Apostle does not urge that he personally has been hurt, whether partly or wholly. It is for him not a personal matter at all. (2) He hath caused sorrow, not to me, but partly (that I may not press too heavily on all) to you. This is better.
 not the Apostle, bat the Corinthians. But it divides the sentence awkwardly, and it spoils the antithesis between $\epsilon \mu \hat{e}$ and $\pi \dot{d} \dot{\nu} \tau \alpha s \dot{j} \mu \hat{c} s$, which is very marked, $\dot{\epsilon} \mu e ́$ being placed first, and $\pi$ ávtas $\dot{\jmath} \mu \hat{\alpha a s}$ last, in emphatic opposition. This rendering would require, Zva $\mu \grave{\eta} \pi \alpha{ }^{2} \nu \tau a s$ $\epsilon \pi \downarrow \beta a p \hat{\omega}$. (3) Has he not caused sorrow to me? nevertheless for a time (that I may not press too heavily on you all) sufficient to such a one \&c. This is perverse ingenuity. It may be mentioned, but it does not need discussion. (4) He hath caused sorrow, not to me, but in part (that I press not too heavily) to you all (R.V.). This is almost certainly right. The offender has not so much pained the Apostle, as he has practioally (not to be too severe) pained all the Corinthians. S. Paul sets himself out of the case altogether: it is a question between the offender and the Corinthian Church. But the Apostle will not say absolutely that every member of it has been pained, and he inserts $\dot{a} \pi \dot{d} \mu^{\prime} \rho \rho o u s$ to cover exceptions. The $\dot{a} \pi \dot{\delta} \mu \dot{f} \rho o u s$ does not mean that all of them had been pained to some extent, but that practically all had been pained. The whole Church was distressed, although some did not sympathize. If any accusative be understood after $\dot{\varepsilon} \pi \iota \beta \alpha \hat{\omega}$, it is the offender, who is not mentioned out of delicacy. Paul's readers would know who was meant by $\delta$ totovros, as they did in the case of the incestuous man ( 1 Cor. v. 5) ; and they would alao know what the punishment in this case had been. It is clear from this verse that in some way he had been treated as a gailty person. In the N.T. we have various words for panishment ; к $\delta \lambda \alpha \sigma t s$ (Mt. xxy. 46; 1 Jniv. 18), $\tau \iota \mu \omega \rho l a($ Heb. х. 29), Eк $\delta i \kappa \eta \sigma \iota s$ ( 1 Pet. ii. 14), $\delta \iota \kappa \eta$ (2 Thes. i. 9 ; Jude 7). Nowhere else in the N.T. does $\begin{gathered}\text { тictupla occur, and in the LXX. only }\end{gathered}$ in Wisd. iii. 10. In classical Greek it commonly means 'citizenship,' the conneating link between this and 'penalty' being the idea of assessment. The citizen has the rights of which he is thought worthy, and the offender has the punishment of which he is thought worthy. Liddell and Scott quote C. I. G. 4957. 43 for 'penalty.' The use of $\delta$ rolô̂tos here and 1 Cor. v. 5 is no evidence that the same offender is meant in both places: in xii. 2 S . Paul uses $\delta$ tocoûtos of himself.  xy. 6, x. 5), rather than simply 'many' (A.V.). The A.V. has a similar inaccuracy iv. 15, ix. 2; Phil. i. 14: but Blass holds that in all these passages ' many' or 'several ' may be right (§ 44.4). At any rate the article must not be ignored (see on $v .16$ ), and we must say, by the many (R.V.), which implies a division into many and few, majority and minority. This might mean that not all were present when sentence was pronounced. It more probably means that a minority dissented from the decision as to the penalty. But in which direction? Did they regard the punishment as insufficient, or as too severe? It is commonly assumed that this minority thought it too severe for one whom they did not regard as a serious offender : and it is thought that some of $S$. Paul's opponents may have openly sympathized with the censured man. But the context rather implies that the minority were devoted adherents of the Apostle, who protested against the penalty inflicted $\dot{u} \pi \dot{\partial} \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \bar{\pi} \pi \epsilon \iota b \nu \omega \nu$ as inadequate. S. Paul does not condemn or reproach this minority for abetting or condoning rebellion. He merely tells them that the $\dot{\epsilon} \pi \iota \tau \iota \mu l a \dot{\eta} \dot{i} \pi \dot{o} \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \pi \lambda \varepsilon \kappa\langle\nu \omega \nu$ is lxav6y, and that rovjuavioy, 'oontrariwise,' they may forgive the offender. 'Contrariwise' implies that previously they had been unwilling to forgive him; not that they had previously wished him to be very leniently treated. See Kennedy, Second and Third Corinthians, pp. 100 ff.
 There is no need to understand $\delta \varepsilon i v:$ so that on the contrary you may forgive and comfort him. If $\mu \hat{\lambda} \lambda \lambda o \nu$ is genuine (see critical note), it indicates that feeling on the subject is still acate.  be swallowed up by his overmuch sorrow. It is useless to ask whether death, suicide, apostasy, or despair of salvation is meant. Probably nothing more definite is intended than that a continuation of ponishment will do much more harm than good: nihil enim periculosius quam ansam Satanae porrigere, ut peccatorem ad desperationem sollicitet (Calvin).  $\delta o к<\mu \hat{\eta}$, although supported by only AB, 17, is worthy of consideration. The els radyra is the important point. It was not for them to decide how far they were to obey: their obedience must extend to ( $\epsilon l_{s}$ ) all points. Here again we seem to have corroboration of the view that 'You have proved your loyalty by your submission to discipline. But, if you now forgive, you day be sure that your forgiveness is confirmed by mine.' He is not exactly giving them a carte blanche to act as they please; he is expressing his approval of a public aot of forgiveness. "We may observe (1) that S. In three passages in this letter the meaning of $\pi \rho \delta \sigma \omega \pi \sigma^{\nu}$ is doubtful (i. 11, ii. 10, iv. 6); in three it certainly means 'face' (iii. 7, $18,18)$.

The evil one, whose personality is clearly marked, would defraud the Charch, if he caused it to lose one of its members. Comp. 1 Pet. v. 8. Chrysostom ex. plains the $\pi \lambda \epsilon o v \epsilon \xi / a$ somewhat strangely. That Satan should defeat us by means of our sins is natural enough : but that he shonld defeat us by means of our penitence is grasping at more than can be allowed to him. That Satan is mentioned here as well as in 1 Cor. v. 5 is no more evidence than the use of $\delta$ roooviros in both places that the offender in each case is the same. In every sinful act there must be o toloûtos and the work of Satan. Satan is mentioned very differently in the two passages.

It is not found in the O.T. and is rare in the Apocrypha. Note the paronomasia in yo才 $\mu a \tau a$ djpooi $\mu \in \nu$, and comp. i. 13, iii, 2, iv. 8, 15, vi. 10, vii. 10, x. 5, 6, 12.

12-17. The passage about the great offender (vv. 5-11) follows quite naturally after $v .4$, the connecting thought being $\lambda \dot{\prime} \pi \eta$. But it is somewhat of a digression, from which the Apostle now returns. We might go direct from $v .4$ (or even from i. 11) to $v .12$, without any break in the sequence.
 'Furthermore' (A.V.) is quite wrong. Having got the charge of levity and the case of the grievous offender out of the way, he returns to the affliction which was so near killing him in Asia. His anxiety about the mission of Titus, and about the effect of the letter which Titus took with him to Corinth, was so intense, that, although he found an excellent opening for preaching in Troas, he could not remain there to wait for 'Titus, but went on to Macedonia, in order to meet him all the sooner. Troas would be on his way to Corinth, if he went by land through Macedonia from Ephesus.

 D reads $\epsilon \nu \tau \hat{\varphi} \mu \hat{\eta}$. Apparently they had agreed to meet in Troas; and there the "sense of loneliness" (Lightfoot on 1 Cor. ii. 3) and anxiety about Corinth overwhelmed S. Paul. By tòv $\alpha \delta e \lambda \phi \delta v \mu o v ~ h e ~$ probably means 'my beloved fellow-worker,' not merely 'my fellowChristian.' Theodoret suggests that his having no fellow-worker was one main reason for going. He felt that he could do nothing single-unintentionally, reproduces the sudden revulsion of feeling caused by the news which Titus brought from Oorinth. At the mere mention of Macedonia, the memory of what be experienced there carries him away. The journey, the search, the meeting, the report brought by his emissary are all passed over, and he bursts out into thanksgiving for God's great mercies to him and to the cause. Note the emphatic position of $\tau \grave{\varphi} \theta \in \hat{\psi}$ here, as in 1 Cor. xv. 57 . He commonly writes $\chi^{\alpha} \rho \iota s \tau \hat{\varphi} \theta \in \underline{q}($ (viii. 16, ix. 15; Rom. vi. 17, vii. 25 : comp. 1 Tim. i. 3). The outburst of thanksgiving makes him forget the story of the return of Titas. We might have guessed it; but he tells it vii. 6, 7: interjacet nobilissima digressio (Bengel). It is surprising that anyone should attribute this sudden outpouring of praise to the success in Troas, or to that in Macedonia (of which there is here no hint), or to God's blessings generally. Along with the signal mercy granted to him in the crisis of Titus' mission to Corinth S. Paul thinks of the constant blessings which he enjoys; but it is the remembrance of that unspeakable relief from a sickening anziety which inspires this thanksgiving. The connexion with $v .13$ is close, and the R.V. rightly makes vv. 12-17 one paragraph.

 causeth us to triumph' (A.V.) is almost certainly wrong. In Col. ii. 15, as in classical Greek, $\theta \rho \mathrm{a} \mu \beta \in \dot{\prime} \omega$ means 'I lead in triumph,' and is used of a conqueror in reference to the vanquished. No doubt some verbs of similar formation at times acquire a causative sense. Thus, $\mu a \theta \eta \tau \in \dot{U} \omega$, 'I am a disciple' (Mt. xxvii. 57 , where the differences of reading illustrate both uses), also means 'I make a disciple of ' (Mt. zxviii. 19; Acts ziv. 21) : and $\beta a \sigma \iota \lambda \in \dot{\prime} \omega$, 'I am a king' (Lk. zix. 14, 27), sometimes means 'I make to be king' (Is. vii. 6). But that does not prove that $\theta \rho c a \mu \beta \in i \omega$ ever has a causative sense, still less that it means 'cause to triamph' here. To say that 'causeth us to triumph' is the only rendering which makes sense here, is supericial criticism. It would be nearer the truth to say that the meaning which $\theta \rho a \mu \beta \in \dot{v} \omega$ has in every other known passage gives a deeper sense than the rendering which at first sight seems to fit so well. But it is going too far on the other side to say that it must mean 'triumph over.' It need mean no more than 'lead in triumph'; and which always leadeth us in triumph (R.V.) is the safest rendering here. 'He leads us about here and there and displays us to all the world' is Theodoret's Tatian, Oratio ad Graecos xxir., we have 'Cease making a display of other people's sayings and, like the jackdaw, decorating yourselves

 that Chrysostom uses $\theta \rho l a \mu \beta e y ́ \omega$ and $\theta \rho i d \mu \beta e v \sigma t s$ simply in the sense of display. Here, those who are led in triamph are so led, not to humiliate them, but to show them to the whole world as being the property and the glory of Him who leads them. In a Roman triumph the general's sons (Liv. xuv, 40), with his legati and tribuni (Cic. In Pis. xxv. 60; Appian, Mith. 117), rode behind his chariot. So God has made a pageant of the Apostle and his fellow-workers, as instruments of His glory. We may go farther, and say that, before exhibiting them as His, He had taken them captive, as was true, in a very marked way, of S. Paul; or that He had triumphed over them by showing that all their anxiety, which they ought to have cast upon Him (1 Pet. v. 7), was needless. But the idea of display is all that is required (comp. 1 Cor. iv. 9), and it fits on very well to фаעєро仑vtl, which follows. The success of his letter to Corinth and of the mission of Titus was a conspiouous example of God's showing to the world that the Apostle and his colleagues were His ministers working for His glory. The addition of $\bar{\epsilon} \nu \tau \hat{\varphi} \chi \rho \iota \sigma \tau \hat{\varphi}$, like $\bar{\epsilon} \nu \kappa \nu \rho l \varphi$ in $v .12$, marks the sphere in which the display takes place. It is as being Ohrist's that they are God's (1 Cor. iii. 23). See Field, Otium Norvic. II. p. 111, Notes on Translation of the N.T. p. 181; but he denies the reference to a Roman triumph.
 continues, with the burning of incense which accompanied suoh things. The sweet odour is the knowledge (genitive of apposition) of God in Christ, diffused by the Apostles and their fellows in every part of the world. It is immaterial whether we interpret autov of God or of Christ. Verse 15 favours the latter : comp. iv. 6. God is revealed in Christ, who came in order to reveal Him; so that the meaning is the same, however we interpret afroû. See Chase, Chrysostom, p. 184.
$\delta_{\iota}{ }^{\prime} \dot{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} v$. Through $u s$ (R. V.). As in i. 19, 20, $\delta$ d $\alpha$ indicates that they are only instruments. Throughout the passage everything is attributed to God. It is to Him that thanks are due. It is He too who, not makes us to triumph, but displays us in His triumph, as instruments which $H e$ owns and uses in diffusing the fragrant knowledge of Himself in His Son. Note the róvrote, 'at every time,' at the beginning, and the ${ }^{\mathbf{t} v}$ ravit tórus, 'in every place,' at the end, of this description of God's work.
 Those who diffuse the fragrant knowledge are now themselves apoken of as being to God (dat. comm.) a sweet odour (Dan. ii. 46 Theodot.) of Christ. The emphasis is on $\mathrm{X} \rho / \sigma \tau 00 \mathrm{a}$ : For it is of Christ that we are a sweet odour to God. To God they are always this; bat among men there is a difference, not because the knowledge of Christ varies in sweetness and salubrity, but because some men are ready to welcome it and some not. These two classes are distinguished as rois $\sigma \omega$ go$\mu$ evors, those that are being saved, or are in the way of salvation that are perlshing, or are in the way of perdition (iv. 3; 1 Cor. i. 18; 2 Thes. ii. 10). The use of ejvola does not prove that the idea of sacrifice is here introduced: the burning of spices in triumphal processions sufficiently explains the metaphor. The sacrificial expression is $\delta \sigma \mu \eta े$ ev̉wolas (Gen. viii. 21; Exod. xxix. 18, 25, 41; about 40 times in the Pentateuch). Contrast Eph. $\begin{gathered} \\ 2\end{gathered}$ and Phil. iv. 18, where S. Paul not only says $\delta \sigma \mu \eta \nu \quad \epsilon j \omega \delta l a s$, but adds $\theta v \sigma l a \nu$, thus placing the sacrificial meaning beyond a doubt. See Hatch, Biblical Greek, p. 13.

A savour from death unto death...a savour from life unto life. Inaccuracy about the definite article is a common defect in the A.V. Sometimes, as here ('the savour'), it is inserted where there is no article in the Greek (iii. 3, 15, vi. 2, xi. 13, 15; Lk. vi. 16; Jn iv. 27; Acts viii. 5); very often it is ignored where it is in the Greek (ii. 6, xii. 13; 1 Cor. ix. 5 ; Phil. i. 14 ; Rom. v. 15-19; Col. i. 19; Heh. xi. 10 ; Rev. vii. 13, 14, \&c.) ; sometimes it is mistranslated 'that' or 'this' (iii. 17, vii. 11 ; Jn i. 21, 25, vi. 14, 48, 69 ; Acts ix. 2, xix. 9, 23, xxiv. 22). The $\epsilon \kappa$ in both places is to be retained : see criticel note. It has probably been omitted because of the difficulty of seeing how this. The two kinds of recipients are in an incomplete condition, the one tending to salvation, the other to perdition. The sweet savour of Christ comes to both, and it confirms ea.h class in its original tendency. In the one case there is a progress from death potential to death realized, in the other a progress from life potential to life reslized. The coming of Christ, whether in person or in the preaching of the Gospel, involves a kploıs, a sundering of those who are ready for Him from those who are not (Jn i. 5, iii. 19, ix. 39, xviii. 37; Lk. ii. 34; 1 Pet. ii. 7). ii1. 1-vi. 10. Vindication in Detail of his Apostolitc Offtee, of himgely as an Apostim, and of the Gobpel which hes preacies.

1-6. These opening verses deal with a difficulty which had been growing at Corinth. He was so often obliged to speak of himself and his authority, that he laid himself open to the sneering reminder that "self-praise is no recommendation." The outburst of praise in ii. 14 -17 is likely to provoke this aneer once more. So, before going on with his Apologia, he turns aside to desl with this. 'Do not think that I am writing a testimonial for myself. I have no need of anything of the kind. You are my testimonial. Any ability which Apostles may have is not their own, but comes from God.'
 to commend ourselves? This looks like a reference to a charge which had been brought against him. Such passages as 1 Cor. ii. 16, iii. 10, ix. 1-5, 20-27, xiv. 18, xv. 10 might easily lead to such accusations. And if x.-xiii. is part of the second lost letter, the madu here is still more intelligible, for there is plenty of self-commendation in those 'commend,' which is specially common in this letter (iv. 2, v. 12, vi. 4, 11, 12, 18), comp. Rom. xvi. 1. Its other N.T. meaning is 'establish by argument, prove by evidence' (vii. 11; Rom. v. 8; Gal. ii. 18). The notion of 'bringing together,' in the one case persons, in the other things, connects the two uses, which Hesychius marks as èmaweiv and Beßaloûv.
 A.V. has no authority. The $\mu \dot{\eta}$ of course implies a negative reply. Elsewhere S. Paul speaks of his opponents as $\tau v e$ 's ( 1 Cor. iv. 18, xv.12; Gal. i. 7). Here they are the of modnol of ii. 17, who had brought commendatory letters from some congregation or other, and had tried to discredit the Apostle, because he had nothing of the kind. Comp. the commendation of Titus and his companion (viii. 22-24), of Timothy (1 Cor. xvi. 10, 11), of Judas and Silas (Acts xv. 25-27), of Apollos (Acts xviii. 27), and of Demetrius (2 Jn 12). The Epistle to Philemon is a $\sigma v \sigma \tau a \tau \iota \kappa \grave{\eta} \epsilon \pi \iota \sigma \tau o \lambda \eta \eta$. For examples of such letters in the early Church see Suicer. They were very necessary as a guarantee that the visitor (1) might safely be entertained as a guest, (2) might rightly be admitted to communion. See Paley, Horae Paulinae Iv. 10. The $\boldsymbol{\xi} \xi \boldsymbol{i} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ implies that the Judaizers got the Corinthians to give them commendatory letters.
 The Corinthians are themselves a letter; the letter is written on the Apostle's heart; it is also written on their hearts. There are two main points. 1. 'We have got something better than ordinary letters; we have got yourselves, and the affectionate ties which bind us to you can be discerned by all the world.' 2. 'The testimony is not traced with ink on a perishable surface; it is written in living characters by the Spirit on imperishable souls.' See Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 59. In Polycarp (11) there is a clear reference to this.
iv raîs cap $\delta$ íass $\mathfrak{\eta} \mu \omega \hat{\nu}$. It is probable that in saying 'hearts,' not ' heart' (comp. iv. 6, vii. 3), the Apostle includes others with himself. The participles are in logical order; first known as being there, then read by all, then made manifest as an epistle of Christ.  (Rom. xyi. 22), or that of the bearer (Acta xv. 30; 1 Pet. v. 12 probably)? The latter best accorda with the idea of dissemination (innò $\pi \alpha ́ \nu \tau \omega \nu \quad$ a $\nu \theta \rho \omega \dot{\pi} \omega \omega$, v. 2): wherever S. Paul went he spoke of his Corinthian friends (ix. 2, 3).
 (2 Tim. iv. 13) or $\epsilon \nu \chi^{d} \rho \tau \overline{1}(2 \mathrm{Jn} \mathrm{12)}$ : but the proverbial opposition between 'hearts of flesh' and 'hearts of stone' (Ezek. xi. 19, xxxvi. 26; Jer. xxzi. 33) comes into his mind, together with the thought of God's writing His law-formerly on tables of stone, now on tables which are hearts of flesh. We may sum the whole up thus: 'What Christ by the Spirit of God has written on your hearts is written on our hearts as a commendation to all men." The Apostle ever " wore his heart on his sleeve." These two verses $(2,3)$ should be compared with iv. 12-15, v. 13, vi. 11, 12. In all four places we see S. Paul's great love for his oonverts breaking through the subject in hand and coming to the surface. Note the difference between the dative without $\psi \nu$ and with $\ell \nu, \mu(\lambda a \nu c$ and $\dot{\epsilon} \nu \pi \lambda a \xi(\nu$; and also between $\sigma a p k(\nu a c s$, balancing $\lambda$ ıelvals, both of which refer to material, and $\sigma a \rho k i k a i ̂ s ~(i . ~ 12, ~ x . ~ 4), ~$ which would refer to quality. If we read кap反lavs, not карסlas (see critical note), the dative is in apposition with $\pi \lambda a \xi t \nu$ : not on tables of stone, but on tables, (which are) hearts of flesh. For 'ink' and 'tables' see atramentum and tabulae in Dict. of Antiquities. The connexion with what follows seems to be close: yet WH. begin a fresh paragraph with v. 4.
 have through Christ to God-ward (see on i. 15). 'We did not get it through our ability in reference to our own work.' The confidence (first with emphasis) is that which is indicated in $v v .1-3$,-the sure testimony which the faith of the Corinthians afforded to the validity of 8 . Paul's Apostleship; and the confidence is felt even when the Apostle puts himself in the presence of God.
 we are sufficient (ii. 27) to account anything proceeding from ourselves as coming out of ourselves (i.e. being really originated by us); but our sufficiency comes from God. Whatever qualification the Apostle has, it is not one of merit; it is wholly a gift from above; comp. iv. 7. The verse answers the question raised in ii. 17. The words may mean : not that of ourselves ive are sufficient to account anything as coming out of ourselves, de. But in neither case do we get any support for the doctrine that the natural man is incapable of good. Nowhere else in mind, with Ezek. xi. 19. The important word kaup̂s gives an abrupt, but very natural turn to the argument. He has been urging the superiority of his onon claims on their affection and obedience to those of his Judaizing opponents. He now points to the boundless superiority of the dispensation of which he is a minister to that which the Judaizers represent. Even if as an individual he had nothing to urge, the claim of the Gospel which he brought to them would be paramount, and that in three particulars. This dispensation of grace is кalvĭ, тvev́paros, jworotei. 1. It is not obsolete, like the Jewish Law, but of full force. 2. It is not an external legal instrument, but an indwelling power. 3. It is nota judicial enactment, putting those who transgress it to death; its spirit gives life to all who accept it. The Law simply said, 'Thou shalt not,' and imposed a penalty for transgression. So far from giving any power to keep its enactments, by its prohibitions it provoked men to transgress (Rom. vii. 5-13, v. 20). The spirit of the Gospel is really the Spirit of God, entering the heart and making the recipient, not only able, but willing, to obey. Chrysostom has a fine passage in which he contrasts the Law and Grace under this third head. The Law finds a man gathering sticks on the Sabbath, and stones him. Grace finds thousands of robbers and murderers, illuminates them, and gives them life. The one turns a living man into a dead one: the other out of dead men makes living ones. Christ says, 'Come unto Me all ye who are heary laden,' not 'and I will punish you,' but 'and I will give you rest.' Comp. the contrast in Jn i. 17.

It matters little whether we regard the genitives, $\gamma \rho \alpha \mu \mu a \pi o s$ and $\pi \nu \in u ́ \mu a \tau o s, ~ a s ~ c h a r a c t e r i z i n g ~ \delta a a k \delta p o u s ~ o r ~ \delta e a \theta \eta к к \eta s: ~ b u t ~ \grave{\eta} \delta \iota a \kappa o \nu i a ~ \tau o \hat{v}$ $\pi \nu \in \dot{u} \mu a t o s(v .8)$ is in favour of the former. The Apostles are ministers, not of a covenant that is literal and formal, but of one that is spiritual : therefore, as ministers, they are not of letter, but of spirit. It is perhaps safer not to insert the article in translation. For the characterizing genitive oomp. Lk. iv. 24, xvi. 8, xviii. 6; Jas i. 25, ii. 4. Winer, p. 297 ; Blass, § 35.5.
 eternal life, is meant: that is the tendency of the letter. The prohibitions of the Law incite to sin which involves death. And, with regard to physical death, the Law gave no promise of resurrection. Origen was strangely mistaken in supposing that this passage supports his view that the literel interpretation of Scripture is harmfal, and that, to be profitable, interpretation must be mystical and 'spiritual,' or at least moral. And, however true it may be that to keep insisting upon the letter becomes fatal to the spirit, that is not what is meant here. The point here is, that the Law is incomparably inferior to the Gospel.

The form a $\pi \pi о к \epsilon \epsilon \nu \boldsymbol{\epsilon}$, which is believed to be Aeolic, is found here ( $N F G K P$ ) for a a $\pi$ oктelvel ( $B$ ), and is accepted by some editors here and Mt. x. 28; Mk xii. 5; Lk. xii. 4 ; Rev. vi. 11.  rather (1 Cor. xii. 22) the ministration of the spirit be with glory.
 glory imparted to the Law, which was short and is past, and the innate glory of the Gospel, which will be permanent.
9. The Apostle justifies ( $\gamma \mathrm{d} \rho$ ) what has just been said by showing that the same contrast holds good if we compare the two from an earlier standpoint. The Law is a $\delta \iota a \kappa o \nu l a ~ \tau o \hat{v}$ oadórov, because it is a $\delta \iota a \kappa o \nu l a ~ \tau \hat{\eta} s$ калакрloews, and condemnation leads to death. The

 r. $\delta \iota x a \omega \sigma \sigma \epsilon \omega$, which would be the proper antithesis to $\tau$. кaraкploecs. The Gospel gives not merely acquittal but positive righteousness. In the sense of 'abound in' $\pi \epsilon \rho \sigma \sigma \sigma \epsilon v^{\prime} \omega$ is commonly followed by $\epsilon \nu$ (viii. 7; Eph. i. 8; Col. ii. 7, \&o.); but in 1 Thes. iii. 12 and Aets xvi. 5, as here, there is no preposition.

The reading $\tau \hat{n} \delta$ olacovig̣ (see critical-note) gives: For if the ministration of condemnation has glory. But this looks like a correction to what seemed to be more accurate.
10. He again justifies ( $\gamma d \rho$ ) what has just been said, adding cal to mark a new point. The Gospel's superabundance in glory is shown by the fact that it absolutely eclipsed the Law. For indeed that which hath been made glorious hath even not been made glorious (hath even been deprived of glory) in this respect, by reason of the glory that exceedeth. In marking the change from $\pi \in \rho \iota \sigma \sigma \epsilon v^{\omega}(v .9)$
 ix. 4; Eph. i. 19, ii. 7, where the R.V. has 'exceed,' while it has 'surpass' here. Take $\epsilon \nu \tau 0 \dot{\gamma} \tau \varphi \tau \hat{\varphi} \mu \notin \rho \in t$ (comp. ix. 3 and see Lightfoot on Col. ii. 16) with ou $\delta \in \delta \delta \xi \alpha \sigma \tau \alpha$, the Law has been deprived of its imparted glory in this respect, that something which quite outshines it has appeared. Stars cease to shine when the sun is risen.
11. He continues the justification ( $\gamma \mathrm{d} \rho$ ) of what has been said. For if that which is belng done away (v.7) was through glory, much more that which abldeth (Rom. ix. 11) is in glory. The fading of the glory from the face of Moses indicated that the ministration which ho instituted was not to last. To the old dispensation glory was a phase, through which it passed; to the new it is a sphere in which it abides (ix. 9; 1 Cor. xiii. 13; Jn xv. 4).

12-18. This overwhelming superiority of the Gospel inspires its ministers with great boldness. An Apostle has no need to veil the glory which he has received, for there is no fear of its being seen to fade away. In vv. 1-6 S. Paul spoke of his confidence (v. 4). Here he speaks of his hope, the hope of that superabundant glory which in v. 8 is spoken of as future. The glory is already present, but its continuance and its development unto perfection are a feld for hope.
12. тapp $\boldsymbol{1} \boldsymbol{l}$ l. Boldness of speech (Eph. vi. 19; Phil. i. 20). Freedom from fear, especially in reference to speech, is the radical meaning of the word. Then it easily passes to freedom from reserve, and is transferred from speech to action (Jn vii. 4, xi. 54). See on vii. 4: $\chi$ рш́رe日a as in i. 17. He is hinting at the silences of the O.T.; e.g. as to resurrection and eternal life.
 put a veil over his face, do we act. The suppression of what corresponds to к $\alpha \theta \dot{\alpha} \pi \epsilon \rho, \ddot{\omega} \sigma \pi \epsilon \rho, \dot{\omega} s$, and the like, is natural and not rare; comp. Mt. xxy. 14; Mk xiii. 34. Excepting Heb. iv. 2, the Attic кавáтє is found in the N.T. in S. Paul only (v. 18, i. 14, viii. 11; elsewhere twelve times). Moses did not enjoy the freedom from fear and reserve which is given so abundantly to Ohrist's ministers. Christ Himself had used reserve, not only in teaching the multitude, bat in training the Twelve (Jn xvi. 12). The change came at Pentecost. 'We need not hide the full magnificence of our message, lest the future should prove it false : it will stand the test of time, and will not fade away.'
 Comp. 1 Thes. ii. 9. In v. 7 'could not' is right. The A.V. has 'could' in both places, 'behold' in one, and 'look' in the other. In both we have 'the sons of Israel,' tous viove 'I $\sigma \rho a \forall \lambda$, as commonly in the LXX. The two verses differ, but are not inconsistent. In v. 7 the glory was such that the Israelites could not fix their gaze (Lk. xxii. 56) on Moses' face. In v. 13 he used to put a veil on his face to prevent them from fixing their gaze on the end of that which was being done away. Neither of these statements agrees with the A.F. of Exod. xxxiv. 29 ff., which implies that he veiled his face to overcome their fear of him. The R. V., agreeing with both the Hebrew and the LXX., shows that he overcame their fear by exhorting them to come to him, that he tallked to them unveiled, and that, when he had finished speaking with them, he put a veil on his face, until he returned to the presence of the Lord. There he was unveiled, and he remained so on coming out, so long as he was addressing the people as God's emissary. Then he put the veil on again, until he went back to commune with Jehovah. This agrees with what we have here (v. 13). He veiled himself that the people might not gaze upon the end of that which was passing away, viz. the fading glory. They saw him only when the reflexion of the Divine splendour was fresh upon him. S. Paul makes the transitoriness of this reflexion a symbol of the transitory character of the Law; but of course he does not mean that either the Israelites or Moses so understood it. With this symbolizing comp. 1 Cor. x. 2-4 and Gal. iv. 21-26. He considers the Jews of his own day as quite alien from the Christian Churoh. They have been cut off from their own olive tree (Rom. xi. 24). This passage should be compared with Rom, ix.-xi., where see Sanday and Headlam.
 blinded. This suits those whose power of perception is covered with a veil, whose ' minds the god of this world has blinded' (iv. 4). The R.V. here sùbstitutes 'hardened' for 'blinded,' in accordance with the original meaning of $\pi \hat{\omega} \rho o s$ and $\pi \omega p \phi \omega$. But 'blinded'is perhaps closer to the later meaninge. To speak of 'minds' or 'thoughts' being 'hardened' is a curious expression. Comp. Rom. xi. 7, 25; Eph. iv. 18. For voŋpuata see on ii. 11. By the $\pi \omega \rho \omega \sigma$ s of these is meant moral obtuseness, not wilful obstinacy. Their understandings lost their sensibility towards spiritual truths. In order to distinguish $\pi \omega \rho \delta \omega$ from $\tau v \phi \lambda \delta \omega$ (iv. 4) 'dulled' might be used here. The $d \lambda \lambda \alpha$ refers to $v .13$. They were not allowed to see the fading of the glory, which might have taught, them that their dispensation was to pass away; but, on the contrary, their perceptions were paralysed, and to this day cannot grasp the situation. See a valuable note on this and kindred passages in the Journal of Theological Studies, Oct. 1901, pp. 81 f. Lightfoot (on 2 Thes. ii. 8) points out that S. Paul sometimes uses кaтapүєì in opposition to 'light' as if with a sense of 'darkening,' 'eclipsing' ; 1 Cor. ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 10. The use of it here ( $v .7,14$ ) confirms the meaning 'blinded' for $\epsilon \pi \omega \rho \omega \dot{\theta} \eta$.

See Westcott on Heb. viii. 13. The direct opposite of kalpbs is dpxaios, as is shown จ. 17. But $\pi a \lambda a u b s$, as meaning what has existed for a long time, may be opposed to either $\nu \not{\nu}$ os (Mt. ix. 17; Mk ii. 22) or kaıpos (Lk. v. 36). 'The same vail' is not understood literally. It is the symbolical meaning which is the same in both cases, viz. the inability to see the vanishing of the glory of the Law.
$\mu \eta$ ávaka入uптópєvov. The construction and translation of these words is doubtful. They may refer to $\tau \delta$ кá $\lambda \nu \mu \mu a$ which precedes; or they may be taken absolutely and refer to what follows. Either, at the reading of the old covenant the same veil abldeth without being lifted, because it is done away in Christ; or, at the reading of the old covenant the same veil abideth, the revelation not being made that $i t$ is done away in Christ (Chrysostom). In the first rendering it is the veil that is done away in Christ; and this has two diffioulties: (1) that it does not fit the context, for the reil abides unlifted, not because it is done away in Christ, but because of the mépowts of their hearts: (2) that throughout the passage ( $v v .7,11,13,14$ ) it is the glory of the Law which катap $\overline{\text { cita. }}$. When S. Paul speaks of the veil being removed, he says $\pi е \rho \iota a \iota \rho \in i \tau a l ~(v .16)$. Therefore the second rendering is preferable, according to which it is the Law which $\epsilon \nu$ $\mathbf{X} \rho เ \sigma \tau \hat{\varphi}$ кatapyєîcal. This absolute use of a participle or adjective is tition of 'done away' (comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 8) by substituting 'abolished' in $v .13$. The R.V. does the like by substituting 'pass away' in $v v .7$, 11; but it has "done away' in the margin. There are many places in the N.T. in which it is doubtful whether $\delta_{\tau} \tau$ is 'that' or 'because' (i. 14 ; Lk. i. 45, vii. 16,39 , ix. 22, x. 21, xi. 38 , xxii. 70 ; 1 Jn ii. 12 $-14, \& c$.).

It is because к $\dot{\lambda} \lambda \nu \mu \mu a$ here has not the same meaning as before that he does not say tò кd́ $\lambda \nu \mu \mu a$, which would have signified the veil of Moses concealing the vanishing of the glory. By $\kappa \AA \lambda \nu \mu \mu a$, ' $a$ veil,' he means their insensibility to the truth, much the same as the $\pi \omega \rho \omega \sigma \tau s$. For ${ }^{z} \omega \bar{s}$ with an adv. comp. Mt. xvii. 17, xviii. 21; ${ }^{\neq} \omega \mathrm{s}$ ăptı is frequent; 1 Cor. iv. 13, viii. 7, xy. 6. The subject of the verbs is left characteristically indefinite; Israel, any typical Israelite. S. Paul saw the turning to the Lord of the $\epsilon \kappa \lambda o \gamma \eta$ (Rom. xi. 7-10), and foresaw that of all Israel (xi. 25). Here he may have his own conversion in his mind. In popular language $\dot{\epsilon} \dot{d} \boldsymbol{j}$ for $a_{\nu} \nu$ seems to have been common ( 1 Cor. vi. 18, xvi. 3; Gal. vi. 7; Mt. v. 19, 32, x. 42, xi. 27, \&c.). Winer, p. 390; Blass, § 26. 4, 65. 7. This passage may havo suggested the variant $\kappa \in \kappa \alpha \lambda \nu \mu \mu \epsilon \nu \eta$ of the $\delta$-text in Luke xxiv. 32.
 on ii. 16. The interpretations of this difficult passage are many, and we must be content to remain in doubt as to the Apostle's meaning. But to whatever extent the verse throws light upon Trinitarian doctrine, there is no evidence that it was written for the purpose of doing so. 'The Lord' here, as in v. 16, means Christ. To turn to Christ is to turn from the letter that killeth to the spirit that giveth life ( $v .6$ ). Thus Christ, and the spirit as opposed to the letter, are treated as in some sense equivalents. As both substantives have the article, we may translate, The Spirit is the Lord; but the order of the words is against it, and the preceding ajos Kúptov is decisive. Yet Chrysostom and others take it so, and find in the words evidence for the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, a doctrine which may be gathered from xiii. 13, but which is not here in question. The Lord is the Spirit is probably the right translation; and the meaning, which is at once simple and fitting, is, that to turn to Christ and receive Him is to receive the Spirit of the Lord. We may compare, 'And the rook was Christ,' or 'And Christ was the rock,' either of which may represent $\dot{\eta} \pi \epsilon \tau \rho a$ $\delta \dot{\epsilon} \dot{\eta}{ }^{\eta} \delta$ Xpıatbs (1 Cor. x. 4). The spiritual rock was Christ in effect. The water of the spiritual rock was to the Israelites what the sustaining presence of Christ is to Christians. The effect in each case was the same, and therefore the cause was the same; the rock was Christ. As to the relation between the effect of Christ's presence with that of the Spirit's presence, comp. Jn xiv. 16, 26, xvi. 7, 14. For patristic interpretations of the passage see Lias, Appendix I., and Chase, Chrysostom, p. 93. But кúpos in both verses must mean Christ, and not Jehovah. The Jews tarned to Jehovah, but refused to turn to Christ.
 from the trammels of the Jewish Lam is perhaps specially meant, but not exclusively. Spiritual liberty of all kinds may be understood; Gal. iv. 31, v. 1. By the indwelling of the Spirit bondservants are changed into sons. The freedom of the Gospel, its openness (v.2), confidence ( $v .4$ ), and boldness ( $v .12$ ), especially in contrast to the formalism and reserve of the Law, is a note which sounds throughout this section. 'The Spirit bloweth where it listoth' (Jn. iii. 8); its very life is freedom and energy in opposition to the bondage of the letter. Comp. Seneca's saying, 'To obey God is liberty' (De Vit. beat. 15). See Mayor on Jas i. 25.

Hort conjectures kúplov for Kuplov (WH. ir. App. p. 119). But is it possible that kúpos is the right reading? S. Paul simply draws a conclusion from his previous words, and naturally simply repeats the two words on which all turn. In the latter olause kúplos is not strictly personal, but, on the other hand, is not a mere adjective, as with the reading kúpton. 'The Lord Jesus is the Source of the life-giving spirit, as opposed to the condemning, death-giving letter : indeed the Lord is the life-giving spirit. But such an identification reveals the sovereign power of that spirit: and where, as in the realm of the Gospel, the spirit (not the letter) is Sovereign, there there is freedom.' Acts ii. 36 is some justification for the otherwise difficult transition from $\dot{o}$ кúpoos, which to $u s$ is a proper name, to cúpros as descriptive.
18. $\dot{\eta} \mu \in$ îs $\delta \notin \pi$ ávtes. This refers, not (as in $v v .1-12$ ) to the ministers of the Gospel, but to all Christians, to all who have been set free by the presence of the Spirit. In the new dispensation the privilege is universal, not, as in the old, confined to one mediator. The $\delta \epsilon$ refers baok to $v .16$. The Jews are still in need of conversion to Christ that the veil may be removed from them: but all we Christians, with unveiled face. For the dative comp. д́катакали́лтт $\tau \hat{\eta} \kappa є \phi a \lambda \hat{\eta}$ (1 Cor. xi. 5).

катоттрı'̧ósevol. In the active this means 'to show in a mirror,' in the middle (1) 'to behold as in a mirror,' or (2) 'to reflect as in a mirror.' Chrysostom adopts the latter meaning, and it makes excellent sense: with unveiled face reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord. The idea is taken from Moses removing the veil when he talked with God, and thus catching a reflexion of the Divine glory. Augustine points out that we are not obliged to believe that " we shall see God with the bodily face in which are the eyes of the body"; it is "the face of the inner man" which is meant (De Civ. Dei xxir. 29).
 the same image; acc. of definition. As S. Paul, perhaps purposely, uses the same word as is used of the Transfiguration (Mt. xvii. 2; Mk ix. 2), the same English word should be used here as there. The Vulgate changes from transfigurari in Mt . and Mk to transformari here, and has infuenced English Versions. Comp. Rom. xii. 2; Phil. iii. 21. Seneca again has something a little similar, "Not only corrected but transfigured" (Ep. Mor. vi. 1) ; and "A man is not yet wise, unless his mind is transfigured into those things which he has learned" ( $E p$. Mor. xciv. 48). By тウ̀̀ aúr $\grave{\eta} \nu$ eiкbva is meant the same image as that which is reflected in the mirror, the image of the perfection that is manifest in Christ: Gal. iv. 19. It carries the mind back to the Creation (Gen. i. 26) and implies that this transformation is a re-creation (Col. iii. 10). See on $\mu \in \tau \alpha \sigma \chi \eta \mu a \tau l \xi \in \sigma \theta a l$ xi. 13.

 ( $\boldsymbol{v}$. 17), to which it looks baok. There are several possible renderings. (1) Even as by the Spirit of the Lord (A.V.), which is that of the Vulgate, tanquam a Domini Spiritu. But the order of the Greek is against this, and, had S. Paul meant this, he would perhaps have Lord of the Spirit, viz. Christ, through whose instrumentality the Spirit is given (Tit. iii. 5, 6; Jn xvi. 7). This is perhaps the simplest grammatical meaning of the words, if kyplov is a sabstantive.
 domino spirituum as S. Paul's words (Adv. Marc. v. 11). (3) Even as from the Lord the Spirit (R.V.; comp. A.V. margin), which is found in some MSS. of the Vulgate, a donino spiritu. (4) Even as from the Spirit which is the Lord (R.V. margin). (5) Even as from a Spirit exercising lordship (Hort), or, by a paraphrase, a Spirit which is Iord. This last takes kupfov as an adjective, and it has great advantages. As Hort suggests, it may be "the Seriptural source of the remarkable adjectival phrase to kópoy in the (so called)
 Such a use of kípos is not found elsewhere in Scripture, but its adoption in the Creed is evidence that it was thus understood by some. If this rendering stands, the conjectural reading ki $\rho$ oo for K $v \rho l o v$ in $v .17$ becomes not improbable. We may adopt any of the three last, (3), (4), or (5), and interpret that by the influence of the Spirit all Christians are step by step made similar to the glorified Christ. The Jew does not catch the reflexion of even the glory of the Law; he sees nothing but the dull and deadening letter. Much less does he refiect the glory of the Gospel. The кa0ate $\epsilon$ characterizes the transformation; our transformation is one which answers to its source, viz. a spirit which is Sovereign,-again in contrast to Moses, who had to deal with the $\gamma$ pd $\mu \mu \mathrm{c}$. Throughout the verse there is contrast between the Old Covenant and the New; between one man and 'we ail'; between the face often veiled and 'with unveiled face'; between glory that is transient and 'reflecting as in a mirror' (present of continued state) 'from glory to glory'; between glory that is external and glory that is a penetrating and assimilating influence; between the ministry of the $\gamma \rho \dot{\mu} \mu \mu a$ and the agency of the $\pi \nu \epsilon \bar{\mu} \mu a$. But there is no authority for its omission; and it may be understood as explaining how the evil one was able to do this and to put them on the road to perdition. It was through their refusal to believe what was offered to them for their salpation. They would not use their eyes, and so they lost the power of seeing. A veil of darkness hindered them from perceiving the truth which the Apostle brought them; and this was partly the cause and partly the effect of their being in the path to destruction. Winer, p. 779. By oi amıotoc he means those who do not believe the Gospel, and he frequently uses it of the heathen (vi. 14; 1 Cor. vi. 6, vii. 12 ff., x. 27, xiv. 22 fi.).

He is not insinuating that his opponents preach themselves: he is repelling a charge which they brought against him. Such passages as 1 Cor. iv. 16, vii. 7, xi. 1 might be used to support such a charge. We are not to understand кvplous from кúfor, 'we preach not ourselves as lords.' But $\delta o \dot{\lambda} \lambda o u s$ must have its full meaning, 'bondservants, slaves.' And he does not say 'Christ's slaves' but 'your slaves'; yet, to show that this is said in no servile, fawning spirit, he adds 'for Jesus' sake,' or possibly 'through Jesus.' ## iv. 7-v. 10. The Supferings and the Sopports of an Apostle.

This is a letter written in very parying moods: and here the mood of the writer changes in a very marked way. The subject is not changed, and the connexion with the preceding part of the subject is not broken; bnt the tone is greatly lowered. In his Apologia pro vitá suâ (i. 12-vii. 16), alter defending himself with regard to the charge of levity, and also with regard to the case of the great offender (i. 12 -ii. 17), he went on in a tone of great confidence and exultation, which had already begun at ii. 14, to speak of the greatness of the Apostolic office and of the glory and freedom of the Gospel which he preaches (ii. 18-iv. 6). Here he begins to point out that there is another side to all this. The Gospel has a superabundance of glory, which is refleeted from a glorified Christ who is the image of God. But it does not follow from this that he who preaches the Gospel has abundance of glory. So far as externals go, the very reverse of this is the case. Not even the transitory glory of Moses has been allowed to him. He has a body, which is a fragile earthly vessel, often made still more frail by sickness and hardship. His spirit is broken down with anxiety and disappointment. He groans, being burdened; and he feels the sentence of death ever at work within him. But, side by side with this intense depression, there is a feeling of trust in the neverfailing support of the God whom he serves. 'Wherefore we faint not.' He had said this before when he thought of the glorious character of the ministry committed to him (iv. 1); and he says it again now (v. 16). His opponents may say that his infirmities are evidence against his Apostolic authority. But the truth is that, in his weakness, God is giving proof of the Divine power of the Gospel. The Apostle's humiliation here tends to the glory of God; and he will have, in exchange for the weight of suffering here, 'an oternal weight of glory' hereafter ( $v .17$ ). Three times he counts up his sufferings, here, vi. 4-10, xi. 23-30.

It matters little whether we interpret rò $\boldsymbol{\nu}$ Onбaupop as the $\gamma \boldsymbol{\nu} \omega \bar{\omega} \iota s \tau \hat{\eta} s \quad \delta b \xi \eta \mathrm{~s}$, or the $\phi \omega \tau \iota \sigma \mu$ ós which this $\gamma \nu \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota s$ brings, or the ministry by which the $\gamma \nu \hat{\omega} \sigma i s$ is conveyed to others. It means the powers committed to him as an Apostle.
 2 Tim. ii. 21 ; 1 Pet. iii. 7; 2 Esdr. vi. 63. The human body in its frailty is meant. Vessels of clay have neither the beauty nor the strength of vessels made of bronze, silver, or gold. They are rough in appearance, and can be easily chipped, cracked, or broken. Herodotus (ini. xcvi. 3) tells how Darius used to melt down the tribute-money and run it into earthen jars, which he afterwards stripped off, $\pi \epsilon \rho l a, \rho e \in \iota$ (comp. iii. 16), leaving the bullion for future use. The comparison of the body to an earthenware vessel is common in literature, especially among the Stoics. Thus Seneca says that man is "a cracked vessel, which will break at the least fall" (Ad Marc. 11). Marcus Aurelius says that $\tau \delta \pi \epsilon \rho \kappa \kappa \epsilon / \mu \epsilon \nu 0 \nu$ a $\gamma \gamma \epsilon \epsilon \hat{\omega} \delta \epsilon$ is by no means to be considered to be the man himself, but only the envelope out of which the soul glides gently in a peaceful death (x. 36, 38). But such metaphors have no necessary connexion with the Gnostic, Manichaean, and NeoPlatonic doctrine of the utter vileness of everything material, and therefore of man's body. The reference to the oreation of light in $v .6$ renders it possible that here there is a referenco to man's being made out of earth (Gen. ii. 7); a reference to Gideon's earthen pitchers (Judg. vii. 16, 19) is also possible; but neither is at all certain. Origen (Philocal. iv) makes the 'earthen vessels' to be the humble diction of Scripture. The general meaning is, that a magnificent trust has been committed to us, but the instrument by which we discharge it is very mean.

As in the case of the Master, the Apostle's body is in the end to be made a corpse. But, at the present, what he ceaselessly has with him is the suffering which leads to this result. As Christ's Passion began long before Gethsemane, so the martyrdom of S. Paul began long before body is charged with the sufferings which tend to deprive it of life, in order that the life of Jesus may be manifested in it. This perhaps means that S . Paul's frequent deliverances from death were manifestations of the life-giving power of the risen Christ. Like Christ's Resurrection, they were a witness to the truth of the Gospel, for they showed that Jesus is still alive and able to save. But $\dot{\eta}$ j $\omega \dot{\eta} \tau \tau \hat{v}$ 'I $\eta \sigma o \hat{u}$ probably includes more than deliverance from physical death; and $\epsilon \nu$ $\tau \hat{\psi} \sigma \dot{\omega} \mu a \tau \iota \dot{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ does not limit us to what is physical. Even in the body the moral power of the living Christ may be manifested; as when Christians are enabled to endure prolonged suffering of the worst kind with cheerfulness. See Bigg on 1 Pet. iii. 18.

 we the living are being delivered unto death. No sooner is one rescue effected than the Apostle is handed over to death once more. He always goes about with his life in his hand; but then it is also in God's hand, who does not allow it to be lost. Note del, which gives the idea of continuousness and is not frequent in S.  a startling conclusion to draw from what has just been said; so startling, that Chrysostom, Calvin, and others treat it as sarcastic : 'So you see that Apostles have a very hard existence, while you live in comfort.' But there is probably no irony. The first half of the conclusion is drawn from the first half of v. 11: 'Always we the living are being handed over unto death; so that it is death that is at work in us.' The second lialf of the conclusion is drawn from the second half of $v .11$ : 'The power of the life of Jesus preserves as to work for your salvation ; so that it is life that is at work in you.' Some of the Corinthians had taunted S. Paul with his bodily infirmities; his appearance was against him; no one would suppose that such a miserably broken down man was an Aposile. He tells them that they should have been the last people to utter such a scoff; for it is they who have profited by his endurance of sufferiugs which, but for Divine support, would have killed him. But, because we have the same spirit of faith, according to that which is written, I believed, wherefore 1 spoke, we also believe, wherefore also we speak. The same trust in God which sustained the Psalmist sustains the Apostle; and it is this faith which enables him, in spite of his infirmities, to preach, and to preach with effect. The quotation is from the LXX. of exvi. 10 [cxy. 1], which here differs from the Hebrew. The Hebrew gives, 'I believe when I speak,' or, 'I do believe, for I must speak.' The point here is that faith and trust in God enable those who are in trouble themselves to make known to others the love of God. The whole context seems to be in S. Paul's mind.
 of $v .13$ in another form. To the man who has it, complete belief is equivalent to knowledge. Many of the first Christians knew that God had raised Jesus from the dead, because they had seen Him alive after the Cruaifixion. Others had a belief in the fact which was equal to knowledge. All had a belief equal to knowledge that God would raise them also from the dead, supposing that they died before Christ's Return. It is a mistake to say that "it is impossible that the reference can be to the resurrection of the body at the Parousia, for St Paul was persuaded, when he wrote the First Epistle, that he should live until the Lord's coming, and there is no indication in the Second that his view had undergone any change." In 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52 he contemplates the probability of his being alive at the Second Advent. In 2 Cor. v. 1-8 he contemplates the possibility of his not being among those who will live to see Christ's Return. During the period in which he wrote both letters he seems to have still thought that the majority of Christians then living would live on until the Second Coming (1 Thes. iv. 15, 17), and to have supposed that he would be in this majority. But on this last point he nowhere lays stress; and when he was in one of his desponding moods he may easily have expected the contrary. What he says here is that, if he dies, he knows that God will raise him as He raised Jesus, and will present him along with his Corinthian converts to the risen Christ. As in ii. 6 (see note), the A.Y. here renders $\tau \omega \hat{\tau} \pi \lambda_{\epsilon t} \delta \nu \omega \nu$ 'many,' instead of 'the majority.' He does not say 'all,' because there were some Corinthians of whom this was not true.

Chap. V. The Same Subject continded.

The division between the chapters is again not well made. Chapter iv. would have ended better at v .10.

1-10. He continues his impassioned statement of the sufferings and the consolations of an Apostle, as drawn from his own experience. The support derived from the realization of the unseen is further developed. Hope of eternal glory gives him strength to endeavour to be always such as Christ can approve. The balanced rhythm, which distinguishes iv. 16-18, still continues for a verse or two.

1. ol $\delta a \mu \in v$ yáp. The connexion with what precedes is shown by the $\gamma$ á $\rho$ and by community of subject. He is sure that temporary affliction works out an eternal weight of glory; for we know that if our earthly house of the tabernacle were taken down. Whatever doubts may have been raised on the subject, Christian ministers (or all Christians; comp. ol övees in v. 4) know (iv. 14 ; comp. Rom. viii. 28) that the dissolution of the body means, not annihilation, but translation to a higher state of existence: comp. 1 Jn iii. 2, 14. This knowledge comes from revelation. Philosophy and science can do no more than guess. The Vulgate has domus nostra hujus habitationis, and in v. 4 in hoc tabernaculo, where hujus and hoc represent the article. In the Epistles (not Gospels) hic mundus frequently represents $\delta \kappa \delta \sigma \mu_{0 s}$ (Rom. iii. 6; v. 12; 1 Cor. iv. 3, v. 10, vi. 2, xiv. 10; \&c.).
oikla toû $\sigma \kappa \mathfrak{\eta}$ иous. Tent-dwelling, or tabernacle-house; a home that is only a tent. Seeing that neither houses nor tents are 'dissolved,' while both are 'taken down,' the latter is a better rendering of $\kappa a \tau \alpha \lambda \dot{\theta} \theta \eta$ (Mt. xxiv. 2; Mk xv. 48), which is the exact opposite of 'build up' (Gal. ii. 18; Mt. xxvi. 61, xxvii. 40), and generally implies total destruction. Our earthly tent-dwelling will be taken down at our death. Lightfoot (on tò dupa入̂̃бac in Phil. i. 23) remarks "that the camp-life of the Israelites in the wilderness, as commemorated by the annual feast of tabernacles, was a ready and appropriate symbol of man's transitory life on earth." The metaphor may have been suggested to S . Paul by his work as a $\sigma \kappa \eta \nu o \pi o t$ s (Acts xviii. 3), but it is common in literature, and he uses it nowhere else. Comp. Wisd. ix. 15, which is rather close to this passage (see on x. 5), and 2 Pet. i. 13, 14 ; Is. xxxviii. 12. Field thinks that "the depreciatory term $\sigma \kappa \eta \hat{y} \circ$ os for the human body is borrowed from the Pythagorean philosophy." Clement of Alexandria says that Plato called man's body an earthy (not earthly) tabernacle, $\boldsymbol{\gamma}^{\prime} \nu_{\nu} \nu \sigma \kappa \hat{\eta} v o s(S t r o m . ~ v . ~ x i v . ~ p . ~ 703 ~ e d . ~ P o t t e r) . ~$ The idea of man's body being a tent fits in well with that of his life being a pilgrimage, and also with the idea that here we are only sojourners ( 1 Pet. ii. 11).
 Him. The body also is His gift ( 1 Cor. xii. 18, 24), but man has a share in the production of it. The spiritual edifice is in a peculiar sense God's creation : and olcodout implies something more permanent than a $\sigma \kappa \hat{\eta}$ pos (Mt. xxiv. 1 ; Mk xiii. 1 ; Eph. ii. 21). The word is a later form of olko $\delta \delta \mu \eta \mu a$ : see Lightfoot on 1 Cor. iii. 9. The present tense ( $£ \chi \circ \mu \epsilon \nu$ ) is used of what is absolutely certain: as soon as the tent-dwelling is taken down, a muich better edifice is there. But we need not suppose that $S$. Paul thinks of the better edifice as already existing in heaven. It comes $\epsilon \kappa$ $\theta \epsilon o \hat{0}$ and $\bar{\xi} \xi$ oupayov̂ directly it is required. Till then it is only a possibility.
oiklav axciporroinrov. The contrast is with the tent-dwelling, rather than with the body which it represents; for the body is not made with hands. But dं $\chi \in \iota \rho o \pi=i \eta \tau o s$ came to mean 'immaterial, spiritual.' Christ uses it of His own risen body (Mk xiv. 58), and S. Paul of the circumcision of the heart (Col ii. 11, where see Lightfoot's note). In the LXX. גєipomointos is always used of objects connceted with idolatry (Lev. xxvi. 1, 30; Is. ii. 18, x. 11, xvi. 12, xix. 1; Dan. v. 4, 23, vi. 26) ; and therefore áxecporointos would come to mean 'free from pollution, pure.' Comp. Acts vii. 47, and see Lightfoot on Col. ii. 11. This spiritual home is among rid $\mu \dot{\eta}$ $\beta \lambda \epsilon \pi \delta \mu \epsilon \nu a$ (iv. 18). Note the balanced contrast, as in iv. 17. The present body is (1) earthly, (2) a tent-dwelling. The future body is (1) from God, in the heavens, (2) not made with hands, eternal. The R.V. rightly places a comma between 'eternal' and 'in the heavens,'

2. кaì үàj èv тоv́tụ. We must choose between several translations of both halves. For kal रdo for verily (R.V.), or for indeed, or for also, or for moreover: it introduces an additional point or emphatic reason. Here ráp introduces the motive of S. Paul's words : 'I speak of this sure hope because we are conscious of sorrow.' For $\epsilon \nu$ доú $\tau$, , in this tent-dwelling, or in this body? or hereby ( 1 Cor. iv. 4), or 'by this, herein' (Jn iv. 37, xv. 8, xvi. 30) are possible renderings. 'For truly this is why we groan' may be right; but 'For in this $\sigma \kappa \hat{\eta} v o s$ we groan' is more probable. In either case, "the burden of infirmity we carry about with us prevents the full realization of our blessedness" (Lias). Comp. Rom. viii. 23.
érevóvoardai émıtrodoûvtes. Because we long to be clothed upon. The participle gives the reason for $\sigma \tau \epsilon \nu$ aj $\delta \mu \mu \nu$ : comp. $\epsilon l \delta \delta \tau \epsilon s$ (iv. 14).

Winer, p. 144. The double compound occurs nowhere else in Biblical Greek, but is full of meaning here; comp. द̇ $\pi \in \nu \delta u ́ \tau \eta s$ (Jn xxi. 7; Lev. viii. 7; I Sam. xviii. 4 A). The metaphor makes the easy change from a small tent to a garment. Here we have the two combined, to be clothed with a habitation. For the accusative comp. Mt. vi. 25 ; Mk vi. 9 ; Lk. vii. 27 ; 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54. Even more than olkodouŕ, olkクtifiov gives the idea of a permanent home (Jude 6; 2 Mac. xi. 2); and the idea is that of a lasting edifice being placed over a frail one, like one garment over another, so that the fabric that is covered ceases the $\epsilon \pi \epsilon \nu \dot{\partial} \dot{\sigma} \tau \eta=$ the Resurrection body, while the $\chi \iota \tau \dot{\omega} y=$ the natural body. Comp. Asc. of Isaiah iv. 16, ix. 9, xi. 40. Our earnest desire is to escape death and draw the Resurrection body over the nataral body, so that the less may be absorbed in the greater. The Apostle perhaps means that the eager longing is evidence of the reality of what is longed for. It is improbable that our natural craving to have our perishable bodies superseded by something imperishable should be incapable of realization. In the N.T. $\dot{\epsilon} \pi \iota \pi \rho \theta \in \hat{\epsilon} \nu$ is almost peculiar to S. Paul, who has it in all groups of his Epistles (ix. 14 ; Rom. i. ii. ; Phil. i. 8, ii. 26; 1 Thes. iii. 6; 2 Tim. i. 4). Place only a comma at the end of $v .2$.
 Here the metaphor of the garment is uppermost. Comp. the argument in Plato, Phaedo 87. In the Gorgias 523, the dead, having been deprived of their bodies, are called $\gamma \nu \mu \nu o i:$ and here $\gamma \nu \mu \nu \delta s$ seems to mean 'without a body.' Comp. Crat. 403 and Orig. c. Cels. ii. 43.
 would he be called $\gamma \dot{\mu} \mu \boldsymbol{\nu}$ s if he had also thrown off his $\chi$ 亿ớu. Bat if the ėrevoúr $\bar{s}$ was on him the absence of the $\chi \iota \tau \dot{\omega} \nu$ would not be felt. The clause explains the latter half of $v .2$. 'I say clothed upon, of course on the supposition that, when we are clothed upon, we shall not be found without any covering at all.' Only those who are still in the body at the Second Advent (to which orisis the aorists refer) can be said to be clothed upon. The dead, who have left their bodies, may be said to be clothed, when they receive a heavenly body, but not clothed upon. Cremer (Lex. p. 163) contends that here $\gamma v \mu \nu \delta$ s means 'stripped of righteousness, guilty.' But the passage is one of which the meaning is uncertain. See notes in the Speaker's Commentary, pp. 418, 424. The кal adds emphasis to the assumption; 'if indeed it so be,' 'if it really is the case.' But this is perhaps too pronounced, and the force of the kal may be better given in intonation. Lightfoot on Gal. iii. 4 remarks that $e l$ ye "leaves a loophole for doubt, and kal widens this, implying an unwillingness to believe on the part of the speaker." Elsewhere S. Paul speaks of the body, when the life is gone, as rupubs (1 Cor. xv. 37). Comp. Enoch lxii. 15, 16 ; Secrets of Enoch xxii. 8.
 $v .3$ he returns to $v .2$ : For verily (as in v. 2), or For indeed (R.V.), we that are in the tabernacle (the one mentioned before) do groan, being (= because) burdened : comp. i. 8. This seems to refer to all Christians, not to the Apostles or ministers only; see on v. 1 .
 wish to be unclothed; or, wherefore (Phil. iii. 12) we do not wish to be unclothed. As in Phil. iii. 12 (see Lightfoot's note), either 'because' or 'wherefore' makes sense; but here 'because' makes the better sense. The thought that he may be 'unclothed,' i.e. lose his body, before the Lord returns, is painful to the Apostle, and makes him groan. He would much rather live to see the Second Advent, and have the resurrection body put on him without dying. Such a feeling was natural to one who believed the Second Advent to be near. The direct transition from life to a higher life seemed to be much happier than the transition from life through death and resurrection to the higher life. See the remarkable parallel 2 Esdr. xiii. 24 ; also Tertul. De Resur. Carn. 41 ff . The A.V. puts the 'not' in the wrong place: oú must go with $\theta$ é $\lambda_{0} \mu \mathrm{ev}$.  may be swallowed up (ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 54) by life; i.e. that our bodies, instead of being separated from us by death, may be transfigured and glorified by life, through the absorption of all that is perishable. Comp. Is. xxv. 8. In the Book of Enoch this feeling takes the form of a desire to be translated to the Kingdom of Heaven, without consideration of the body; but there is the same confidence as to the future life in glory: "Here I wished to dwell, and my soul longed for that dwelling-place: here already heretofore had been my portion, for so has it been established concerning me before the Lord of Spirits " (xxxix. 8 ; comp. lxxi. 14, xc. 31).
 wrought us out for this very thing is God. 'But' implies 'This may seem strange.' But $\delta \epsilon$ may have reference to the wish in $v .4$ and to its fulfilment : ' Now he who \&c.' The aorists point to the time when

vii. 10,11 , ix. 11, xii.2. By aúzd $\boldsymbol{\tau} 0 \hat{u} \tau 0$ is meant what is mortal being absorbed in life. It was for precisely this (Rom. ix. 17) that God prepared us, who gave to us the earnest of the Spirit (see critieal note). The Spirit is an earnest of the realization of the yearning for future glory. With the doctrine of the Spirit as a pledge, here and i. 22 , comp. Eph. i. 14, iv. 30 and Rom. viii. 15-17, 23.

6-10. These verses sum up results, and recall the strong conviction expressed in $v .1$. The A.V. does not bring out the construction of $v v .6-8$, which is broken by the parenthesis in v. 7. Confident therefore always, and knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord, for we walk by means of faith and not by means of visible form,-we are confident, I say, and are well pleased rather to get absent from the body and to get home unto the Lord.  xii. 8), which S. Paul has also in mind in 1 Cor. xiii. 12. We live here under a condition of believing in Christ, not under the condition of His visible presence.
8. The $\delta \dot{\epsilon}$ marks the resumption of $\theta a \rho \rho o \hat{v} \nu \tau \epsilon s$ in $\theta a \rho \rho o \hat{v} \mu \epsilon \nu$, and this is well rendered by 'I say' (A.V.), $\epsilon \dot{\text { undokov̂} \mu \epsilon v . ~ A r e ~ w e l l ~ p l e a s e d ~(x i i . ~ 10 ; ~ M t . ~ i i i . ~ 17, ~ x i i . ~ 18, ~ x v i i . ~ 5 ; ~}$ Ik. xii. 32 ; 1 Cor. i. 21; \&c.): stronger than $\theta \in \lambda \rho \mu \in \nu$. The Apostle is more than willing to migrate out of the body; which shows that though there may be patural awe, there is no fear of death in v. 4.

As at a later period (Phil. i. 20-25), he is 'in a strait betwixt the two.' For some reasons he would like to remain alive; for others he would prefer to depart. But the reasons for wishing to remain have changed. Here it is for his own sake that he desires not to die: he believes that the Lord will come soon, and he longs to see Him without dying. There it is for the sake of the Philippians that he desires to remain alive: they can ill do without him. Probably, when he wrote to them, he was less confident that Christ would come soon, and therefore had ceased for this reason to wish to live longer. In both cases the reason for his desire to migrate from the body is that he may come home to the Lord, Comp. Cic. Tusc. 1. 41. 98.
9. Siò каl фı入отццои́цсӨa. Wherefore also (i. 20) we are ambitious (R.V. margin), whether we are at home or absent from home, to be acceptable (Rom. xii. 1, 2, xiv. 18, Eph. ₹. 10) to him. If éf $\delta$ oкe $\omega$ is 'am well pleased,' we must have a different expression for cúápetarol, for which otherwise 'well-pleasing' (Phil. iv. 18; Col, iii. 20; Heb. xiii. 21) is accurate: in LXX. only Wisd. iv. 10, ix. 10. In late Greek, фөлотьнє́оцаı loses its definiteness, and need mean no more than 'strive earnestly': so that 'labour' (A.V.) and 'make it our aim' (R.V.) represent it fairly well. Elsewhere only Rom. xv. 20; 1 Thes. iv. 11. Nevertheless the older meaning may be right here. This aim of the Apostle is his legitimate ambition: whatever his personal wishes might be, this is a point of honour with him. It is incredible that elve èvomuoivves clre ex $\kappa \delta \eta \mu o \hat{\nu} \nu \tau \epsilon s$ refers to his place of abode in this world. Both v. 8 and v. 10 show that the reference is to being in the body or out of the body. His ambition is, in either state to have Christ's approval. See on i. 6.
 ( 1 Cor. x. 17) of us must be made manifest (1 Cor. iv. 5) before the judgment seat of Christ. This is a reason for aiming at Christ's approval; every Christian, whether Apostle or not, whether in the body or out of it at the time of His Advent, will, by Divine decree ( $\delta \epsilon i$ ), have to come before Him for approbation or condemnation, there to be made manifest (iii. 3) by having his real character disclosed (Jn iii. 21 ; Eph. v. 13 ; Col. iii. 4; Rev. iii. 18, xv. 4). $\phi a \nu \in \rho \omega \theta \neq \nu a t$ is stronger than 'appear' (A.V.), which is $\phi$ alveб

"It is important to notice how easily St Paul passes from Xpiotos to $\Theta$ eds. The Father and the Son were in his mind so united in function that they may often be interchanged. God, or Christ, or God through Christ, will jadge the world. Oar life is in God, or in Christ, or with Christ in God" (Sanday and Headlam ad loc.).

 course more probable that какбу should have been substituted for the less common $\phi a \hat{0} \lambda o \nu$, than that $\phi a \hat{\lambda} \lambda o \nu$ should have been substituted for како́y. But $\phi a \hat{\lambda} \lambda o \nu$ is so common of moral evil (Aristotle passim), that a copyist might have thought it more appropriate here than the vaguer какby (see on xiii.7). Therefore the alteration of какbv into фa0入ov is not impossible. For this use of $\pi \rho d s$ comp. Lk. xii. 47 ; Gal. ii. 14: according to the things which he did while in the body, whether he did good or did bad. The neuter singular sums up the single acts ( $\tau \dot{\alpha}$ $\delta i d . \tau . \sigma$.) as one result. There are gradations of recompense (ix. 6); but nothing is said here either for or against the doctrine of a probation after death. There is silence as to the possibility of such probation. The Apostle says that all Christians will have to answer, each by himself, for what has been done by them in this life. The natural, but not necessary, implication is, that there will be no other period in which either reward or punishment can be earned. Nor is there anything to show whether S. Paul thought of the judgment of each person as taking place when he left this world, or as being deferred till Christ's Return to judge all who are still in the body.

v. 11-V. 10. The Life of an Apostle.

It is not easy to find a suitable heading for this section, which, although consecutive, touches on a variety of topics convected with the office of an Apostle and with S. Paul's own life and experiences.

But there is a marked transition from the Sufferings and Supports of an Apostle (iv. 7-r. 10) to matters which do not fall under that head. He once more makes personal explanations as to his conduct, and in particular as to his work in the capacity of a preacher ( $v v$. 11-19), of an ambassador (vv. 20, 21), and of a minister (vi. 1-10). All this has been of a character which ought to commend him to those among whom he has worked.
11. тòv $\phi^{\prime}$ ßov tov̂ кupiov. The fear of the Lord; the fear which we feel before Christ as our Judge (Eph. v. 21), not 'the terror' (A.V.)

 marked contrast, an effect which the A.V. spoils by bad punctuation. There should be only a comma after the first clanse and more than a comma after the second : men we persuade (Gal. i. 10), but to God we have been made manifest ( 1 Cor. iv. $\overline{5}$ ). Of what is it that the Apostle persuades men? Of his own integrity. This explanation brings out the contrast. 'I have to persuade men that I am honest, but to God I have already been made manifest and remain so.' The judgment passed by God on his conduct has been made with full knowledge. The prejudices of the Corinthians against him, being the result of misapprehension, can be removed by persuasion, and he hopes that they have been removed: I hope that in your consciences also we have been made manifest. After eintijw we commonly have the aor. infin. (1 Cor. xvi. 7; Phil. ii. 19, 23 ; \&c.); but the perfect here answers the previous perfect, and both express what has been and remains manifested. The kal means 'in your consciences as well as to God.' He hopes that his self-vindication has been successful, and that he is seen by them as he knows that he is seen by God.

There is another view with regard to $\pi \in l \theta_{o \mu c \nu}$, making it anticipate vv. 18-20; 'Realizing the awfulness of the thought of Christ who is the Judge of all, we do our work as an Evangelist; we persuade men to be reconciled to God and so be ready for that day.' Then, partly perhaps because persuasion suggests the idea of artifice and recalls to his mind the charge of insincerity, he continues, 'but to God we have been made manifest.'

has just been saying would easily lend itself to a repetition of that charge.
 contrary we say this) as giving you an occasion of glorying on our behalf, that ye may have (it to use) against them who glory in appearance and not in heart. Once more (ii. 12) it is all for the Corinthians' sake. What looks like self-praise is really done to supply them with material, when they have to stand up against those who boast about superficial advantages rather then solidity of oharacter. His Jewish opponents boasted of their descent from Abraham, of being circumoised, of having exclusive privileges, perhaps also of intimacy with James, the Lord's brother, and of having seen Christ Himself. S.Paul tells the Corinthians that he is giving them the means of answering these boasts with boasting of a different kind. If what he has been saying about himself is believed by them to be true, they can use it as an answer. 'What are the external advantages of which you vaunt compared with a good conscience and work done in the fear of God? Our experience of Paul is that he devotes himself to God and to us. You do neither.' With the exception of Lk. xi. 54, a $\phi \circ \rho \mu{ }^{\prime}$ ' in the N.T. is peculiar to S. Paul (xi. 12 ; Rom. vii. 8, 11 ; Gal. v. 13 ; $1 \mathrm{Tim} . \mathrm{v} .14$ ). For the opposition between $\pi$ то́б由тоv and кар $\delta i a$ see 1 Thes. ii. 17; 1 Sam. xvi. 7; and here, as there, neither word has the article, classes, not individual cases, being under consideration. The subjective $\mu \dot{\eta}$ (see oritical note) gives the class as thought of, not as existing in fact; but this distinction is dying out in late Greek and need not be insisted upon here. For кavð仑ियac see on ix. 2: in the N.T. it is followed by $\dot{\epsilon} \nu$, in the LXX. by $\dot{\epsilon} \nu$ and sometimes $\epsilon \pi i$ or acc., in classical Greek by $\epsilon i$, $\varepsilon \pi i$, or acc.
 we went mad (it was) for God; or whether we are in our right mind, (it is) for you. The change from aorist to present must be marked: the datives are commodi, and must be translated alike. S. Paul had his speaking with tongues, his revelations, his ecstasies; and for all that side of his life his crities had said with Festus (Acts xxvi. 24), as His critics had said of Christ (Mk iii. 21), that he was mad. 'Be it so,' he replies; 'let us allow that at such times I was beside myself; it was to God and in His service that I was so. But now and generally I am in my right mind; and it is to you and in your service that I am so. Take whichever side of my life you like; assume that the whole of it is madness, or the whole of it sanity; where does selfishness come in? There is no room for it either in what is directed to God's glory or in what is devoted to your edification.' If $\epsilon \xi \in \sigma \tau \eta \mu \epsilon \nu$ refers to one event, and not to the different occasions on which he had exceptional spiritual experiences, it must be referred to the Rapture recorded in xii. $1-5$ rather than to his conversion, for the latter, by turning him into an Apostle, was as much $\dot{\mu} \mu \mathrm{i}$ as $\theta \in \hat{\varphi}$. Assuming that xii. 1-5 was written before this, this may be a direct reference to it. It was one instance of his being 'beside himself,' of which he had 'gloried ' to the Corinthians. See Swete on Mk v. 15. For єi'тe...єi'тe... see on i. 6.
 to $\tau \delta \nu \phi b \beta o \nu \tau 00$ кuplov (v.11) : it means the love which Christ has towards us (Eph. iii. 19 ; Rom. v. 5, 8). See Cremer, Lex. p. 594. Because He loves us so much, we have to restrict our energies to the service of God and of our fellow-men, to the exclusion of self. By $\sigma v \nu \epsilon \chi \epsilon 6$ is meant 'keeps within bounds,' prevents from wandering to other objects than the service of God and of man. The word implies pressure (Lk. viii. 45, xix. 43), but the pressure which restrains (Lk. xii. 50), rather than that which pushes forward. See Lightfoot on $\sigma v \nu \epsilon \chi o \mu a l \epsilon^{\prime} \kappa \tau \hat{\omega} \nu$ dóo (Phil, i. 23), the only other Pauline use of the verb; ' I am hemmed in on both sides, I am prevented from inclining one way or the other.' 'Urges us on' is not quite the meaning, although Chrysostom so paraphrases it; oủk àpl $\eta \sigma \iota \nu \dot{i} \mu \hat{a} s$ кai $\dot{\omega} \theta \epsilon \hat{\epsilon}$. He twice quotes, $\dot{\eta} \dot{a} \gamma \dot{\alpha} \pi \eta \tau 0 \hat{v} \theta \in o \hat{v}$, a reading for which there seems to be no authority. But restrains us from conmending ourselves may be right. The idea of motive, though not in the word, can perhaps be deduced from it; 'possesses us, absorbs us'; comp. Acts xviii. 5, 'he was wholly absorbed in preaching.'

крivavtas тoûto. Because we formed this judgment ( 1 Cor. x. 15 , xi. 13), came to this opinion. Some refer this to his conversion. But at the moment when Christ captured him and changed him from a persecutor into a convert he could hardly be said to have formed any such conviction. The time of reflexion after his conversion may be meant. In that case translate, because we have formed this judgment, or because we thus judge (A.V., R.V.). The cov̂ro anticipates öть and $d_{\rho a}$, especially the latter : it is oi $\pi \dot{d} v \tau \epsilon s$ a $\pi \tau \epsilon \theta a v o v$ that is the main element in the judgment. For this use of rov̂co comp. viii. 20, x. 7, 11.
 note. That one died for all, therefore they all died; the d $d$ c is practically the sign of quotation, giving the words of his judgment. In one sense, all died in Adam (1 Cor. xv. 22); in quite another, all died in Christ (Gal. ii. 19; Col. iii. 3). This is the interpretation of ol mávtes ámétanov adopted by Athanasius, Cyril of Alexandria, and many moderns; and it is preferable to the explanation that the death of one for all showed that all men were previously dead in sin, which Chrysostom seems to mean.

 $\dot{\epsilon} \gamma \in \rho \theta \dot{\ell} \tau \iota$, and this shows that in $v v .14,15 \dot{v} \pi \dot{\epsilon} \rho \dot{\dot{\nu}} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ must not be rendered 'in your stead.' Christ was raised on our behalf, that we might be made alive in Him (oi $\zeta \omega \nu \tau \epsilon s$ ) and ourselves be raised again;

16. Against all external evidence this verse has been suspeeted of being a subsequent insertion, made either by the Apostle or by a copyist, because (it is said) it breaks the argument. No doubt the passage would read quite smoothly if we omitted $v .16$ : but that does not prove that $v, 16$ is not original. Its connexion with what precedes and with what follows is very intelligible. Seeing that all men are intended to live, not to self, but to Christ and to others in Him, it follows that our knowledge of others must not be калd $\sigma$ á $\rho \kappa \alpha$ : it must not be based upon their bodily appearance or material circumstances, such as race, wealth, position, and the like. It is the inner man, the spirit, the new creation, which counts; and this is the same in Jew and Gentile, rich and poor, teacher and taught. Comp. xi. 18; Phil. iii. 4; Jn viii. 15.
 a secondary emphasis on ámò $\tau 0 \hat{v} \nu \hat{v} \nu$, a phrase which, with this exception [and Jn viii. 11], is peculiar in the N.T. to S. Luke (i. 48, v. 10, xii. 52, xxii. 18, 69; Acts xviii. 6). Wherejore we henceforth know no man after the flesh. He intimates that there are people, his Judaizing opponents, whose knowledge is limited to externals, and that there was a time when he himself did so. But when once a man has recognized that in Christ he and all died and rose again, he makes that mistake no longer.

As in $v v .14,15, \dot{v} \pi \epsilon \rho$ is ' on behalf of': 'in Christ's stead' (A.V.) is probably wrong in both places; and both must be translated alike. 'Become reconciled' is better than 'be ye reconciled' (R.V.), as (1) expressing the tense, (2) as avoiding the emphasis on 'ye,' which is not in the Greek at all.

'Does any one ask, How should I be reconciled?' Him who knew no sin, on our behalf he made (to be) sin (Gal. iii. 13): in order that we might become the righteousness of God in Him. Cremer, Lex. p. 640. Here, as probably in Heb. iii. 2, éroin $\sigma \epsilon \nu$ may mean 'eonstituted.' The proposal to make $\dot{\alpha} \mu a_{\rho} \tau i a \nu$ in $\dot{d} \mu$. $\bar{\epsilon} \pi o i \eta \sigma \epsilon \nu$ mean 'sin-ofjering' has found advocates from Augustine to Ewald; but N.T. usage is against it. ## Chap. VI. The bame Subject continued.

1-10. S. Parl continues his personal explanations respecting his work. These personal explanations are specially prominent in $v v .3$ and 4, about which vv. 4-10 give details as to the way in which his ministry was exercised. He can give an account of it which might well put his adversaries to shame. His readers can use it as a material for defence. "The almost lyrical character which belongs to this burst of feeling may be fitly compared to Rom. viii. 31-39; 1 Cor. xiii. 1-13, which occapy in a similar manner the central place in these Epistles" (Stanley).

The two cover all his energy, working with his hands, travelling, teaching, praying, 'anxiety about all the Churches.' Usage (Lk. ii. 37; Acts xiv. 23, xxvii. 9) almost requires us to understand $\nu \eta \sigma r e i a l ~ o f ~ v o l u n t a r y ~ a b s t i n e n c e, ~$ rather than of inability to obtain food. In xi. 27 he distinguishes $\nu \eta \sigma \tau \in i a l$ from hunger and thirst ( 1 Cor. iv. 11). We pass on from the fields in which $\dot{u} \pi \mu_{0 \nu} \dot{\eta}$ is manifested to characteristics which are coordinate with $\dot{\boldsymbol{j} \pi o \mu o \nu \eta}$ : but $\boldsymbol{\epsilon} \nu$ must still be rendered 'in,' not 'by.'

wis $\pi \lambda$ ávot kal di入 $\eta \in \epsilon$ is. Here, with the change to $\dot{\omega} s, v .9$ should begin, as $v .8$ with the change from $z \nu$ to $\delta i d$. Christ had been called $\epsilon_{\text {exivos }} \mathrm{o} \pi \lambda d \nu 0$ (Mt. xxvii. 63), and 'how much more shall they call them of his household' (Mt. x. 25). This use of kal to introduce an antithesis is specially common in S. John (i. 10, 11, iii. 11, 19, 32, v. 39,40 , vi. 36,43 , \&cc.). In the N.T. $\pi \lambda \lambda^{\prime} \nu_{0}$ is never 'wandering,' but 'misleading, seducing' ( 1 Tim. iv. 1; 2 Jn 7). Contrast Job xix. 4.

 clauses the contrast between $\delta u \sigma \phi \eta \mu i a$ and fact no longer bolds. Rather, the contrast, so far as there is one, is between different sides of the same fact. His adversaries may have rejoiced over him as a dying man, of whom they would soon be rid; but more probably the thought is similar to that in iv. 10, 11; he is always in a dying state, and he is always being revived in the life of Christ. This seems to be the view of both A.V. and R.V., which here drop 'and yet,' and have simply 'and' for kal. In his joyous recognition of the other side of the fact S . Paul changes the simple participle into $\mathbf{i \delta o v} \varsigma \hat{\omega} \mu \in \boldsymbol{v}$. It would have been much less forcible to say kai jûv $\tau \epsilon \mathrm{cs}$.
 throughout $v v .9,10$ should be noted: as being chastened and not being killed. This is parallel to the preceding couplet, and it confirms the view that both members express, from different points of view, what is the fact. Both couplets seem to be taken from Ps.

14－vin．1．Warning against heathen modes of thought and life． The Corinthians are to keep themselves apart from suoh influence． There is here no unintelligible change of topic；and it is exaggeration to speak of＂a remarkable dislocation of the argument＂and＂discon－ nexion with the context．＂It is true that vii． 2 would fit on very well to vi，13：it is indeed a return to the topic of vi．11－13．But that is no sufficient reason for maintaining，against all textual evidence，that this is an interpolation from the lost letter of 1 Cor． $\mathrm{\nabla} .9$ ，or some other lost letter．That the end of one of these lost letters might get attached to another letter is intelligible．One might be imperfect at the end as the other was at the beginning．But could a fragment of one roll get inserted into the middle of another roll？That this passage is wholly spurions，an interpolation composed by an early scribe，is very improbable．BeNiap，$\mu \in \tau о \chi \dot{\eta}, \sigma \cup \mu \phi \omega \dot{\eta} \sigma \sigma t s, \sigma v \gamma \kappa d \theta \in \sigma t s$, and $\mu 0 \lambda \nu \sigma \mu \delta s$ are found nowhere else in the N．T．；but ämak $\lambda \varepsilon \gamma \delta \mu \epsilon \nu a$ abound in S．Paul＇s letters．There are about 38 such words in Colossians，about 41 in Philippians，about 42 in Ephesians．And it should be noticed that three out of the five in this passage are the result of trying to vary the word for union and fellowship．The tone of these verses is thoroughly Pauline；and after the hint given in vi． 1 this exhor－ tation to purity of faith and conduct comes in here naturally enough． The return to the affectionate appeal of $v v .11-13$ ，as soon as the exhortation is concluded，is also quite natural．So long a letter as 2 Corinthians was of course not all written at one sitting．There may have been many sittings，and some of the rapid changes in the letter may be due to this cause．But，apart from this possibility，S．Paul is given to rapid changes，especially in this letter．＂Probably there is no literary work in which the cross－currents of feeling are so violent and so frequent＂（Chase in the Classical Review，April 1890，p．151： see also July，p．317，and October，p．359）．

as would embrsce heathen ideas and acts. Some Corinthians had claimed liberty in such things: 'to be serupulous about them savoured of narrowness; one must take a broad view of life and of the Gospel.' This is not the 'enlargement' for which he pleads; for it is precisely this which results in receiving the grace of God in vain. Note the carefal limitation of his own $\pi \lambda_{\text {arvajobs in }} 1$ Cor. ix. 21 .  meaning here; but the two words are not synonymous. Here only in the N.T. does $\mu$ erox occur. It implies that something is shared between $\mu \epsilon \tau 0 \chi 0 L$ (Heb. i. 9; Lk. v. 7), as profits, or supplies; whereas кон $\omega \nu / a$ rather implies that what is coub $\delta \nu$ to all is enjoyed by each in its totality, e.g. a beantiful day or view. See T. S. Evans on 1 Cor. x. 16. Here S. Paul is evidently seeking a change of word for each question; and his command of Greek is thus illustrated. In Ps. Sol. xiv. 4 we find $\mu \epsilon \tau o \chi \grave{\eta} \dot{a} \mu a \rho \tau l a s: ~ H o s . ~ i v . ~ 17 \mu \epsilon \tau o x o s ~ \epsilon ~(\delta \dot{\omega} \lambda \omega \nu$. As in v. 8, the A. V. here makes an antithesis which is not in the Greek, for סuкacoobva кal ávopiq does not mean 'righteousness and unrighteousness,' but righteousness and iniquity (Mt. vii. 23, xiii. 41; Rom. iv. 7, vi. 19) or lawlessness (2 Thes. ii. 7; 1 Jn iii. 4), which is the characteristic of heathen life (Rom. vi. 19).
 varies the construction in four out of the five questions. For $\phi \omega$ s and arbros in this moral sense comp. Rom. xiii. 12; Eph v. 8; is there of Christ with Belial? There can be no harmony between the perfection of holiness and the spirit of heathen impurity. 'Belial' in the O.T. is frequent and has various meanings. Its original meaning may be either 'worthlessness' or 'hopeless ruin'; its secondary meaning, either 'destruction' or 'extreme wickedness.' Between the O.T. and the N.T. 'Belial' or 'Beliar' came to be a proper name= Satan, and perhaps we have the transition to this use in 'the wicked one' of Nah. i. 15. We find it thus employed in the Book of Jubilees, and often in the Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, where it is connected with the spirit of impurity (Reab. 4, 6; Sim. 5), deceit (Levi 3; Judah 25; Benj. 6), darkness (Levi 18), anger (Dan 1). There, as in the best mss. here, the form Bexlap is used. Another variation is Bepian. In the Sibylline Oracles the name indicates Nero. The Fathers commonly interpret it by dxootát $\boldsymbol{j}$ s and use it of Satan. See Chese, The Lord's Prayer in the Early Church, p. 87. and the A. V. destroys it by turning 'unbeliever' ( $v .14$ ) into 'infidel.' What portion (Kk. x. 42; Acts viii. 21) is there for a bellever ( 1 Tim . v. 16; Acts xvi. 1) with an unbellever (Jn. xx. 27). Comp. $\mu \in \tau \dot{\alpha}$ sanctuary of the living God. It is the community rather than the individual that is a sanctuary of God; but the same is true of the individual also (1 Cor. vi. 19). The emphasis is on $\dot{\eta} \mu \epsilon \hat{\imath}$, 'we Christians'; and jढิvoos, emphatic by position, is in marked contrast to dead idols (1 Thes. i. 9; Acts xiv. 15). Just as the presence of idols pollutes the sanctuary, so the Christian community is polluted by beliefs and aots which savour of idolatry. Vos estis in quorum cordibus habitat et praesidet Deus, qui in se vivens est, et vitam suis dat aeternam; sicut e contrario idola sunt mortua suis cultoribus, qui eis sunt causa mortis aeternae (Herveius Burgidol.). As a metaphor for the Divine indwelling, the vabs, which contained the Holy of Holies, is more suitable than lepóv, which included the whole sacred enclosure: 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17, vi. 19; Eph. ii. 21. Converts from heathenism would understand the metaphor, for vaós to them would suggest the cella or shrine in which the image of the god was placed. In the O.T. $\pi$ avтократшן is frequent; but in the N.T. it is found only here and in Revelation (i. 8, iv. 8, xi. 17, \&c.). Westcott (The Historic Faith, pp. 36, 37) points out that $\pi a \nu \tau o \kappa \rho a d \omega \rho$ is 'All-sovereign' rather than 'Almighty'; the title is descriptive of exercised dominion rather than of abstract power. Scripture speaks of powers of evil as 'world-sovereign' (Eph. vi. 12), but it proclaims God as 'All-sovereign.' The All-sovereign One can, the Lord will, fulfil his promises, whatever men may do. Si vos ejecerint, si vos parentes abdicaverint injideles, Me patrem habebitis sempiternum (Primasius). See Charles on the Book of Jubilees i. 24.

бapkòs кai $\pi v \in \dot{u} \mu a \tau o s$. The genitives mark the recipients of the defilement, not the sources of it. The cause of the pollution is sin, which attecks the spirit through the flesh. But no hard and fast line can be drawn between defilement of flesh and defilement of spirit, for each communicates its condition, whether evil or good, to the other. The general meaning here is sensuality of all kinds.

There is no sufficient reason for believing that $S$. Paul had added to Jewish conceptions of the frailty of the flesh the Gnostic idea that the flesh is originally and in its own nature evil. It is perhaps true that S. Paul gave to $\sigma d \rho \xi$ a more moral signification than it had previously carried. But in the opposition to whigh he points (e.g. in Rom, vii.) between $\sigma \dot{\alpha} \dot{\rho} \rho \xi$ and $\pi \nu \in \hat{v} \mu \alpha$, he does not mean that flesh is in itself sinful and the source of sin. His theory of human nature is not dualistic. See Gifford on Romans, Speaker's Comm. III, pp. 48-52, and Sanday and Headlam on Rom. vii. 14.

If it means 'confidence' (1 Tim. iii. 13; Heb. x. 19), the thought is, ' $I$ am full of confidence in respect of you; full of boasting on your behalf' (v. 12, viii. 24); i.e. the internal feeling of confidence produces the external act of glorying. This is better. If the two clauses expressed a contrast, $\pi \rho \delta \delta_{s} \dot{\nu} \mu a \mathrm{~s}$ and $\dot{v} \pi \epsilon \rho \dot{v} \mu \omega \bar{\nu}$ would probably have stood first. The $\mu \alpha^{\prime}$ रac point to opposition in Macedonia, but whether from Christians or others there is nothing to show: concursus fidelium et infidelium (Atto Vercel.). The fears were caused, partly by this hostility, but chiefly by the condition of Corinth and his own personal depression. Though I did regret it......I now rejoice. This is strong evidence that the painful letter alladed to here is not 1 Corinthians. It is difficult to believe that anything in 1 Corinthians ever made the Apostle regret, even for a time, that he had written it. He does not say that it had pained him to pain them, but that for a time he regretted having sent the letter that pained them, though he does not regret it now. We are therefore again (i. 17, ii. 3, 9) pointed to the hypothesis of a second lost letter, viz. one between 1 and 2 Corinthians, the other being that of 1 Cor. v. 9 , before 1 Corinthians. If 2 Cor. x.-xiii. is part of this letter, there are passages there which he might at times regret having sent, and in the remainder of the letter there may have been things which he would be still more likely to regret.
 critical note), it is best to take this clause as a parenthesis: Though $I$ did regret it (I see that that letter, though but for a season, mads you sorry), I now rejoice. The R.V. does not give this arrangement a place even in the margin; but the American Revisers prefer it. In the A.V. the change from 'letter' to 'Epistle' is unwarrantable, and to translate $\dot{\ell}\langle\dot{\prime} \pi \eta \sigma \epsilon \nu$ 'hath made sorry' spoils the sense, by implying that the sorrow still continues.

But a 'change of mind' might be regretted. With stabilem (Vulg.) as the rendering of $d \mu \varepsilon \tau \alpha \mu e \lambda \eta r o \nu$, it is easy for Latin commentators to take the epithet with salutem and interpret non transitoriam, sed aeternam (Hervieius Burgidol.).

There may be truth in Bengel's suggestion that the six topics are in three pairs directed to (1) the shame of the Church, (2) the feeling towards the Apostle, (3) the attitude towards the offender. But $\zeta \hat{\eta} \lambda o s$ suits (2) better than (3). The use of áyvbs is no evidence that the offender in question (ii. 5) is the incestuous person of 1 Cor. v. 1. tov didınjoavtos. Not the incestuous person of 1 Cor. $\nabla$. 1 ; for in that case $\dot{\delta}$ d $\delta x \kappa \eta \theta_{\text {eis }}$ would be the man's father, and would have been alive when the son contracted the incestuous union. Theodoret tries to evade this difficulty by suggesting $\kappa$ ail $\tau \epsilon \theta \nu \varepsilon \omega \bar{s} \gamma \dot{\mathrm{a}} \rho \dot{\eta} \delta i \kappa \eta \tau 0, \tau \hat{\eta} s \in \dot{\nu} v \hat{\eta} s$ $\dot{v} \beta \rho \sigma \theta \in l \sigma \eta s$. But the Apostle would not have written thus of a dead person. It is hardly credible that a member of the Corinthian Church had had his father's wife while his father was still alive, and that the Corinthian Christians, so far from being distressed and feeling self-complacency and spiritual pride. Moreover, the Apostle would hardly treat such a sin as being an injury inflicted on an individual. It was a scandal to the whole Church. Perhaps $\delta$ ádicy $\theta \in i s$ is Timothy, who may have been grossly insulted by a leader of rebellion against S. Paul; or (more probably) it may be the Apostle himself. Then the meaning would be, 'Still less (óvot) was my letter prompted by personal resentment'; nor yet for his sake that suffered the wrong. If the $\dot{d} \lambda \lambda^{\prime}$ before obje is genuine, this makes the second alternative still more improbable when compared with the first: 'not on account of the injurer, but (I need hardly say) still less on account of the injured.' See p. 44 ; also Findlay on 'Paul the Apostle,' and Lock on 'Timothy,' in Hastings' DB. iii. p. 711, iv. p. 768.

The repetition of $y^{2} \boldsymbol{\nu} \kappa \boldsymbol{y}$ is worth preserving in translation, and 'for the sake of 'suits all three clauses. The apparent difficulty of the Apostle's wishing the Corinthians' zeal for him to be made manifest to themselves probably caused the change of reading. But Calvin gives the right sense; vos ipsi nondum intelligebatis, quo essetis in me studio, donec in hac causa experti estis. This crisis revealed to themselves their own fundamental loyalty to him. Moreover, $\pi \rho \delta s{ }_{v} \mu \mathrm{a}$ s might mean 'among you' or 'with you' ( 1 Thes. iii. 4).

In v. 6, 8 'be confident' is the better rendering of $\operatorname{\theta a\rho \rho } \hat{w}$ : but here and $\mathrm{x} .1,2$ 'be of good courage' is more suitable. And it is important that the rendering bere and in x. 1, 2 should be alike, for, if x.-xiii. be part of the second lost letter, this passage may be connected with x. 1, 2. In the painful letter he had to think of being of good courage in withstanding them. Here he is of good courage about their loyalty. See on i. 23, ii. 3, 9, iv. 2, v. 13, vii. 2 for other cases in which passages in i .-ix. seem to refer to passages in $x$.-xiii. But, whether there be any connexion between this verse and x. 1, 2 or not, how could the Apostle write this, and then in the same letter write xii. 20, 21 ?

This ends the first main portion of the Epistle (i. 12-vii. 16). The next two chapters form the second main portion.

Chapg. VIII. IX. Tee Colleotion for the Poor Sannts at Jerusalem; tae Palestine Relief Fund.

This subject is treated in "the ablest and most convincing section in Paley's Horae Paulinae" (chap. ii. 1). On the raising of this relief fund S. Paul bestowed immense trouble; not merely because the need was great, but because he regarded it as a proof of the corporate union existing between all Christians, Jew and Gentile, and as a tie likely to strengthen that union. The Gentiles had shared the spiritual blessings of the Jews, and it was only fair that they should share the temporal necessities of the Jews by giving them a share of their temporal blessings. He was resolved that he must himself carry the proceeds of the collection to Jerusalem, even if to go there cost him his life (Chase, Hulsean Lectures, 1900-1901, pp. 257-260). Besides these two chapters, he speaks of the collection in 1 Oor. xvi.

1-3 and Rom. xy. 26, 27; and S. Luke records some important words of the Apostle on the subject Acts xxiv. 17. Paley shows how these four passages mutually explain one another, and especially how Rom. xv. 26, 27 dovetails into the other three, thus giving strong evidence of the genuineness of Rom. xv., which is sometimes disputed, and of the Epistle as a whole.
S. Paul uses eight words in connexion with the relief fund, and six of them occur in these two chapters: 1. кotvopla (viii. 4, ix. 13; Rom. xv. 26) : 2. סıakovía (viii. 4, ix. 1, 12, 13): 3. $\chi$ d́pıs (viii. 4; report of the speech before Felix).

No doubt there was poverty at Jerusalem before the first converts made their limited and temporary attempt to have änavia кovd (Acts ii. 44). Among the Jewish Christians poverty had been produced or aggravated by famine (Acts xi. 28), by the paucity of wealthy converts and the persecution of poor converts by the wealthy Jews, and by converts' own unwillingness to work, in consequence of the belief that Christ's Return was at hand, e fault which S. Paul had to rebuke in other Churches (2 Thes. iii. 10; comp. Didache xii.). All these may have contributed to produce poverty. In the condition of society denounced by S. James in his Epistle there must have been many indigent persons who were not relieved by their richer neighbours; and to whatever extent there was community of goods, this would in the long run aggravate the evil, for community of goods without organization of labour must fail. See Rendnll, Expositor, Nov. 1893, p. 322.

The contributions of the Galatian Churches (1 Cor. xvi, 1) hed possibly alrcady been sent to Jerusalem. What is said here perhaps refers exolusively to the bounty of Corinth and Macedonia. This relief fund, so anxiously worked for by S. Paul, was not the first thing of the kind in the Christian Church. Some years before (c. A.d. 47), the Church in Antioch had spontaneously sent relief to their poorer brethren in Judaea 'by the hands of Barnabas and Saul' (Acts xi. 30); and this act may have been suggested by the fact that the Jews of the Dispersion were in the habit of sending money to their countrymen at home: cum aurum Judaeorum nomine quotannis ex Italia et ex omnibus provinciis Hierosolyma exportari soleret (Cic. Pro Flacco xxviii.). Comp. Joseph. Ant. xvi. vi. 2-7; B. J. vi. vi. 2. It has been conjectured that Jewish Christians at Jerusalem continued to have a share of these offerings from the Dispersion, and that it was Gentile Christians for whom S. Paul's fund was required. But there cannot have been many Gentile Christians in Jerusalem, or even in Judaea, to need relief. And would the Jewish authorities at Jerusalem have given anything to Jewish Christians? Moreover the Apostle nowhere makes the appeal that Gentiles mast help Gentiles. In Rom. xv. 26, 27 the argument rather is that Gentiles must help Jews; and S. Paul tells Felix that he came to Jerusalem 'to bring alms to my nation' (Acts xxiv. 17).

Here a marked change of tone shows the anxiety of the Apostle in urging the claims of this relief fund upon the Corinthians. The overflowing enthusiasm of the previous section is ohecked, and the style becomes laboured. He feels his way, as if not quite confident of success; and he presses his appeal with carefully chosen and carefully worded arguments. There is more at stake than the relief of distress. His influence over the Corinthians, and his reputation with unfriendly critics at Jerusalem, are at stake also. That Christians helped Christians promoted goodwill. That Gentile Christians helped Jewish Christians promoted unity. That Christians of Corinth, where his authority had been challenged by Judaizers, should be induced to help Christians of Jerusalem, would be evidence both of his authority to work among the Gentiles, and also of his loyalty to the Mother Church in so working.

vili. 1-7. Tife Example of Liberality eet by the Chorches of Macedona.

'Macedonia' at this time meant the Roman province of Macedonia, including Thessaly and Epirus, as well as Macedonia proper. But the Apostle perhaps means Macedonia proper, for the Charches which he had founded in Macedonia,-Philippi, Thessalonica, and Beroea,were situated in the ancient kingdom. His "first visit to Macedonia was the dawn of a new era in the development of the Christian Church." This "and the visit to Rome are the two most important stages in the Apostle's missionary life, as they are also the two most emphatic passages in the historian's narrative-the one the opening campaign of the Gospel in the West, the other its crowning triumph" (Lightfoot, Biblical Essays, p. 237).
S. Paul calls attention to two facts about these Macedonian congregations; (1) their deep poverty, and (2) their rich liberality. The Romans had seized the mines and imposed heavy taxation; which explains the poverty. Macedonian liberality was shown by their contributions to the relief fund ( $v v, 3,4$ ), by their sending support to the Apostle himself at Corinth (xi. 9), in his travels (Phil. iv. 15), and at Rome (Phil. ii. 25, iv. 18). See J. A. Beet on "The Gift from Philippi" in the Expositor, 3rd Series, Ix. p. 68. Several gave themselves as fellow-workers, as Sopater, Aristarchus, Secundus, and Epaphroditus.
 make known to you, brethren, the grace of God which hath been given in the Churches of Macedonia. The $\delta \dot{\varepsilon}$ and the $\dot{a} \delta \epsilon \lambda \phi o l$ mark a transition to another topic, as in 1 Cor. xv. $1:$ but $\delta \in$ perhaps intimates that the Corinthians have to see to it that the Apostle's $\theta a \rho \rho \hat{\omega}$ év ui $\dot{\nu}$ is made good. $\Gamma \nu \omega \rho /\{\omega \dot{v} \mu \hat{\mu} \nu$ commonly introduces something which S. Paul regards as important (1 Cor. xii. 3, xv. 1; Gal. i. 11), like our

 'bestowed on the Churches of M.' (A.V.), but 'given in' them (R.V.), i.e. displayed amongst these congregations. S. Paul does not praise the Macedonians at the expense of the Corinthians. He points out that what, through God's grace, has been done in other Churches, may, through the same, be done at Corinth also,- $\alpha \nu \in \pi i \phi \theta o \nu 0 \nu$ tò

The sense of the whole is "that tribalation has brought out the genuine Christian qualities of the Macedonian Churches" (Lias). Neither $\epsilon \sigma \tau i$ nor $\eta^{\boldsymbol{\eta}} \boldsymbol{v}$ is to be supplied; that in much proof of tribulation is (was) their abundance of joy, and their deep poverty abounded \&c. This spoils the balance between $\dot{\eta} \pi \epsilon \rho \omega \sigma \varepsilon$ la $\tau \hat{\eta} s \chi^{a} \rho \hat{a} s a \dot{u} \tau \hat{\omega} y$, and $\dot{\eta}$ ness, or simplictty (xi. 3), or stagleness (Eph. vi.5; Col. iii. 22) of purpose. Here, and ix. 11, 13, and Rom. xii. 8, $\dot{a} \pi \lambda \dot{\sigma} \tau \eta$ s denotes the singleness of aim which looks only at the needs of others with a view to their relief, and hence comes almost to mean 'liberality.' See Sanday and Headlam on Rom. xii. 8. Josephus (Ant. vir. xiii. 4) uses it of Araunah's offer to David (2 Sam. xxiv. 22, 23). In the LXX. it commonly means 'innocency' (2 Sam. xv. 11; 1 Chron. xxix. 17; Wisd. i. 1 ; 1 Mac. ii. 37, 60). In the N.T. it is peculiar to S. Paul. The form rd $\pi \lambda_{0} \hat{\sigma}$ ros (see critical note) is found in the best texts of Eph. i. 7, ii. 7, iii. 8, 16 ; Phil. iv. 19; Col. i. 27, ii. 2). S. Paul uses $\pi$ गoùros fifteen times, and, excepting 1 Tim. vi. 17, always of moral and spiritual wealth.

The two verses may be paraphrased thus; 'Now I must tell you of God's goodness manifested in the Churches of Macedonia, how that, proved as they were again and again by affliction, their overflowing joy and their deep poverty produced a rich overflow of generosity.' And there should be a colon or full stop at the end of $v .2$. The $\mathrm{ob}_{\mathrm{t}}$ of $v .3$ is not coordinate with the $8 \tau \iota$ of $v .2$, but ='because, for,' introducing the explanation of $v .2$.

3-5. The main clanse in this long sentence is eaurovs E $\delta \boldsymbol{\omega} \kappa \alpha y \tau \hat{\varphi}$ кирiч: totam periochae structuram sustinet (Bengel). Of this selfsacrifice four things are stated: (1) it was to the extent of their power and beyond it; (2) it was of their own free will; (3) it was accompanied by much entreaty that they might be allowed to share in the ministering to the saints; (4) it was beyond the Apostle's experience. Both the A.V. and the R.V. break up the long sentence by inserting words which are not in the Greek. In the A.V., not only 'they were' and 'they did' should be in italics, but also 'take upon us' and 'this' before 'they did': all these are insertions. Moreover 'that we would receive' is no part of the true text. See critical note. The whole sentence runs thus; For according to their power, $x$ bear witness, and beyond their power, of their own accord, with much entreaty (or, exhortation, as v. 17) beseeching of us the grace and the fellowship of the ministering to the saints, and not just as we expected, but first they gave their own selves to the Lord. This passage about the Macedonian converts helps to bridge the ten years between the Epistles to the Thessalonians and that to the Philippians, which are so similar in tone. The fidelity to the Gospel and loyalty to the Apostle, on the part of those addressed, are conspicuous in all three letters. This passage also is written in a similar tone of affectionate and thankful praise.

"This brother had no doabt been at Corinth, and was quite certain that the Corinthians, in spite of all shortcomings, would in the end come ap to St Paul's highest anticipations" (Lias). It is possible that here and in i. 15 the Apostle purposely uses in a sense that is favourable to the Corinthians the term $\pi \epsilon \pi \sigma=1 \theta \eta \sigma t s$, which in x .2 he uses in an unfavourable sense. It is more accurate to retain the asual translation of $\dot{\alpha} \pi b \sigma \tau o \lambda o s$, and leave the context to show that here, as in Phil. ii. 25, $\dot{\alpha} \pi \dot{\sigma} \sigma$ тodos is not used in the same sense as when it is applied to the Twelve and to S. Panl. He and the Twelve were messengers or delegates of Christ, whereas these brethren were only messengers or delegates of Churches, as Epaphroditus was the messenger of the Philippian Church. See Lightfoot, Philippians p. 194, Galatians p. 95. $\boldsymbol{d} \tau \epsilon$ is common in the Pauline Epp., esp. in 1 and 2 Cor. See on i. 6. Elsewhere in the N.T. in 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14 only.
 See critical note. Manifest therefore to them the manifestation of your love and of our glorying on your behalf to the face of the Churches. 'These brethren are delegates of Churches. Respect shown to them is respect shown to the Churches and will be reported gooduoill.' The word is not found in the LXX. and in the N.T. is peculiar to S. Paul (Rom. iii. 25, 26 ; Phil, i. 28).

1. $\pi \epsilon \rho \mathfrak{\mu} \mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu \quad \gamma \dot{\alpha} \rho \tau \hat{\eta} s$ Suakovias. The $\mu \notin \nu$ looks forward to the second point, which comes in $v .3$ ( $\delta \epsilon$ ): the $\gamma$ a $\rho$ looks back to the end of viii.- the reception of the three delegates. But, as $\mu \in \nu$ and $\delta \epsilon$ cover $v v$. 1-4, this shows that the explanation implied in $\gamma a p$ is to be looked for in vv. 1-4, not in v. 1 only. Thus understood, the connexion between viii. and ix. is natural enough. To say that ix. 1 does not explain viii. 24 is to state the case incorrectly. See the note at the end of this chapter. For the use of $\epsilon i_{s}$ in $\tau \hat{\eta} s \in i s$ see on viii. 4 and comp. ix. 13. For $\delta$ ca кovla see on v. 12.

 x. 11) in this confidence. See critical note. The word íróctarıs has a long and important history, only one or two pointa of which can be noted here. In classical Greek it is 'ground' or 'foundation'; then 'ground of hope' or 'ground of confidence'; and finally 'hope' or 'confidence.' In the LXX. it occurs 20 times and represents 15 different Hebrew words; but in some cases the Hebrew text is uncertain. It is used, 1. of praise to God (Rev. vii. 12), and to men, whether bestowed by God (Gal. iii. 14; Rom. xv. 29) or by men (Heb. xii. 17) : 2. of the invocation of blessings (Heb. xii. 17; Jas. iii. 10): 3. of a concrete blessing or benefit (Heb. vi. 7; 1 Pet. iii. 9) : 4. of a benefit or gift bestowed by men; which is the meaning here.  and $\phi \epsilon \delta \delta \mu \epsilon \nu \omega s$ is evidently synonymous with $\dot{\omega} s \pi \lambda \epsilon o \nu \in \xi$ lav. ## 6-15. Exhortation to give Liberally and Ceeerfulif.

Having gloried in the former readiness of the Corinthians, in order to encourage the Macedonians, and having told the Corinthians of the spontaneous generosity of the Macedonians, in order to encourage the Corinthians, and having begged the latter not to prove his glorying on their behalf void by showing anwillingness now, he presses home his appeal by other arguments. 1. Giving is not loss, but a sowing which will bring a harvest, if only it is done in a right spirit ( $v v .6,7$ ). 2. God can and will bestow, not only the right spirit, but the means of exercising it (8-11). 3. Their bounty will relieve the necessities of those who receive it, and will also increase their thankfulness to God and their love to the givers (11-14).
6. Toûto $\delta \ell$. Neither $\phi \eta \mu l(1 \mathrm{Cor}$. vii. 29) nor $\lambda \ell \gamma \omega$ (Gal. iii. 17) nor tove (Eph. v. 5) need be supplied, although any one of them may. 'But as to this,' or 'But it is just this,' is quite intelligible. Comp. $\bar{\nu} \boldsymbol{\delta} \delta \epsilon$ (Phil. iii. 14) and the classical jvoì $\theta \dot{a} \tau \epsilon \rho \circ{ }^{2}$. The Apostle is dictating and uses brevity. The roû̃o emphasises what follows, in which the chiasmus should be preserved in translation: He that soweth sparingly, sparingly shall also reap, and he that soweth on the princtple of blessings, on the principle of blessings shall also reap. Comp. Gal. vi. 7. The fitness of the metaphor of sowing and reaping is aùtápкecav. 'Self-sufficiency, being independent of help from others,'-a word which has played a prominent part in Greek philosophy, especially in the tenets of the Cynics and Stoics. Aristotle is at pains to distinguish the true ad́rdpecta from that which the Cynies advocated (Eth. Nic. 1. vii. 6; comp. x. vi. 2; Pol. i. ii. 14). The (another word which is frequent in the Nicomachean Ethics, but occurs nowhere else in the N.T.) has led to the surmise that S . Paul was acquainted with the Aristotelian philosophy. See last note on v. 10. In 1 Tim. vi. 6 ài 'rápela is rendered 'contentment,' the subjective fecling of self-suficiency and independence. For adráprys comp. Phil. iv. 11, where see Lightfoot's note. Here the point is that the less a man wants, the greater his self-sufficiency and his power of helping other people.

9. kaDds $\gamma$ (ypartal. Even as $i t$ is written; what has just been stated is exactly what is said of the benevolent man in Scripture; He seattered, he gave to the needy (Ps. exii. 9). The difference between $\pi \tau \omega \chi$ bs, the common word for 'poor' in the N.T. (vi. 10; Rom. xF. 26; Gal. ii. 10, iv. 9; \&e.), and $\pi e^{\prime} \eta$ ns, which oecurs here only, should be marked in translation. Both words are classical, and both occur together in Ps. x1. 17, xli. 1, 1xx. 5, lxxii. 13, lxxiv. 21, lxxxvi. 1, cix. 22; Ezel. xyi. 49, xviii. 12, xxii. 29. In this passage no English Version makes any distinotion, although 'poor and needy' is so familiar from the Psalms. Nor does the Vulgate, which in the O.T. is very capricious in passages where both words ocour.

Commonly it has egenus et pauper, but sometimes pauper et inops, and once mendicus et pauper. In the Beatitudes Tertullian preferred beati mendici to beati pauperes, as being closer to the Greek (adv. Marc. iv. 14). Of the two words $\pi \tau \omega \chi \delta^{\prime}$ ( $\pi \tau \omega \sigma \sigma \sigma \omega$, 'I crouch') is the stronger, implying abject poverty. See Trench, Syn. § xxxvi; Hatch, Biblical Greek, p. 73. In 'Eбкópтiaty we have the opposite of rosum, spargere, plena manu, sine anxia cogitatione quorsum singula grana cadant (Bengel). Both in LXX., where it is frequent, and in N.T. (Mt. xii. $30=$ Lk. xi. 23 ; Jn. x. 12, xvi. 32) it is commonly used of 'scattering to the winds,' 'putting to flight,' or 'dispersing.'
 fests itself in $\phi \iota \lambda a \nu \theta \rho \omega \pi l a$. It is not clear what is meant by the righteousness of the benevolent man enduring for ever. In Ps. cxi. [exii.] it is twice said ( $v v .3,9$ ) of the good man $\dot{\eta} \delta i \kappa a l o \sigma i v \eta ~ a u ̈ r o \hat{v}$ $\mu \hat{\nu} \nu \epsilon \epsilon l_{s} \tau \delta \nu \quad a i \hat{\omega} \nu a \operatorname{tov}$ aî̀vos, which is variously interpreted; (1) that the wealth which is the means and the reward of his benevolence will never cease; (2) that he will practise righteousness as long as he lives; (3) that his good deeds will never be forgotten among men; (4) that God will give an everlasting reward; (5) that virtue is imperishable; a good deed remains a good deed for ever. In the previous Psalm ( $v v .3,4$ ) the same expression is used of God; 'His righteousness standeth fast for ever. He hath made a memorial for His wonderful works.' This perhaps means that the wonderful things which He has done, especially for Israel, will for ever be remembered to His glory. What is true of the good God is in a degree true also of the good man; but God's remembrance of good deeds is perhaps chiefly in S. Paul's mind. That he omits rov al $\omega$ pos after $\epsilon i s \tau \delta \nu$ ai $\hat{\omega} \nu a$ in order to limit the meaning to this life, is not likely: $\epsilon l s$ tò $\nu$ al̂̀va may include the life to come (Jn viii. 51 , xi. 26, xii. 34 ; \&c.). S. Paul himself commonly writes els toùs aiêvas, with (Gal. v. 4; Phil, iv. 20; 1 Tim. i. 17; \&c.) or without (Rom. i. 25, ix. 5 , xi. 36; \&c.) $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu$ al $\omega \nu \omega \nu$.

 that bountifully supplieth (Gal. iii. 5; Col. ii. 19; 2 Pet. i. 5, 11) seed to the sower and bread for eating, will supply and multiply your sowing. The change from orit $\rho \mu a$ to $\sigma \pi 6 \rho o \nu$ should be marked in translation, all the more so because the first is literal, whereas $\tau \delta \nu$ $\sigma \pi \delta p o v i \mu \omega \nu$ is figurative of the gifts which the Corinthians are to 'seatter,' and which will bring a rich harvest. It is also worth while marking the difference between $\epsilon \pi \imath \chi o \rho \eta \gamma \epsilon \hat{\nu} \nu$ and $\chi \circ \rho \eta \gamma \in \hat{\nu} \nu$ : the compound augments the idea of liberality, which is conspicuons in the simple verb. But in late Greek compounds often take the place of simple words without much access of meaning (see Bigg on 2 Pet. i. 5), and there is perhaps not much difference here. In the LXX. $\epsilon \pi \iota \chi o \rho \eta \gamma \in \hat{\nu}$ occurs in Eeclus xxv. 22 of a wife who entirely supports her husband, and as a variant 2 Mac. iv. 9. Comp. èrčopmyia (Eph. iv. 16; Pbil. i. 19). In the LXX. Xopך $\begin{aligned} & \text { є̂̀ } \\ & \text { is common; in the N.T., }\end{aligned}$ here and 1 Pet. iv. 11 only. Originally it meant 'to lead the chorus' and then 'to supply the chorus' for the exhibition of a drama, an act of public munificence involving great expense Hence it came to mean 'to supply necessaries with liberality,' 'to equip bonntifully.' Aristotle uses the metaphor severel times; Eth. Nic. r. viii. 15, x. 15; x. vii. 4 (in the last passage in connexion with aữápкєルa: see on v.8); Pol. iv. i. 1; vir. i. 13; \&c. between кaú $\eta \eta \sigma \iota s$ and кaó $\chi \eta \mu a$, is not sharply maintained (Jniv. 32, vi. 27, 55). But S. Paul seems to distinguish both $\beta \rho \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota s$ and $\pi \delta \sigma t s$ (Rom. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. viii. 4; Col. ii. 16) from $\beta \rho \omega \mu a$ and $\pi \delta \mu a$ (Rom. ziv. 15; 1 Cor. iii. 2, vi. 13, x. 3, 4); and therefore Bpêous here should be rendered 'eating' rather than 'food.' Nowhere else does he use $\pi \lambda \eta \theta \dot{\nu} \nu \in \nu$, which is fairly common in Acts (vi. 1, 7, vii. 17, ix. 31, xii. 24), and very common in the LXX.

But it seems better to have no parenthesis (for v. 10 is a new start), and to regard $\pi \lambda o v \tau t \zeta\langle\mu \varepsilon v o \iota$ as an easy anscoluthon from the $\dot{v} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ in v. 10. Comp. $\sigma \tau \epsilon \lambda \lambda \dot{\prime} \mu \boldsymbol{\jmath} \boldsymbol{\gamma}$ in viii. 20 (which, however, can with less difficulty be taken back to $v .18$ ), and סokásoytes below (v. 13). Winer, p. 716. This verse is added to show the way in which God will bestow this $\chi$ dpos ( $v .8$ ) upon them; ye being enriched in every thing unto all liberality or singlemindedness (as in viii. 2), which is such as to work out (iv. 17, v. 5, vii. 10, 11) through us thanksgiving to God; or, to preserve the repetition in $\epsilon \nu$ mapri... $\epsilon$ ls $\pi \hat{a} \sigma a \nu$, in every thing unto every (kind of) liberality. The $\dot{\eta}$ its may retain its classical force.  how the relief fund has this religious side: because the ministration of this public service is not only flling up the measure of the wants of the saints, but also is abounding through many thanksgivings to God. The use of $\delta$ lakovia in this connexion (comp. v. 1, viii. 4) should be compared with Acts xi. 29, wii. 25, where it is used of Barnabas and Saul carrying help from Antioch to those suffering from famine in Judea; also with Rom. xv. 31, where the variant $\delta \omega \rho o \phi$ opia (BDG, d e) is correct as a gloss.  here is close to the original use, viz. of the 'aids' which wealthy Athenians had to render to the State, e.g. supplying choruses for plays, equipping men-of-war, \&c. This was a 'service to the public,' or a 'public service.' Among the Jews $\lambda$ ectoupyia meant priestly ministrations (Lk. i. 23; Heb. viii. 6, ix. 21; Numbers and Chronicles passim). Among Christians it was used specially of the eucharist, but also of public worship generally; and 'liturgy' is derived directly from it. See D. of Chr. Ant. vol. Three things are expressed here; (1) the occasion of the recipients' thankfulness, viz. the tested genuineness of the help given; (2) and (3) two reasons for their thankfulness, viz. (2) Corinthian loyalty as regards the Gospel, and (3) Corinthian generosity in giving so liberally. As regards (2) the Palestinian Christians had had misgivings: it had looked as if Gentile converts were advocates for extreme license. Now Palestine would see the loyalty manifested in Corinth's adhesion to the Gospel. The construction of $\varepsilon l_{\mathrm{s}}$ тò evaryencop is uncertain.  $a \dot{v} \tau \bar{\nu} \bar{\epsilon} \pi \iota \pi 0 \theta o u ́ v \tau \omega \nu$ is a gen. absol. (comp. iv. 18) adding the thought that (while the Corinthians exhibit their goodwill by their bounty) the recipients of the bounty exhibit their goodwill by intercession for the donors; while they themselves also, with supplication on your behalf, long after you, on account of the exceeding grace of God upon you. To make $\delta \in \dot{\eta} \sigma e t$ depend on $\overline{\epsilon \pi}((v .13)$ is grammatically possible, but yields no good sense. Would the Judean Christians glorify God for

15. Xajos $\tau \hat{\varphi} \theta \in \hat{\Phi}$. The thought of this mutual goodwill between Jewish and Gentile converts, as an earnest of the love which unites all Christians ( $\kappa o w \omega \nu i a$ els $\pi \dot{d} \nu \tau a s$ ), fills the Apostle's heart with thankfulness, to which he gives immediate and abrupt (see critical note) expression. One who had had so much experience of the bitter antagonism between Jews and Gentiles in the Church, might well overflow with gratitude, and speak of this blossed result as an 'indescribable boon.' The Jews in Palestine will be thankful for the Corinthians' bounty, and he is thankful for God's bounty in bringing all this to pass: Paulus in gratiarum actione se illis in Juaaea fratribus adjungit, et quasi Amen illis accinit (Grotius).
dעєк $\delta \downarrow \eta \gamma \dot{\eta} \tau \varphi$. The word occurs nowhere else in Biblical Greek. Clement of Rome uses it of the ineffable mysteries of nature ( 1 Cor.
 p. 310). To say that so strong an epithet would not be used by the Apostle of any less boon than man's redemption is unsonnd reasoning. A thanksgiving for redemption would here have very little point. Calvin gives the right connexion; tandem, quasi voti compos, ad laudem Deo canendam evehitur: quo suam fiduciam quasi re jam confecta testari voluit.

This thanksgiving concludes the second main portion of the letter. Comp. the conclusion of the first portion (vii. 16) and the thanksgivings at the end of important divisions of other Epistles (1 Cor. xv. 57; Rom. xi. 33-36; 1 Tim. i. 17).

It is hardly necessary to do more than mention the suspicion of some critics that this ninth chapter is an interpolation from some letter, of which the rest has been lost. The transition from viii. 24 to ix. 1 is said to be not obvious, and the two chapters, if read together, are said to involve needless repetition. Others, to avoid these supposed difficulties, regard viii. as an interpolation. But the connexion of viii. with $i$.-vii. is manifest; and the trifling diffculties about the addition of ix. vanish when we remember the delicate position in which the Apostle was placed. He had to recognize what the Corinthians had already done, and yet to intimate that very little had been done and that a very great deal was wanted from them. Hence the variations and half-repetitions in ix. when compared with viii. But the two chapters are quite harmonions; comp. viii. 6, 11 with ix. 3-5. And they mutually explain one another; comp. viii. $16-22$ with ix. 3-5. The hypothesis of a piece of one letter being inserted in the middle of another is intrinsically so improbable that it ought not to be accepted without very strong evidence. That a letter mutilated at the end should get united to one mutilated at the beginning is less improbable. See above on vi. 14.

x. 1-xifi 10. Another Assertion of the Apostle's Position, and a Final Rebike and Warning to his Judatzing Opponents.

This is the third main portion of the Epistle in the form in which it has come down to us. Reasons have been given elsewhere (Introduction $\S 7$ and notes on iii. 1, iv. 2, ₹. 13, vii. 28, viii. 22, xii. 20, xiii. 5) for adopting, as the best solution of various difficulties, the theory that these four chapters are part of another letter, and probably of the letter alluded to in ii. 4 and vii. 8. The change of subject and tone is so great and so sudden that it cannot easily be explained by a long pause in writing and a consequent complete change of mood. Nor can we adopt the hypothesis that in i.-ix. the Apostle writes to the loyal many, and in $x$.-xiii. to the recalcitrant few. In both sections he is writing to the whole Corinthian Church (see notes on $v .2$ and on $\mathrm{xi} .2,8,9$, and xii. 13, 19). Moreover the change is in the wrong direction. Strong invective might calm down into what is conciliatory, and a man who had begun in a tone of great severity might a little later continue his letter with studied gentleness. Bat here, what is most conciliatory suddenly changes into strong invective. Having with great delicacy and tenderness restored happy relations between himself and the Corinthians, he abruptly launches out into reproaches and sarcasms, which must have gone far towards undoing the good results of the first nine chapters. And how unlike the usual tact of the Apostle to make, with diffidence and hesitation, an earnest appeal to his Corinthian fiock for contributions to the Palestine fund, and then immediately to begin and lash them severely! If the reproaches and sarcasms were sent first, and then, when they had brought about submission, the conciliatory words were penned in a subsequent letter, all runs much more intelligibly. In thought and in tactics these four chapters come more natarally before than after the first nine chapters. Moreover, it is not easy to get the opening of $x$. into reasonable relation to the end of ix. If we suppose that what preceded $x$. has been lost, this difficulty disappears.

But, whether the form in which we have the Epistle is the original form or not, it is clear that these chapters have been dictated under the influence of strong feeling; and perhaps their contents are not carefully arranged. Fet there are changes of topics, and these changes should be noted. The greater part (x. 1-xii. 10) is taken up with the contrast between $S$. Paul and his opponents, showing that he is a divinely appointed Apostle, while they are self-constituted and selfcommended teachers. This again has two divisions: (i) the Apostle's authority and extent of province (x. 1-18); and (ii), the Apostle's 'foolish' glorying (xi. 1-xii. 10), to which they have driven him (xi. 1-6), about working gratuitously (xi. 7-15), about his services and sufferings (xi. 16-33), about the revelation granted to him and its consequences (xii. 1-10). The remainder of the invective (xii. 11 -xiii. 10) is chiefly taken up with repetitions of particnlar points and warnings in connexion with his approaching visit. Bengel thus sums up the four chapters; In via sum ad vos, armatus virtute Christi. Ergo obedite.

x. 1-18. The Apostle's Adthority and Extent of Province.

 aúrós to suppose that here the Apostle ceases to dictate and writes the remainder of the letter with his own hand (2 Thes. iii. 17; 1 Cor. xvi. 21; Col. iv. 18). No doubt he sometimes wrote himself, withont expressly saying that he did so; and he sometimes wrote more than the last few words. Gal. vi. 11 implies that at least the last eight verses were written by himself; and Philem. 19 seems to indicate that the whole letter was written with his own hand. Others suggest that airds intimates that the Apostle is going to enter upon personal matters. More probably the av่rós simply anticipates what is coming; 'That very Paul, who you think is so humble when he is with you, and so bold when he is away.' This emphatic aúros éró is found again xii. 13 ; Rom. vii. 25, ix. 3, xv. 14; and neither here nor in any of those passages does it mean that he is writing with his own hand. For $\epsilon ่ \gamma \grave{\omega}$ Mâ̂̀os comp. Gal. v. 2; Eph. iii. 1; Philem. 19.

It is possible to bring this opening into connexion with the conclusion of ix. in some such way as this; 'I exhort you to be kind to your brethren in Judea in consideration of the gentleness of Christ; and I pray God that I may not be driven to do more than exhort' (comp. $\pi a \rho a \gamma \gamma^{\epsilon} \lambda \lambda \omega \nu$ ouk $\epsilon \pi \alpha \omega \nu \hat{\omega}$ in 1 Cor. xi. 17). But this is rather forced, and leaves too maoh to be understood. The appeal to the gentleness of Christ refers to what follows, not to the preceding request for a liberal contribution; and $\delta \in o \mu a l$ means 'I pray you,' not 'I pray God.'
 the LXX. $\pi \rho a \tilde{u} \tau \eta s$ should probably be read rather than $\pi \rho a b r \eta s$. The virtue of ' meekness' is exhibited first towards God, in accepting His treatment of us without questioning, secondly towards men, in accepting their treatment of us as being in accordance with His will. In Aristotle it is the due regulation of the temper between dopidorचs and (Hist. An. rx. i. 1). Plato opposes it to ajpotins (Symp. 197 d ). Plutarch several times, as S. Paul does here, combines it with $k \pi t \in f-$ кк⿺𠃊 (Peric. 39; Caes. 57), that 'sweet reasono.bleness' which shrinks from insisting upon its full rights for fear of inflicting the smallest wrong. While roabity may be wholly passive, émeiketa involves action; it rectifies the errore of strict justice and makes allowances

 the $\pi \rho a b \pi \eta s$ and $\bar{\epsilon} \pi \iota e f k \varepsilon i a$ of Christ are conspicuous ( Mt. xi. 29), and S. Paul uses these characteristics of the Redeemer as the medium of his entreaty. He points to them as a motive (Winer, p. 477) to induce the Corinthians not to drive Christ's Apostle to be other than meek and gentle : comp. 1 Cor. i. 10 ; Rom. xii. 1, xv. 20. The two virtues are discussed by Trench, Syn. §§ xlii, xliii; and Wetstein gives many illustrations. See also Hatch, Biblical Greek, p. 73.
 am lowly among you. Here only does the A.V. render tarectós 'base,' which is wanted for ajevís (1 Cor. i. 28). Elsewhere it renders tamechbs either 'lowly' (Mt. xi. 29), or 'of low estate' (Rom. xii. 16), or 'of low degree' (Jas i. 9; Lk. i. 52), or 'humble' (Jas iv. 6; 1 Pet. v. 5). 'Lowly' (R.V.) is best here: see on vii. 6. S. Paul is here taking what was said of him by his enemies, and (with some irony) adopting it as true. There is no Hebraism in кatà $\pi \rho \sigma \sigma \omega \pi \pi_{0}$ (Acts iii. 13, xxv. 16 ; Gal. ii. 11); it ocours several times in Polybius. See Dalman, The Words of Jesus, p. 29.

 not when present show courage. The $\delta \in$ follows up the $\pi$ apaкa $\lambda \hat{\omega}$; $I$ exhort, yea, $I$ beseech. The A.V. misses a point in having 'beseech' for both таракалิ (v. 1) and $\delta \in \neq \mu a u$. And the change from exhortation to entreaty is not sufficiently marked in either the Vulgate (obsecro, rogo) or the R.V. ('intreat,' 'beseech'). The rapory implies that he means to visit them again. The nom, with infin. is regular, being attracted to $\delta \epsilon о \mu a t:$ comp. Rom. i. 22, xv. 24 ; Phil. iv. 11.
 misses another point in having 'be bold' for both $\theta a \rho p \hat{\eta} \sigma a \varepsilon$ and $\tau 0 \lambda \mu \hat{\eta} \sigma a \iota$. By changing his word S . Paul intimates that the boldness which he expects to exhibit is not quite the same as the courage (or $\theta \rho a \sigma v \delta \epsilon \lambda(a)$ attributed to him by his critics; that I may not when present show courage with the confidence wherewith I count to be bold against some which count of us \&c. For $\pi \epsilon \pi o i \theta \eta \sigma \iota s$ see on i. 15, and comp. the stronger $\dot{v} \pi b \sigma \pi a \sigma t s$ in ix. 4. With S. Paul $\lambda o \gamma i \xi \circ \mu a \iota$, 'count, account, reckon,' is a favourite word (iii. 5, v. 19, xi. 5, xii. 6), especially in Romans (ii. 3, 26, iii. 28, \&c.). In other N.T. writers it is rare; in the LXX. very frequent. The Vulg. takes $\lambda_{0}$ ofloual as passive, qua exictimor audere in quosdam, qui arbitrantur nos (comp. Rom. iv. 5), which makes needless tautology. Doubtless both noylsomac and $\lambda o \gamma \iota \xi_{0} \mu^{\prime}$ yous are middle; but there is a oharacteristic play of words in the shades of meaning, dorljoual of expectation or intention (1 Sam. xviii. 25), $\lambda$ orijouévous of supposition or view. As in 1 Cor. xy. 12, he does not specify who the rives are; they are only a fraction of the Corinthians. This shows that these chapters ( $x$.-xiii.) are addressed to the majority, or to the whole Church of Corinth, not to the hostile minority.

3. 'Ev rapkl. Emphatic by position. Everyone who has a body must ' walk in the flesh' and be liable to its weaknesses, such as the fear of men, the love of popularity, the liability to irritation, de. But the missionary life of an Apostle, which resembles a campaign, is not conducted on such principles. The fesh is an abode ( $2 \nu$ ), but it need not be made a law (kard). They might think that he had been wanting in vigour ( $v v .2,10$ ), but they would find that indifferentism was not his guiding principle (xiii. 1-4).

отратєvópeөa. "The metaphor of a warfare, as applied to the Christian life, is a common one with St Paul, though it is more commonly used of the internal conflict of the Christian soul than of the external warfare waged against the evil around" (Lias) : Rom. xiii. 12, 13; Eph. vi. 13-17; 1 Tim. i. 18; 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4. Comp. Is. lix. 17; Wisd. v. 17-20; also the martyr's exhortation, lepà kal

There is little doubt that the spelling $\sigma \tau \rho a \tau c a s$ here is for $\sigma \tau \rho a \tau e l a s$, 'campaign,' and not $\sigma \tau \rho a \tau c a ̂ s, ~ ' a r m y ': ~ s e e ~ c r i t i c a l ~ n o t e . ~$

But as $\sigma$ d $\rho \xi$ connotes 'weakness,' so $\pi \nu \epsilon \hat{u} \mu a$ connotes 'power' (1 Cor. ii. 4, xv. 43; 2 Tim. i. 7); and it is the idea of power that is prominent here. But the exact meaning of $\tau \hat{\varphi} \theta \epsilon \hat{\varphi}$ is doubtful. 'Through God' (A.V.) would probably have been expressed otherwise. 'Before God' (R.V.) is possible; but why have we not
 'for God,' i.e. in His service (dat. com.), is the meaning. That it is a Hebraism for 'exceeding,' as both A.V. and R.V. in Aats vii. 10 for $\dot{\alpha} \sigma \tau \epsilon \hat{i} 0 s ~ \tau \hat{\varphi} \theta \epsilon \hat{\varphi}$, is also possible (Winer, $p$. 310); but this is not very different from 'before God,' 'in His sight,' and therefore 'really, indeed.' Stanley suggests that this imagery may in part be saggested by the wars of Pompey against Mithridates and the Pirates. The latter
"had been raging amongst the hill forts of the Cilician pirates not more than sixty years before the Apostle's birth, in the very scene of his earlier years, and was ended by the reduction of 120 strongholds, and the capture of more than 10,000 prisoners." See Appian, Bell. Mith. xiI. xiv. 96.

It means 'failing to listen,' or 'hearing ami s,' and is akin to ajeeleta, incuria, as Bengel on Rom. v. 19 points out. In Heb. ii. 2 it is joined with mapa $\beta a \sigma$ s. Either Ye look (R.V.), Look ye (Tyndale, Genevan; 'see ye' Wiclif), or Do ye look? (A.V., R.V. margin) may be right; but Look ye (imperat.), videte (Vulg.), is least probable. If imperative, $\beta \lambda \in \pi e r \varepsilon$ would probably stand first: 1 Cor. i. 26, x. 18; Phil. iii. 2; Col. iv. 17. Chrysostom and Calvin seem to be right in regarding the words as an accusation: magni facitis allos, qui magnis ampullis turgent; me, quia ostentatione et jactantia careo, despicitis. Ye look on the things before your face (as in v. 1). They had said that to their face they had found him weak and cowardly, which was not their way, nor the way of an Apostle of Christ. Such surface-judgment, he intimates, is of little worth.

The $\pi \epsilon \rho \iota \sigma \sigma \sigma \tau \epsilon \rho o \nu$ probably refers to $v v .3-6$, in which he makes large claims to authority, authority which might have to be used eis kaөalpeacu, but was not given for that purpose.  struction is uncertain; but it is very forced to make $v .9$ the protasis of $v .11$, with $v .10$ as a parenthesis; "That I may not seem...let such a one count this." Moreover the beginning of $v .9$ becomes in that case very abrupt; and so Chrysostom slips in a $\delta \hat{\epsilon}$, and the Vulgate and Calvin an autem, which has no authority of any weight: ut autem non existimer tanquam terrere vos (Vulg.); ne autem videar terrere vos (Calv.). More probably tya $\mu \grave{\eta} \delta \delta \xi \omega$ depends upon v. 8 ; and some such thought as 'I say this,' or 'I refrain from using stronger language,' is to be understood. But nothing need be inserted in English, any more than in the Greek. As exoopeiv is a strong word, it is toned down by $\omega$ a at : that I may not seem, as it were, to terrify you by my letters. This is a rare instance of $a \nu$ with the infin. But perhaps $\dot{\omega} s$ and ${ }^{\Delta} \nu$ coalesce as $\dot{\omega} \sigma d \nu=q u a s i$. Winer,

We know of two letters, viz. 1 Corinthians and the lost letter of 1 Cor. v. 9; and we have seen that another letter seems to be required (see notes on i. 23 , ii. 3, 9 , vii. 8). If 2 Cor. i.-xiii. is all one letter, then the Corinthians had received three letters before this was written; but more probably 2 Cor. x.-xii. is part of this third letter.
10. $\phi \eta \sigma \boldsymbol{\imath}$. See critical note. It is more probable that the singular was changed to the plural, because this sneer was uttered by more than one person, than the plural to the singular. But if фarl $\nu$ was the original reading, the $\tau \iota s$ in $\varphi .7$ and $\dot{\dot{o}}$ tocoviros in $v .11$ might cause it to be corrected to $\phi \eta \sigma i \nu$. But neither ris nor $\phi \eta \sigma / \nu$ nor $\delta$ dotov̂tos means that he is alluding to one particular ringleader: all three are indefinite expressions, and $\phi \eta \sigma / \nu=$ 'it is said,' on dit, man sagt. Winer, p. 655.
 1 Cor. ii. 3, 4. The epithets are contrasted in reverse order, $\boldsymbol{a} \sigma \theta \in \nu \eta_{\eta}$ s with loxvpai, and $\epsilon \xi \circ v \theta \epsilon \nu \eta \mu \epsilon \nu 0 s$ with $\beta a \rho \epsilon i \alpha a$, which probably means 'weighty' (A.V., R.V.) rather than 'severe' or 'grievous' (Acts xx. 29 ; 1 Jn v. 3). See Lightfoot on $\epsilon \nu \beta a f \rho \varepsilon$ eival (1 Thes. ii. 6). On S. Paul's personal appearance see Appendix A; Plumptre's note at the end of Acts in Ellicott's Comm. for English Readers; Exc. xi. at the end of Farrar's St Paul; Findlay in Hastings' D.B. ii. p. 700.
 vi. 4) rather than 'contemptible.' Contrast Acts xiv. 8-12, where the Apostle is taken to be a god. But both Barnabas and Paul are regarded as gods, becanse of the miracle, while Paul is supposed to be the inferior of the two, because he acts and talks: he is only the agent or messenger of Barnabas (Ramsay, Church in the Roman Empire, p. 57; St Paul, p. 84). Ramsay points out the coincidence between Hermes, the messenger of the gods, and $\omega_{s} a^{\gamma} \gamma \boldsymbol{\gamma} \boldsymbol{\lambda} \frac{p}{} \theta \in o \hat{u}$ $\epsilon \delta \epsilon \xi a \sigma \theta \epsilon \mu \epsilon$ (Gal. iv. 14).
11. тоиิтo $\lambda_{0} \boldsymbol{\gamma}^{〔} \xi \in \sigma \theta \omega$. Count this: comp. vv. 2, 7. It is as well to have the same English word throughout: the R.V. has a different word in each verse; 'count,' 'consider,' 'reckon.'
 is to be supplied. 'Will we be' confines the meaning to the projected visit to Corinth. 'When he comes, they will find that he can be as vigorous in action as in his letters.' The meaning rather is, that such inconsistency as writing strongly and acting feebly is quite alien from him and impossible. One whose words and deeds do not correspond could not have founded and sustained a Christian Church in Corinth. For the opposition between $\lambda \delta \gamma \varphi \varphi$ and $\varepsilon_{\rho} \gamma \varphi$ comp. Rom. xv. 18; Acts vii. 22. To omit $\delta \iota^{\prime} \dot{\epsilon} \pi \tau \sigma \tau 0 \lambda \omega \bar{\omega}$ would make the opposition more terse, but there is no reason for believing that the words are a gloss: no authority omits them. Note the chiasmas; $\tau \hat{\varphi} \lambda \boldsymbol{\lambda} \gamma \boldsymbol{\psi}$ $\dot{\alpha} \pi \delta \nu \tau \epsilon s, \pi a \rho \delta \nu \tau \epsilon s \tau \hat{\varphi} \epsilon_{\rho} \gamma \gamma($ comp. ix. 6.

12-16. The difficulty of this passage has often been pointed ont. Theodoret suggests that S. Paul has deliberately written obscurely, because he did not wish to be too definite in convicting bis accusers. Bengel is certainly right in saying, sepem inter se et illos ponit; but the obscurity is probably unintentional. The passage is partly ironical, especially at the outset: ou $\tau \boldsymbol{\lambda} \mu \hat{\omega} \mu \epsilon \nu$, 'I shouldn't venture \&c.' It had been insinuated that he was a coward. Well, one kind of courage he cartainly does lack. He does not dare to match himself with those who praise themselves according to a standard of their own fixing. He limits his glorying by the limits of the sphere fixed for him by God, and this sphere extended to Corinth. If his spbere did not extend thus far, he would be exceeding his limits; but, as it is, his preaching was the first to reach them. So he is not unjustifiably glorying in what other people have done. But he hopes that, as the Corinthians increase in faith, his influence among them will increase, while he keeps to his own province, so as to preach the Gospel in the districts beyond Corinth, without glorying in the province of others, over work that is already done without him.

As in $v .7$, there may be a hint by contrast that what is not true of him is true of his opponents. 'It is not I who have invaded other people's provinces: it is other people (the Judaizers) who have invaded mine.'
 not bold (v. 2) to pair or compare ourselves with some of those that commend themselves. The meaning of $\epsilon p \kappa \rho i \nu a l$ is doubtful; but 'judge amongst, estimate amongst, number with' is probably right; and 'pair with,' which preserves the play on words (comp. vv. 5, 6), has much the same meaning. Moreover, èкрiva is stronger than ouvкрîval, as 'pair' than 'compare'; 'I should not venture to pair myself, or even compare myself, with them.' The Vulgate has inserere aut comparare: comp. si me lyricis vatibus inseres (Hor. Od. т. i. 35). Beza preserves the play, at the cost of exactness, with adjungere vel conjungere : inferre aut conferre is better. It is altogether arbitrary to suggest that $\dot{\epsilon \ell \kappa \rho i v a l}{ }^{n}$ " is an interpolation.
 measuring themselves by themselves. For the repetition comp. viii. 22
 In classical Greek the $\epsilon p$ would be omitted; Arist. Rhet. II. xii. sul fin. With his critics everything is measured by 'our noble selves.' They are a "mutual admiration and self-admiration society" (Waite). They have a standard of excellence of their own making, and they congratulate themselves and one another on their conformity to it.
ov่ $\sigma v{ }^{2} \alpha \hat{\sigma}$ เv. Are without understanding. For the verb, which resembles our 'put two and two together = be intelligent,' comp. Rom. xv. 21; Eph. v. 17. These superior persons do not know the value of things, and cannot interpret them. Notbing is to be understood, as 'do not understand what they are talking about,' or 'how arrogant they are,' or 'what Apostleship means.' The representatives of the $\delta$-text (see critioal note), which omit these two words and the follow-Apostle, not to his opponents; we ourselves, measuring ourselves by ourselves, and comparing ourselves with ourselves, will not glory beyond measure. Measuring oneself by one's own standard is thus made to be the right kind of criticism: comp. Metiri se quemque suo modulo ac pede verum est (Hor. Epist. x. vii. 98). This makes good sense; but the four omitted words are too well attested to be dismissed (yet see WH. on Western non-interpolations in. pp. 175 f.).); and if $\dot{\eta} \mu \mathrm{e} \hat{s} \delta \delta$ is genuine, aivol must mean the opponents. The reading oí cuvi $\sigma a \sigma$ od ( $\boldsymbol{\beta}$ ) involves the construction, but they themselves are not aware that they measure themselves by themselves, which has not much point. The point is that they do it, not that they do not know that they do it. The reading ovviovosv ( $\mathrm{D}^{5} \mathrm{KL} \mathrm{l}^{\text {}}$ ), if aceented measure of the province which God apportioned to us as a measure to reach as far as even you. Can кap'́y mean 'province' (R.V.), a definitely bounded sphere of activity? It means (1) that which measures, as a rod or a ruler; (2) that which is measured, a fixed amount of anything. But it is commonly used of length rather than of surface; and here it may refer to the distance which the Apostle was allowed to go from his centre. In colloquial language $\tau \dot{\partial} \mu \dot{e} \tau \rho o y$ roú kavbos is 'the length of his tether.' But from the ideas of mapping out territory with measuring rods, and assigning measured allotments, кav'iv might acquire the meaning of a measured space, the Apostle's definitely allotted sphere of work. Or we may fill in the opening words thus; For we are not overstretching ourselves, as we should be doing if we did not reach unto you. See Winer, p. 595. If S. Paul's province did not include Corinth, then he would be over-extending himself by transgressing limits: but manifestly it does include Corinth. Possibly $\epsilon \phi \theta \dot{\alpha} \sigma a \mu \in p$ means no more than 'came' (R.V.). It is one of many words which in late Greek lost their sharpness of meaning, and perhaps here there is no thought of anticipating others, of being the first to come: comp. Rom. ix. 31; Phil. iii. 16; 1 Thes. ii. 16; Lk. xi. 20. In 1 Thes. iv. 15, where it is not followed by a preposition, the idea of anticipating survives. Here no doubt the main point is that he came as far as Corinth with the Gospel; but it adds to the point to say that he was the first to preach in

 A long and rather obscure sentence, which it is more simple to conneat with $v .14$ than with $v .13$. There need not be more than a comma, and certainly should not be a full stop (A.V.), at the end of v. 14. Not glorying beyond our measure (as in $v .13$ ) in other men's labours, but having hope that, as your faith groweth, we shall be magnified in you, according to our province unto still greater abundance, so as to preach the Gospel unto the regions beyond you, and not to glory in another man's province of things ready to our hand. Seeing that in coming to Corinth he has not come out of his own sphere into that of other people, he is not claiming what is really the work of others (comp. Rom. xv. 20); whereas his opponents, by setting themselves up as teachers in Corinth have been glorying in another man's province of what he did and not they: quum Paulus militasset, illi triumphum agebant (Calvin). And he hopes that, as the Corinthians grow in faith, he will be magnified among them in his own sphere, so that his influence will extend, and he will be able to preach the Gospel beyond them with a recommendation. S. Paul may already have had thoughts of Rome and Spain (Rom. xy. 24, 28). But he could not easily work still further westward, while Corinth was in so unsatisfactory a state; and hence the qualification aiskavo-for the spread of the faith to others. It is possible to take $\bar{\epsilon} p \dot{\dot{u}} \mu \mathrm{i} i \nu$ with $a \dot{j} \xi a v o \mu t \nu \eta s$ (Luther, Calvia): but it has much more point if we take it with $\mu \in \gamma^{\alpha} \lambda \nu \nu \theta \hat{\eta} \nu a c$. zi. 1-xii. 10. The Apostle's Foolisi Glorying about Gratuifous Working, Services and Sofrehings, Revelations and their Consequences.

1-6. These verses are introductory, apologizing for the folly of glorying, to which a godly zeal on their behalf impels him. At the beginning, middle, and end of this section he calls attention to the folly of this parade of his claims (xi. 1, 16, xii. 11). Under cover of the humiliation of having to make a fool of himself, he completes the condemnation of his adversaries, by reminding the Corinthians of the variety and strength of his own claims, and exposing the emptiness of the claims of those who oppose him.

1. The opening is abrupt. After what has just been said about the worthlessness of self-praise, the inconsistency of glorying about himself seems to be glaring. He allows that it is foolish, and he asks for toleration. After all, he is only imitating his critics.
${ }^{2}$ Oфе $\lambda o v$. See critical note. In this late Greek, this 2nd aor., without augment, has become a mere particle, an interjection expressing a wish, would that, as to what might have happened, but has not, or of what might happen, but is scarcely expected. Here and Rev. iii. 15 it is followed by imperf. indic.: 1 Cor. iv. 8 by aor. indic., as several times in the LXX., especially in the phrase $8 \phi \in \lambda o \nu$ $\dot{a} \pi \varepsilon \theta \dot{\alpha} \nu 0 \mu \epsilon \nu$ : Gal. iv. 12 by fut. indic. In classical Greek it commonly has the augment and is followed by the infin.; ò $\lambda \in \sigma \theta a c \delta^{\prime} \omega \phi \in \lambda o \nu \tau \hat{\tau} \delta \delta^{\prime}$ $\dot{\eta} \mu \epsilon \rho a$ (Soph.  augment, usual in classical Greek, is commonly a correction of the true text, where it is found in the N.T. Here and in $v .4$ मेयel $\alpha \in \sigma \theta$ is certainly a corruption. Would that ye bore with me in a little somewhat of folly; not utinam tolerassetis (Calvin), but utinam toleraretis (Beza) or sustineretis (Vulg.). The construction is doubtful. In classical Greek $a^{2} \epsilon \chi \in \sigma \theta a c$ is oommonly followed by the acc. both of person and thing; in Biblical Greek by the gen. of both. Here $\mu \circ \nu$ is the gen. after $\alpha \nu \varepsilon i \chi \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$, and d $\alpha \rho \rho o \sigma_{\nu} \eta s$ is the gen. after $\mu \kappa \rho \delta \nu \tau \iota$, which is the accus. of reference, 'bore with me with regard to a little bit of folly.' The gen. of the person, without a participle, (Plat. Protag. 323 A). Others take $\mu \iota \kappa \rho \delta \nu \tau \iota$ as acc. after $\dot{a}_{\nu \epsilon} \epsilon \chi \chi \in \sigma \theta \epsilon$, and make both $\mu \nu v$ and d àpooziv $\quad$ depend upon $\mu \kappa \kappa \rho \delta \nu \tau \iota$, comparing the verb is indic. or imperat. Most English Versions make it imperat., so that what is first expressed as a wish not likely to be fulfilied is then made an entreaty. But in that case neither d $\lambda \lambda \alpha$ nor cal is quite suitable. The $\dot{\alpha} \lambda \lambda d$ corrects what precedes, and the кal gives emphasis to what follows. 'But I ought not to consider this as an unattainable wish; you really do bear with me' : or, 'But I have no need to wish this; you do bear with me.' Comp. It is worth while distinguishing in translation the two words for senselessness which are found in the N.T., a $\emptyset \rho \circ \sigma v_{v i}$ (vv. 17, 21; Mk vii. 22), insipientia, 'folly,' and $\mu \omega \rho$ ia (1 Cor. i. 18, 21, 23, ii. 14, iii. 19), stultitia, 'foolishness.' The former word, being primarily negative, is the lighter in meaning; the latter is the more severe, pointing to an essential or deeply rooted characteristic: comp. $\mu \omega \rho a i ́ \nu \in \iota \nu$ (Rom. i. 22 ; 1 Cor. i. 20). Both the Vulgate and the A.V. are inconsistent in rendering d dфpooúv $\eta$ in Mk vii. 22 as they render $\mu \omega \rho / a$ elsewhere. See ofl $\alpha \phi \rho \omega \nu, v .16$.

 because his feeling for them is of so lofty a character, he is sure that they will not refuse him toleration, however foolish they may think him. As the first half of $v, 1$ has been corrected by the second ( $\dot{\alpha} \lambda \lambda \alpha$ ), we must not refer the $\gamma \dot{\alpha} \rho$ to the first half. The accent is on $\theta \in o \hat{v}$ :
'it is with a zeal of God that he is zealous over them.' 'Of God' may mean, 'which comes from God,' or 'which is on God's behalf,' i.e. to His glory, or 'such as God has' (Zech. i. 14, viii. 2). In any case, it is no mere human passion which inspires the Apostle. Comp.
 see Lightfoot on Gal. iv. 17: but some understand it of jealousy in the literal sense.  The betrothal of the Corinthians took place when S. Paul converted them; and as the friend of the Bridegroom he takes the keenest interest in the bride's character. See 'Bride' and 'Bridegroom' in Hastings' DB. and comp. Gen. xxiv. The verb occurs nowhere else in the N.T. In Here again (see the last note on $\mathbf{x}$. 17) it is evident that the Apostle is addressing the whole Church of Corinth. 4. This obscure verse has received an immense amount of discussion, and it would be confusing to reproduce the numerous suggestions which have been made respecting it. No explanation can claim to be certainly correat; but, without violence to the Greek, the following interpretation, which fits the context, ean be extracted from the words.

The verse is a sarcestic explanation, put in the form of a supposition, of his fear lest the serpentlike teachers should seduce the Corinthians from the simplicity of the Gospel.
 indeed the comer is preaching another Jesus, whom we did not preach, or ye are recelving a different spirit which ye did not receive, or a different gospel, which ye did not accept, ye are doing well in bearing with him. The $\mu \dot{k}$, , 'indeed,' 'really,' prepares the way for irony. Although $\delta$ ' $\rho \chi \chi^{b} \mu \mathrm{v}$ os was a familar expression for the Messiah (Mt. xi. 3; Lk. vii. 19, 20; Jn vi. 14, xi. 27, xii. 13), and might indicate that these Judaizing leaders were setting themselves up as a kind of Messiah, yet even in sarcasm S. Paul would hardly suggest that. More probably $\dot{\delta} \in \rho \chi \chi_{\mu}$ evos means one who comes from the outside, who is 'not of us' ( 1 Jn iii. 19), but an intruder: he is an slien, with alien principles and alien tendencies. But the expression is generic: the singular does not point to an individual, any more than say, 'the Boer,' when we mean the nation generally.

The three aorists should not be rendered as perfects ('have preached, accepted, received'); they refer to the time when the Corinthians were converted to the faith. The A.V. rightly distinguishes between receiving ( $\lambda a \mu \beta d \nu \varepsilon \iota \nu$ ) the spirit, and accepting ( $\delta \epsilon \chi \in \sigma \theta a t$ ) the Gospel, the latter being necessarily a voluntary act, the former not. The meanings of $\lambda a \mu \beta a \nu \epsilon \iota y$ and $\delta \notin \chi \epsilon \sigma \theta a \iota$ often overlap and mingle; but $\delta \epsilon \chi$. commonly implies welcoming and appropriating. The Vulgate distinguishes also, with accipere for $\lambda a \mu \beta$. and recipere for $\delta \epsilon \chi$., for recipere rather than accipere implies appropriation: Peneus accipit amnem Orcon, nec recipit (Plin. Iv. viii. 15 § 31), i.e. does not mingle with it. But neither the Vulgate nor the A.V. distinguishes between the other, 'not of the same kind.' A similar ohange is obliterated in the Vulgate and the A.V. of Gal. i. 6, 7, where see Lightfoot's note. Whether the change of word means little ( 1 Cor. xii. 9 ) or muoh, it ought to be marked in translation. Here the change from a person to what is impersonal may have produced the change of adjective: comp. Acts iv. 12.

 X $\rho / \sigma \tau \sigma^{\prime}$. It was about the character of the historic Jesus of Nazareth that the teaching of the intruders differed so widely from that of the Apostle. They would narrow Him down to a national leader, enforcing the letter of the Law. He proclaimed Him as the Saviour of the world, delivering from all bondage to the letter (see Gore, Bampton Lectures, p. 61). Hence the difference of the spirit and of the Gospel as imparted by S. Paul and by his opponents. On the one and to this Roman commentators have replied that S. Paul claims to be equal to S. Peter in gifts, but says nothing about equality of jurisdiction. Both argument and reply are beside the mark. For S. Paul would hardly have used a word which implies excess or extravagance of any of the Twelve; Gal. ii. 6 is no proof that he would have done so. In both passages he is depreciating, not the Twelve, but those Judaizers who professed to have the authority of the Twelve for their bigotry. Here the Twelve are not in question. It is the contrast between S. Paul and the rival teachers that is pointed out. These rivals denied Paul's authority, and themselves claimed to have the authority of the Twelve. It is more probable that he calls the rival teachers themselves 'superextra-apostles' than that he styles the Twelve such. S. Paul has coined the compound on the model of $\dot{\text { unfeáyay (2 Mac. viii. 35, x. 34, xiii. }}$ 25), ì $\pi \epsilon \rho \epsilon v$ (Plat., Xen., Dem.), ப́nє́ $\rho \phi \epsilon \nu$ (Aesch., Eurip.), being fond of compounds of $\dot{v} \pi \epsilon \rho$. In this letter we have $\dot{v} \pi \epsilon \rho a l \rho o \mu a t$, $\pi \varepsilon \rho \sigma \sigma \sigma v i s$, and there are ten or twelve more in his other letters: but this one is unique. But perhaps the possibility that S. Paul is here borrowing a phrase from his detractors at Corinth ought not to be exeluded: oi úr $\epsilon \rho \lambda \lambda a \nu$ arrbatodot may have been a cant expression there for the Jewish Apostles who had seen the Lord.  The participle has no construction, like $\epsilon \nu \delta \epsilon \iota \kappa \nu \dot{u} \mu \in \nu 0$ in viii. 24 ; comp. ix. 11. Nor is it quite certain what is the accusative after фavep $\omega$ баитes, an uncertainty which produced the variant фavep $\omega$ $\theta \in \nu \tau \epsilon s$ : but probably $\tau \grave{\eta} \nu \quad \gamma^{\nu} \hat{\omega} \sigma t \nu$ is understood; but in everything we made it manifest among all men to you-ward. With $\epsilon \nu \pi a \nu \tau i$ comp. iv. 8 , vi. 4 , vii. 16 , viii. 7 , ix. 8 , xi. 9 . No doubt $\epsilon^{2} \pi a ̂ \sigma \iota \nu$ is maso. To make it neut. is to make it tautological with $\epsilon \nu$ maval. For the sake of the repetition we may say 'in everything...before everybody,' or 'in all things...among all men.' It has all been quite public; anyone can judge as to what our relations towards you have been.

It has been suggested that we have here a primitive error in the text, or indeed two euch; and that S. Paul wrote or meant to write $\pi$ às is quite in his manner; ix. 8, 11; 1 Cor. ix. 22, x. 33 , xii. 6. The rávia and the $\kappa a i$ might easily drop out. Conjectural emendation of the text is to be adopted with great caution. But this emendation would make very good sense. The phrase is an antithesis to $\delta \delta \iota \omega \tau \eta s$. He is a herald commissioned to speak openly to all; iii. 12, iv. 2.

7-15. The Apostle's Gloryina about Working Gratuitously.

With this passage 1 Cor. ix., especially $v v .12,15,18$, should be compared. It was one of the marked characteristics of S. Paul's ministry, that he did not avail himself of Christ's principle, that 'the labourer is worthy of his food,' and that 'they which proclaim the Gospel should live of the Gospel' (Mt. x. 10; Lk. x. 7; 1 Cor. ix. 14). He did not claim support from the congregations in which he laboured, but maintained himself by the handieraft, which he had learned in his Cilician home, of making cilicium, a fabric of goats' hair, used for tent-making (Acts xviii. 3) and coveringe of all kinds. Of this manufacture Tarsus was a centre; and, wherever he went, Paul could find purchasers for this useful material. This well-known practice of his, of supporting himself by his own handiwork, is mentioned in connexion with his work at Thessalonica ( 1 Thes. ii 9; 2 Thes. iii. 8) and at Ephesus, where he perhaps showed al रeipes aüra, roughened with toil, as he spoke (Acti $\mathbf{x x}$. 34). But it is of his work in Corinth that the fact is first mentioned; and it was perhaps there that it provoked most comment and criticism (Acts xviii. 3; 1 Cor. ix.; 2 Cor. xi. 7-15, xii. 14-18).

It was one of the charges of the Sophists against Socrates and Plato, that these philosophers taught gratuitously, thus confessing that their teaching was worth nothing; to which Socrates replied that it was shameful, and like prostitution, to turn the imparting of wisdom into a trade; while Plato pointed out that a man who could really teach men to be just might be sure that those whom he had made just would deal fairly with him; to insist on payment was to confess that the teaching would not be successful (Xen. Mem. I. vi. 1; Plat. Gorg. 520, Apol. 20; Arist. Eth. Nic. xx. i. 5-7; Grote, Hist. of Greece, viII. pp. 482 fi.; Windelband, Hist. of Anc. Philosophy, p. 110).

The same kind of charge may have been made by the Judaizers at Corinth. 'Other Apostles did not hesitate to accept maintenance. Why did Paul refuse it? Because he knew that he was no true Apostle; or, because he set up as being better than the Twelve; or, because he was too proud to accept hospitality. And what an undignified thing for an Apostle to be a weaver of goats' hair!' Evidently reproaches of this kind increased since he wrote 1 Corinthians, in which he does not make much allusion to them.

The strong expression d $\mu$ aptla. $\pi o \imath \hat{\eta} \sigma a \iota$ (1 Jn iii. 9 ; 1 Pet. i. 22; comp. tì̀ ${ }^{\circ} \mu$. r. 1 Jn iii. 4, 8; Jn. viii. 34) is ironical. S. Paul uses it nowhere else : see Westeott on 1 Jn iii. 4. In $\epsilon \mu a v \tau \delta \nu \tau \alpha \pi e \iota \omega \hat{\omega}$ he was following the example (Phil. ii. 8) and the direction of Christ (Mt. xviii. 4, xxiii. 12; Lk. xiv. 11, xviii. 14). He refers specially to working for his living

He had just apoken of his manifesting his knowledge everywhere : they could hardly blame him for that. Or was it a orime that he manifested it gratis? Note the emphatic juxtaposition of world is to be had for nothing (Rom. iii. 24; Rev. xxi. 6, xxii. 17). Note also the emphatic position of $\tau 0 \hat{0} \theta \epsilon 0 \hat{u}$ : it is God's Gospel, which that of the Judaizers is not. Elbewhere he writes $\tau \boldsymbol{\delta}$ ejuar. $\tau 0 \hat{v} \theta \in \hat{v}$ (Rom. xv. 16; 1 Thes. ii. 2, 8, 9; comp. Mk i. 14) : 1 Pet. iv. 17 as here.

The verb is very rare in Biblical Greek: elsewhere only Ep. Jer. 18; comp. Rom. ii. 22 ; Col. ii. 8. He means the Macedonian Churches, from whom he aceepted subsidies, which helped to support him while he preached at Corinth. Possibly the plural is rhetorical, and Philippi alone is meant (Phil. iv. 15). In any case the expression aj $\lambda$ as èkx is more pointed if the whole Church of Corinth is addressed in these chapters, and not the hostile minority: comp. xii. 13 and see on $v .2$.

The supplies must come from somewhere: in this case, in order to spare the country in which he was partly from the Macedonian Churches. The word $\delta \boldsymbol{\psi}$ ijuov is late ( 1 Esdr. iv. 56; 1 Mac. iii. 28; xiv. 32; Polyb.) : it means (1) a soldier's rations; (2) his pay; (3) the means by which a campaign is carried on. See Lightfoot on Rom, vi. 23. In the agreement between oú katevápkŋqa oviévós. I was a burden on no man. The verb is found here, xii. 13, 14, once in Hippocrates, and nowhere else in Greek literature. Jerome, in a letter to the Gallio lady Algasia (Ep. 121), says, Multa sunt verba, quibus juxta morem urbis et provinciae suae familiarius Apostolus utitur; e quibus exempli gratia ov่ катерd $\rho \kappa \eta \sigma a$ $\dot{\mu} \mu \omega \bar{\nu}$, h. e. non gravavi vos [nulli onerosus fui, Vulg.].  from Macedonia, supplied. The relation between $\dot{v} \sigma \tau \epsilon \rho \eta \theta \epsilon i$ and $\dot{y} \sigma \tau \epsilon \rho \eta \mu a$ must be marked in translation. The compound aporave$\pi \lambda$ yjp $\omega \sigma a y$ means 'supplied in addition,' and this may refer to what Macedonia had contributed before, or to what the Apostle earned with his own hands. See on ix. 12. The coincidence with Acte xviii. 1, 5 must not be overlooked. There the arrival of S. Paul at Corinth, and the subsequent arrival of brethren from Macedonia, are recorded. Those brethren were Silas and Timothy; and that gives us a coincidence with i. 19, and also with the salutations of 1 and 2 Thes., both of which were written from Corinth. See Paley, Horae Paulinae, iv. 6, 7, viii. 4. But it is not certain that these adè $\delta$ ol ãd Maкєdovias were Silas and Timothy.

Why did S. Peul, who was so vehement (v. 10, 1 Cor. ix. 15) in refusing maintenance from the congregations to which he was ministering, yet allow the Macedonian Churohes to contribute to his support when he was labouring at Corinth and elsewhere? The answer to this shows us the main reason for the Apostle's rejection of entertainment. He wished to be absolutely free and independent in his preaching, and to be under no temptation to 'prophesy smooth things' to those whose hospitality and alms he was accepting, nor to be open to the charge, 'you are paid to say that.' He must be free to rebuke, where rebuke was required, and his praise must be beyond the suspicion of being bought. There were other reasons also, such as a desire to avoid the accusation of greed (v. 12). But the preservation of perfect liberty was the chief reason : and to accept help from Macedonia, when he was preaching at Corinth, did not interfere with his independence at Corinth.

 glorying shall not be stopped with regard to me. He will never do anything that will hinder him from glorying that he has not been a burden to the community. The metaphor is from blocking a road with a fence or a wall (Hos. ii. 6; Job xix. 8; Lam. iii. 7-9), and hence of having the mouth stopped (Rom. iii. 19; Heb. xi. 33). An allusion to the wall across the Isthmus of Corinth is not likely. Chrysostom refers the metaphor to rivers rather than roads.

 (oomp. Jn i. 7) is not so clear, and opposite interpretations of its meaning are proposed. That wherein they glory, they may be found even as we. In what did his opponents glory? In being superior to Paul both in authority and in message; he was no true Apostle, and what he preached was not the true Gospel. They came from the Twelve, and they preached the truth. Does S. Paul here mean that he wants to show that they are not better than he? If that were his aim, he would hardly have said 'even as we.' Moreover, this does not fit on well to his cutting off opportunity for slander. It is clear from muneration for their teaching (comp. 1 Cor. ix. 12). Could they have scoffed at him for not taking pay, if they refused it themselves, or even professed to refuse it? They probably said that it was 'apostolic' to be worthy of maintenance, and gloried in accepting doing they exposed themselves to the charge of greed, which S. Paul believed that they would have brought against him, if he had taken pay. Perhaps he means that his refusal will drive them to refuse maintenance. Imo in hoc instituto pergam, ut et ipsos ad exemplum meum imitandum provocem (Beza). If so, then 'in that wherein they gloried (viz. in the matter of accepting remuncration) they would be found even as he' (i.e. they would refuse to accept), and the Corinthians would be freed from an incubus. This would be more probable if he had written $\gamma \in \nu \omega \nu \tau a l$ for $\epsilon \dot{j} \rho \theta \hat{\varphi} \sigma \omega \nu$. Paul is here adluding to anything in Jewish tradition or in the O.T., as to Satan appearing among 'the sons of God' (Job i. 6). A reference to the Temptation of Christ is less unlikely.  admits that all this glorying may be stigmatized as folly. But it is not folly of his own choosing; he would gladly have left it alone. Therefore, he here makes two alternative requests; not to think him foolish, because he utters what is folly; or, if that is impossible, not to refuse to attend to him, because they think him foolish. It is for their attention that he cares: 'Think me a fool, if you must; but listen to me.' Four Greek words are sometimes rendered 'fool' in the A.V.; $\alpha \phi \rho \omega \nu$ (v. 19, xii. 6, 11 ; 1 Cor. xv. 36 ; Rom. ii. 20 ; Eph. v. 17; 1 Pet. ii. 15; Lk. xi. 40, xii. 20) ; $\mu \omega \rho \phi s$ (1 Cor. i. 25, 27,

Lk. ii. 48, xvi. 9 ; Acts x. 26 are exceptions (Gregory, Prolegomena p. 96). The кal reminds them that he did not begin; he is answering fools according to their folly. And the $\mu ⿺ 𠃊 \rho \delta \nu \boldsymbol{T}(v .1)$ implies that his critics have gloried a good deal. Paul writes кatà $\sigma$ ápкa, which might account for $\tau \dot{\eta} \nu$ being accidentally or deliberately omitted in some early copies. If the article is original, it is inserted to mark a difference, which may be this, that кatà $\sigma$ dipкa is 'from a low point of view,' and кajà $\tau \grave{\eta} \nu$ бd $\alpha \kappa a$, 'from their low point of view.' There may be many points of view, all кãd̀ $\sigma \alpha \rho \kappa a$, which are taken by different people. 'Of course I am a fool to say this.'

22-33. Now follows the actual glorying. Several times he had begun this assertion of himself ( $\mathbf{x} .7,8$, xi. 1, 7, 16), but each time something has diverted him for awhile. Now he is fairly launched; and the result is a sketch of his life, which, for historical parposes, is one of the most valuable passages in his or in any other of the canonical Epistles. In some respects it stands quite alone. Elsewhere he once or twice gives an outline of what he has gone through ( 1 Cor. iv. 11-13; 2 Cor. iv. 7-10, vi. 4-10); but here he gives exact details, which are all the more impressive because they are evidently wrung from him by hostile criticism. They ahow how free from exaggeration his friend's biographical notices of him are in Acts. Where S . Luke records what is parallel to what we have here, so far from embroidering, he omits a great deal. Where he recounts what took place after this letter was written (Acts $\mathrm{xx} .-\mathrm{xxviii}$ ), he tells us nothing but what is equalled or exceeded by what we are told here. Further, the account of his Rapture to the third heaven (xii. 2 ifi.) throws light on similar experiences, as of $\mathbf{S}$. Peter in Acts x., and of S. John in the Revelation.
22. He begins by comparing himself point by point with the Judaizers, who had, no doubt, urged these very points in their own favour. He has beon answering their attacks on him, implying throughout that their accusation recoiled on themselves. He now answers the claims which they made on their own behalf, and urges that he can make such claims with still more truth. Comp. the similar passage Phil. iii. 5 and see Lightfoot's note.
'EBpaiol cirıv; These four sentences are much more vigorous if we take them (with A.V. and R.V., following Beza, Calvin, and Luther) as questions. Earlier English Versions, following the Vulgate, take them as assertions; They are Hebrews, acc. The claims are perhaps roughly arranged to form a climax, the least important point coming first, and the most important, last. But in some respects 'I $\sigma \rho a \eta \lambda \epsilon i \tau a l$ would be more important than $\sigma \pi \epsilon \rho p a$ 'A $\beta \rho a d \mu$ : see Sanday and Headlam on Rom. ix. 4-7. Yet in Rom. ix. 7, and again in Rom. xi. 1, 'seed of Abraham' comes after 'Israelite,'-apparently as more important. The first point is that of nationality; he belongs to the same race as his opponents. For, although 'Hebrews' originally meant 'men from the other side' of Euphrates (?), yet it is gentilic, and not local; it desoribes a race, and not where they dwell (see Hastings' DB. ii. p. 326). S. Paul goes on to say that he enjoys the same special privileges as his opponents. These are covered by 'Israelites' and 'seed of Abrabam.' The difference between the two is perhaps this; that 'Israelite' looks to the special relations between the peculiar people and Jehovah, while 'seed of Abraham' looks rather to their share in the promises that the Messiah should be of that seed (Gen. xxii. 18). Therefore 'I $\sigma$ paך $\overline{\text { eital }}$ el $\sigma \iota \nu$; would mean, Are they members of the theocracy? $\sigma \pi t \rho \mu a$ 'A $\beta \rho a \dot{a} \mu$ el $\sigma \nu$; Have they a share in the Messianic rights of the nation? (See Lightfoot on Gal. vi. 16 and Phil. iii. 5, and comp. the climax in Rom. ix. 5.) The thought of the Messianic glories naturally leads on to the fourth point, of being Messiah's ministers.

For obvious reasons S. Paul omits here, what he states in Rom. xi. I and Phil. iii. 5, that he is $\phi \cup \lambda \hat{\eta} s$ Beviauely, to which fact we may trace his name of Saul, the Benjamite who was the first king of Israel. It is remarkable that, in a Church almost entirely Gentile, so much stress should have been laid npon being of Hebrew descent. It is possible that his enemies had professed to doubt whether this man of Tarsus (Acts xxii. 3) was really of the seed of Abraham. A little later the Ebionites said that Paul was a Gentile, who had been circumcised, that he might marry the high-priest's daughter (Epiphan. Haer. xxx. 16). On the smooth breathing for 'Eßpaios see WH. II. p. 313. The aspirate in Latin and English is comparatively modern. Not only Wiclif, but Tyndale and Cranmer, have 'Ebrues' here.  probably means that he really is talking like a fool in the one case and like a madman in the other; not that the Corinthians will think him foolish and frantio. All glorying is foolish; and this talking of

The difference between 'I am more' (A.V.), where 'am' should be in italics, and 'I more' (R.V.), is the difference between 'I am more than a minister of Christ' and 'I am more a minister of Christ than they are.' The latter admits that in some sense his opponents are ministers of Christ; and this is probably the meaning. What dignity more than that of a minister of Christ could he claim which they did not claim? They claimed to be apostles ( $v .13$ ). There is nothing improbable in his admitting for the sake of argument that they are diakovoc Xpiatov. 'Let us assume that we are all of us ministers of Christ, as we are all of us Hebrews and Israelites. Which of us can show an abundant share in $\tau \grave{\alpha}$ тä $\dot{\eta} \mu a \tau a$ rov̂ $\mathrm{X} \rho$ иa tov (i. 5 )? Nevertheless, the $A, V$. rendering, 'I am more,' makes $\pi \alpha \rho a \phi \rho o \nu \omega \hat{\omega} y$ $\lambda a \lambda \hat{\omega}$ more pointed: for a man to say that he is more than a minister of Christ seems like raving.
 labours $I$ am more abundantly a minister of Ohrist than they are.' All that need be understood is the ' $I$ am' or ' $I$ have been' implied by the adverb. It is not certain that $\pi \in \rho / \sigma \sigma o \pi \in \rho \omega s$, which is frequent in this letter (i. 12, ii. 4, vii. 13,15 , xii. 15), implies any comparison with his opponents, for there is no comparison in $\dot{\pi} \pi \epsilon \beta \beta a \lambda \lambda \theta \nu \tau \omega$ or тoddakcs. Stanley perhaps goes too far in saying that it is merely a stronger form of $\pi \in \rho \in \sigma \sigma \omega \mathrm{s}$ : but it need mean no more than 'more abundantly than is common.' "The adverb expresses so to speak an absolute excess and not simply a relative excess" (Westeott on Heb. ii. 1). S. Paul can hardly mean that by their abundant kónot the false teachers had to some extent a claim to be called diásopoc X $\rho \iota \sigma \tau o u ̀$, but that his $\kappa \delta \pi o t$ were more abundant than theirs, and therefore his claim still stronger. Deut. xxp. 1-3, the earliest passage in whioh this form of punishment is expressly mentioned, forbids the infliction of more than 40 stripes; and it was usual to inflict only 39 , for fear of a miscount. Others explain that 13 stripes were given with a whip that had three lashes; or that 13 were given on three different parts of the body, viz. right and left shoulders and the breast. But 'cause to lie down' (Deut. xxp. 2) points to the bastinado, which was common in Egypt. ev $\psi$ evoa8e $\lambda \phi$ ors. This probably means chiefly the Judaizers (Gal. ii. 4); but all spurious Christians, such as Simon Magus, Diotrephes, and the Nicolaitans, were a source of danger. We are apt to forget how seriously the Church of the apostolic age suffered from such people. The Epistles of S. John, S. Jude, and 2 Peter are full of allusions to this evil. Note that he does not say $\epsilon \kappa \psi \in v \delta a \delta \epsilon \lambda \phi \omega \nu$. While Jew and heathen are external foes from whom he is sometimes free, false brethren are always around him: he must live among them, just as he must always be in either inhabited or uninhabited country, and on either land or sea.
27. Having mentioned thirteen cases in which he might have lost his life, and eight kinds of dangers which one who travelled as he did must incur, he goes on to mention miscellaneous trials and afflictions. In sense this verse comes immediately after ídotroplats $\pi o \lambda \lambda$ akcs, all that lies between being a mere expansion of dootroplats: as by these he is $\forall \pi \epsilon \rho$ as a minister of Christ, so also by what follows.

(1) Assuming with both A.V. and R.V. that this meaning is possible and correct, then the Apostle classes his sufferings in two groups, those which are external, which he has mentioned, and those which are internal, which he is about to mention. (2) Again, тی̂v $\pi$ aןєктós may be masouline; besides those persons that are without, who attack from the outside. But, had this been his meaning, he would have written ol $\xi \xi \omega$ (1 Cor. v. 12, 13; Col. iv. 5; 1 Thes. iv. 12) or oi ${ }_{\xi} \dot{\xi} \omega \theta \epsilon \nu$ ( 1 Tim . iii. 7; Joscph. And would he not similarly have written $\tau d \quad \xi \xi \omega$ or $\tau \dot{\alpha} \xi \xi \omega \theta \epsilon \nu$ for 'those things that are without'? 32, 33. It has been proposed by Holsten, Hilgenfeld, Schmiedel, Baljon, and others to strike out these two verses, with or without all or the first part of xii. 1, as a rather clumsy gloss upon $\tau \dot{\alpha} \tau \hat{\eta} s$ $\dot{d} \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \epsilon i a s$. It is said that these verses do not fit on well to the context, but interrupt the sequence of thought, which would flow hypotheses is that the suspected passage is an interpolation, made, after the completion of the letter, by the Apostle himself. Bat no such hypothesis is needed. We have here one more example of those abrupt transitions, of which this letter is so full. He perhaps meant to have given several instances of $\tau \dot{d} \tau \hat{\eta} s \dot{a} \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \epsilon l a s$, as the opening of $v .32$ indicates: he gives only one. He may have meant to give several instances of $\delta \pi$ raбial and droкa入́úecs, as his use of the plural indicates: he gives only one. Perhaps he knew that just these two things had been urged against him by his enemies. The flight from Damescus showed what a coward he was; and his supposed Rapture to heaven showed how mad he was. Having disposed of these two charges, he says a few more words in general terms ( $v .10$ ) about $\tau \dot{\alpha} \tau \hat{\eta} s \dot{\alpha} \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \epsilon l a s$, and then leaves the unvelcome task of defeating his adversaries in a contest of ravxâatac. All would be intelligible enough, if we only knew the details of the situation at Corinth. As it is, what we have bere is not so unintelligible that we need resort to the violent measure of catting out two or three verses.

Assuming, without misgiving, that vv. 32, 33 are part of the original text, we are confronted by three historical questions.

1. How came Damascus, which was in the Roman province of Syria, to be guarded by the 'ethnarch' of Aretas IV., who was king of Arabia Petraea b. o. 9 to a.d. 40, with Petra as his capital? Damascus cannot have been left independent by the Romans, when they occupied the Nabataean territory in b.c. 65, 64; for Damascene coins from b.o. 30 to A.D. 33 bear the name of Augustus or of Tiberius. Damascene coins from A.D. 34 to 62 are wanting: there are none extant for the reigns of Caligula and Claudius: but after 62 we have them with the name of Nero. That Aretas took Damascus from the Romans is hardly credible: and it is improbable that Tiberius handed it over to Aretas, for when he died in March, a.d. 37, he was compelling Vitellius to take measures against Aretas on behalf of Herod Antipas. Antipas had offended Aretas by divorcing his daughter (A.D. 29) in order to marry Herodias; and about this and some frontier disputes Aretas had gone to war with Antipas and completely defeated him (c. a.d. 32), a defeat which the Jews regarded as a judgment on Antipas ior the murder of the Baptist (Joseph. Ant. xviII, ₹. 1, 2). Antipas complained to Tiberius, who promised redress; and by his orders Vitellius was unwillingly marching against Aretas, when at Pentecost in Jerusalem he heard of the death of Tiberius. He at once stopped the march on Petra. His new master, Caligula, disliked Antipas, and reversed the policy of Tiberius respecting him; and he may have expressed his disapproval of Antipas by handing Damascus over to Aretas, his chief enemy. In this way an ethnarch of Aretas may have been governor of Damascus, when S. Paul had to fly from it. This statement is important for dating the conversion of S. Paul.
2. What is the precise meaning of $\epsilon \theta \nu \dot{d} \rho \chi \eta \mathrm{~F}$ here? In the Nabataean kingdom of Aretas, the government was by tribes, and in inscriptions in the Haarān $\theta \theta \nu a ́ \rho \chi \eta s$ occurs of the head of a tribal district (Schürer, Studien und Kritiken, 1899, 95-99). The title was also used of Jewish governors in Palestine and Alexandria, and perhaps came to mean a viceroy who was somewhat higher than a tetrarch ( 1 Mac. xiv. 47, xv. 1, 2 ; Joseph. B.J. II. vi. 3). Origen says that in his day the ethnarch in Palestine differed in nothing from a king.
3. How is the statement of S . Paul here, that 'the ethnarch guarded the city of the Damascenes to take me', to be reconciled with that of S. Luke (Acts ix. 24), that 'the Jews watched the gates day and night to kill him'? There is no real discrepanoy. There were thousands of Jews in Damascus (Joseph. B.J. It. xx. 2, vil. viii. 7), and it was they who moved the ethnarch to persecute Saul. How powerful their synagogues were is seen from Acts ix. 2. Of course they would themselves watch the gates along with those who were placed there by Aretas, especially as they wished that Saul should not merely be taken, but be killed : comp. Acts xxiii. 12. The ethnarch would be glad enough to win popularity with so important a section of the population by the sacrifice of a troublesome visitor.

On all these questions see Hastings' $D B$. i. pp. 145, 424, 793 ; Schürer, Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ, I. ii. pp. 89, 356, II. i. p. 98; Lewin, Fasti Sacri, pp. 226, 249 ; Knowling on Acts ix. 23, 24.
32. Év $\Delta \alpha \mu a \sigma \kappa \hat{\varphi}$. This looks like the beginning of a series of incidents, as if he had meant to go on to humiliations in other places. As it is, the form of the sentence changes.
'Ap $\epsilon$ ra. The original form of this ancient name was Haritha, the true Greek form of which is 'Apteas. But inscriptions and mss. all give the form 'Apéras, the barbaric name being assimilated to d $\rho \epsilon \tau$ ท. See Schürer, Jewish People, r. ii. p. 359; Deissmann, Bible in a similar way from the influence of $i \in \rho b s$, the true form of the name being 'I $\epsilon$. (WH. II. p. 313).
tqpoúpet. Was guarding; elsewhere in the N.T. in a metaphorical sense (Gal. iii. 23; Phil. iv. 7; 1 Pet. i. 5) ; in the LXX. mostly literal, as here ( 1 Es. iv. 56 ; Wisd. xvii. 16; 1 Mac. xi. 3).

т $\grave{\nu} v \pi o ́ \lambda \iota v ~ \Delta \eta \mu a \sigma \kappa \eta \nu \omega ิ v$. The expression is remarkable, expecially after $\epsilon \nu \Delta a j a \sigma \kappa \varphi$. It points to the idea that Damascus was an independent city.
midoar pe. See oritical note. The verb is frequent in S. John of the attempts to arrest Jesus (vii. 30, 32, 44, viii. 20, z. 39, &c.): here only in S. Paul.
33. 8id Oupíos. Literally, 'a little door, small opening,' dim. of Oupa; elsewhere in the N.T. only Aots xx. 9. An aperture in the wall is still shown as the place. "In the traditions of Damascus the incidents of this escape have almost entirely eclipsed the story of his conversion" (Stanley). Comp. the eases of the spies (Josh. ii. 15), and of David (1 Sam. xix. 12), in both of which $\delta(\hat{a}$ rŷs $\theta u p i \delta o s$ occurs.
 variably used of the 'baskets' at the Feeding of the 4000 (Mt. xy. 37, xvi. 10 ; Mk viii. 8, 20), while кб́фıvos is equally invariably used of the 5000 (Mt. xiv. 20, xvi. 9; Mk vi. 43, viii. 19; Lk. ix. 17 ; Jn vi. 13). The $\sigma \phi u p l$ or $\sigma \pi v p l s$, and also the rare word used here, seem to have meant a basket made of twisted or braided material, a ropebasket or wicker basket. In Aesch. Suppl. 788 бap $\alpha \dot{\nu} \eta$ means a plait or braid; elsewhere a basket. Theodoret remarks, $\tau \dot{\partial} \tau 0 \hat{v} \kappa c \nu \delta \partial ́ v o u$ made to look laughable, and it had probably been used as a means of ridiculing the Apostle. This letter shows that years afterwards he regarded it as a humiliation, a typical instance of $\tau \grave{\alpha} \tau \hat{\eta} s \dot{a} \sigma \theta c$ veias, marking the very outset of his career, and turning the persecutor into the persecuted in the very place of his intended persecution. Possibly it was beoause he found the recollection of such things so painful that he gave no more instances. Nevertheless, if it was in his mind to add the $\sigma \kappa 6 \lambda \circ \psi{ }^{2} \nu \tau \hat{\eta} \sigma a \rho \kappa l$ (xii. 7) as another example, the account of the Rapture is required as an introduction to it. Thus we get a sequence; the flight from Damasous, the $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda o \psi$, and the summary in xii. 10. But the Rapture seems to be introduced for its own sake, and not as a mere explanation of the $\sigma x b \lambda o \psi$. For $\chi^{a \lambda}{ }^{\alpha} \omega$ comp. Acts ix. 25, xxvii. 17, 30; Mk ii. 4; Lk. v. 4 ff. ; Jer. xly. [xxxviii.] 6. For $\delta c a ̀ ~ \tau o ̂ ̂ ~ r e l \chi o u s ~ c o m p . ~ A c t s ~ i x . ~ 25 ; ~ 2 ~ S a m . ~$ xx. 21.

The flight from Damascus probably took place, not immediately after his conversion, as the narrative in Acts might lead one to suppose, but after the return from Arabia (Gal. i. 17). S. Luke omits the retirement into Arabia altogether. But there is room for it in the middle of Acts ix. 19, where 'Eyevero $\delta \epsilon$ (so frequent in Luke, and peculiar to him in the N.T.) marks a fresh start in the story. See the division of paragraphs in the R.V. and in WH.

 note. The confusion as to the text need excite no suspicion that the whole verse is sparious. An interpolation of this kind, when once made, would be no more liable to corruption than an original text: an interpolator would be likely to insert what was simple, and in no need of tinkering. The variations in the text are such as would spring naturally from different mistakes in copying and different attempts to correct these mistakes. Assuming the text as quoted to be correct, translate; I must needs glory : it is not indeed expedient, but I will come to visions \&c. He is forced to glory, although he knows that glorying is not good. But there is another point which he must urge, viz. the revelations granted to him. By oú $\sigma u \mu \phi \epsilon \rho o \nu$ is meant that it is not profitable: he glories, not because it pays to do so, but because he cannot help himself. Or, reading dè oú for $\delta \in i ̂ . ~ o u ́$, we have; But to glory is not indeed expedient, but I will come dc. Kuplou belongs to both $\delta \pi \tau a \sigma l a s$ and $\dot{\alpha} \pi о \kappa \alpha \lambda \alpha \psi \epsilon t s$. These experiences were not delusions, and they were not the work of Satan. Kuplou is probably the subjective genitive, of Him from whom the visions and not the objective, of Him who is seen and revealed, as in $\delta \pi \pi a \sigma l a \nu$
 The objective genitive would apply to Acts ix. 4-6, zviii. 9, xxii. 18, xxiii. 11, and perhaps xxvii. 23; but not to ix. 12 or xvi. 9: the subjective genitive would cover all these, and also Gal. ii. 2. The subjective genitive would here be more certain, if aпокади́ $\psi$ ets stood Kuplou cannot be thus resolved. An $\delta \pi \tau a \sigma i a$ is a special kind of $\dot{\alpha} \pi о к \dot{\lambda} \lambda u \psi \iota s:$ a revelation may be made without anything being seen. On the other hand, not all visious are revelations. But an orraola

Kupiov would be a revelation; He would not send it unless He had something to make known. Indeed, in Sariptare, $\delta \pi$ rafia seems not to be used, except of visions that are revelations (Lk. i. 22, xxiv. 23; Acts xxvi. 19; Mal. iii. 2; Theodotion's version of Dan. ix. 23, x. 1, 7, 8, 16, where in the LXX. we have öpaбts or ö $\rho a \mu a)$. Three times in the Apocrypha $\delta \pi$ racla is otherwise used (Ecclus xliii. 2, 16; and the addition to Esther, iv. 13). But in the canonical books other words are employed, where mere sight or appearance, as distinct from divine manifestation, is meant. The word ontafla is not classical; and it was probably colloquial before it became Biblical. It survives in modern Greek. See Kennedy, Sources of N. T. Greel, p. 154.

The conjecture that S. Paul is here answering an attack which had been made on him respecting his claim to have had 'visions and revelations' seems to receive some confirmation from the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions, a sort of religious romance, in parts of which S. Paul appears to be criticized in the person of Simon Magus. That Simon throughout represents $S$. Paul is an untenable hypothesis; for specially Pauline doctrines are not attributed to Simon and condemned by S. Peter. But here and there the Judaizing authors or compilers of these two writings have, under cover of Simon Magus, made a hit at the Apostle, whose teaching and work they so disliked; and they may be employing an old taunt against S. Paul when they laugh at the 'visions' of Simon Magus; see especially Hom. xvii. 14-20. "Simon said, Visions and dreame, being God-sent, do not speak falsely in regard to those thinge which they have to tell. And Peter said, You were right in saying that, being God-sent, they do not speak falsely. But it is uncertain if he who sees has seen a Godsent dream" (15). Comp.  к.т. $\lambda$. I know a man in Christ fourteen years ago,...such a one caught up \&e. The A.V. is misleading. The Apostle does not say that fourteen years ago he knew a man caught up \&c.; but that he knows a man who fourteen years ago was caught up \&c. The 'man in Christ' is himself ( $v .7$ ); and $\epsilon \bar{\chi} \rho \iota \sigma \tau \hat{\varphi}$ probably means more than whose life was in Christ, who was a Christian. At this extraordinary crisis he was swallowed up in Christ, so as almost to lose his own personality. Conybeare and Howson take $\epsilon \nu$ X $\rho \iota \sigma \tau \hat{\psi}$ with dipaaytura, "which would have come immediately after $\delta \epsilon \kappa \alpha \tau \varepsilon \sigma \sigma d \rho \omega \nu$, had it not

The rhythmical balance and swing of the Greek are like the strophe and antistrophe of a chorus. We may conjecture that the Apostle had often meditated on this marvellous experience, and that his meditations had at last acquired a eort of cadence. See Appendix D.

 iv. 7). Theodoret suggests that S. Paul gives the date to let the Corinthians know that they have compelled him, after so many years of silence, to speak of this matter. But there is nothing to show that he had never mentioned it before. Still less likely is it that the date is given to connect this with the flight from Damasous. As the date of the flight is not given, to give the date of this ocourrence shows no connexion between the two. The date of an extraordinary personal experience remains impressed on the memory, and it is quite natural, when one mentions the experience, to begin with the date. Moreover, the Hebrew prophets constantly do so with regard to their special inspirations (Is. vi. 1, xiv. 28, xx. 1, 2; Jer. slii. 7; Ezek. i. 1, &o.).
 know not, or out of the body $I$ know not; God knoweth; such a one caught up even to the third heaven. His meaning is that he was conscious of being canght up: that much he knoves: his being transferred to heaven was a fact. But where his body was at the time, whether in heaven or on earth, that he does not know : his consciousness with regard to that is a blank. Traditions respecting Enoch and Elijah had made the idea of bodily translation to heaven familiar to the Jews, and S. Paul seems to think that his experience may have been a temporary translation of this kind. What he says in 1 Cor. xv. 50 would not exclude such a supposition; he is there speaking of the permanent abiding of bodies in heaven. In the Latin Visio Pauli (see Appendix B) it is stated that he was translated bodily; dum in corpore essem in quo raptus sum usque ad tercium coelum. He is not here doubting whether the whole thing was a delusion. He is quite sure that he himself was for a time in heaven: what he is not sure of is, the relation between his body and his spirit at the time of the revelation. Philo (de somn. i. p. 626. 4) says that there was a tradition that Moses became $\dot{\alpha} \sigma \dot{\omega} \mu a \cos$ when he fasted 40 days and nights. The frequent repetition of ot $\delta a$ in $v v .2,3$ must be preserved in translation. The Apostle is very clear about what he knows and what he

The change (see oritioal note) from ékros (v. 2; 1 Cor. vi. 18) to $\chi$ opls (xi. 28; 1 Cor. xi. 11, \&o.) should be marked in translation. The Vulgate has extra corpus in both verses, its usual rendering of $\chi \omega \rho i s$ being sine. The fact that in both verses $\epsilon \nu \sigma \dot{\omega} \mu a \pi t$ stands first is no indication that $S$. Paul himself regarded this alternative as the more probable: with elre...elre the alternatives are given as equal; comp. v. 9, 13.  is somewhat in favour of the identification of paradise with the third heaven, the cal before otoa (v. 3) is in favour of separate cases of rapture. 'I know a man... and I know suoh a one' points to two experiences: haec iterata plane duplex rei momentum exprimunt (Bengel). Had S. Paul put a kai before $\epsilon l_{s} \tau \delta \nu \pi a \rho a ́ \delta \varepsilon \sigma o \nu$, there could have been no doubt. Irenaeus (II. xxx. 7) plainly distinguishes the two; "was caught up even to the third heaven, and again was carried into paradise." Tertullian (de Praes. Haer. 24) similarly; "was caught up even to the third heaven and was carried into paradise." Clement of Alexandria (Strom. v. xii, p. 693 ed. Potter) also; "caught up even to the third heaven and thence into paradise." Gyril of Jerusalem (Cat. Lect. xiv. 26) likewise; "Elijah was taken up only to heaven; but Paul both into heaven and into paradise." Epiphanius writes to John, Bishop of Jerusalem; "When he mentions the third heaven, and then adds the word 'paradise,' he shows that heaven is in one place and paradise in another" (Jerome, Ep. li. 5). But we are unable to fix the meaning of either 'third heaven' or ' 'paradise.'

From the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Levi 2, 3) we know that some Jews about S. Paul's time distinguished seven heavens; in which they were followed by the Valentinian Gnostics, and later by the Mahometans. But we do not know whether this idea was familiar to S. Paul; still less whether he is alluding to it here. Irenaeus (II. xxx. 7) contends against the notion that the Apostle reached the third of the Valentinian heavens and left the four higher heavens unvisited. Here, écos implies that the 'third heaven' is a very high heaven, if not the highest; and he uses both 'third heaven' and 'paradise' as terms which his readers will be likely to understand. But we cannot infer from this that both terms were already familiar to them. S. Bernard (de Grad. Hum.) makes the three heavens symbolize the Trinity and the three graces of humility, charity, and perfect union with the Father in glory.

Jewish ideas respecting paradise were fantastic and conflicting. Sometimes it was thought of as the Garden of Eden, either still remaining on earth or removed to another world; sometimes as that part of the region below the earth in which the souls of the righteous are at peace; sometimes as a region in heaven; which seems to be the meaning here. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch (which, like the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, was written about the time of S. Paul, and therefore is evidence for ideas current in his day) throws much light on this subject. It describes the seven heavens, and in one place either the third heaven is paradise or it contains paradise: "These men took me from thence and placed me in the midst of a garden...and in the midst [is] the tree of life, in that place on which God rests when He comes into paradise" (viii. 1-3). In another passage the idea is different: "I went to the East, to the paradise of Eden, where rest has been prepared for the just, and it is open to the third heaven, and shut from this world" (xlii. 3). In the Testaments (Levi 18) 'the heavens' and 'paradise' seem to be different. In the Psalms of Solomon (xiv. 2), in the $\pi$ apádelбos кuplov, the saints are the trees of life (a great advance on the usual materialism); but there is no indication of the relation of heaven to paradise.

It is impossible to determine whether S. Paul was influenced by, or even was aequainted with, any of these ideas. With the thought of a plarality of heavens we may compare $\delta \dot{\alpha} \mu \alpha \beta \dot{\alpha} s$ virepá $\nu \omega \pi \alpha \nu \tau \omega \nu$

(Heb. iv. 14 ; comp. vii. 26). Only three times does the word aradi$\delta$ elvos occur in the N.T. (here; Lk. xxiii. 43 ; Rev. ii. 7). In the O.T. it is either 'a pleasure-ground' (Neh. ii. 8; Cant. iv. 13; Eceles. ii. 5) or 'the garden of Eden' (Gen. ii. 9, 10, 15, 16, \&c.). Nowhere does it appear to be used to convey any special revelation respecting the unseen world. See Hastings' DB. ii. pp. 668 ff .

In the Fathers S. Paul is sometimes said to have heard unutterable words in the third heaven. This is mere laxity of quotation: it is no proof that the writer identifies paradise with the third heaven.
 upon words (comp. i. 13, iii. 2, iv. 8, \&c.) can be reproduced in English; unutterable utterances which a man may (Mt. xii. 4; Acts ii. 29) not speak (ii. 17, iv. 13, vii. 14). The last clause explains áppqra, 'things which may not be uttered,' arcana verba, quae non licet homini loqui (Vulgate). He has no right, not he is unable, to utter them. The word dippros is found here only in Biblical Greek, but is fairly common in classical Greek of sacred names, mysteries, \&c. The addition of $\dot{d} \nu \theta \rho \hat{\omega} \pi \omega$ is not superfluous: no human being ought to repeat on earth what has been said in heaven. Calvin here has some good remarks as to the vanity of speculation respecting the things which the Apostle was not allowed to reveal. Stanley contrasts the reticence of the Apostle with the details given by Mahomet. People who claim to have received revelations commonly do give details. It is specially remarkable that $\mathbf{S}$. Paul never quotes these experiences in heaven as evidence for his teaching. How easy to have claimed special revelation in defence of his treatment of the Gentiles! There is a somewhat similar paronomasia in the $\dot{\alpha} \lambda \dot{\lambda} \lambda_{o}$ ous

This statement about 'hearing unutterable utterances' is in itself conclusive against the identification of this incident with the trance in the Temple (Acts xxii. 17 ff .), in telling of which the Apostle says nothing as to his being caught up to heaven, but does tell what the Lord said to him. Moreover, the trance in the Temple seems to have taken place at an earlier date than this incident. 2 Corinthians was probably written about a.d. 57. 'Fourteen years ago' takes us back to about A.D. 43. But the trance appears to have followed soon after the conversion, which cannot be placed either much earlier or much later than s.d. 37 (see on xi. 32); and there cannot have been six years between the conversion and the trance. But if the identification of this incident with the trance is chronologically impossible, still more impossible is its identification with the conversion; yet this also has been suggested, Perhaps the strangest theory of all is the one which identifies the being caught up even to the third heaven with the unconsciousness caused by the stoning at Lystra, when he was supposed to be dead (Acts xiv. 19). Could S. Paul write of unconsciousness after being nearly killed by maltreatment in such words as he uses hene? On the "reticence, or stadied vagueness, or emphatic assertion of the symbolism," of Seripture respecting the special revelations of God made to Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Ezekiel, S. Stephen, and S. Paul, see Lightfoot, Sermons on Special Occasions, pp. 94-97.
 quasi in alterius persona loquitur (Sedulius ad loc. Migne, P. L. oiii.). S. Paul speaks of himself throughout as if he were another person; not merely because this glorying about himself was distressing to him, and feelings of modesty suggested to him (as to many writers at the present day) to speak of himself in the third person; but because a person in ecstasy, to his everyday self, is another person. "He who was caught up to the third heaven and heard unspeakable words is a different Paul from him who says, Of such an one I will glory" (Origen on John, Book x. 5). "He speaks of a divided experience, of two selves, two Pauls: one Paul in the third heaven, enjoying the beatifio vision: another yet on earth, struggling, tempted, tried and buffeted by Satan" (F. W. Robertson). That rov̂ rocoútov is neuter, 'such a matter,' is improbable, both on account of the contrast with éraurov and also of $\tau \delta \nu \tau$. à $\nu \theta \rho \omega \pi \sigma \nu(v .3$ ). Of 'such a one' he will glory, becanse in all this he was passive: he did nothing, and could claim no merit; it was all a 'revelation of the Lord.' As to his own doings, he will not glory, except in what may be called his weaknesses. He here repeats the principle laid down in xi. 30.
 was not a mere passive recipient, or of revelations which he has the right to disclose, he will not be foolish in so doing; for he will say nothing but what is true. But he abstains, lest any should get a more exalted idea of him than their experience of the Apostle's conduct and teaching confirms. He desires to be judged by his ministerial work, not by what he can tell, however truly, of his privileges. Some take $\theta \in \lambda \eta \sigma \omega$ as fut. indic. and hold that it implies that he does wish: but it may be aor, subjunct. Blass (§ 65. 5) contends that there is no certain instance of $\varepsilon \dot{\varepsilon} \dot{y} y$ with the fut. indic. ; every where the reading is doubtful. 7. Both text (see critical note) and punctuation are uncertain, and some primitive error may be suspected. But the general meaning is clear. In order to prevent him from being too much lifted up by the extraordinary revelations granted to him, some extraordinary bodily suffering of a very humiliating kind was laid upon him.
 tioned are primarily meant; but from Acts we learn that revelations were frequent. In Acts xvi. 6-10 we have three. WH. prefer to attach these words to $v .6$ : but I forbear, lest any man..., and by reason of the exceeding greatness of the revelations; i.e. he has two reasons for abstaining, (1) fear of seeming to exaggerate, and (2) the greatness of the revelations. Lachmann would attach these words to v. 5 , making $v .6$ a parenthesis: I will not glory, save in my weaknesses (for if I choose to glory...) and in the exceeding greatness of the revelations. "Neither construction however justifies itself on close examination; and in all probability there is a corruption somewhere" (WH.). Faulty dictation might account for the best certified text. The Apostle, for emphasis, begins with the revelations, then breaks off with $\delta \iota 6$, and finishes with a different construction, repeating iva $\mu \grave{\eta}$ únepalp $\omega \mu \mathrm{a}$ in his impressiveness: And by reason of the exceeding greatness (iv. 7) of the revelations-wherefore, that I should not be exalted overmuch (2 Thes, ii. 4), there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet me, that I-should not be exalted over much (R.V.). This seems to be less awkward then either of the other arrangements: but in all three the meaning is much the same.

 magnitudine revelationum Paulus extolleretur et ut virtus ejus proficeretur, sed Deus (Augustine, de Nat. et Grat. 27). Augustine argues in a similar way in the Reply to Faustus (xxii. 20). The $\sigma \kappa \dot{d} \lambda \boldsymbol{\psi}$ was given by God through the instrumentality of Satan, who is regarded as always ready to inflict suffering for its own sake (comp. 1 Cor. v. 5 with Ellicott's note, and I Tim. i. 20); but the lva $\mu \dot{\eta}$ forbids the making Satan the nom. to $\epsilon \delta \delta \theta \eta$.  And thorn (A.V., R.V.) is more probable than 'stake' (R.V. marg.). Nowhere else in the N.T. does $\sigma \kappa 6 \lambda 0 \psi$ occur: in the LXX. it is found

 $\chi \hat{\epsilon \epsilon \iota}$, каl $\pi a \gamma \epsilon \hat{i} \sigma a \quad \gamma^{l \nu \epsilon \tau a \iota} \sigma \kappa о \lambda \delta \pi \omega \nu a \kappa \rho \alpha$. In the first three passages it represents three different Hebrew words; sek, sillon, sir, of which sillōn occurs Ezek. ii. 6, and sir Is. xxxiv. 13; Nah. i. 10; Eccles. vii. 6 ; and sillōn is conneoted with Aramaic and Syriac words which mean 'thorn' or 'point.' 'Thorn' or 'splinter' seems to be the meaning in all these passages, and 'stake' would not suit any of them, except Hos. ii. 6. Wetstein and Fritzsche quote Artemidorus where 'thorns and briars' seems to be the meaning: comp. Diosco-$\sigma \pi a ̂ r a \iota ~ \sigma \kappa \delta ̊ \lambda o \pi a s$, where 'thorns' or 'splinters' is evidently the meaning. But in classical Greek the common meaning is 'stake,' either for palisading or impaling; and a stake for impaling would be a suitable metaphor for great suffering. Moreover, oк $\delta \lambda \circ \psi$ was sometimes used as equivalent to $\sigma$ тaupos (perhaps contemptuously in the first instance), and dעaбко入omlj $\omega$ was used for cracifixion. Thus Colsus said of

 of the crucifizion of S. Peter (H.E. II. xxv. 5). The translation 'stake' is therefore strongly advocated by some. Tertullian so understood it; he has sudes twice (de Fuga in Pers. 2; de Pudic. 13); but in neither place does he translate $\tau \hat{n} \sigma a \rho \kappa$. The translator of Irenaeus (v. iii. 1) and Cyprian (Test. iii. 6; de Mortal. 13) have the ambiguous stimulus carnis, which is adopted in the Vulgate. Luther has Pfahl ins Fleisch, Beza surculus infixus carni, Calvin stimulus carni, metaphora a bobus sumpta. "A stake driven through the flesh" is Lightfoot's interpretation in his essay at the end of Gal. iv. Stanley (ad loc.) and Ramsay (St Paul, p. 97) agree with this. But Alford, Conybeare and Howson, Findlay, Heinrici, Krenkel, Meyer, F. W. Robertson, Schaff, and Schmiedel abide by the usual rendering 'thorn.' Field (Otium Norvicense, iii. p. 115) says that "there is no doubt that the Alexandrine use of $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda \circ \psi$ for 'thorn' is here intended, and that the ordinary meaning of 'stake' must be rejected." He quotes

 Farrar combines the two ideas, when he speaks of the "impalement of his health by this wounding splinter" (St Paul, 1. p. 221). But, whichever translation be adopted, it is the idea of acuteness rather than of size that seems to be dominant; and it is not improbable that the Apostle has Numb. xxxiii. 55 in his mind, when he uses the expression.
'Thorn for the flesh' is plainly metaphorical. What does the metaphor mean? The answers to this question have varied greatly; and, on the whole, particular kinds of answers have prevailed at different periods or in different parts of the Church. But the earliest traditions and latest explanations are so far in agreement that they all take this grievous trial of the Apostle to be physical suffering of some kind. It is commonly assumed that, in attempting to determine the nature of the $\sigma \kappa 6 \lambda о \psi \tau \hat{\eta} \sigma a \rho \kappa i, G a l$. iv. 13, 14, which was written about the same time as this letter, must be combined with this passage as referring to the same $d \sigma \theta \in \nu \epsilon c a$. But it ought to be borne in mind that this is not certain; and that it is possible that the earliest traditions may be right about the $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda \sigma \psi$, while one of the modern lypotheses may be right about Gal. iv. 13, 14. From 2 Cor. xii. 7 we learn that the infliction was so acute as to be fitly called $\sigma \kappa 6 \lambda o \psi$, and so distressing and disabling to the Apostle's work as to be clearly the work of Satan; also that it was recurrent, as the tense of ко入aфiS\% implies, and connected with the revelations granted to him, in that it was a humiliating antidote to spiritual pride. In this last connexion it may be compared with Jacob's lameness after wrestling with (the angel of) Jehovah; and Jerome (Ep. xxxix. 2) compares it to the slave behind the triumphal car of the victorious general, whispering constantly, Hominem te esse memento. From Gal. iv. 13, 14 we learn that the weakness of the flesh there spoken of was so severe as to detain him in Galatia, and that its effects were such as to tempt the Galatians (rò $\boldsymbol{\tau} \pi(\rho a \sigma \mu \partial \nu \dot{\nu} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ ) to regard him with contempt ( $\epsilon \xi$ ou $\theta \epsilon \nu \eta \sigma a \tau \epsilon$ ) and disgust ( $(\xi \xi \in \pi \tau \dot{\prime} \sigma a \tau \epsilon$ ), a temptation which they triumphantly overcame. Beyond this all is uncertainty. The tradition that he was afflicted with agonizing pains in the head will fit 2 Cor. xii. 7, but not Gal. iv. 13, 14, for there is nothing in such suffering which would be likely to excite contempt or disgust. Three conjectures of modern commentators will fit both passages, but perhaps should be reserved for Gal. iv. 13, 14; these are epilepsy (Lightfoot, Schaff, Krenkel, Findlay), acute ophthalmia (Farrar, Lewin, Plumptre), and malarial fever (Ramsay). Of these three the first fulfils the conditions best. For details and for other views see $\Delta$ ppendix $C$.
 of Satan. Comp. Lk. xiii. 16. This is in apposition to $\sigma \kappa 0 \lambda \alpha \psi$, which is thus personified. With the reading $\Sigma a r d y$ (see oritical note), which may be nominative, some would render 'the angel Satan' or 'a hostile angel.' Against the former is the absence of the article; against the latter the fact that in the N.T. Eavavâs is always a proper name. Wiclif and the Rhemish, following the Valgate, angelus satanae, have 'angel of Satan'; other English Versions have 'messenger.' The idea of Satan having angels was familiar to the Jews (Mt. xii. $24=$ Lk. xi. 15). The Epistle of Barnabes (xviii. 1) in

 'I have seen the angels of punishment preparing all the instruments of Satan' (comp. xl. 7; lvi. 1) : it is their special function 'to bring judgment and destruction on all who dwell on the earth' (lxvi, 1). In the Book of Jubilees, the date of which is B.c. 135-105, the demons under Mastêmá ( $=\delta$ इaravâs in derivation and meaning), lead astray, blind, and kill the grandchildren of Noah (x. 2); Mastèmá helps the Egyptian magicians, and stirs up the Egyptians to pursue Israel (xlviii. 9, 12). Whereas in Exod. iv. 24 it is stated that the Lord sought to kill Moses for not cireumcising his son, in Jubilees it is Mastemê who seeks to slay Moses and thus save the Egyptians from divine vengeance (xlviii. 2, 3). Comp. Satan moving David to number Israel (1 Chron. xxi. 1) with the Lord moving David to do this (2 Sam. xxiv. 1). Here the $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda o \psi$ is given by God, but is at the same time an angel of Satan. The idea of Satan inflieting suffering is as old as the Book of Job (i. 12, ii. 6) and appears in the N.T. in would never have been struck out, had it been genuine: it might easily be inserted, either accidentally from $\dot{\eta} \chi \alpha \rho c s \mu o v$, or deliberately, to lessen the paradox. The saying is more forcible without the limitation, 'Where there is weakness, power reaches completeness.' It is when man can do nothing, that divine power is perfectly recognized. Where man can do much, the fallacy of cum hoc, ergo propter hoc may come in, and the effects of divine power may be a.ttributed to man's efforts. Comp. iv. 7, xiii. 4, 1 Cor. i. 25, ii. 3, 4.  $I$ am strong. The translation of $\delta u v a \tau o s s$ should correspond with that of $\delta$ ovapus in $v .9$; for it is through the $\delta \dot{v} v a \mu(s$ toi $\chi \rho$. that he is $\delta u v a r b s$. Therefore, if 'strength' there, 'strong' here; and if 'power' there, 'powerful' here.

The paradox sums up the Apostle's estimate of his own achievements. From the special dं $\sigma \dot{\theta} \dot{\operatorname{coc}} \mathrm{a}$ of the $\sigma \kappa b \lambda o \psi$ he has slipped back to the oatalogue of $\tau \dot{d} \tau \hat{\eta} s \dot{\alpha} \sigma \theta \in \nu \in l a s$ ( $\mathrm{xi}, 23-30$ ); and this is the triumphant ory with which the paragraph conoludes: it is precisely when he is weak that he is strong. At such times he feels, and others see, that he is weak: and he knows, and they know, what he accomplishes in spite of the weakness. There can, therefore, be no mistake as to the source of the strength. Christ's strength, in His minister's weakness, teोeíral. Augustine (Conf. x. iii. 4) reverses this: dulcedine gratiae Tuae, qua potens est onnis infirmus, qui sibi per ipsan fit conscius infirmitatis suae. It is not the grace that makes him conscious of his own weakness, bat his weakness which makes him conscious of the grace.

Pliny tells us that the sickness of a friend taught him that we are at our best when we are ill. The siok man is not troubled by his passions, or about honours and possessions which he is soon to leave; he remembers the gods, and that he himself is a man; invidet nemini, neminem miratur, neminem despicit, ac ne sermonibus quidem malignis aut attendit, aut alitur (Ep. vir. 26).
xif. 11-xiti. 10. Retrospect of his Glorying, and Warnings in Connexion with his approaceina Visit.
11. The Apostle pauses and looks back at what he has been saying in this most distasteful contest with his opponents, as to whether they or he had better reasons for glorying. He had begged the Corinthians not to think him a fool; or at any rate to give him not less attention than they would give to a fool (xi. 16). Now that he considers what he has been driven to say, he admits that he has become a fool.

「'́yova á $\phi p \omega v$. The verb is emphatic: 'it has come to pass that I am'; 'I have proved to be'; 'I verily am become.' The words are certainly not a question; nor are they concessive, 'suppose that I am become.' And perhaps they are not an ironical adoption of his critics' point of view. He admits that he has really been acting foolishly in this glorying. (But the кavz ${ }^{\omega} \mu \epsilon \nu$ os of the Rec. is an obvious gloss: see critical note.) Receptui canit, says Bengel; but, although he

 $\dot{v} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ are very emphatic: ' $y o u$ compelled me (it was not my choice); for $I$ (not my adversaries) ought to have been commended by you.' He would never have been driven to this folly of glorying, if the Corinthians had supported him loyally. Could S. Paul have written

Assume that the reproach was made in an earlier letter, before they had submitted, and that iii. 2 was written after they had submitted, and then all is consistent. While $\delta \in \hat{i}$ (v. 10) points to the nature of things or a divine decree, bфciлecv (here and $v .14$ ) expresses a special personal obligation of the nature of a debt (Lk. xvii. 10).  more clear that 'the super-extra apostles' refers sarcestically to the hostile teachers, not literally to any of the Twelve. But there are some who doubt whether S. Paul would have condescended to say that he was not at all inferior to the Judaizing teachers. The aor. $\dot{v} \sigma \tau \in \rho \eta \sigma a$, in nothing was $I$ behind, refers to the time when the Apostle was in Corinth. The rá $\rho$ means, 'you could have commended me with perfect sincerity and justice.' With the tone comp. Gal. ii. 6.

In Heb, ii. 4 we have a. te rai $\tau$., as possibly here. The threefold enumeration is found there and Acts ii. 22, as here: comp. 2 Thes. ii. 9; Rom. xv. 19. "The passage is of deep interest, as shewing the unquestioned reality of miraculous gifts in the early Church" (Westeott on Heb. ii. 4). We have similar evidence in 1 Cor. x. 8-11, xiv. 18, 19; Rom. xv. 18, 19 ; Gal. iii. 5. Every one of the great Epistles of S. Paul bears witness to this fact. "It is aimply impossible that evidence of this kind for the special purpose for which it is adduced should be otherwise than true. It is given quite incidentally; it is not didactic, i.e. it is no part of an argument the object of which is to produce a belief in miracles; it refers to notorious matter of fact, to fact equally notorious for S. Paul himself and for those to whom he is writing; it shews...... that he could appeal to it without fear of being challenged " (Sanday, Church Congress paper, 1902). In the N.'T. supernatural works are often called $\sigma \eta \mu \epsilon \hat{i} a$ without $\tau \hat{e} p a \tau a$, especially by S. John (ii. 11, 23, iii. 2, iv. 54, \&e.), but never тepara without $\sigma \eta \mu \epsilon i a$. The quotation from Joel iii. 3 in Acts ii. 19 is the nearest approach to such a separation. Miracles are never mere 'wonders' (prodigia); they are divine 'tokens' (signa), and products of divine power (virtutes). While the Vulgate is consistent in its rendering of $\delta \nu \nu a \mu c t$, the A. V. is very capricious; 'mighty deeds’ (here), 'wonderful works' (Mt. vii. 22), 'mighty works' (Mt. xi. 20), 'miracles' (Gal. iii. 5). The last two are most frequent. Trench, Syn. § xei.
13. The Corinthians had had the distinction of these miracles and supernatural gifts; and in nothing had any Church been more honoured. In nothing,-with one possible exception: he had never taken from them either maintenance or reward. Yet this very thing, which ought to have earned their gratitude, had been urged against him as a reproach. So he sarcastically, or perhaps playfully, states this exceptional benefit to them as if it were an injury, and asks their forgiveness for it.

Paul means that he is preparing to pay a third visit, not that for the third time he is making preparation. The second visit was the short one $\epsilon \nu \lambda \dot{\prime} \pi \eta$ : see note on ii. 1, Lightfoot, Biblical Essays, p. 274, and Conybeare and Howson, chap. xv. The phrase éroi $\mu \omega$ s ${ }^{\prime} \chi \omega$ is found in the Fayyûm documents of the time of Marcus Aurelius; always, as here, with the infin. (Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 252). S. Paul here uses $\psi u \chi \eta$ for the whole of man's inner nature or true life, which is its common meaning in Greek philosophy, in Gospels and Acts, and in 1 Peter. He is not using it here for a special faculty of man's immaterial nature distinct from $\pi \nu \epsilon \hat{v} \mu a$ or $\nu 0 \hat{\jmath} s(1 \mathrm{Cor} . \mathrm{xv} .45,46 ;$ 1 Thes. v. 23 ; comp. 1 Cor. xiv. 14, 15). See Hort, and Bigg, on 1 Pet. i. 9; also Hatch, Biblical Greek, pp. 101, 113, 130; and, for S. Paul's self-sacrifice, Phil. ii. 17; Rom. ix. 3. Comp. aninaeque magnae prodigum Paulum (Hor. Od. x. xii. 36). The rare comp. $\epsilon_{\kappa} \delta a \pi a \nu \hat{a} \nu$, 'to spend to the last farthing,' occurs here only in Biblical Greek. It occurs Joseph. Ant. xv. v. 1, and in Polybins. 'I will spend my substance and the last fragment of myself for your salvation.'
 The kal after el should certainly be omitted: whether the sentence depends upon what precedes, or should be independent and interrogative, is more doubtful: comp. v. 19, x. 7. Both arrangements make good sense; but the latter is more vigorous. If I love you more abundantly, am I loved the less? This is not an instance of cl introducing a direot question, as in Lk. xiii. 23, xxii. 49; Acts i. 6, xix. 2; &c. The el belongs to the first clause only, not to the sentence. 'If I show my special love for you by working among you for nothing, are you going to allow that very thing to estrange you from me?'
16. "Eбтw 8 e. But be it so. 'You will say, We grant all that: we admit that you did not yourself take money from us, but you were cunning enough to get it out of us through others.' This use of $\boldsymbol{t} \sigma \pi \omega$ is not found elsewhere in the N.T. In Plato's dialogues we sometimes have $\sigma \tau \omega$, when one side grants what the other states (Gorg. 516 c ), but it is not common.

This is not his admission about himself, and it ought never to be quoted as stating a principle which has apostolic authority. It is what his critics have said of him. The $\dot{v} \pi \dot{d}_{\rho} \chi \omega^{\omega} y$ (viii. 17; Gal. i. 14, ii. 14) indicates that he had all along been regarded as a person of bad character: $\pi a v o u ̂ p \gamma o s$, frequent in Psalms and Ecclus, occurs here only in the N.T.; but comp. iv. 2, xi. 3. 17. Did $I$ by means of any one of those whom $I$ have sent unto you, take advantage (ii. 11, xii. 2; 1 Thes. iv. 6) of you, by getting money out of you? The $\dot{d} \pi \epsilon \sigma \tau a \lambda \kappa a$, as distinct from $\pi \epsilon \pi \rho \mu \phi a$, implies the sending on a permanent mission.
18. тарєкá $\lambda_{\text {eба }}$ T(тov. I exhorted Titus, and I sent with him the (see on ii. 16) brother. This cannot refer to the mission of Titus alluded to in ii. 13 , vii. 6,13 ; nor to the one mentioned in viii. 6,17 , $18,2 \%$. There may have been another mission before the painful letter (of which these four chapters seem to be a part) was written. But, whatever view we take of x.-xiii., the mission of Titus mentioned in viii. 6, 17, 18, 22 cannot be meant here; for when viii. was written, Titus had not yet started. Nor is it credible that the mission of Titus alluded to in ii. 13, vii. 6, 13 can be meant. That was the mission to quell the rebellion in Corinth, a task in which Titus succeeded. But S. Paul would never have complicated so difficult a matter as that by combining with it an attempt to raise money. Of course, if we believe that x.-xiii. is part of the painful letter, the mission of Titus to quell the revolt cannot be referred to here; for, when the painful letter was written; Titus had not started on that mission. Everything runs smoothly if we suppose three missions of Titus to Corinth; an early one, in which he and one brother started the collection for the Palestine fand, which seems to be alluded to in кä̀ेs $\pi \rho \circ \in \nu \eta p \xi a \tau o$ (viii. 6), and which is alluded to here; a second, in which he supported the Apostle's painful letter, and won back the Corinthians to their allegiance (ii. 13, vii. 6, 13); a third, in which he and two brethren were to complete the collection (viii. $6,17,18,22)$. Here $\tau \dot{\partial} \nu \dot{a} \delta \epsilon \lambda \phi \delta b$ means 'the brother whom you remember.' In none of the missions did Titus go alone.
 of you? This does not imply that the Corinthians had accused Titus of sharp practice: rather the contrary. The Apostle's argument is this: 'You admit that I took nothing from you myself; but you suspect some of my agents of taking. Can you mention one who did so? Did Titus, my chief agent, do so?' Evidently S. Paul knows that they had not accused Titus of this. Then the rest of the argument follows. 'Did not he and $I$ always walk in the same spirit, the same steps? If his hands are clean, so are mine.'

This fits in with the theory of three missions of Titus. In the first he won their confidence, and therefore was sent on the very difficult second mission and the rather delicate matter of the third mission. And, if $x$.-xiii. is part of the painful letter, the passage before us was written between the first and second mission, when the good impression was fresh. It is quite possible that at his first mission to Corinth Titus was the bearer of 1 Corinthians. In 1 Cor, xvi. 12 we read of 'the brethren' who are to carry. the letter. These brethren may be Titus and 'the brother' mentioned here: see Lightfoot, Biblical Essays, p. 181.

Pyth. x. 25; Nem. vi. 27.

This verse renders it improbable that Timothy ever reached Corinth; otherwise he would probably have been mentioned here. It is often supposed that he reached Corinth, and that his mission was a failure; but this is an uncertain hypothesis. He and Erastas were sent to Macedonia (Acts xix. 21, 22) before 1 Cor. was written, and Timothy was instructed to go on to Corinth (1 Cor, iv. 17). All that we know is that, when 2 Cor. was written from Macedonia, Timothy was there with the Apostle (2 Cor. i. 1). He may have gone to Corinth and have returned ádıкnөcls (vii. 12) to Macedonia. More probably he remained in Macedonia till S. Paul's arrival, either because the news from Corinth was so unfavourable, or because there was so much to do in Macedonia. Titus, not Timothy, brings the news about Corinth (ii. 13, vii. 6, 7). S. Luke says nothing about Timothy's having reached Corinth, which probably means that either he knew that he never reached Corinth, or at least had never heard that he did; and S. Paul himself seems to have had doubts whether Timothy would get as far as Corinth; $\epsilon d y \delta \bar{\epsilon} \epsilon \lambda \theta \eta T i \mu b \theta \cos$ ( 1 Cor. xvi. 10). "Combining the hint of the possible abandonment of the design in the First Epistle, the account of the journey to LIacedonia in the Acts, and the silence maintained with regard to any visit to Corinth or any definite information received thence through Timotheus in the Second Epistle, we discover an ' undesigned coincidence' of a striking kind; and it is therefore a fair and reasonable conclusion that the visit was never paid" (Lightfoot, Biblical Essays, p. 280). The fact that Timothy is coupled with Panl in i. 1 does not explain the silence here. He is coupled with Paul in writing 1 Thessalonians, yet see 1 Thes. iii. 2, 6.

19-21. He is not on his defence before the Corinthians: to God alone is he responsible. But all he says is for the good of the Corinthians, that a thorough reformation may take place before he comes.
 All this time are you thinking that it is to you that I am mairing my defence? Almost all English Versions (except Wiclif and the R.V.) make the sentence a question; as also do Beza, Calvin and Luther: comp. vv. 11 and 15, and x. 7, where similar doubts may be raised.  and Rom. ii. 15, dंтoдoүeĩ $\theta a c$ in the N.T. is peculiar to S. Luke (Lk. xii. 11, xxi. 14; Acts xxiv. 10, \&o.). For the dat. comp. Acts xix. 33.
 we speals in Christ. We have almost the same asseveration ii. 17; comp. i. 18, 23, iv. 2, v. 11, vii. 12, xi. 11, 31; 1 Cor. ii. 15, iv. 3, 4. "This sense of saying and doing everything in the sight of God and in union with Christ, Who will avenge all deceit by unmasking the deceiver, is a oharacteristio of St Paul's whole nature" (Lias).
 A.V. supplies 'we do,' the R.V. 'are.' Perhaps 'we speak,' from the previous clause, is more probable than either. The affectionate statement softens the preceding words, and smooths the way for the sorrowful words that follow. This is the only $\alpha \boldsymbol{\alpha} \alpha \pi \eta r o l$ in the last four chapters, as that in vii. 1 is the only one in the first nine. Once more it is plain that he is addressing all his converts at Corinth, not merely the recalcitrant minority. For olko 0 oph comp. x. 8, xiii. 10. For $\dot{j} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ between the article and the noun, which is peculiar to S. Paul, comp. i. 6 (bis), vii. 7 (ter), 15, viii. 13, 14, xiii. 9 ; 1 Cor. vii. 35, ix. 12, xvi. 17: in the last case the reading is doubtful.

$\phi$ oßou $\mu$ at yáp. The $\gamma \dot{d} \rho$ looks back to $\tau \hat{\eta} s \dot{\nu} \mu \omega \hat{\omega}$ olko $\delta o \mu \hat{\eta} s$. They were in much need of being 'built up,' for they seem still to be grievously deficient in the first elements of the Christian life.

What follows seems to be quite inconsistent with a number of statements in the first nine chapters. 'In your faith ye stand firm' (i. 24); 'my joy is the joy of you all' (ii. 3); 'ye are an epistle of Christ' (iii. 3); 'great is my glorying on your behalf' (vi. 4); 'your zeal for me' (vii. 7); 'in everything ye approved yourselves to be pure in the matter' (vii. 11); 'he remembereth the obedience of you all' (vii. 15); 'in everything I am of good courage concerning you' (vii. 16); ' $\mathrm{y} \theta$ abound in everything, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all earnestness, and in your love to us' (viii. 7). These verses ( 20,21 ) might easily precede ohapters i .-ix., especially in an earlier letter. But to write what has just been quoted from these nine chapters, and then, in the same letter, write the fears expressed in these two verses, seems strangely incongruous. What would the Corinthians think of one who could thus blow hot and cold in successive breaths?

As in xi. 3, $\phi \circ \beta$ ßovpal pats the matter gently, and $\pi \omega s$ (ignored in the A.V.) has a similar effect. For I fear, lest by any means, when I come, $I$ should find you not such as $I$ vould, and $I$ should be found by you such as ye would not. The negative gains in effect in the second clause by being transferred from otov to $\theta \in \lambda \in \tau \epsilon:$ but, like $\phi_{0} \beta o \hat{v} \mu a l$ and $\pi \omega s$, the negative manner of statement has a softening effect. Nevertheless, these are the words of one who is in no doubt about his position. He is speaking with authority to those who are under that authority. Here again, as in v. 9, thore is a rough chiasmus in the order.

James (iii. 14, 16) combines $\boldsymbol{\jmath} \boldsymbol{\eta} \lambda o s$ and $\dot{\epsilon} p t \theta \in l a$ (see Mayor's note on Jas. iii. 14). The latter word is not derived from $\boldsymbol{E} \rho \mathrm{s}$, as Theodoret construction), because in the N.T. $\mu$ eravoein is commonly followed by ano (Acts viii. 22; comp. Heb. vi. 1) or $\epsilon \kappa$ (Rev. ii. 21, 22, ix. 20, 21, xvi. 11). But nowhere else in the Epistles does $\mu \in \tau \alpha \nu \sigma \in \hat{\imath ̂} ~ o c c u r ; ~ a n d ~$ in the LXX. it is usually followed by $\boldsymbol{\epsilon} \pi \boldsymbol{\pi}$ (Amos vii. 3, 6 ; Jool ii. 13 ; Jon. iii. 10, iv. 2). Moreover the idea of repenting over a fault is $\mu \epsilon \tau \in \mu \in \lambda \eta \theta \eta$ ė $\pi i \boldsymbol{\tau} \hat{\eta}$ какla ( 1 Chron. xxi. 15).

In Gal. v. 19 (see Lightfoot) the order of these three words is mopvela, ḋкадapola, d$\sigma e \lambda \gamma \epsilon \iota a$. The first is a definite kind of uncleanness; the second is impurity of any kind; the third is outrageous disregard of decency, akin to $\forall \beta \rho / s(v, 10)$. On the proposal to give áxa0apola the meaning of 'covetousness' see Lightfoot on 1 Thes. ii. 3. Such a meaning would be inappropriate here, even if it were possible anywhere. Comp. the combinations in Eph. iv. 19 (where see Ellicott), v. 3; Ool. iii. 5.

Both Tertullian (de Pudic. 15) and Cyprian (Ep. 1v. 26) seem to and Cyprian one in which all three substantives were in the plural: et non egerunt paenitentiam de inmunditiis quas fecerunt et fornicationibus et libidinibus. For dं $\sigma$ èjeca the Vulgate has commonly impudicitia, but in 1 Pet. iv. 3; 2 Pet. ii. 2, 18; Jude 4, luxuria; nowhere libido, which Cyprian does not use in other passages. Tertullian has vilitas for d $\sigma \hat{\lambda} \boldsymbol{\lambda} \boldsymbol{\gamma} \epsilon \iota a$ here and lascivia in Gal. v. 19 (de Pudic. 15, 17). The translator of Irenaene uses libido in Rom. xiii. 13 (Iv. xxvii. 4) and immunditia in Gal. v. 19 (v. xi, 1). All which shows that there was no recognized Latin equivalent.

xiii. 1-10. Additional Warnings in Connexion with his approaching Visit.

1-10. The letter hastens to a conolusion. He reminds them, 1. what they have to expect from him in this third visit (1-4); 2. what they owe to themselves, seeing that their estimate of him and his treatment of them depend on their attitude (5-9); 3. why he sends this letter (10).

1-4. The abrupt opening sentences, without conneoting particles, mark the sternness of the tone.
 the third time I am coming to you (comp. xii. 14), or For the third time I am now coming to you. All suggestions about intentions to come, or being willing to come, or letters being counted as visits, may be safely set aside. The plain meaning is, that he has paid two visits, the long one, when he converted them, and the short one, when he rebuked them with so little effect (i. 23), and that he is preparing to come again: jam sum in procinctu (Bengel). These passages (xii. 14, xiii. 1, 2) "seem inexplicable under any other hypothesis, except that of a second visit" (Lightfoot). Hitherto they have found him so forbearing that he has been accused of weakness. This time he will be severe.
 xix. 15) against offenders; at the mouth of two witnesses and of three shall every word be established. Those charged with offences will have to meet the charges; those who make charges will have to prove them; and the evidence required will be that which would suffice in кal rрьิ̂v. The кal in the LXX. is very marked; $\epsilon \pi l$ $\sigma \tau \delta \mu a \tau o s$ in 1 Tim. r. 19 is unquestioned. Here the Vulgate has vel and in Deut. six. 15 aut. The kal and $\$$ are almost equivalent in suoh oases; 'two witnesses and (if they are to be had) three.' Calvin, following Chrysostom and Theodoret (avri $\mu a \rho \tau \dot{\delta} \rho \omega \bar{y}$ रd $\rho \tau d s$ пapovalas aútô̂ $\tau(\theta \eta \sigma t$ ), makes the 'two and three witnesses' to refer to the two visits already paid and the third which he is about to pay; triplex enim labor tres homines non immerito valebat. But this is strained and unnatural. It is more to the point when Bengel remarks that the Apostle means to rely upon human testimony, and not appeal to a special revelation. If he appealed to his three visits as three witnesses, that would be circumventing the law by a quibble, making the testimony of the same man given three times equal to the testimony of three different persons. The use of the O.T. in iii. 16 and viii. 15 is not parallel to such a quibble.

$\pi \hat{a} v$ f $\tilde{\eta}_{\mu} \mu \mathrm{a}$. To be understood literally; every word; not (according to the Hebraistic use) 'every thing' : comp. Lk. i. 37; also Lk. ii. 19, 51, where the R.V. has 'sayings' in the text and 'things' in the margin ; and Acts $\nabla .32$, where it has 'things' in the text and 'sayings' in the margin. Mt. xviii. 16 is sufficiently decisive for the meaning in this phrase.
 I have said before, and I do say before, as when I was present the second time, so now being absent. 'When I was present the second

Paul changes the natural order of the clauses in order to gain emphasis by putting the two warnings together, and his presence and absence together. See critical note. Those who deny the second visit have to make the $\pi p o$ - mean 'before their conversion,' 'Before the Apostle's second visit' is the meaning ; and 'all the rest' covers those who have fallen into sin since that visit. Note once more his fondness for repeating words compounded with the same preposition, especially $\pi \rho \delta$ : comp. ix. 5; Rom. viii. 29; Gal. v. 21; 1 Tim. i. 18, v. 24; 2 Tim. iii. 4 ; кaтd́, xi. 20 ; жa $\alpha$ á, Phil. ii. 1.

If so, this passage was written before that. What follows is closely connected with ou peloomac, and only a comme should be placed at the end of $v .2$.

they themselves have rendered that impossible, seeing that ye seek a proof (ii. 9, viii. 2, ix. 13) of the Christ that speaketh in one. They had virtually challenged the Christ that St Paul preached, to give a proof of His power. It is a very olumsy arrangement to take ezrel

Although àjuvateiv is common, $8 v v a t e i v ~ i s ~ u s e d ~ b y ~ n o ~ o n e ~ b u t ~ S . ~ P a u l: ~$ in ix. 8 and Rom. xiii. 4 the rarity of the word has produced variants; but here the reading is unquestioned. It makes a specially good contrast to $\dot{d} \sigma \theta \in \nu \epsilon i v$. By $\epsilon \nu \dot{\nu} \mu i ̂ \nu$ is meant 'among you, in the Church' (comp. x. 1, xi. 12), not ' in your hearts.' Whether in סupareî S. Paul is thinking of $\quad \eta \mu \epsilon \hat{a} a, \tau \in \rho a \tau a$, and $\delta v \nu a ́ \mu \epsilon \epsilon s$ (xii. 10), it is impossible to say: perhaps he is rather thinking of judgments (comp. 1 Cor. xi. 30). With $\dot{\text { a }} \boldsymbol{\sigma} \theta \in \mathrm{v} \varepsilon$ comp. Rom. viii. 3 of the powerlessness of the Law. Place at most a semicolon at the end of $v .3$; what follows is an answer to the supposed objection that a Christ who could not save himself from crucifixion must be a powerless Christ.

There is manifest contrast between és dot. and éx $\delta v v . \theta$., and therefore $\boldsymbol{\epsilon} \kappa$ must be rendered alike in both clauses; through weakness, ...through the power of God. The éc marks the source in each case; comp. xi. 26. Note the change from aor. to pres.; 'He was crucified once for all, yet He lives continually,' jôv éatı eis toùs al̂̂̀as $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu$

This expression explains the previous кal rá $^{\rho} \rho$ sentence, which it rhetorically balances; and both $\dot{\alpha} \lambda \lambda \dot{\alpha}$ and $\dot{\epsilon} \kappa$ must be translated as before; For we also are weak in him, yet we shall live with him through the power of God. See Briggs, The Messiah of the Apostles, p. 123. Comp. the balance between the two tpa claases in xi. 12; Gal. iii. 14; Rom. vii. 13. The argament here is, that the transition from weakness to life in us, who have such close fellowship with Him, confirms the similar transition in Him. The two cases would be likely to be similar. See critieal note. If $\epsilon$ ls juâs is genuine, $\dot{\eta} \mu e i_{s}$ must mean 'we Apostles'; and it probably means that in any case. The eis $\dot{\text { u }}$ âs might be dropped accidentally, through homoeoteleuton, or deliberately, to make the balance with the previous sentence more exact.
N.T. usage varies as to the fut. of jáw. If we include ouv $\bar{\alpha} \dot{\omega} u$, the fut. occurs 22 times, 11 with the form $S h \sigma \omega$, and 11 with the later form Shoopat. Of the passages with Sinooult, 6 are quotations from the LXX. In Gal. iii. 11, 12; Rom. i. 17, viii. 13, x. 5 S. Paul uses the later form; Gal. iii. 11, 12 and Rom. i. 17 and x. 5 are quotations, and in viii. 13 he may be thinking of Ezek, xxxvii. 6, 14. Here Fee. with $\mathrm{D}^{3} \mathrm{KL}$ has $\varsigma \eta \sigma \sigma \mu \epsilon \theta a$, but NABD have $\zeta \eta \sigma \quad \mu \mu \nu$. In Rom. vi. 2 the evidence is still stronger; in Gal. ii. 19 Show is undisputed.

The fut. here does not refer to a future life beyond the grave, but to future vigorous action in this life, especially in dealing with the Corinthians. non est vivere, sed valere, vita (Mart. vy. 1xx. 15). In this sense of 'to be vigorous' sîp is sometimes contrasted with $\beta$ loûv with 'the eeclesiastical pomp and splendour which are the ensigns' of ecclesiastical authority, and ought not to be quoted as a warrant for them.

5-9. 'Instead of seeking a proof of the Christ that speaketh in me ( $v .3$ ), it is your own selves that you ought to be testing and proving, to see whether you are in the faith and Christ is in you. I shall be able to stand the test; but I pray that I may not have to prove that Christ is in me to exercise severity.'
 that you must continue to try...your own selves that you must continue to prove (pres. imperat.). The difference between retpafeci and in the sense of 'try' or 'test' (Jn vi. 6; Rev. ii. 2), commonly has a sinister meaning, 'tempt,' with a view to causing failure (Mt. xvi. 1, xix. 3, xxii. 18), especially of the temptations of Satan (Mt. iv. 1, 3; 1 Cor. vii. 5; 1 Thes. iii. 5), who is $\delta$ т $\pi \iota \rho \alpha \xi \omega \nu$ : while $\delta o \kappa \kappa \mu a j \epsilon \epsilon \nu$, though sometimes neutral (Lk. xii. 56, xiv. 19), and never being used in a bud sense, frequently has a good sense, prove with the intention or expectation of approving' (viii. 22; 1 Cor. xi. 28; Rom, ii. 18, xiv. 22; Eph. v. 10; 1 Thes. ii. 4). Hence metpaj $\epsilon \iota$ is rarely used of God's trying men (Heb. xi. 17; Gen. xxii. 1; Exod. xv. 25; Deut. xiii. 3), and סoкcuḑєL is never used of the devil's tempting men. In Ps. xxvi. 2 both verbs are used of God; סonl $\mu a \sigma$ óy $\mu e$, кúpte, кal relpaaby $\mu$ e. On the other hand, retpdjet is often used of man's tempting God (Acts xv. 10; 1 Cor. vii. 9; Exod. xvii. 2, 7; Ps. ev. 14; Ecclus xviii. 23; \&c.). The A.V. translates meєpá§eıv 'prove,'
 'try,' 'examine,' 'discern,' 'like,' ‘approve,' 'allow.' The R.V. reduces this variety, but introduces a new word, 'interpret,' for Lk. xii. 56. See Crem. Lex. s.v. and Trench, Syn. §lxxiv. Here S. Paul pats the gentler word second, to show that he hopes that the result of the testing will be good. Note the emphatic position of Eauroús in both places.

11-14. Concluding Exhortation, Salutation, and Benediction.
Assuming that x.-xiii. 10 is part of a letter written before i.-ix., we may safely regard xiii. 11-14 as the conclusion of this earlier and severe letter, rather than of the later letter, of which $i$ - ix is the main part. (1) кarapri\}єб的, the first exhortation in v. 11, is a strong link of connexion with $\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \dot{\nu} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ кãápтıбı, Perhaps $\pi a \rho \alpha$ $\kappa a \lambda \epsilon \hat{i} \sigma \theta \epsilon$ looks back to the opening words of the severe seotion Aúròs

 (xii. 20). No such links can be found with the concluding portion of i.-ix. (2) It is much more probable that the whole of the last part of the severe letter should have accidentally been combined with the whole of the first part of the letter which followed it, than that a section of the severe letter should have been inserted between the main portion of the subsequent letter and the concluding words of this subsequent letter. The change from a stern to a more affectionate tone is quite natural at the close of the Epistle, and is similar to that at the end of 2 Thessalonians, where contrast the severity of $v v .10-15$ with the gentleness and affection of $v v .16-18$. As Bengel remarks here, Severius scripserat Paulus in tractatione; nunc benignius, re tamen ipsa non dimissa.
11. 人otrov. Finally, 'as to what remains': not 'henceforth, from this time forward,' which would be tov $\lambda$ oıтô (Gal. vi. 17; Eph. vi. 10). As compared with $\tau \delta \lambda_{0<\pi \delta}^{\prime \prime}$ (1 Cor. vii. 29; Phil. iii. 1; 2 Thes. iii. 1), $\lambda_{o u \pi} \delta v$ ( 1 Cor. i. 16, iv. 2; 1 Thes. iv. 1; 2 Tim. iv. 8) is rather less definite, and perhaps more colloquial. See Ellicott on 1 Thes.iv. 1 and 2 Tim . iv. 8.
$d \delta e \lambda \phi o l$. This affectionate address (i. 8, viii. 1), so frequent in 1 Corinthians, occurs here only in x.-xiii.: ajarntol occurs once in each division (vii. 1 ; xii. 19). S. Paul more often says simply à $\delta \epsilon \lambda \phi 0^{\prime}$, S. James (ii. 1, 14, iii. 1, 10, 12, v. 12, 19) more often $\alpha \delta \in \lambda \phi o l$ $\mu o v$.

Xalpeтe. "This word combines a parting benediction with an exhortation to oheerfulness. It is neither 'farewell' alone, nor 'rejoice' alone" (Lightfoot on Phil. iv. 4). Lightfoot compares the dying words of the messenger who brought the news of the victory at Marathon, who expired on the first threshold saying, रalpete kal $\chi^{\text {al }} \rho 0 \mu \epsilon \boldsymbol{y}$ (Plut. Mor. p. 347 c). The present imperative points to a continual and progressive state. The Vulgate has gaudete in all places (Phil. ii. 18, iii. 1; 1 Thes. v. 16). Beza has valete here, elsewhere gaudete; Calvin the same; and here the meaning of 'farewell' seems to prevail. Immediately after such stern words as $\phi_{0} \beta_{\circ} \hat{0} \mu a t$ (xii. 20) and oú фelooual (xiii. 2), he would hardly say 'rejoice': रalpere is not so much a part of the exhortation as a prelude to it. For the isyndeton comp. xi. 13, 20, xii. 10.

катартіรєб $\theta$ є. Be perfected (Lk. vi. 40; 1 Cor. i. 10); this seems to be placed first with special reference to $v .9$. If $\chi$ aipece is the first exhortation meaning 'rejoice,' there is a strange want of connexion between 'rejoice' and 'be perfected.' For кatapetfect, which is often a surgical word, of setting a joint or a bone, see the illustrations in Wetstein on Mt. iv. 21 and in Suidas s.v. Chrysostom paraphrases, estote, corrigite priora vitia, stringite vitae licentiam, resarcite discissam amicitiam, unionem, concordiam.

respecting the daa日apola of many at Corinth (xii. 21), the ajrlu is emphasized. S. Peter (1 Pet. v. 14) says द́v $\phi$. árá $\boldsymbol{\pi} \boldsymbol{\eta} \mathrm{s}$. Justin Martyr (Apol. i. 65) says simply $\phi\left(\lambda \not{ }^{\prime} \mu a \tau \iota\right.$. The $\epsilon \nu$ marks that, in and by which the salutation was expressed. The kiss was as solemn token which is the Christian's ceaseless debt. It was one of the earliest of ritual observances. Tertullian, who calls it osculum pacis, regards it as essential to the perfection of Christian worship. It is signaculum wationis, and quae oratio cum divortio sancti osculi integra? (de Orat. 18). Afterwards he speaks of it simply as pax, and this became a usual name for it in the West, as $\dot{\alpha} \sigma \pi a \sigma \mu b$ s in the East. But in the Church Order known as The Testament of the Lord it is called simply 'the Peace' (i. 23, 30, ii. 4, 9). Originally the kiss in public worship was perhaps general; but certainly later, to avoid abuses, the clergy kissed the bishop, laymen kissed laymen, and women women (Const. Apost. ii. 57, viii. 11; Canons of Laodicea, 19; oomp. Athenagoras Legat. 32; Clem. Alex. Paed. iii. 11, p. 301, ed. Potter). For details see Suicer s.v.; Smith and Cheetham, D. of Chr. Ant. p. 902 ; Scudamore, Notitia Eucharistica, pp. 434-438, 592, 593; Kraus, Real-Enc. der Chr. Alt. p. 543. Conybeare (Expositor, 1894, i. 461) has shown that the 'kiss of peace' may have been a custom in the synagogue: there, of course, men would kiss men and women women. Chrysostom explains the kiss by a custom which is probably of later origin, viz. that of kissing the entrances of churches. "We are the temple of Christ. We kiss the porch and entrance of this temple in kissing one another. See now how many kiss the porch of this temple in which we are met, some stooping down on purpose, others touching it with their hand and applying their hand to their mouth."

Apostle wishes to include all Christendom as sending a greeting to Corinth (Theodoret). It does not follow from this salutation from of äyoo $\pi \dot{\alpha} \nu \tau \epsilon s$ that S . Paul had the Corinthian letter read to the local Christians before sending it to Corinth, but only that the local Church, whether Ephesian or Macedonian, knew that he was writing to Corinth.
14. This is the fullest and most instructive of the benedictions with which S. Panl concludes his Epistles; and for this very reasou it has been adopted from very early times (Const. Apost. viii. 5, 12) as a form of blessing in the services of the Church. It is remarkable that the most complete form of benediction should be found at the close of what, with the possible exception of the Epistle to the Galatians, is the most severe portion of the writings of S. Paul. The only benediction which rivals this one in fulness is the one at the end of Ephesians. The common form, with slight verbal variations, is $\dot{\eta} \chi \alpha \rho \iota s \tau$. кuplov $\dot{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ ' $I \eta \sigma o 0$ X $\rho \iota \sigma \tau o \hat{u} \mu \varepsilon \theta^{\prime} \dot{\nu} \mu \hat{\omega} \bar{p}$. Sometimes $\dot{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$ is omitted (1 Cor. xvi. 23; Phil. iv. 23), sometimes X $\rho$ tarov (1 Cor. xvi. 23 ; (?) Rom. xvi. 20), as by B here. Sometimes $\pi \dot{a} \nu \tau \omega \nu$ (2 Thes. iii. 18), sometimes rô̂ $\pi \boldsymbol{v e v ́ \mu} \mu$ a os (Gal. vi. 18; Phil. iv. 23; Philem. 25) is inserted before $\dot{\psi} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$. And it is this asual type of benediction which accounts for the order of the clauses here. The Apostle began to write the usual form, and then made it more full. Thus 'the Lord Jesus Christ' came to be placed first. The suggestion of Bengel, that 'the grace of the Lord Jesus' is mentioned first, because it is through the grace of Christ that we come to the love of the Father, is not needed. And would it not be equally true to say, that it is through the love of the Father that we have received the grace of Jesus Christ? In the absolute order 'the love of God' stands first (Jn iii. 16); but in our apprehension 'the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ' stands first (Rom. v. 8). We may conjecture that it was the condition of the Corinthian Church which prompted the more complete form of benediction. A Church which had been so full of strife and enmities and factions (xi. 20; 1 Cor. i. 10-17) had a special need of the indmelling of the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit.

It is with this verse, the text of which (with the possible exception of the word $X \rho(\sigma \tau 0 \hat{v})$ is absolutely established, and which forms the solemn ending to one of the Epistles which criticism assigns with unshaken confidence to S. Paul, that the historical treatment of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity begins. These words were written, at the latest, within thirty years of the Ascension, and perhaps within twenty-six yeare of that event; and the writer expects those to whom he writes, who live far away from the earliest centres of Christian teaching, to understand and appreciate this form of benediction. Moreover, whether this benediction belongs to the letter written from Macedonia, or to an intermediate letter written from Ephesus, it was not sent from one of the earliest centres of Christian teaching. The writer was not in an atmosphere in which he might naturally use language that would be scarcely intelligible to imperfectly instructed Ohristians. And the verse is evidently not meant to convey instruction in doctrine: it assumes that the doctrine which it implies has already found a home in the hearts of those to whom the benediction is sent. From these facts it seems to be a legitimate inference, "that S. Paul and the Church of his day thought of the Supreme Source of spiritual blessing as not single but threefold-threefold in essence, and not merely in a manner of speech '" (Sanday in Hastings' DB. ii. p. 213). The facts show that even a very young Church is assumed to be familiar with this mode of thought; and they ought to caution us against a hasty assumption that the baptismal formula attributed to Christ in Mt. Exviii. 19 cannot really have been spoken by Him. Certainly S. Paul's language here becomes more intelligible if it was known that Christ Himself had uttered such a charge. It should be added that in 1 Cor. xii. 4-6 we have similar phenomena; 'the same Spirit...the same Lord...the same God.' (See Goudge, 1 Corinthians, pp. xxix. ff.) Comp. Eph. iv. 4-6; 'one Spitit...one Lord...one God and Father of all': also Clem. Rom. Cor. xlvi. 3; 'one God and one Christ and one Spirit of grace'; and lviii. 2; 'as God liveth, and the Lord Jesus Christ liveth, and the Holy Spirit.'
'H Xúpıs tov̂ кuplov. The genitive in all three cases is probably subjective; the grace which is of the Lord, which comes from Him; the love which is of God; the fellowship which is of the Spirit.  is prompted by the preceding severity of tone respecting those who have given offence. "The benediction is invoked upon all, the slanderers and gainsayers, the seekers after worldly wisdom, the hearkeners to false doctrine, as well as the faithful and obedient disciples" (Lias).

APPENDIX A.

The Personal Appearance of S. Padl.

2 Cor. x. 1, 10.
Lanciani, in his New Tales of Old Rome (Murray, 1901, pp. 153 ff.), makes the following remarks on portraits of S. Paul:
"Let us now turn our attention to the discoveries made quite lately in connection with the basilica and grave of Paul the Apostle, whose figure appeals to us more forcibly than any other in the history of the propagation of the gospel in Rome. I do not speak so much of reverence and admiration for his work, as of the sympathy and charm inspired by his personal appearance. In all the portraits which have come down to us by the score, painted on the walls of underground cemeteries, engraved in gold leaf on the love-caps, cast in bronze, worked in repoussé on silver or copper medallions, or outlined in mosaic, the features of Paul never vary. He appears as a thin, wiry man, slightily bald, with a long, pointed beard. The expression of the face is calm and benevolent, with a gentle touch of sadness. The profile is unmistakably Jewish." It may be added that S. Paul is almost always represented in company with S. Peter, who is tall and upright, with short hair and beard, and with a long flat nose. Very often our Lord, or a monogram which represents him, is placed between the two Apostles.

Descriptions of the Apostle exhibit a similar type. The apocryphal Acta Pauli et Theklae have come down to us in Latin, Greek, Armenian, and Syriac. Of these the Syriao seems to represent the oldest form of the story, which (Professor Ramsay believes) "goes back altimately to a document of the first century" (The Church ins the Roman Empire, p. 381). The description of S. Paul comes near the beginning of the story (§ 3). It runs thus in the Syriac; "A man of middling size, and his hair was scanty, and his legs were a little crooked, and his knees were projecting (or far apart); and he had large eyes, and his eyebrows met, and his nose was somewhat long; and he was full of grace and mercy; at one time he seemed like a man, and at another he seemed like an angel." The Armenian Version gives him crisp or curly hair and blue eyes, traits which are found in no other account. Malelas or Malala, otherwise called John of Antioch, a Byzantine historian of uncertain date (? A. D. 580),

 p. 257 ed. Bonn). The worthless Dialogue Philopatris, wrongly ascribed to Lucian, but of a much later date, gives $S$. Paul an aquiline nose, as also does Nicephorus. But the description in the Acts of Paul and Thekla is the only one which is likely to be based upon early tradition. See F. O. Conybeare, Monuments of Early Christianity, p. 62; Kraus, Real.Encycl. d. Christ. Alter. II. pp. 608, 613; Smith and Cheetham, Dict. of Chr. Ant. II. p. 1622.

APPENDIX B.

The Apocalypse, or Revelation, or Vision, of Paul.
Comp. 2 Cor. xii. 1-4.
This apooryphal book exists in several recensions, Greek, Syriac, and Latin, from the last of which a German version of considerable antiquity, and also French, English, and Danish versions have sprang. There exists also a Slavonic form of the legend, which seems to be independent of the Latin. The fact of translation into ao many languages shows that this apocryphal narrative has been very popular. Just as people were fond of speculating as to what it was that Jesus wrote on the ground, and what the experiences of Lazarus had been in the other world, and those of Enooh and Elijah in heaven, so they were fond of imagining what $\mathbb{S}$. Paul had seen and heard in the third heaven and in Paradise.

Tischendorf published a Greek text in his colleotion of Apocalypses Apocryphae in 1866. This text was based upon two mss.; one at Munich of the thirteenth century, and one at Milan, which is either derived from the former, or is a less faithful recension of the arehetype from which both are derived.

The Syriac version, translated by the Rev. Justin Perkins, D.D., from a ms, of unknown date, was published in vol. viii. of the Journal of the American Oriental Society in 1864, and in the Journal of Sacred Literature in 1865; and most of this translation from the Syriac version is printed by Tischendorf underneath his edition of the Greek text.
Short forms of the Latin version, Visio S. Pauli, of which there are many mss., were published by Hermann Brandes in 1885, together with an old German version. But the most complete form of the Latin version was edited by Dr M. R. James in Texts and Studies, ii. 3, in 1893, from a ms. in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris. The first part of this ms. is of the eighth century, the greater part of it of the tenth. It was stolen by Libri from the Orleans Library, sold to Lord Ashburnham, and by him sold to the Paris Library.

A translation of Tischendorf's Greek text will be found in vol. xvi. of the Ante-Nicene Library; T. and T. Clark, 1870. A translation by A. Rutherfurd of James' complete Latin text is included in the large additional volume of the same series; T. and T. Clark, 1897.
S. Augustine knew this apocryphal book, and he condemns it severely (Tractates on S. John, xcviii. 8) ; "Even among the spiritual themselves there are some, no doubt, who are of greater capacity and in a better condition than others; so that one of them attained even to things of which it is not lawful for a man to speak. Taking advantage of which there have been some vain individuals, who, with a presumption that betrays the grossest folly, have forged a Revelation of Paul, crammed with all manner of fables, which has been rejected by the orthodox Church; affirming it to be that whereof he had said that he was caught up into the third heaven, and there heard unspeakable words 'which it is not lawful for a man to utter.' Nevertheless, the audacity of such might be tolerable, had he said that he heard words which it is not as yet lawful for a man to utter; but when he said, 'which it is not lawfal for a man to utter,' who are they that dare to utter them with such impudence and non-success? But with these words I shall now bring this discourse to a close; whereby I would have you to be wise indeed in that which is good, but untainted by that which is evil."

But its rejection as apocryphal did not prevent it from becoming popular as 'Sunday reading.' Sozomen in his chapter on the different customs of different Churches (H.E. vii. 19) says; "The same prayers and psalms are not recited, nor the same lections read, on the same occasions in all Charches. Thus the book entitled The Apocalypse of Peter, which was considered altogether spurious by the ancients, is still read in some of the Churches of Palestine on the day of the Preparation, when the people observe a fast in memory of the Passion of the Saviour. So the work entitled The Apocalypse of the Apostle Paul, though unrecognized by the ancients, is still esteemed by most of the monkg. Some persons affirm that the book was found during this reign [Theodosius] by divine revelation in a marble box, buried beneath the soil in the house of Paul at Tarsus in Cilioia. I have been informed that this report is false by Cilix, a presbyter of the Church in Tarsus, a man of very advanced age, who says that no such occurrence is known among them, and wonders if the heretics did not invent the story."

Both the Greek and the Latin recensions have a preface in which the discovery of the document in the house at Tarsus is narrated. The Latin says that this took place in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus the Younger and Cynegius (A.d. 388); and this may be assumed as about the date of the composition, or compilation, of the Visio. For Cynegius the Greek text has Gratianus. In the Latin it is definitely stated that the Apostle was in the body (dum in corpore essem) when he was caught up to the third heaven; and the Paradise to which he is afterwards taken is the Garden of Eden, "in which Adam and his wife erred" (45). What he saw and heard in both is elaborately described. But there are details in both the Latin and the Syriac which are not found in the Greek, and there are some in the Latin which are in neither the Greek nor the Syrias. It used to be thought that the Syriac had been interpolated; but Dr James thinks that more probably the Greek text discovered and published by Tischendorf is abbreviated.

It can be demonstrated that the Apocalypse of Paul is a compilation, especially in the earlier portion ( $$ 11-18$ ). "A comparison of the book with the extant fragments of the Apocalypse of Peter, with the Ascension of Isaiah, with the Sibylline Oracles, Bk. MI., and with the recently discovered Sahidic Apocalypse of Zephaniah, will satisfy themost exacting critic that the Pseudo-Paul, in the earlier parts of his work more especially, is a plain plagiarist" (James, Test. of Abraham, p. 21). And there are reasons for believing that the Infernos in the Apocalypse of Paul and in the Testament of Abraham, as well as the Infernos in other Apocalypses, have elements which all come from a common source; and that this source is the Apocalypse of Peter, the book mentioned by Sozomen in connexion with the Apocalypse of Paul (ibid. p. 25).

The opening of the Vision (83-6) is one of the most impressive parts. The word of the Lord comes to Paul saying, "Say to this people...Know, sons of men, that all creation is subject to God; but the human race alone provokes God to wrath by sinning." Then the sun, and the moon with the stars, and the sea, [and the rivers, and the earth,] are represented as in turn frequently telling God of the iniquities which they witness, and asking whether they shall not execute His vengeance on mankind for these things. To each of them, with slight variations of wording, God replies; "[I know all these things. Mine eye seeth, and Mine ear heareth. Bat] My patience bears with them until they shall be converted and repent. But if they do not return to Me , I will judge them." The parts in square brackets are not in the Greek; and it words the threat thus; 'But if not, they shall come to Me and I will judge them.'

The whole is worth reading, not as throwing any light upon the teaching of S. Paul, but as evidence of the ideas which prevailed in the third and fourth centuries respecting the unseen world.

It is worth noting that Dante supposes that S. Paul was allowed to reveal what he had seen in heaven to Dionysius the Areopagite, the reputed author of the De Coelesti Hierarchiâ, which has proved one of the most influential of pseudepigraphical works, as the writings of John of Damascus, Thomas Aquinas, Dante, and Milton prove. Dante explains the wonderful knowledge possessed by Dionysius respecting the celestial hierarchy by supposing that these mysteries were revealed to the Areopagite by the Apostle who even during his life on earth had seen it all.
"And if so much of secret truth a mortal Proffered on earth, I would not have thee marvel, For he who saw it here revealed it to him."

APPENDIX $\mathbf{C}$.

S. Paul's Thorn for the Flesi.

In the notes on xii. 7 it is pointed out that the oldest tradition and modern criticism are so far in agreement, that both explain the $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda o \psi \tau \hat{\eta} \sigma a \rho \kappa l$ as physical suffering of some kind; and we are quite safe in holding fast to this view. Uncertainty begins when we try to decide what kind of bodily disease afflicted the Apostle; but we may conjecture that, as in the case of the $\pi \rho \hat{a} \gamma \mu a$ of $\dot{o} \dot{d} \delta \kappa \kappa \gamma \sigma a s$ and $\delta$ d $\delta u \kappa \eta \theta \in!$, the Corinthians would know exactly to what the Apostle alluded, although we do not.

Tertullian is the earliest witness to tradition; quae in apostolo colaphis, si jorte, cohibebatur per dolorem, ut aiunt, auriculae vel capitis (de Pudic. 13; comp. de Fuga in Pers. 2; adv. Marc. $\mathrm{\nabla}$. 12). Jerome (on Gal.iv. 13) repeats this; Tradunt eum gravissimum capitis dolorem saepe perpessum. He gives other possible explanations; the Apostle's mean appearance, or the perseoutions which he underwent. But from the letter to Eustochium ( $E p$. xxii. 31) it is clear that Jerome himself believed the 'thorn' to have been physical pain; si quis te aftixerit dolor. Primasius (on 2 Cor. xii. 7) continues the tradition of headache. Gregory Nazianzen is on the same side. In his Last Farewell (26) he speaks of the bad health which had often kept him from church as " the Satan, which I, like S. Paul, carry about in my body for my own profit." Ephrem Syrus (on Gal. iv. 18), like Jerome, gives the alternative of bodily disease or persecutions, but without deciding for the former.

From the fourth centary onwards the tradition of pains in the head or any kind of bodily suffering is rejected or lost sight of by most writers, especially among the Greeks; and, as has been pointed out already, the headache or earache tradition will fit 2 Cor. xii. 7 , but not Gal. iv. 13, 14. If the same aflliction is meant in both passages, we must find some other malady. But Chrysostom rejects
 He thinks it incredible that the body of the Apostle should have been handed over to the devil, who had himself been compelled to obey the Apostle's commands. He holds that the $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda \boldsymbol{\alpha} \psi$ refers to the persecutions of his opponents, some of whom he himself calls סuároyoc of Satan (xi. 15). Nevertheless, when he expands this view in his first letter to Olympias (3), Chrysostom is led on to admit bodily pain; "He says, a thorn for the flesh, an angel of Satan to buffet me, meaning by this the blows, the bonds, the chains, the imprisonments, the being dragged about, and maltreated, and tortured by the scourges of public executioners. Wherefore also being unable to bear the pain occasioned to the body by these things, for this I besought the Lord thrice (thrice here meaning many times) that I might be delivered from this thorn." This explanation, that the 'thorn' means sufferings caused by persecution, is found also in Eusebius of Emesa, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, and Theophylact, in their comments on 2 Cor. or Gal. or both. But it is not exclusively a Greek view. Augustine has it once; also Ambrosiaster.

But it fails to fulfil the conditions. The $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda 0 \psi$ was something intensely personal; not fightings outside the Apostle, but a haunting horror within him. Moreover, S. Panl would not have prayed to be exempt from persecution: it would have been too much like praying to be freed from work for Christ. Chrysostom's argument against bodily suffering is worthless; it proves too much. It would prove that the Apostle is a liar, when he says that Satan's angel was allowed to buffet him. Tertullian sees the contrast which Chrysostom misuses, but is content to state it and leave it; illos traditos ab apostolo legimus satanae, apostolo vero angelum datum satanae (de Pudic. 13).

When the original Greek ceased to be familiar in the West, S. Paul's words were known chiefly or entirely through the Latin. The ambiguous rendering in the Latin version of Irenaeus and in Cyprian, stimulus carnis, was diffused through the influence of the Vulgate; and it produced an interpretation which in time prevailed over all others, and which for centuries held the field. It was maintained that the Apostle's great trouble was frequent temptation to sins of the flesh. Just as the interpretation about persecutions seems to have arisen in the age which had felt the last violence of the Diocletian persecution, so this interpretation about carnal thoughts flourished in the age in which the spirit of monasticism and asceticism gave morbid prominence to the subject of sexual desire. Men imagined S. Paul's great trouble to have been that which was a great trouble to themselves. This interpretation is sometimes attributed to Jerome, to Augustine, to Salvian, and to Theophylact. Jerome, as we have seen, takes physical pain to be the meaning of the 'thorn.' Augustine on Galatians takes the persecution view. Elsewhere he frequently quotes 2 Cor. xii. 7, eapecially in his Anti-Pelagian treatises, but he does not explain the words. He calls the thorn 'mysterious'; and he treats it as an antidote to temptation rather than as being itself a temptation. Salvian neither quotes nor alludes to the words. Theophylact on the whole adopts the persecution theory. Primasius, who preserves the tradition of pains in the head, gives as a secondary interpretation, alii dicunt titillatione carnis stimulatum. Gregory the Great (Mor. viir. 29) says that Paul, after being caught up to paradise, contra carnis bellum laborat, which perhaps implies this interpretation. Thomas Aquinas says of the stimulus ; quia ad literant dicitur, quod fuit vehementer affictus dolore iliaco. But afterwards he quotes the opinion, quod inerant ei motus concupiscentiae, quos tamen divina gratia refrenabat. Hugo of St Cher suggests that Thekla was a source of danger to the Apostle. But it is worth noting that in the Acts of Paul and Thekla, which are very early, there is no trace of such an interpretation of the 'thorn.' Lyra, Bellarmine, and Estius all take this view of it; and Cornelins a Lapide says that it is communis fidelium sensus. Among moderns, Plumptre is inclined to think that it is almost as likely to be true as the theory of physical pain. The Abbe Fouard (S. Paul and his Missions; p. 307) says, the 'angel of Satan means both evil concupiscence and bodily sufferings.'

But this theory may safely be rejected. Nowhere in literature is $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda o \psi$ used of the prickings of lust. Such a trouble, if he had had it, would have been secret, and would not have been proclaimed by the Apostle urbi et orbi; still less have been treated as a ' weakness' of which he could glory. And he did not have it. He says that it is better to marry than to burn; yet he did not marry, and wished that all could be even as he himself (1 Oor. vii. 7, 9). Ridiculi sunt qui Paulum existimant sollicitatum fuisse ad libidinem (Calvin). In spite of its being approved by Aquinas, J. Rickaby, S.J. (Notes on St Paul, p. 212) says "Suoh certainly was not the meaning of St Paul. The Greek Fathers wholly ignore this explanation. No Latin Father of the first six centuries gives it any clear support."

But Calvin's own interpretation, omne genus tentationis, quo Paulus exercebatur, is not satisfactory. Nor is the more definite hypothesis, that the 'thorn' means spiritual trials, temptations to unbelief, or remorse respecting his past life, tenable. On the whole, this is the view of the Reformers, but it does not fit the language used here and in Gal. iv. 13, 14 much better than the concupisaence theory. Would the Apostle have gloried in weakness of this kind? Would it have exposed him to contempt and loathing, if people had known that he had such thoughts? And how were they to know? Once more, men assumed for the Apostle the troubles which vexed themselves.

Modern commentators have for the most part returned to the earliest tradition, that the thorn was some kind of bodily suffering, some painful malady. The text of both passages, especially $\epsilon \nu \tau \hat{\eta}$ $\sigma \alpha \rho \kappa i \mu^{\prime} \nu($ Gal. iv. 14), is decisive for this. It was acute, recurrent, disabling, and humiliating. It was apparent to bystanders, and likely to excite disgust. All this agrees very well with the theory of epilepsy, which seems to satisfy the conditions better than any other hypothesis. Only those who have seen a person (and especially a teacher, or a minister conducting public worship) suddenly stopped in his work by an epileptic fit, can judge how good this hypothesis is. S. Paul was eertainly very sensitive; some think that he was hysterical. The shock which he received on his way to Damascus may have permanently affected his constitution; and it is not unreasonable to conjecture that the 'weakness of his bodily presence' (x. 10) was connected with this shock, or with the 'thorn,' or with both. Indeed the 'thorn' itself may have been in some measure the outcome of what he experienced during the crisis of his conversion. A man of so finely strung a nature, whose body and mind had been subjected to such a convalsion as that which accompanied his conversion, might easily be predisposed to epilepsy.

Other interesting points are urged in favour of this hypothesis. Both Jews and Gentiles regarded epilepsy as partaking of the supernatural; it was ispà $\nu \delta \sigma o s$, morbus sacer, either divine or demoniacal. It would be natural to regard it as at once a sharp trial 'given' by God and 'buffets' from an 'angel of Satan.' Epilepsy was also called morbus comitialis, because the comitia were prorogued when a oase occurred in or near the assembly, the seizure being regarded as a divine intimation that the business was forbidden. Quite independently of its crippling effects upon the sufferer, such a malady might be looked upon as a message from the unseen, that the work in hand must stop.

There is yet another interesting point. When a person was seized with epilepsy, the bystanders spat, to avert the bad omen, or (as the less superstitious said) to avoid infection. Spitting, to avert bad luok or divine vengeance, was practised on some other occasions. Pliny the Elder (Nat. Hist. xxviII. iv. 7) says; Despuimus comitiales morbos, hoc est contagia regerimus; simili modo ct fascinationes repercutimus dextraeque clauditatis occursum. Veniam quoque a deis spei alicujus audacioris petimus in sinum spuendo. In another place ( x . xxiii. 33) he speaks of comitialem morbum despui suetum. A passage in Plautus (Capt. III. iv. 18), illic isti qui sputatur morbus interdum venit, is probably to be explained by interpreting morbus qui sputatur as meaning epilepsy. It is possibly a mere coincidence (but, if so, it is a very remarkable coincidence) that $S$. Paul, in speaking of the Galatians' generous treatment of his malady, says oú $\delta \dot{\epsilon}$ $\epsilon \xi \xi \in \tau \tau \dot{\sigma} \alpha \pi \epsilon$.

But, when all has been said in its favour, the theory of epilepsy remains nothing more than a very good hypothesis.

The chief objection that has been urged against this hypothesis is, that epilepsy commonly has a paralysing effect upon those who suffer from it, and is inconsistent with the extraordinary ability, energy, and influence exhibited, from his conversion to his death, by S. Paul.

The objection is a real one, but it is by no means fatal. Julius Caesar certainly suffered from epilepsy. Plutarch (Caes. 17, 53, 60) says that he had an attack at the battle of Thapsus and he calls it his old malady, and states that on one occasion, seeing that he had made a false step in the Senate, he thought of making his malady his excuse, as if he had acted without being conscious. Suetonius (Caes. 45) says of him, comitiali quoque morbo bis inter res agendas correptus est. Napoleon is another instance. Two attacks with exact dates are recorded; 22 May, 1809, after the battle near Apern, and 28 August, 1813, during the campaign in Saxony. Pope Pins IX. also was epileptic; and there are other instances.

Among these, Alfred the Great ought not to be quoted. Ever since Jowett, in his commentary on Galatians (i. p. 368), gave the famous extract from Pauli's Life of Alfred, which was made still more famous by Lightfoot's adoption of it, the parallel between Alfred and S. Paul has been drawn again and again. Lightfoot put a word of csution in a footnote; but it has been either not seen, or not heeded. And it is worth while pointing out that Pauli himself (König Aelfred, p. 93) has severely criticized the passage in Asser which describes the mysterious illness which is said to have seized Alfred during his marriage festivities, and to have "lasted from his 20th to his 45 th year without intermission." In the Ford Lectures for 1901, C. Plummer has shown that the statements about Alfred's malady teem with inconsistencies, and that it is difficult to know what truth, if any, can be extracted from them. He is inclined to condemn all three passages, in which Alfred's malady is spoken of, as interpolations and untrustworthy (The Life and Times of Alfred, pp. 25-29, 215). The longest passage in Asser on the subject of Alfred's malady may be safely regarded as an interpolation, and is perhaps a conflation of two inconsistent traditions; and all of them are tainted with suspicion of complicity with the S. Neot myth.

A fairly strong oase may also be made out for acute ophthalmia. (1) S. Paul was blinded at his conversion, and this may have left his eyes permanently weak. The word ${ }^{\text {d } \tau \epsilon \nu i \xi \omega \text { (Acts xiii. 9, xiv. 9, }}$ xxiii. 1) may mean that he had to strain his eyes in order to see. (2) People who suffer from ophthalmia in the East are sometimes distressing objects. The malady may be almost as disfiguring as leprosy. (3) The Galatians, conquering their disgust, would have dug out their eyes and given them to S. Paul, (4) The $\sigma \kappa 6 \lambda<\psi \tau \hat{\eta}$ aapkl may be suggested by the pain of a splinter in the eye. Comp.
 recognizing the high-priest (Acts xxiii. 3-5) points to his eyesight being defective. (6) The 'large letters' with which he concludes the Epistle to the Galatians (vi. 11) may have been necessary, if he was almost blind. His practice of dietating his letters points in the same direction. (7) The permanent disfigurement caused by ophthalmia might easily be compared to the marks branded on a alave (Gal. vi. 17).

But almost all of these arguments disappear upon examination. (1) His blindness was completely cured by Ananias: and it is a fixed, piercing gaze that is implied by drevij $\omega$ (see Ramsay, St Paul the Traveller, pp. 38 ff .). The verb is used of the congregation riveting their eyes on Christ, of the maid closely observing Peter (Lk. iv. 20, xxii. 56), of the disciples gazing after the ascended Lord (Acts i. 10), of Peter fastening his eyes on the cripple (Acts iii. 4), and of many others (Acts iii. 12, vi. 15, vii. 55, x. 4, \&c.). The Syriac Version of the Acts of Paul and Thekla says that the Apostle had large eyes, which the Armenian says were blue. (2) Chronic ophthalmia is disfiguring; but S. Paul's malady was intermittent. (3) Gal. iv. 15 simply means that the Galatians would have made the greatest sacrifice to serve the Apostle. (4) 'A thorn (or stake) for the flesh' is not a natural way of alluding to pain for the eyes. Num. xaxiii. 55 is $\Omega$ metaphor for grievous vexation; 'splinters in your eyes, and spikes in your sides.' (5) In an assembly of seventy S. Paul might easily have not known who it was who said, 'Smite him on the mouth.' (6) The 'large letters' indicated that the writer was very much in earnest (see Ramsay, Hist. Comm. on Galatians, p. 466). (7) The stigmata probably refer to the scars of wounds made by beatings and chains (Ibid. p. 472). These were permanent; but it was only occasionally that he was disfigured by the attacks of the ${ }^{6} \gamma \gamma \operatorname{lod}$ os Earaya. It is possible that (5) and (6) point to S. Paul's being short-sighted; but that is very different from ophthalmia.

Ramsay argues ably for malarial fever (Galatians, pp. 422-426;

St Paul, p. 97), and much less ably against epilepsy (Galatians, p. 427). It is strange logic to say that, if we take epilepsy as S. Paul's trial, "it follows inexorably that his visions were epileptic symptoms, no more real than the dreams of epileptic insanity." It would be quite as reasonable to say that, if we take malarial fever as his trial, it follows that his visions were febrile symptoms, no more real than the delusions of fever-produced delirium. No doabt some epileptics and some lunatics have visions; but that does not prove that all who have visions are epileptic lunatics. In S. Paul's case the visions and revelations came first; the humiliating malady followed. The visions may have predisposed him for the malady; but the malady was not the cause of the visions which preceded it. There is nothing to show that an epileptic person cannot receive a divine revelation; and to adopt the hypothesis that $S$. Paul was liable to epileptic seizures in no way affects the reality of the revelations made to him. The possibility that God sent the visions, and then sent this malady to keep him from spiritual pride, remains as open as before.

Conybeare and Howson (土. ch. viii. p. 294 ed. 1860), although they confess that "we cannot say what this sickness (which detained the Apostle in Galatia) was, nor even confidently identify it with that 'thorn in the flesh' to which he feelingly alludes in his Epistles," seem to incline to fever of some kind; and they point to Chrysostom and Henry Martyn as suffering in a similar way in the same region. But the oriticisms of Findlay (Hastings' DB. iii. p. 701) seem to be just. Fever satisfies some, but not all the conditions. The prostration which follows on fever would make the long and perilous journey from Perga to Pisidian Antioch almost impossible. Fever would hardly excite the disgust indicated in Gal. iv. 14. And Mark's desertion, in such circumstances, would become "incredibly base."

It seems best, therefore, either to adopt epilepsy as a very good hypothesis, or else to admit that the evidence is not sufficient to allow us to identify the malady or maladies.

APPENDIX D.

The Rhetoric of S. Padl.

There is an essay on this subject in the Expositor (1879, pp. 1 ff.) by F. W. Farrar, who has expanded his remarks there into one or two dissertations in the Appendix to his St Paul. In one of these he gives a large number of quotations from ancient and modern writers upon the style of S. Paul, which are valuable, not only as throwing much light upon an important subject, but also as showing that there has been, and perhaps is, a good deal of difference of opinion as to the merits of S . Paul as a writer of Greek. On the whole, the estimates formed of his power of expressing himself in that language are high; but there are some dissentients-notably Renan and Jowett.

Much more recently J. Weiss, in a collection of essays to do honour to his father, B. Weiss, on his 70th birthday (Theologische Studien, Gottingen 1897, pp. 165 fi.), has contributed a valuable discussion on Paulinische Rhetorik. In this he does not content himself with general impressions, but analyses a large number of passages, some from 2 Corinthians, but most from Romans and 1 Corinthians, in order to show what features do prevail in the Apostle's writings, and to see what evidence there is that he was acquainted with, and at times consciously or unconsciously followed, certain principles of rhetoric. That he is capable at times of rising to the very highest kind of eloquence, as, for instance, in the hymn in praise of God's love to man (Rom. viii. 31-39) and the hymn in praise of man's love to God and man (1 Cor. xiii.), few would care to deny. And in this very emotional letter, or parts of two letters, to the Corinthians we can find passages of great rhetorical beauty, which seem to show traces of conscious arrangement.

The question readily presents itself, whether analysis of this kind is not altogether a mistake. It may be said that to take the burning language of the Apostle, as it comes forth in impulsive energy from the depth of an affectionate and sensitive nature, and subject it to a cold-blooded dissection with reference to technical rules and standard , is in itself revolting, and is likely in its results to be misleading. It robs what is natural and spontaneous of its intrinsic poetry and beauty; and it exhibits it in an artificial form, which may be entirely alien from it. By suoh a process the original grace is stripped off; and a living whole is reduced to a skeleton, which after all may represent nothing that was in the Apostle's mind. The printer's headlines in the report of a speech may quite misrepresent the speaker's own plan of what he had to say.
One can sympathize with the objection; but it is untenable. Does it in any way diminish the beauty of Michelangelo's work, or in any degree interfere with our appreciation of it, to consider how he must have studied anatomy in order to execute such work? In a similar way the examination of S. Paul's writings, to see whether he had studied rhetoric, need not take away anything, either from the intrinsic excellence of the eloquence, or from our admiration of it. A result may be artistic, i.e. produced in accordance with definite principles, without being artificial. And a work may be the result of a study of technical principles, although at the moment of production the producer was not consciously following anything but his emotions and creative impulses. There are passages in S. Paul's writings which favour the view that at times he consciously studied the rhetorical form of his utterances. And there are many more which lead us to suppose that his spontaneity would have taken a less finished shape, if he had not received some kind of training in rhetorical expression. But it would be rash as yet to say that the case has been proved. Much of what he has given us is so rugged and broken as to encourage the view that, so far from having technical skill in the employment of Greek, he was not always able to express his thoughts with ease or clearness; and that occasional instances of genuine eloquence must be regarded as the exceptional outbursts of one, who might have become an orator, if he had been properly trained. The question, however, cannot be decided in any other way than by a careful examination of the writings of $S$. Paul which have come down to us. And it is obvious that such an examination may have some bearing upon questions of genvineness. If the same rhetorical features are found in letters whose authenticity is disputed as are frequent in those which are unquestionably Pauline, this is in itself a confirmation of the genuineness of the disputed letters. Here, however, it is not proposed to carry investigation beyond the limits of 2 Corinthians, in which there are more examples than those which are pointed out by J. Weiss.

It is a commonplace of New Testament criticism that one distinctive mark of the Pauline Epistles is that, as a rule, they were dictated. Here and there the Apostle wrote a few words; and probably the whole of the short letter to Philemon was written with his own hand (see on X. 1). But almost always he does not write, but talks. He has before his mind, not the amanuensis who takes down his words, but those whom he is addressing ; and he converses with them, or argues with them, or makes them a speech, according to the subject in hand, or the state of his own feelings at the moment. This fact must never be left out of sight in interpreting $S$. Paul's language: we have constantly to be reminding ourselves that we are dealing, not so much with what was written, whether as letter, or essay, or sermon, as with what was said.

In speaking, far more than in writing, the language that one uses is determined by sound; and this fact is likely to be apparent in the dictated letters of S. Paul. It is probable that in some cases a particular word was chosen, less because of its particular shade of meaning, than because of the effect that it produced upon the ear, either in harmony with, or in contrast to, words that had just passed the Apostle's lips. And it is possible that here and there a clause has been added, not because it was really needed in order to complete the meaning, but because the ear craved something more, either for balance or for sound. As is likely to be the case in a style which is to a large extent conversational, S. Paul deals largely in short sentences, which are connected with one another by community of thought rather than by grammatical particles. It is convenient to break up his letters into paragraphs, guiding ourselves by the changes in the subject matter. But it is comparatively seldom that we can feel certain that he has consciously rounded off one paragraph and started another, as one who was writing an essay or a homily with his own hand would be likely to do. Hence evidences of a feeling after rhetorical effect, or what is pleasing in sound, are much more often found in the balance between single words or single clauses, than in the arrangement of a paragraph.

As we might expect from one who was so well versed in Hebrew literature, and who, whatever his knowledge of Greek literature, must often have listened to Greek speeches and conversation, S. Paul deals very largely in paralletism and antithesis. The LXX., especially in the poetical and sapiential books, would make him familiar with both these methods of producing effect : and there is strong evidence, which ought no longer to be treated as inconclusive, that he was well acquainted with the Book of Wisdom (see on ii. 6, v. 1, 9, vi. 6, x. 5), which is full of suoh things.

Examples of simple parallels are common enough : e.g.
$\delta \pi a \tau \grave{\eta} \rho \tau \hat{\nu} \nu$ оlктьр $\mu \omega \hat{\nu}$
$\kappa a l \theta \epsilon \delta s \pi \alpha \dot{\sigma} \eta s \pi a \rho a \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma \epsilon \omega s$. i. 3.

$\pi \rho \lambda \lambda \lambda \mu \sigma \kappa \kappa a \dot{\chi} \chi \eta \sigma \iota s \dot{s} \pi \notin \rho \dot{\nu} \mu \hat{\nu} \nu^{-}$
$\pi \epsilon \pi \lambda \eta \rho \omega \mu \alpha \iota \tau \hat{\eta} \pi \alpha \rho \alpha \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma \epsilon \varepsilon$,

Examples of antithesis are still more abundant: e.g.

$\dot{d} \lambda \lambda d$ बvvepyol $\dot{\epsilon} \sigma \mu \epsilon \nu \tau \hat{\eta} s \chi^{a \rho a ̂ s ~ \dot{\mu} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu .}$ i. 24.

And the parallel or antithesis is sometimes augmented by chiasmus: e.g.

$\delta i a ̀ ~ \delta v a \phi \eta \mu l a s ~ k a l ~ e v ̉ \eta \eta \mu l a s . \quad$ vi. 8.

є̀v éavtô̂s éautoùs $\mu \epsilon \tau \rho 0 \hat{u} u t \in s$ кai $\sigma \nu \nu \kappa p l \nu o \nu \tau \epsilon s$ éautoùs éautoîs. x. 12.

Other instances, with and without chiasmus, can easily be found: see especially iv. 7-11, 16-18, т. 6-9, x. 11.

Cases in which the antithesis is introduced with clice...elte...are noteworthy, all the more so, because this form of expression is, in the N.T., almost confined to S. Paul, who has it in all four groups of his Epistles: e.g.

The passage from which the last example is taken deserves to be considered as a whole. It has two parts, which balance one another like the parts of a Greek chorus. Each of the parts has three members which correspond, but are not of the same length in each case. The first two members of the second part are shorter, the last member of the second part is much longer, than the corresponding members in the first part. And this variation in the length, being itself not uniform, heightens the effect.

 j $\theta \epsilon \delta \mathrm{d}$ ot $\delta \varepsilon \nu$, 一

$\epsilon \ddot{\tau \epsilon} \chi \omega \rho$ is $\tau 0 \hat{v} \sigma \dot{\omega} \mu a \tau o s$, $\dot{\delta} \theta \in \partial s$ oi $\delta \mathrm{er},-$

The rhetorical effect of a series of parallel questions is often very telling: e.g.

Here, side by side with the manifest parallelism, we have an amount of variation in terminology, in grammatioal construction, and in general structure, which is evidently studied. We have five different words to express the idea of communion or relationship, and five pairs of words to express the contrast between good and bad. The pairs are coupled first by $\kappa \alpha l$, then twice by $\pi \rho \delta s^{\text {, then }}$ twice by $\mu e \tau \alpha$. The questions are joined together alternately by $\tilde{\eta}^{\circ}$ and $\delta \varepsilon$. All this cannot be fortuitous or unconscious arrangement. But that fact of course does not prove that it is the result of definite training in oratory. Somewhat similar, but not so prolonged or so variegated, are the argumentative questions in xii. 17, 18.

The number of instances of alliteration is further evidence that sound had something to do with $\mathbf{S}$. Paul's choice of language. The letter which he seems to be fondest of repeating is $\pi$.
$\kappa a \theta \dot{\omega} s \pi \epsilon \rho \iota \sigma \sigma \epsilon \dot{\epsilon} \epsilon \iota \tau \dot{\alpha} \pi \alpha \theta \theta \eta \mu a \tau a$,

Comp. viii. 22, ix. 5, x. 6, xiii. 2.
Similarity of sound has also a great deal to do with the numerous instances of a play upon words in which the Apostle so frequently indulges. To us some examples of this kind of art may seem undignified; but they were approved by the taste of that day, and continued to be frequent, both in Greek and in Latin, for some centuries. Angustine rather tries the patience of a modern reader by his fondness for such things. In this letter there are a number of them: e.g.
 $\gamma^{\nu \nu} \omega \sigma \kappa о \mu \epsilon \nu \eta \kappa \alpha l$ d $\nu a \gamma \iota \nu \omega \sigma \kappa \alpha \mu \epsilon \nu \eta$. iii. 2.

Comp. vii. 10, x. 5, 6, 12.
The repetition of conjunctions (vii. 11), and of prepositions (vi. 4-8, xi. 28,27 , xii. 10 ), would perhaps have been less frequent and less prolonged, if S. Paul had written, instead of dictating, his letters. It is when he is speaking of topics which would be likely to stir his feelings that such things are most common; e.g. when he enumerates his joys or his sufferings.

Although there is no passage in this letter which for eloquence could be put side by side with ch. xiii. or xv. of the First Epistle, yet the torrent of invective in which he sets his own kavं $\eta \eta \sigma$ against that of his Judaizing opponents, is a powerful piece of oratory. If it is not drawn out with conscious distribution of parts, the amount of arrangement which it exhibits is very remarkable. The prelude to it is the sarcastic commendation of the Corinthians for their unbounded toleration of the Judaizing teachers (xi. 19, 20); and this is effective, with its rapid asyndeton, and fivefold repetition of el $\tau<s$. Note the lead off with two compounds of kara: five would have become monotonous; also the $\dot{v} \mu a \hat{s}$ in the first and last clauses, where it is wanted, and its omission in the intermediate clauses, -again to avoid monotony. As in the subsequent groups, we have first a more general statement, and then the expansion of it in detail.

el tis кateotlel,

el \(\tau\) เs \(\lambda a \mu \beta d \nu \in ⿺\),
el tis émalpetat,
```

He ironically remarks that, to his shame, he must confess his inferiority to the Judaizers in suoh energetic methods,-кard diculay first with a more general matter, and then four details arranged in a climax.
 'Eßpaîol eiouv; кả子ढ́.

This fourth point rises far above the other three, and itself becomes a general consideration, under which a large number of details are grouped. The first four of these again seem to form a climà.

̇̀̀ кбтоцs $\pi \varepsilon \rho \iota \sigma \sigma a \tau \epsilon \rho \omega s$, ѐ $\pi \lambda \eta \gamma \mathrm{a} i \mathrm{~s}$ ن́ $\pi \epsilon \rho \beta a \lambda \lambda 6 \nu \tau \omega \mathrm{~s}$,

This last point is again stronger than the other three and receives explanation in detail. He has had a variety of experiences, any one of which might have cost him his life. He groups these according as they were caused by the violence of Jews, or of Gentiles, or of nature. Note the effect produced by the sound of the verbal terminations in each case.

Then we have another subordinate heading, similar to $\boldsymbol{\epsilon} \boldsymbol{y}$ Oavdious то $\lambda \lambda$ ákes: and under it four pairs of details show what is involved in it. The first three are pairs of contrasts.
j̀ठoctopials $\pi o \lambda \lambda \alpha \kappa \kappa s,-$

There is balance and resonance in what follows, but the clauses do not seem to be grouped under anything that precedes, except as being items in the evidence that he is a true minister of Christ.

 $\epsilon \nu \psi \psi_{\chi} \in \iota$ каl $\gamma \nu \mu \nu \delta r \eta \tau \iota$.
Here there is a blank, which forms a telling pause. To have completed the third line with another dative and $\pi 0 \lambda \lambda d_{k}$ ss would have been to sacrifice effect to uniformity. The pause indicates that the list of frequent trials is closed; and thus we are prepared for the mention of a trouble which never leaves him. This in turn is briefly explained; and then the self-assertion which has been forced upon him is closed by a solemn dealaration that God knows that it is all true.

\begin{aligned}
& \chi \omega \rho i s \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \pi \text { тарект } \partial s \end{aligned}

$\dot{\eta} \mu \in \rho \iota \mu \nu a \pi a \sigma \hat{\omega} \nu \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \dot{\epsilon} \kappa x \lambda \eta \sigma \iota \hat{\omega} \nu$.
$\tau i s d \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \epsilon \hat{i}$, каl ouk $\dot{d} \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \hat{\omega}$;
öть ov̀ $\psi e v \delta \delta \mu \alpha l$.

The effect of this lofty flight of eloquence is heightened by contrast with the prosaic statement of a simple matter of fact which immediately follows it (xi. 32, 33).

But one needs many examples,-and J. Weiss supplies a good many others,-before the question, how far S. Paul had studied oratory, can be answered with any certainty.
