Among the last words of Nitzsch were those, spoken to his old friend Twesten, "I can no longer hear or see or work, I can only love."—J. Ker: Lectures on Preaching.

The Epistle finds its climax in this chapter, as that to the Romans in the conclusion of the eighth chapter, and that to the Hebrews in the eleventh. In this one grace of charity was found the true correction for all the evil tendencies of the Corinthian Church. The Apostle’s immediate motive is to show the subordination of gifts of mere display, such as that of tongues; but the style of the passage proves that it rises far above any immediate or local occasion. On each side of this chapter the tumult of argument and remonstrance still rages; but within all is calm: the sentences move in almost rhythmical melody; the imagery unfolds itself in almost dramatic propriety; the language arranges itself with almost rhetorical accuracy. We can imagine how the Apostle’s amanuensis must have paused to look up in his master’s face at the sudden change in the style of his dictation, and seen his countenance lighted up as it had been the face of an angel, as this vision of divine perfection passed before him.—Stanley.

N.B.—There are two Commentaries on the Epistle to the Romans which exist at present only in MS. The authors have been called to their rest. They are the representatives of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. It is to be earnestly hoped that ere long the literature on the Epistle to the Romans will be enriched by the publication of these works. I refer to the Lectures delivered at Oxford by the late Canon Liddon, and to the Lectures delivered at Cambridge by the late Bishop Lightfoot.

Note on The Great Text Commentary.

1 Cor. xiii. 12.

Allow me to say that I think your expositor has misunderstood the Greek aorist rendered in the Revised Version, “I have been known.” He asks to what time the aorist refers. The Greek aorist does not in itself refer to any definite time, but merely asserts that at some time or times in the past, either ages ago or a moment ago, something took place or existed. It thus differs from the English preterite, which always refers either to a definite time or to a time definitely removed from the present. Our language has no aorist or “indefinite" past tense. The meaning of the Greek tense I discussed at great length in The Expositor for March, April, and May 1880. Dr. Weymouth has done the same in the Theological Monthly for July and September 1890. Our judgment is practically the same.

The difference between the Greek and English tenses is proved by the frequent impossibility of translating the one by the other, as in the passage before us, Mark x. 20; Matt. xxvi. 65, xxviii. 19, and many others. Oversight of this difference has been a frequent source of confusion in grammatical exposition of the New Testament.

But, in addition to these, we have proposals to make for more immediate practical work.

Books will be offered every month—
1. To the Ministers and Members of some particular Church only, for the best Notes of a Sermon or an Address on any passage occurring in Genesis i.-xi.
2. To all and sundry, for the best exposition of some word, phrase, sentence, or passage occurring in the Epistle to the Ephesians.

Accordingly, we offer books this month—
1. To the Ministers and Members of the Baptist Churches only, for the best Notes of a Sermon or Address on any passage in Genesis (Chapters i.-xi.). The Notes must not occupy more than half a column of The Expository Times, this type. They should be after the nature of the "Methods of Treatment" in the Great Text Commentary, i.e. readable in themselves.
2. To all, for the best exposition of some word, phrase, sentence, or passage occurring in the Epistle to the Ephesians. No restriction as to length or manner of treatment will be made at present. The original Greek may be referred to or not as convenient.

The best papers will be published every month in The Expository Times; and when the writers see them there they may send to the Publishers for the book they select, out of a list which will be given. The number and value of the books will depend upon the success of this scheme of work. The writer's name and address should be given, but no names or initials will be published except of those whose papers are printed, and who do not express a desire to the contrary. The papers intended for May must be received by the Editor, Kinneff, Bervie, N. B., by the 10th day of April, and so on for every succeeding month.

Those whose papers are found in this issue will kindly let the Publishers know which of the following books they wish sent to them:

Delitzsch's Iris: Studies in Colour and Talks about Flowers.
The Voice from the Cross (Ahlfeld, etc.).
Ewald's Syntax of the Hebrew Language.
Beck's Pastoral Theology.
Monrad's The World of Prayer.
Roth's Sermons for the Christian Year.
