Notes on Acts xiii. 9 and on Assumptio
Mosis ix.

WALLACE N. STEARNS, PH.D.
OHIO WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

Acts 139: Σαῦλος ὁ καὶ Παῦλος.

Ib., § 49: βασιλεύει οὖν μόνος Πχος, ὁ καὶ Δαρειαῖος.

The fragment of Ctesias (fl. 400 B.C.) in which this example of the elliptical ὁ καὶ with a double name occurs, is preserved by Photius (Bibl. LXXII. pp. 106 ff.). If the expression stood in the original, this is much the earliest example of the construction known. W. Schmid, Der Atticismus, III. 338, has no case older than an inscription of Antiochus Epiphanes. See also Deissmann, Bibelstudien, pp. 181 ff.

Assumption of Moses 9: "A man of the tribe of Levi, whose name will be Taxô."

Is not the basis of this story the history of Mattathias as given in 1 Macc. 2?

1. a) Mattathias is the Greek equivalent for מְתָתָח. Cf. Ezra 1048 (LXX 90) Neh. 84 1 Chron. 931: see also מְתָתָח, 1 Chron. 1516.11 2515.

b) מְתָתָח is derived from מִל: Gesenius, Lex. s.v., and Fuerst, Lex. s.v.

c) In LXX the verb τάσσω occurs as the translation of the Hebrew verb מִל. Cf. 1 Chron. 1617.

d) The original of the book was probably Hebrew or Aramaic (see, e.g. Charles, Assumption of Moses, pp. xxxviii. ff.).

2. The speech of Taxô reminds one of the parting words of Mattathias (1 Macc. 24ff.):

a) It is a time of oppression and suffering: cf. 92 with 1 Macc. 24.

b) The sons are exhorted to remember the deeds of their fathers: cf. 91 with 1 Macc. 24ff.
Their strength comes from trust in and obedience to God: cf. 9 with 1 Macc. 241.

3. Seven sons are mentioned. This directs attention to 2 Macc. 7. The story of Mattathias and his five sons is here confounded with that of the seven brethren and their mother.

This is not a unique phenomenon. A similar instance is found in the book of Daniel, a book which belongs to the same class of writings as the Assumption of Moses. Four centuries intervene between the date of the book of Daniel and the date of the events therein described. The date of the pollution of the temple is 168 B.C. The Assumption of Moses belongs to the first decade of the Christian era. And these were troublous times: and the confounding is one of lesser details.

4. The attitude of Taxo is that of passive submission to death (cf. 1 Macc. 242 n.): Mattathias was a military figure. But the Chasidim accepted the advice of Mattathias and prepared for and waged war, 1 Macc. 242 n. And the words of Taxo in 9 need not necessarily imply a refusal to fight in defence of life. Taxo's resolve was to die rather than turn from the religion of his fathers to the worship of strange gods. And if the point of passive endurance be insisted upon, we may point again to 1 Macc. 246 n. and reply that the author has simply neglected the perspective and mixed things up. The death of the thousand martyrs roused the pious Jew and made him not only a martyr but a soldier-martyr. It was when religious liberty was in a measure assured and the war became a struggle for political independence that the Chasidim withdrew from the Maccabean standard.