sexual intercourse with (a woman). Thus the renderings of the Versions (Syr. לַחֲמִיתוּ; LXX ἄνωση and Vulg. interfecit) do not necessarily imply a different reading from that of the Massoretic text.

G. R. Driver.

CHRIST AS THE APXH OF CREATION.
(Prov. viii 22, Col. i 15–18, Rev. iii 14.)

The main object of this paper is to point out the fact—hitherto, I believe, unnoticed—that in Col. i 16–18 St Paul is giving an elaborate exposition of the first word in Genesis, נְפַשׁוֹת Bereshith, and interpreting reshith as referring to Christ. This interpretation depends, as we shall see, upon an inferred connexion between reshith of Gen. i 1 and the same term applied to Wisdom personified in Prov. viii 22, אדונֵי אָדָם אֵשֶׁת Adonai ēn aireshith darkō—a passage to which there is obvious reference in πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως in Col. i 15. Since the interpretation of Prov. viii 22 has raised greater controversy than that of almost any other passage in the O. T., and is still in some degree unsettled, we shall do well to begin with a discussion of it.

Interpretation of Prov. viii 22.

The renderings of A.V. and R.V. are identical:

The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way,
Before his works of old.

R.V., however, adds the marginal alternatives ‘formed’ for ‘possessed’, ‘as’ (the beginning) for ‘in’ (the beginning), ‘The first of’ for ‘Before’.

Meaning of ἐκπροσώπωσις.

In the first place, the fact needs emphasis that the verb ἐκπροσώπωσις always seems to possess the sense ‘get, acquire’, never the sense ‘possess, own’ simply, apart from the idea of possessing something which has been acquired in one way or another. This clearly appears from examination of the usages of the verb in Hebrew, and through comparison of the cognate languages.

There are (if my computation is correct) 88 occurrences of the verb in the Hebrew Bible and the Hebrew text of Ecclesiastes. The various shades of meaning which it has may be classified as follows:—

1. ‘Buy’, Gen. xxv 10, xxxiii 19, xxxix 1, xlvi 19, 20, 22, 23, xlix 30,

1 Dalman Aramäisch-Neuhebräisches Handwörterbuch 90b.
13; Ex. xxi 2; Lev. xxii 11, xxv 14, 15, 28, 30, 44, 45, 50, xxvii 24; Deut. xxviii 68; Josh. xxiv 32; 2 Sam. xii 3, xxiv 21, 24; 1 Kings xvi 24; 2 Kings xii 13, xxii 6; Isa. xxiv 2, xlili 24; Jer. xiii 1, 2, 4, xix 1, xxxii 7 bis, 9, 15, 25, 43, 44; Ezek. vii 12; Am. viii 6; Zech. xi 5, xiii 5 (s.v.l.); Prov. xx 14; Ru. iv 4, 5 bis, 8, 9, 10; Eccles. ii 7; Neh. vi 8, 16; 1 Chron. xxi 24 bis; 2 Chron. xxxiv 11; Ecclus. xxxvii 11. Total 60.

2. 'Own' (by right of purchase), Isa. i 3 ('The ox knoweth its owner'). Gesenius (Thesaurus, s.v.) also includes under this head Lev. xxi 30; Zech. xi 5; but seeing that in both these passages there is an antithesis between נָּחַּל and רָכָּב 'sell', it is clear that the sense 'buy' is intended, and that they belong to the first category, where we have included them. Total 1.

3. 'Acquire' (otherwise than by purchase). 'Get' wisdom, &c., by application of the mind and will, Prov. i 5, iv 5 bis, 7 bis, xv 32, xvi 16 bis, xvii 16, xviii 15, xix 8, xxiii 23; Ecclus. li 20, 21, 25, 28. Of these passages Prov. xxiii 23 ('Get truth, and sell it not') shews that the metaphor of buying is in the writer's mind. 'Get' a wife, Ecclus. xxxvi 29. Of Yahweh's acquiring Israel, Ex. xv 16; Isa. xi 11, Ps. lxxiv 2; obj. 'the hill' of Zion, Ps. lxxviii 54. Total 21.

4. (a) 'Beget', Deut. xxxii 6 ('Is He not thy Father that begat thee? He made thee and established thee'). (b) 'Get' (by bearing), Gen. iv 1 ('I have gotten a man with [the help of] Yahweh'. The verb is here chosen to explain the name יְהֹוָּאָה). Total 2.

5. 'Create', Gen. xiv 19, 22 ('Creator of heaven and earth'), Ps. cxxxix 13 ('For thou hast formed my reins'). Total 3.

These, with Prov. viii 22 (where the meaning of the verb must for the present be considered ambiguous), make up the sum total of 88.

To make this evidence complete we must briefly notice the usages of substantives derived from the root. These are—ָּכַיָּה kinyân. 1. 'Acquisition' (by purchase), Lev. xxii 11. 2. 'Property' (as acquired), Gen. xxxiv 23, xxxvi 6; Josh. xiv 4; Ezek. xxxviii 12, 13; Ps. cv 21.

3. 'Act of acquiring', Gen. xxxi 18; Prov. iv 7. 4. 'Creation', i.e. collectively 'creatures' (parallel to הָּכַיָּה 'Thy works'), Ps. civ 24.

ָּכַיָּה miknā. 1. 'Object purchased', Gen. xvii 12, 13, 23, 27, xxiii 18. 2. 'Act of purchase', Lev. xxvii 22; Jer. xxxii 11, 12 bis, 14, 16. 3. 'Purchase-price', Lev. xxv 16 bis, 51.

ָּכַיָּה miknē. 'Property', more especially such as consists in cattle. This is very frequent. That the underlying conception is that of something acquired (cf. κτήνος from κτάομαι) is clear from Gen. xlix 32, 'The purchase of the field (i.e. the purchased field) and the cave that is in it from the sons of Heth' (to secure a good sequence in English R.V. VOL. XXVII.)
transposes, 'The field, &c., that was purchased from the children of Heth'.

To this evidence for the Hebrew usage of the verb הָקַּנָא it is important for our purpose to add the proper name מִּֽֽאֵלָנָא, which can hardly mean anything else than '(He whom) God has begotten or created'. Whether הָקַּנָא here has the sense 'beget' or 'create' is ambiguous. If the former, the name is analogous to the frequent proper names compounded with בָּאָמָא 'father' in reference to the Deity, e.g. Abiel 'My Father is God', Abijah 'My Father is Yah' (cf. in Babylonian such names as Šamaš-abum 'The Sun-god is father', Sin-abušu 'The Moon-god is his father'); if the latter, we may compare El'ásâ, 'Asâhel 'God-made' (sc. the bearer of the name), 'Asâaiah 'Yah made', Ya'asiel 'Yah maker' (cf. in Babylonian the frequent names compounded with בָּאָמָא 'creator', e.g. Anum-bâni, Sin-bâni, Šamaš-bâni 'The god Anu or Sin or Šamaš is creator', Ilušu-bâni 'His god is creator', Ilušu-ibni 'His god created', Ilušu-ibnišu 'His god created him').

El'ánâ in O.T. is the name of several persons, being borne by the father of Samuel (1 Sam. i f), one of David's warriors (1 Chr. xii 6), a high official in the time of Ahaz (2 Chr. xxviii 7), a son of Korah (Exod. vi 24), and several Levites (1 Chr. vi 8, 10, 11, 20, 21, ix 16, xv 23). The repeated occurrence of the name over a widespread period is important as proving that the verb הָקַּנָא in the sense 'beget' or 'create' was well known in popular usage, and not an uncommon usage as might be inferred from the few cases which we are able to cite (הָקַּנָא verb 4 and 5, and קִנְיָן subst. 4).

In face of this evidence we must surely conclude that the ground-meaning of הָקַּנָא is that of acquiring something not previously possessed, which may be done by buying or making it, in the case of a child by begetting it, in the case of wisdom by accumulating it through mental application. The single instance of the verb in the sense 'own' (Isa. i 3), in which there seems to be no perceptible stress upon the act of acquiring, is no evidence in proof that הָקַּנָא ever means to possess in a sense which excludes the idea of previous acquisition. The ox of the passage in question is far from being inseparable from the man who owns it. There was a time when it did not belong to him; therefore, when Hebrew speaks of its owner, it uses a term which properly means 'he who has acquired it' (ָּֽֽֽזַּנ). This is also true of the substantival forms derived from הָקַּנָא which bear the sense of property or possessions. The underlying idea is always that of acquired property. The Hebrew הָקַּנָא, in fact, in so far as it contains the idea of possessing, is exactly like the Greek κτάμα (in the perfect), and the substantives derived from it like κτήμα. A man's money, furniture, children, knowledge, are kinyānim or kőmpata because he has come to possess them; his legs and arms, for example, are not kinyānim or kőmpata because they are inseparable from our idea of him as a complete man—there never was a time when he did not possess them. Of course if we shifted our point of view, and regarded the man as a pre-existing spiritual entity subsequently endowed with a body, we might think of his body as a kinyān or kőmpa, since thus the body and its members would be pictured as acquired property.

1 Cf. instances of these names cited in Thureau-Dangin Lettres et Contrats de l'époque de la Première Dynastie babylonienne.

Evidence from the cognate languages as to the meaning of קַּנָּה.

This conclusion as to the ground-conception of the verb קַּנָּה in Biblical Hebrew is borne out by the usage of the same root in the cognate languages.

In New Hebrew the meaning of קַּנָּה is 'acquire, buy', and also 'create'. Cf. Rosh ha-shana. 31 a, בָּרָא ה וַיָּאֵם לָיִן אֶת־הָאֵרֶץ לְעָבוֹן, 'On the first day what (Psalm) do they recite? “The earth is the Lord's” (Ps. xxiv); because He created His world and gave it in possession, and is ruler over it.' Here קַנָּה תְּחֵכָה means literally 'acquired (by creation) and caused (men) to acquire (it)'. Cf. other instances of the use of the verb in Levy Neuheb. u. chald. Wörterbuch, s.v.

Aramaic קַנָּה, Syriac חַּנָּה corresponds in usage precisely with Hebrew. The O.T. occurrences of Hebrew קַנָּה are regularly reproduced by קַנָּה in the Targums and the Peshitta, and in addition Heb. סֶלֶשׁ 'gather property' is rendered by קַנָּה in the Aramaic versions (Gen. xii 5, xxxi 18, xxxvi 6, xlvi 6), and סֶלֶשׁ 'gathering' property normally by kinyānah (niksin 'riches', sguillā 'treasure' also occur as renderings). The N.T. and patristic occurrences of חַּנָּה exhibit the same usage (cf. Payne Smith Thesaurus, s.v.).

Arabic لَا نُ وُ هَا جَعَلَهَا means 'to acquire' (e.g. sheep or goats) for a permanent possession, not for sale (Lane, Supplement to Dict.), and in conjunction VIII 'to possess' property so acquired. The verb may also have the sense 'create' (Kamus, p. 1937). In Sabaean votive inscriptions the causative חַּנָּה 'cause to acquire' is the regular term for 'dedicate', i.e. 'cause to acquire'; cf. CIS. iv nos. 2, 3, 35, 37, 75, 77–91, &c. In ib. no. 37 we find the simple stem, . . . תּוּרָהוֹת 'and his riparian property . . . which he acquired and made'. The subst. נִי נִי means 'property'; ib. nos. 3, 29, 37.

1 Exceptions are Prov. viii 22, where both Targ. and Pesh. use the verb נִי נִי 'created' (see below on the Versions), and Deut. xxxii 6 where Targ. Onkelos paraphrases יָכָּה 'who begat thee' by ישֶלֶשׁ 'and thou art His', doubtless in order to obviate the anthropomorphism of the original.
Ethiopic \( \text{ḥăn'ay} \). Dillmann (Lex., cols. 44-78) gives as meanings
1. 'Acquire, purchase', citing Am. viii 6, 'To buy the poor for silver';
2. 'Subject to one's power, reduce to servitude';
3. 'Impose labour, drive to work'. He makes no mention of a sense 'possess' in Ethiopic.

In Babylonian the verb \( \text{ḥăn'ū} \) seems to be infrequent. Meissner, however, quotes two instances of it (Supplement, p. 85); \( \text{amar ša abū [ina] šilli šarrī ik-nu-u-ni inaš} \), 'All that my father acquired under the protection of the king he has taken away' (K. 1101, 16; Harper Letters no. 152); \( \text{eklē kīrē nišē ša ina šilli'ā ik-nu-u} \), 'The fields, gardens, (and) slaves which under my protection they acquired' (BA. 2, 566, 24).

Here we might perhaps render 'owned' in place of 'acquired'; yet still the reference would be to the owning of wealth acquired during a period of prosperity.

Importance of recognizing that the sense 'acquire' is inseparable from \( \text{ḥăn'ū} \).

The evidence adduced above as to the meaning of \( \text{ḥăn'ū} \) is familiar to competent Hebrew scholars, and the conclusion which we have drawn as to its invariable ground-conception would hardly be called in question by them. The reason why it has seemed desirable to marshal the facts in such fullness is that, in the controversy which has raged round \( \text{ḥăn'ū} \) in Prov. viii 22, they have not been rightly apprehended by theologians, either in the past or in modern times. Thus, for example, Dr Liddon in his Bampton Lectures (Lect. ii, 13th ed. pp. 61 f.) states that 'modern critics know that if we are to be guided by the clear certain sense of the Hebrew root, we shall read "possessed", and not "created", and they admit without difficulty that the Wisdom is uncreated by and co-eternal with the Lord Jehovah'.

He adds in a foot-note that 'the current meaning of the word is "to acquire" or "possess", as is proved by its certain sense in the great majority of cases where it is used'. Here it is clear that he fails to recognize the sharp distinction which exists between the meaning 'acquire' and the meaning 'possess' with the force in which he postulates it, viz. 'possess' in a sense which not only ignores the idea of preliminary acquisition, but is actually to be understood as excluding such an idea. But, if our argument has been sound, this distinction forms the \text{crux} of the question. The idea of creation is closely connected with the idea of acquisition as being one form of it;
whereas the idea of possession without acquisition stands sharply apart,

---

1 Similar statements as to the incorrectness of the rendering 'created', and the correctness of 'possessed', are made by Newman Select Treatises of St Athanasius ii p. 270; Ottley Incarnation i p. 305.
and cannot, as we have seen, be substantiated for a single occurrence of the verb.

We are justified, therefore, in concluding that cannot rightly be rendered 'possessed me', but must have the meaning 'gat me' in some sense still to be determined. Now the idea of buying or acquiring from an outside source may clearly be excluded without argument, since Wisdom is certainly not pictured as something originally external to God. We thus have to choose between the two meanings 'created' or 'begat'.

Does mean 'created me' or 'begat me'?

Meaning of , in following verses.

Our decision must be guided by the meaning which we attach to the verbs descriptive of the production of Wisdom in the immediate sequel, Prov. viii 23–25. These are in v. 23, hōlālti twice in vv. 24, 25. There is no variation between the renderings of A.V. and R.V. in these verses.

23. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning,
Or ever the earth was.

24. When there were no depths; I was brought forth;
When there were no fountains abounding with water.

25. Before the mountains were settled,
Before the hills was I brought forth.

Now we observe that, while there is no doubt at all as to the meaning of —'I was brought to the birth' or 'was travailed with', there is more than a doubt whether is correctly rendered 'I was set up'. Though this meaning may be supported by the single occurrence of the verb in Ps. ii 6, 'I have installed my king' (cf. Babylonian nasāku 'appoint'), and by the subst. nāṣīk 'prince' (Babylonian nasiku), Josh. xiii 21, Mic. v 4, Ezek. xxxii 30, Ps. lxxxiii 12, we cannot fail to observe that the interpretation of in our passage as the Niph'al of this verb involves an unnatural hysteron-proteron, the official installation of Wisdom being mentioned prior to the repeated figure of the birth-pangs which produced it. We notice further that might be the Niph'al of another root , 'to weave' (Arabic , nasāqa), which occurs in Isa. xxv 7, xxx 1 (probably), and in the subst. massēka, massēketh, 'web, piece of woven stuff'; or, it might be Niph'al of the related sākak, 'interweave' (whence New Heb. , 'weave'), of the form which is illustrated by Gesenius-Kautzsch Heb. Gram. § 67 u (from , Ezek. xxii 16, xxv 3; from , Ps. lxix 4, cii 4, &c.).
Now there are two O.T. passages in which this verb אֵשַׁנ (eshan) is applied to the weaving of the embryonic body in the womb, the thought being of the mysterious interlacing (as it were) of bones, sinews, and veins, as appears from the passage Job x 11.

With skin and flesh didst Thou clothe me;
With bones and sinews didst Thou weave me.

(So R.V. rightly, 'knit me together'. A.V. wrongly, 'fenced me', marg. 'hedged').

The other passage is Ps. cxxxix 13.

For Thou didst form my reins;
Thou didst weave me in my mother’s womb.

(A.V., R.V. text wrongly 'didst cover me'; R.V. marg. rightly, 'didst knit me together').

The meaning of 'didst weave me' is further illustrated by v. 15 תְּקֵנַּנְתִי, 'I was skilfully wrought' or 'embroidered', the figure being that of the working of a piece of tapestry (תרקנף, riknā, Judg. v 30, &c.).

Conclusion that אֵשַׁנ means 'begat me'.

If, then, in Prov. viii 23 (stage 2) תְּקֵנַּנְתִי means 'I was woven' (prenatal growth of the embryo), and in vv. 24, 25 (stage 3) תְּקֵנַּנְתִי means 'I was brought forth with travail' (birth), the inference is obvious that the figure described in v. 22 by (stage 1) אֵשַׁנ is 'beget me' (act of procreation). We notice that Job x 10—the verse which immediately precedes the passage which we have discussed as referring to embryonic growth—runs,

Hast Thou not poured me out like milk,
And curdled me like cheese?

Here, without a doubt, the figure is that of (a) procreation, and (b) conception (cf. Gray and Ball ad loc., and for the idea underlying (b) Wisd. vii 2 ἔρεις ἐν αἰμαρί with Goodrick’s note).

Thus this long discussion brings us, with close approximation to certainty, to the conclusion that אֵשַׁנ means 'The Lord begat me'.

1 This is the view of Hitzig, Ewald, Zöckler, Frankenberg, Toy.
Interpretation of Passing on to consider the rival interpretations of 'the beginning of His way' as (1) an adverbial accusative 'in the beginning of His way' (A.V., R.V. text), or (2) a direct accusative in apposition to the object of יָמִים, 'as the beginning of His way' (R.V. margin), we note that an adverbial usage of הָיוּ is never elsewhere found in O.T., 'in the beginning' being regularly expressed by prefix of the preposition ב (Gen. i 1; Jer. xxvi 1, xxvii 1, xxviii 1, lxxix 34). The absence of a parallel for such a usage cannot, however, be greatly pressed; since the adverbial usage is well illustrated with other substantives, and is thus theoretically possible. In particular, we may notice two passages in which the synonymous substantive 'beginning' seems to be used as an accusative of time: Hos. i 2 הָיוּ בְּתַחְתָּלַת יְהוֹה רָאָה וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוֹה, lit. 'Beginning of Yahweh spake by Hosea, and (= then) Yahweh said', i.e. 'In the beginning of Yahweh's speaking by Hosea, Yahweh said' (the construction is, however, undoubtedly harsh, and some uncertainty attaches to text and interpretation); 2 Sam. xxi 6 מֵתוֹ רָאָה שִׁיר יְהוֹה וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוֹ, 'in the beginning of barley-harvest' (here, however, there exists a Massoretic correction embodied in the הָיוּ which inserts the preposition ב 'in' before תַחְתָּלַת).

Jerome (Ep. cxl ad Cyprianum) cites the Hebrew of our passage in transliteration with the preposition ב before תַחְתָּלַת, Adonai canani bresith dercho. Since, however, we have no trace of this reading elsewhere, it seems likely that, having decided that the use of תַחְתָּלַת was adverbial, he instinctively substituted תַחְתָּלַת רָאָה with preposition in citing the passage from memory, because the prepositional usage was natural in this sense to a scholar with a feeling for the language. Such inadvertency would of course have been impossible had it appeared to him that a question of importance turned upon the interpretation of the phrase. This, however, does not seem to have been the case, since his whole interest in the exegesis of the passage centres in postulating for לְפֹנְפָּה the meaning 'possedit' rather than 'creavit'.

In favour of the interpretation of תַחְתָּלַת רָאָה as a direct accusative in apposition to the object of יָמִים, we may cite the parallel of Job xl 19, where it is said of Behemoth, יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִים יָמִ ...

1 The statement of Cornelius à Lapide that תַחְתָּלַת is often used for תַחְתָּלַת has no foundation.

2 Cf. Gesenius-Kautzsch Grammar § 118 i.
A. V., R. V. text, having rendered יְשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁשׁ רַּשָּׁי in the beginning of His way, gives to the corresponding expression the meaning ‘before His works’, intending doubtless to obviate the inference that Wisdom is described as one of the created works of God. R. V. margin, on the other hand, parallels the direct accusative ‘as the beginning of His way’ in stichos 1 by a second direct accusative in stichos 2, likewise governed by יְשֵׁשֵׁשׁ—the first of His works.

ךֶּ֖שֶׁש is regularly a substantive denoting that which is in front or foremost, whether in place or time. Its interpretation in a prepositional sense, ‘before’, is unparalleled in Hebrew, and this rendering may be definitely excluded, unless we are prepared to revocalize the word as the Aramaic דֶּשֶׁש, an expedient which can hardly be contemplated seriously. The natural interpretation of יְשֵׁשֵׁש דֶּשֶׁש is ‘the foremost (in time) of His works’, Wisdom being regarded as one of the works of God, though indefinitely anterior to all other works which she was instrumental in calling into being. It would, however, be legitimate to render, ‘the antecedent of His works’—a rendering which serves merely to state the priority of Wisdom to the works of God, without necessarily placing her in the same category with them. This rendering appears to be preferable, as preserving a measure of ambiguity which is inherent in the original.

Lastly, יְשֵׁש, rendered by A. V., R. V. ‘of old’, and referring, like the expressions which follow in vv. 23-25, to remotest antiquity, is intended to qualify יְשֵׁש (‘begat me of old’), and should therefore be preceded by a comma in the English renderings in order to obviate connexion with ‘His works’ (as though, ‘His works which were of old’).

We arrive, then, at the following rendering for the verse as a whole:

The Lord begat me as the beginning of His way,
The antecedent of His works, of old.

The Versions.

The renderings of Prov. viii 22 in the principal ancient Versions are as follows:—

LXX. Κύριος ἔκτεσεν με άρχην δόδων αὐτοῦ εἰς ἔργα αὐτοῦ. κτίζευν is also found as the rendering of קְשֶׁשׁ in Gen. xiv 19, 22, and Jer. xxxix (xxxii) 15 (where, however, κτισθησονται is probably an error for κτισθησονται). We find ἄγοράζεων in Ecclus. xxxvii 11 and γεννῶν in Zech. xiii 5 (Hiph‘il). Elsewhere, κτάσθαι is the regular equivalent, and this verb is employed in our passage by the later Greek translators Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion.
NOTES AND STUDIES

'A. Κύριος ἐκτήσατό με κεφαλαίον [όδου] αὐτοῦ, ἀρχῇθεν κατεργασμάτων αὐτοῦ [ἀπὸ τὸτε].
Σ. Κύριος ἐκτήσατο με ἀρχῇν ὁδὸν αὐτοῦ, πρὸ τῆς ἐργασίας αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τὸτε.
Θ. Κύριος ἐκτήσατο με ἀρχῇν ὁδὸν αὐτοῦ, πρὸ τῆς ἐργασίας αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τὸτε.

Peshītā. ἀνένθη δύναμιν ἡγούμενος· ἐκέβασεν ἐκ οὐρανοῦ εἴρημα.
'The Lord created me in the beginning of His creation, and before all His works'.

Targum. אלהים בראתיו בראתיו Buen חכמה יבָנֵיה, כְּאֶחָד עֶלְיוֹנִי, כְּאֶחָד שְיוֹ.
'God created me in the beginning of His creation, and before His works from the beginning.'

Vulgate. Dominus possedit me in initio viarum suarum, antequam quidquid faceret a principio.

Here we observe that, with the exception of the Vulgate, all Versions give a legitimate sense to created me; A', Σ., Θ., 'gat possession of me'. Vulg. 'possedit' stands alone, and it is a mistake to group it, as has sometimes been done, with ἐκτήσατο of the later Greek Versions, because the idea of acquiring, which is inherent in ἐκτήσατο as in ἐκέβασε, is absent in 'possedit'; and, as we shall notice presently when speaking of the explanations of the Fathers, this rendering was chosen by Jerome expressly to exclude the conception of acquiring.

The explanation of as a direct accusative is adopted by all the Greek Versions; while Pesh., Targ., Vulg., interpret the phrase adverbially. On the other hand, all the Versions give to a prepositional sense 'before'.

Jewish authorities.

In the Wisdom of Ben-Sira the following passages are clearly based on Prov. viii 22.

Ecclus. i. 4

εἰκίσκετο τῆς παντὸς θεία, καὶ σύνεσις φρονήσεως εἰς αἰῶνα.

Here we have the interpretation 'created me as the beginning of His way'.

Ecclus. i 9

Κύριος αὐτῷ ἐκτίσεν αὐτήν, καὶ ἔξεχεν αὐτῆν ἐπὶ πάντα τὰ ἐργα αὐτοῦ.

ἔξεχεν seems to take ἔργα of Prov. viii 23 in the sense 'I was poured out'.

The Lord created me in the beginning of His creation, and before all His works'.
Ecclus. xxiv 8, 9 (Wisdom speaks)

8 τότε ἐνετείλατό με ὁ κτίστης ἀπάντων, καὶ ὁ κτίσας με κατέπανσε τὴν σκηνὴν μου.
9 πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἀπ' ἄρχαι ἐκτισθέν με, καὶ ἔσως αἰῶνος οὐ μη ἐκλίπω.

None of these passages is included among the extant fragments of the Hebrew text.

Philo De Ebrietate § 8

ὁ θεὸς ἐκτισσάτο με πρωτίστην τῶν εαυτοῦ έργων, καὶ πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἐθεμελίωσε με.

Here we notice that, while the first line varies from LXX and is obviously based on an independent knowledge of the Hebrew, whether direct or indirect, the second line is drawn directly from the LXX rendering of v. 23a. The rendering ‘the very first of His works’ seems to combine the parallel phrases ἄρχαι and ἐθεμελίωσε με, the LXX rendering of יִצְוָה in v. 23, which A.V., R.V. render ‘I was set up’, but for which we have postulated the meaning ‘I was woven’, may imply connexion with a verb וָיוֹר which is used of casting or founding an article of metal, such as a molten image; unless, as is possible, LXX read יִצְוָה ‘my foundations were laid’ in place of יִצְוָה.

Ibn Ezra interprets יִצְוָה in accordance with the use of the verb in Gen. iv 19, 22 (‘create’, which is the explanation given by Rashi in Gen.). He explains יִצְוָה as meaning first in order among created things, as in the passage in Job xli 19, ‘He is the first of God’s ways’; and states that יִצְוָה is the equivalent of יִצְוָה, יִצְוָה being synonymous with יִצְוָה.

R Levi. ben-Gershom interprets יִצְוָה ‘created me’, and explains the passage as meaning that Wisdom was created prior to the other works of God.

The Fathers.

The interpretations of Prov. viii 22 offered by the Fathers depend, with but few exceptions, on the LXX rendering Κύριος ἐκτισθέν με ἄρχαιν ἄλλων αὐτοῦ, not attempting to go behind and challenge it. The Arians used the passage as one of their principal proofs that the Second Person of the holy Trinity is a created Being. The orthodox replied that His Divine Sonship is fully proved by the whole tenor of Scripture; therefore the Arian interpretation of this obscure passage is certainly wrong. For things created and made are external to the maker; whereas the Son exists not external to, but of, the Father who begat Him.1 In regard to the meaning of ἐκτεθησαί different views are found. It is argued that the verb does not necessarily mean ‘created out of nothing’, and therefore affords no argument against the eternal generation of the Son of the substance of the Father.2 Taken absolutely, it may be referred to the mode of generation without change or passion in the Divine Generator3; or, regarded as limited by its close connexion with ἄρχην ὁδὸν ἀντοῦ, it refers, not to the eternal generation of the Son, but to His position in regard to creation, in a sense which practically amounts to ‘constituted Me head of creation’.4 A very general tendency, however, is to accept the rendering ‘created’ in its ordinary sense, and interpret the passage as prophetic of the Incarnation.5

We find that some few of the Fathers go behind and challenge the LXX rendering of ἐκτεθησαί. First we may notice a group who, though not themselves authorities as to the meaning of the Hebrew, are yet aware of other Greek translations offering a different rendering, viz. ἐκτεθησαί. Such are Eusebius,6 who refers to Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion; St Epiphanius,7 who mentions the rendering of Aquila; and St Basil8 and St Gregory of Nyssa,9 who speak without specification of ‘other

---

1 Cf. St Athanasius de Decretis Nicaenae Synodi 13.
2 Cf. St Athanasius Oral. c. Arianos ii 44 el ev ovd peri ἀγγέλου ἦ ἐτέρου τινος τῶν γεννητὸς ἐκτεθησαί το γεγομένων, ἀν περὶ ἄνω ἡμῶν τῶν ποιημάτων ἔσω λεγίμενον τὸ ἐκτεθησαί με’. el de ἡ Σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστίν, ἐν ὑ πάνα τὰ γενετὰ δεδημοῦργηται, ἡ peri ἀντής λέγουσα, τι δει κοινῷ ἡ ὑπὶ τὸ ἐκτεθησαί φάσκουσα, ὡς ἐκαντὼν τῷ ἐκτεθησαί λέγει;
3 So St Hilary de Synodiis 16, 17. The same idea, though less clearly expressed, seems to underlie his de Trin. i 35, xii 1, 35. It is also found in the statement of the semi-Arian party drawn up under the leadership of Basil of Ancyra: cf. St Epiphanius Haer. lxxiii 20.
4 Athenagoras Suppl. x 2, 3 argues that the Son was γέννημα to the Father for the work of creation, and then supports his position by quotation of Prov. viii 22. Tertullian c. Hermod. 18 explains, ‘Sophia scilicet ipsius exinde nata et condita, ex quo in sensu Dei ad opera mundi disponenda coepit agitari’; Didymus fragm. in Prov. (P. G. xxxix 1629 D-1632 D) distinguishes the reference of ἐκτεθησαί in Prov. viii 22 from the eternal being of ἢ τοῦ Θεοῦ Σοφία and associates it not with ὁδόις but with σχίνας πρὸς τὰ κτίσματα, and then goes on to interpret of the Incarnation; cf. his fragm. in 1 Cor. c 17 (P. G. xxxix 1705 D-1708 A). Dionysius of Rome (apud Athan. de Decretis 21) explains ἐκτεθησαί as ‘He set over the works made by Him through the Son Himself’.
5 So St Athanasius de Decretis 14; Oral. c. Arianos ii 1; St Gregory of Nazianzus Oral. xxx 2; St Augustine de Trin. i 12 (24). A long list (yet not professing completeness) of writers taking this view is given by Petavius Theol. dogm. ii 1 § 3.
6 De Ecclesiastica Theologia iii 2, 3. Contra Haereses II lxxix 25.
Greek translators'. St. Basil may be cited as making perhaps the most acute comment on the meaning of the passage which is to be found in the Fathers. 'We must not', he remarks, 'ignore the fact that other interpreters, who have reached the meaning of the Hebrew more aptly, render ἐκτισώμεθα με instead of ἐκτισεν. This will offer them [the Arians] the greatest obstacle against the blasphemy of their creaturely interpretation. For he who said, “I have gotten a man through God”, manifestly used the expression not as the creator of Cain, but as his generator.'

St. Epiphanius similarly cites the parallel usage of ἐκτισάμην = ἔγενεν in Gen. iv 1; but then somewhat strangely rejects the explanation on the ground that ἐκτισάμην ὡν describes an event which is recent, whereas in God nothing is recent. By this objection he presumably means that ἔγενεν = ‘beget’ properly implies, as in its ordinary sense ‘get’, the obtaining of something which at one period was unpossessed—and this, if we press the force of the expression, is of course true. The answer is to be found in the consideration that human terminology, framed to describe events happening in time, is inadequate to the description of eternal facts. But objection to the use of ἔγενεν in the sense ‘begat’ might equally be aimed against the use of the terms ‘Father’ and ‘Son’ in view of their human implications, as in the Arian logic. Epiphanius proceeds to express his preference for the strange view that ἔγενεν is a denominative from the Hebrew ḫē, ‘nest’, and give it the meaning ἐνύοσενε με, ‘hatched me like a nestling’. Such a denominative would take the form ἔγενεν from ἔγενεν, and not ἔγενεν from ἔγενεν; and the verb, which occurs but five times in the Hebrew Bible, means ‘to nest’, and not ‘to hatch’. Epiphanius must presumably have obtained this suggestion from a Jewish source; for we find it appearing in later ages, together with other explanations, in Rashi’s commentary on Deut. xxxvi 6 ἔγενεν ἡ Μητέρα ἡ ἡμών ἔχει συνήθεις ‘Is not He thy Father that begat thee?'

We come now to St. Jerome, who was the first of the Fathers to apply an original knowledge of Hebrew to the elucidation of the passage. In his commentary on Ephesians ii 10 (dated by Vallarsi A.D. 388) he is still dependent on the LXX, and applies the rendering ἐκτισσέν με to our Lord’s Incarnation, arguing that in this respect He

1 Τέως γε μὴν μηδὲ ἔκεινον ἀπαρασημαντον καταλάβωμεν, ὅτι ἄλλοι τῶν ἐρωτών, οἱ κατόρθωτοι τῆς σημασίας τῶν Ἐβραίων καθίσκουσιν, ἐκτισσάμεθα με ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐκτισαν ἐκενδώκασι. Ὑπερ μέγατον αὐτῶν ἐμπόδιον ἔσται πρὸς τὴν βλασφημίαν τοῦ κτισματος. ὁ γὰρ εἰπὼν, ἐκτισάμην ἄθρωμον διὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, οὗτι κτίσας τὸν Καὶ, ἀλλὰ γεννήσας, ταύτη γεφοίται χρησάμενος τὸ φῶς. The words ‘he who said’ imply a mistaken reference of καὶ εἶπεν to Adam, whereas it is clear from the Hebrew fem. ἡ ἡμῶν that Eve is the speaker.

2 Ἀλλ' οὖν, ἐκτισάμην ἡμῖν, ὡς πρόσφατον ἔστιν, ἐν Θεῷ δὲ οὖν ἐν πρόσφατον.
may legitimately be called a creature. 'Since Wisdom in the Proverbs of Solomon speaks of herself as created a beginning of the ways of God, and many, through fear lest they should be obliged to call Christ a creature, deny the whole mystery of Christ, and say that not Christ, but the world’s wisdom, is meant by this wisdom, we freely declare that there is no hazard in calling Him creature Whom we confess with all confidence of our hope to be “worm”, and “man”, and “crucified”, and “curse”.

In his commentary on Micah iv 8, 9, however (assigned to A.D. 392), he has reached another view through study of the Hebrew text: 'et qui ex persona assumpti hominis ait in Proverbiis: Dominus creavit me in principio viarum suarum in opera sua, sive ut in Hebraeo scribitur: Dominus possedit me: canani enim non creavit me sed possedit me habuitque significat’. Similarly in his commentary on Isaiah xxvi r3 (assigned to c. A.D. 410) he says, ‘Quod quidem et de Sapientia legitimus, quae iuxta Hebraicum loquitur in Proverbiis: Deus possedit me initium viarum suarum, licet quaedam exemplaria male pro possessione habeant creaturam’. His strongest expression of opinion as to the interpretation of the verb is found in Ep. cxl ad Cyprianum, where he argues against the meaning ‘create’ for μην, while μην properly means ‘possess’. ‘Inter possessionem autem et creationem multa diversitas est. Possessio significat, quod semper Filius in Patre et Pater in Filio fuerit. Creatio autem eius, qui prius non erat, conditionis exordium’.

This is a meaning for the verb μην—possession, not merely ignoring the conception of preliminary acquisition inherent in the verb, but actually to be understood as excluding it—which, if our argument as to the usage of the verb has been sound, can by no means be substantiated; yet St Jerome’s verdict has satisfied subsequent theological thought, and is generally accepted by theologians at the present day.

Col. i 15 πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, a direct allusion to

I turn, now, back to St Paul, whose authority I claim in support of my interpretation of Prov. viii 22. No one can contemplate the rendering which I have, as I hope, substantiated for μην, ‘The Lord begat me as the beginning of His way’ (i.e. His creative activity) without perceiving that πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως ‘the first-begotten of all creation’ can hardly be other than a direct reference to the O.T. passage. This conclusion, which at first I supposed to have been unnoticed (it is not found, for example, in Lightfoot’s commentary), I have since discovered to have been anticipated by St Epiphanius (c. Haer. II lxxiii 7). His words are, 'In place of ἀρχὴν the Apostle used πρῶτος, in place of γεννᾷ με (i.e. the LXX rendering of ἐμὴν 'I was brought forth' in v. 25) the term τόκος, for the whole statement ἐκτισάν μὲ ἀρχὴν ὁδὸν αὐτοῦ and Γεννᾷ με with the expression Πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, instead of θεομελεσών με (v. 23) the statement ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα, instead of Δι' ἐμοῦ the statement Ἄρτι ἀιῶνος, εἶτε θρόνοι, εἶτε κυριότητες, εἶτε ἀρχαί, εἶτε ἐξοντεῖ, τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν ἐκτίσται.'

Here Epiphanius, having elsewhere, as we have noticed, rejected the meaning 'begat me' for ὐς, does not recognize that this verb corresponds to the second portion of the term πρωτότοκος, but finds a correspondence less naturally in γεννᾷ με three verses later. The verses which follow in Col. i 16–18 as a development of πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως are not simply, as St Epiphanius supposes, reminiscent of Prov. viii 22 and its context, but are based upon another O.T. passage, immediately suggested to the Apostle by the allusion in Proverbs. Without a doubt he is passing from the use of ἀρχὴν 'beginning' in Prov. viii 22 as applicable to Christ, to the use of the same term in the creation-narrative of Genesis, where it occurs as the first word of the Hebrew Bible, בְּרֵאשִׁית 'In the beginning'. That this is so I hope to prove presently through examination of St Paul's words. As a preliminary, however, we may notice that the tracing of a connexion between the Proverbs-passage and the Genesis-passage would be obvious to a Rabbinic scholar, and has in fact been made elsewhere in Rabbinic literature.

In Bereshith Rabba, the great Midrashic commentary on Genesis, Rabbi Hoshiaiah (c. third century A.D.) opens with a discussion of Prov. viii 30, where Wisdom states, 'Then I was with Him as 'āmōn' ('master-workman'). After mentioning various proposed explanations of 'āmōn, he continues as follows. 'Another explanation of 'āmōn is 'ōmēn 'workman'. The Law says, "I was the working instrument of the Holy One, blessed be He". In worldly affairs a human king who is building a palace does not build it by his own skill, but he has parchment plans (διάφεραί) and drawing tablets (πίνακες), that he may know how to make the rooms and doors. In the same way the Holy One, blessed be He, was looking at the Law when He created the world. Now the Law says, 'By ῥεφίθ God created'; and there is no ῥεφίθ except the Law; compare the passage, 'The Lord gat me as ῥεφίθ of His way'.

This connexion between the two O.T. passages, which R. Hoshiaiah

1 The reference is to v. 16:

دليل الإيمان المضري وملحقون،
καὶ τύραννοι δὲ ἐμοῦ κρατοῦσι γῆς.
makes and interprets with reference to the function of the Law as \textit{r\textit{s}h\textit{h}ith} in Creation, is made by St Paul in Col. i 15–18, and interpreted as referring to Christ: Ơς ἐστιν . . . πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως; ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα, ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, τὰ ὅρατα καὶ τὰ ἄσωτα, ἐντε βραύνων ἐντε κυριότερες ἐντε ἀρχαὶ ἐντε ἕξουσίαι τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ αὐτῶν ἔκτισσαν καὶ αὐτὸς ἐστὶ πρὸ πάντων, καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνεστήκε. καὶ αὐτὸς ἐστὶ ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῦ σώματος, τῆς ἐκκλησίας; ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχή, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, ἵνα γενηθῇ ἐν πάσιν αὐτῶς πρωτεύων.

Here we have an elaborate exposition of \textit{Bērēshīth} in Gen. i 1 in the Rabbinic manner. Three explanations are given of the preposition \textit{bē}; then four explanations of the substantive \textit{rēshīth}: and the conclusion is that, in every possible sense of the expression, Christ is its Füllfiller.

Let me give a running paraphrase of St Paul’s words, in order to illustrate how, as I conceive, the argument developed itself in his mind.

‘Christ is the First-begotten of all creation, for it is written (Prov. viii 22 ff), “The Lord begat me as \textit{rēshīth} of His way, the antecedent of His works, from of old. From eternity was I wrought . . . when there were no deeps was I brought forth”. This passage has obvious connexion with Gen. i 1, where it is written “\textit{Bērēshīth} God created the heavens and the earth”. Now the force of the preposition \textit{bē} attached to \textit{rēshīth} may be interpreted as “IN” (“\textit{In rēshīth} God created”); hence \textit{IN} \textit{Him} were \textit{created} all things in the heavens and upon the earth, seen and unseen, whether thrones, or dominations, or principalities, or powers. But again, the preposition may bear the sense “BY” (“\textit{By the agency of rēshīth}”); hence \textit{all things were created through} \textit{Him}. Yet again it may be interpreted “INTO” (“\textit{Into rēshīth}”); from which it follows that creation tends \textit{into} \textit{Him} as its goal. Passing on to the substantive \textit{rēshīth}, we note that it ordinarily bears the sense “BEGINNING”; hence Christ is \textit{before} all things. It may also have the meaning “SUM-TOTAL”; so that \textit{all things are summed up in} \textit{Him}. Yet another meaning is “HEAD”, i.e. \textit{He is the Head} of the body, namely, the Church. Lastly, it means “FIRST-FRUIT”; \textit{He is first-fruits, first-begotten of the dead}. Hence it follows that \textit{in all senses \textit{He is the Füllfiller of the meaning of rēshīth (πρωτεύων)}’.

Putting the argument in tabular form for the sake of lucidity, it appears as follows.

Prov. viii 22 ff, where Wisdom (i.e. Christ) is called \textit{rēshīth}, gives the key to Gen. i 1, ‘\textit{Bērēshīth} God created the heavens and the earth’.
Bērēšith = ‘in rēshith’—en autō ἔκτισθη τὰ πάντα, κτλ.
Bērēšith = ‘by rēshith—πάντα δι’ autōn ektystat.
Bērēšith = ‘into rēshith’—πάντα εἰς autōn ektystat.
Rēshith = ‘Beginning’—autōs éstai πρὸ πάντων.
Rēshith = ‘Sum-total’—tà πάντα εν autō συνέστηκε.
Rēshith = ‘Head’—autōs éstin ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῦ σώματος, κτλ.
Rēshith = ‘First-fruits’—δι’ éstin ἄρχη, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν.

CONCLUSION. Christ fulfils every meaning which may be extracted from Rēshith—ίνα γένηται ἐν πᾶσιν autōs προτευῶν

If this interpretation is correct, we can trace phrase by phrase the lines along which St Paul’s thoughts were running. It is true that, if we look up rēshith in a Hebrew Lexicon, while we shall find the meanings Beginning and First-fruits, we shall not find the meanings Head and Sum-total; but since the substantive rēshith is derived from rōsh, which means Head, and which is also used with considerable frequency in the sense Sum-total,1 these two additional meanings would easily be referable to it. The Aramaic rēsh stands for both Hebrew rōsh and rēshith, and is susceptible of all the meanings postulated.

We have reference to the line of thought here based on the two Old Testament passages elsewhere in St Paul’s Epistles. Christ as the goal of creation is referred to in Ephes. i 10 ἀνακεφαλαίωσεν τὰ πάντα ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, ‘to bring all things under rēshith in Christ’, who is the Head and Sum-total of creation. The reversion of humanity to its Source, which is the aim of Christianity, is the κατὰ κτάσις to which the Apostle refers in 2 Cor. v 17, Gal. vi 15; cf. also Ephes. ii 10, autōn γὰρ ἐσμέν ποιήμα, κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. When this has been accomplished in the world, creation will have reached its goal.2

We may notice that several of the Fathers adopt the interpretation of bērēshith in Gen. i 1 as referring to Christ. We find it in Origen, Homily I on the Pentateuch, the opening of which runs thus in the translation of Rufinus: ‘“In principio creavit Deus coelum et terram.” Quod est omnium principium nisi Dominus noster et Saluator omnium Christus Jesus, “primogenitus omnis creaturae”? In hoc ergo principio, hoc est in Verbo suo, “Deus coelum et terram fecit”, sicut et Evangelista Ioannes in initio Evangelii sui ait, dicens: “In principio erat verbum” &c. Non ergo hic temporale aliquod principium dicit, sed “in principio”, id est in Salvatore, factum esse dicit coelum et terram et omnia quae facta sunt’. St Ambrose (Hexae-

1 Cf. Exod. xxx 12 ἀραβὲς ἐρασάσθη ἡ γῆ ὧν ‘When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel’ (i.e. their census); Lev. v 24; Num. i 2, 49, iv 2, 22, v 7, xxvi 2, xxxi 26, 49; Ps. cxxix 160, cxxxix 17.

2 The thought underlying δι’ ἐστιν ἄρχη, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν is brought out again in 1 Cor. xv 20 ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκομιμένων (cf. also v. 23).
meron I iv 15) and St Augustine (De Genesi ad litteram I 2) also give the same interpretation.

Another New Testament allusion to Prov. viii 22 in reference to Christ is found in Rev. iii 14 ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, a title of the risen Christ which Dr Swete and Dr Charles have not a shadow of authority for limiting in meaning to 'the Source of God's creation'. There is every reason to suppose that ἀρχή is here used with all the fullness of meaning which St Paul extracts from ἱερόστατος—Beginning, Sum-total, Head, First-fruits. This at any rate fits in with the statement of xxi 6, ἐγὼ τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, ἡ ἀρχὴ καὶ τὸ τέλος, where τὸ τέλος embodies the interpretation of ἱερόστατος 'into Him' as the goal.

C. F. Burney.

TWO NOTES ON THE BAZAAR OF HERACLIDES.

I.

In § 72 of the first part of Nestorius’s Apology, known as 'the Bazaar of Heraclides', there is a passage represented by dots only in Dr Bethune-Baker's Nestorius and his teaching p. 127, and very obscurely rendered in the Oxford translation, p. 65. It will be convenient to give the Syriac and a suggested translation at once.

And because He was accounted to be a more eminent observer of the Law than any on account of His behaviour towards all men,—but while He was spending time among many things it was easy,—contrariwise where there was nothing from which He might be helped He went forth into the wilderness by Himself, to be tempted by the Devil when He was more in need than anything in the world; and out of what is