IN 1575 there occurred one of those Smithfield fires that cast a lurid light on the toleration accorded by Queen Elizabeth's government to religious dissidents. In the last issue of the Transactions of the Baptist Historical Society (VI., 192), mention is made of the fact that on Easter Day in that year, some thirty Anabaptists from the Low Countries were arrested at a house in Aldgate. Evans (Early English Baptists, I., 151ff) gives a long account of their examinations and bearing before the authorities. The Bishop of London (Sandys, not Grindal, who had been translated to York five years previously), put four questions to them, to be answered "Yes" or "No," with the consequences of freedom or death. The questions were as follows, the answers being indicated:

"1. Whether Christ did not assume His flesh from the body of Mary? We replied that He is the Son of the Living God.

"2. Whether infants should not be baptized? We cannot understand matters so, for we read nothing of it in the Scriptures.

"3. Whether it was lawful for a Christian to attend to or discharge the duties of a magistrate's office? We replied that our conscience would not suffer us to do so; but we consider the magistracy as a minister of God for the protection of the servants of God.

"4. Whether a Christian was allowed to take an oath? We again replied, our conscience would not even allow us to do so, for Christ said, 'Let your communications be yea, yea, and nay, nay.'"

Five of the number signed a recantation, in which they spoke of their previous views as "damnable and detestable heresies," and promised to join the Dutch Church in London and abandon "all and every Anabaptistical error." The rest—the numbers vary slightly in the different accounts—remaining firm in spite of much persuasion and threatening, were sent back to prison, "fettered as before: the women were confined at Newgate, together with a young brother, but they were all released and transported. The young man, however, was tied to cart and scourged, and afterwards whipped out of town. We were in the midst of thieves and malefactors. These the bishop and a preacher worried, lest they might be corrupted by us and deceived."

To his great honour, John Foxe, the martyrologist, wrote a letter to the Queen, pleading for clemency, a letter acknowledged with gratitude by the prisoners, who sent to Foxe a defence and explanation of their opinions (Evans prints both Foxe's letter and the Anabaptists' acknowledgement). The interposition was fruitless, however, for, though two others were liberated, and one died in prison, two finished their course at Smithfield on July 22nd.

Astonishingly little information has come to light concerning the Anabaptists in this country up to the time of this incident. Apart from R. C.'s [Robert Cooche] tract, The Confutation of the Errors of the Careless by Necessity (c. 1557), extracted from John Knox's reply in Trans. Bapt. Hist. Soc., IV., 88ff, no work by an English Anabaptist of the period is known, and Cooche's is entirely concerned with election and predestination.

It is, therefore, difficult to discover exactly what views such Anabaptists as were in England held; all that can be gathered from references by contemporaries is that the Munster atrocities had cast such a shadow over the name that it was enough to damn individuals or opinions if they could be labelled "Anabaptist," much as with the terms "Radical" or "Socialist" at different times, or with "Bolshevik" today. Innumerable illustrations could be given. Cf. Index to Cal. Seconde Parte of a Register, "Anabaptism, Puritans deny charge of, I., 26, 84, 85, 105, 144, 229; II., 80." That the Anabaptists were themselves conscious of the odium attached to their name appears from the letter of one of those arrested in 1575, quoted by Evans, I., 153: "We had to forsake our friends, our country, and our possessions, on account of tyranny, and fled as lambs from a wolf, only because of the pure, evangelical truth of Christ, and not for uproar or faction's sake, like those of Munster, whose views are an abomination, of which we have been slanderously accused."

Occasionally scholars have discussed the influence of Anabaptism on the teaching of Robert Browne and his successors, but as yet there has been no real and systematic research concerning Anabaptist congregations in London, Norwich, and elsewhere. As so little evidence is available, it is all the more remarkable that the execution of 1575 and its significance have been overlooked, even by such capable students as Dr. Rufus Jones (chapter on "Anabaptists in England," in Studies in Mystical Religion) and Mr. Champlin Burrage (chapter on "The Anabaptists in England before 1612," in Early English Dissenters). There is a real opportunity for investigators in this field. Perhaps some student will be stimulated if words written by the present writer [A Week Among the Friends, 1917] are repeated: "In the century before that in which George Fox began his work, there were in many parts of the country bodies of worshippers—sometimes having much in common with the Anabaptists or the Family of Love—whose views were much akin to those of Fox's followers, and it is very desirable that some scholar, Friend, or other, should begin from Rufus M. Jones' Studies in Mystical Religion and Spiritual Reformers of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries, and discover if there is any connection between the emergence of the Quaker movement in 1646, and what looks like an inchoate Quakerism in the reign of Elizabeth."

Not only are there documents relating to the episode in the Record Office, but Evans deals with it at length, and there are references in many printed works, e.g. to mention only two, Parker Correspondence (Parker Soc., 479), Neal. History of the Puritans (1822, I., 273). Stowe, in his Annales (1631, 679), gives the facts so clearly as to deserve quotation:

"1575. On Easter Day, which was the 3 of Aprill, about 9 of the clocke in the forenoone, was disclosed a congregation of Anabaptists Dutchmen, in a house without the barres of Aldgate at London, whereof 27 were taken and sent to pryson, and foure of them bearing fagots recanted at Pauls Crosse on the 15 of May in forme as followeth... The 21 of May, being Whitsun even, one man and 10 women, Anabaptists Dutch, were in the Consistory of Pauls condemned to bee burnt in Smithfield, but after great paines taken with them, onely one woman was converted, the other were banished the land. . . . .

The 22 of July, 2 Dutchmen Anabaptists were burnt in Smithfield, who died in great horror with roaring and crying."

In his Early English Dissenters, I., 64, Mr. Burrage says: "While a few isolated Anabaptists are reported to have been in England at this period, there appears to be no good reason for doubting that the Anabaptists were then generally unknown in this country. However, about 1576 there seems to have been some fear prevalent that Anabaptism might spread among the English, for it is said that in that year a [Confutation was published, and also Bicknoll's work, c. 1577]. After 1577 (?) for some years England was not especially troubled by Anabaptistical tendencies, though Robert Browne, in 1582, says he and his followers have been called 'Anabaptists' because of their attitude towards magistrates." This whole passage should be considerably revised in the light of this execution, and of frequent references in the State papers and other places. Especially does it seem possible that Edmond Bicknoll's work, mentioned by Mr. Burrage, and assigned by him to about 1577: "A swoorde against swearing, conteynyng these principal poyntes, 1. That there is a lawful use of an oth, contrary to the assertion of the Manichees and Anabaptists," might have been written while the views of the Anabaptists of 1575, illuminated by the fires of Smithfield, were before men's minds. One quotation will serve to show the similarity between the points Bicknoll urges in "Anabaptista and Manachei," and those White presses on S.B. (1579 ed. Biiij verso—5 recto): "1. Gods commaunde­ment unto his people, to sweare by his name. 2. [Swearing by strange gods forbidden.]. 3. The example of God, swearyng for our capacitie. 4. Examples of Patriarkes, Prophetes, Apostles, and Christe hym selfe, which in no case can be contrary unto God his father."

With the situation now detailed, it is possible to turn to the document here printed. In the present writer's The Seconde Parte of a Register, a calendar of manuscripts now in the Dr. Williams's Library, an important item dealing with these Anabaptists is briefly summarised. It chronicles a lengthy controversy between S.B., of whom nothing is known other than appears from this conference, called by the heading "an English Anabaptist"; and William White, an able, if somewhat acrid, Puritan disputant, whose Puritanism approached, if it did not sometimes become, Separatism.

The discussion arises from and concerns the opinions propounded by the imprisoned Anabaptists. The wearing and use of weapons, the employment of oaths, and the individual's attitude to princes and magistrates, are all considered, and it is clear from White's "post­script," that another letter deals with the first question put to the Anabaptists, the Incarnation.

S.B. strongly sympathises with the Anabaptists, of whom he always speaks as "the children of God"; he refuses to wear a weapon or go to law; he is willing to suffer for the Gospel, but not to fight for it; he will not take an oath, neither will he trust to the wisdom of men, however learned, meaning "to leane to a more sure pillar than
Mr. Calvin." By a question to one of the prisoners, he obtains a denial of the allegation that they held women in common, and he is content to be a hewer of wood and a drawer of water for those whom he believes to belong not to a sect, but to the religion of Christ.

On the other hand, White, in strong language, accuses him of schism and heresy, because he belongs to a "handful in a corner," and condemns the universal church; and of pride and arrogance, because he despises learning and the writings of learned men. Throughout the discussion White continually insinuates that S.B. and his friends are opposed to all authority and government, but S.B. protests his obedience to the Queen, and claims he has spoken no word "against Magistrates."

From the conference we gather that S.B. was a carpenter, who has not been to the University, and has little time for study, as he desires to live on no man's bounty. Though he is resolute and unwavering in his opinions, his tone throughout the discussion is restrained and humble, in this contrasting favourably with that of his opponent, whose manner is so overbearing and violent that he appears to far less advantage here than when fighting for liberty before bishops and ecclesiastical commissioners.

White calls himself a baker, and Neal is probably correct in describing him as a "substantial citizen of London," for there seems to be no ground for the statement—made by many historians following Fuller—that he was "beneficed in London." A brief sketch of White by the present writer (Trans. Cong. Hist. Soc., VI., 4ff.), summarises his life and writings. [It is of interest to note that "William White" was the name of one of the "Mayflower" passengers, and a signatory to the covenant; there is no evidence to show whether there was any relationship between the namesakes.] When it is recognised how strongly he was opposed to "corruptions" in the English Church, and how far he was willing to go and how much to suffer to secure reforms, it is hard to see how he could maintain his position against S.B. Knowing, by bitter experience, and on more than one occasion, what imprisonment for conscience meant, he nevertheless makes no protest against the imprisonment and execution of the Anabaptists; telling the Commissioners that he and his fellow Puritans "resist not, but suffer that the authority layeth upon us," he remonstrates with S.B. for taking exactly the same stand. Similarly (Brook, Lives of the Puritans, I., 145-8n) he protests when the Lord Chief Justice makes use of an oath, and yet he has no patience with S.B.'s scruples concerning swearing, and who would imagine that it is S.B.'s opponent who speaks thus concerning princes and magistrates (The Seconde Parts of a Register, I., 100f):
"How if thei will not lead the way? Are we discharged? hath none made promise to keepe God's lawes but princes, prechers, and magistrates? or neede not we keepe and do his lawes except thei command us? or shall we be excused by saying, the Magistrates would not suffer us to do his will? or by saying, we would have done this, but all the learned were against us? All this will be none excuse for us; it will be sayde to us, Search the Scriptures, for in them you thinke to have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me; and we shall not be judged by our Magistrates and the wordes that thei speake . . . . [In England] there is not such asking what God will and commandeth, as what the Injunctions, what the Advertisements, etc."

One or two new facts concerning White appear in this bare chronicle of his life and writings:

1567. June 20. Appears before Bishop Grindal, &c., as one of the leaders of the congregation taken worshipping in the Plumbers' Hall. His bearing suggests that he is young, bold, and outspoken; he knows the methods of the Genevan Church, and argues for the "Genevan book," urging that the practice of "the best reformed churches" should be followed. (The account of the examination is reprinted in Grindal, Remains (Parker Soc., 201ff), from A Parte of a Register, 23ff). Must have been released, for 1569. Apr. 22. Is discharged from Bridewell with 30 others—altogether 24 men and 7 women. (Burrage, II., 12.)

1569. Dec. 19. Again before Bishop. (Sec. Parte Reg., I., 64.)

1571. Does not appear in references to Richard Fitz's congregation, and is free, as writings show. (The present writer deals with some doubtful points concerning Separatist congregations in London at this time in a volume to be published almost immediately.)

1572. Writes a preface, "to have bene set before the Admonition to the Parliament." (printed in The Seconde Parte of a Register, I., 82). His close connection with Field and Wilcox appears in many ways.

1575 and 1576. The document here printed, subsequent to which no reference to White has so far been discovered.

The following papers by, and concerning White are given in The Seconde Parte of a Register. Numbers 58 and 65 are anonymous, but they come in the midst of White's writings in the MS. Seconde Parte of a Register, and may safely be attributed to him.

No. 49. I. 82 "A preface . . . to have bene set before the Admonition to the Parliament" [1572].
No. 58. I. 97. "That the Church of England is not a perfect Church, as some men suppose." [1573.]
No. 60. I. 99. Mr. Whit's examination before the Commissioners" 1574.
No. 61. I. 100. "A brief of such things as obscure God's glory" [n.d.].
No. 62. I. 101. A letter to Edward Deering. [1574?]
No. 65. I. 107 A letter to the Earl of Huntingdon. [n.d.]
add the present manuscript:

On the whole, the manuscript now printed for the first time is an excellent example of Elizabethan religious controversy, and it will be read with no little interest at a time when non-resistance and the Christian's attitude to weapons and war are again the subjects of keen disputation. It will be noted that the kinship of the Anabaptist with the Quaker appears alike in this particular and in the matter of using oaths and law courts.

The document needs little in the way of editing, but it may be of service to make clear that the course of the controversy was as follows, after oral conferences:

2. S.B. Letter, referred to by White as "your former letter," or "your other letter."
3. White. "Mine answer," all not extant, followed by
4. S.B. "Your replie," dissected here by White, and
5. White. Answered by him in sections in the present letter.
6. S.B. Marginal comments.

Although there is some repetition, especially when White sums up or repeats his opponent's argument before replying to it, the reader is carried along—with perhaps the exception of the exposition of Hebrews 6 in No. 27—alike by subject matter and dialectical display.

It would not be right for me to close this brief introduction without an expression of thanks to Dr. Whitley for various suggestions and emendations.

ALBERT PEEL.

[The temper and the argument of S.B. will be best appreciated by taking his letter as a whole, omitting White's answer marked by himself W, reading only the paragraphs marked B.—W.T.W.]

MR. WHITES WRITINGES.

A Conference between a Christian and an English Anabaptist.

Before I answer to your reply, wherein, as also in your other letters, you endeavour covertly to hide the grossenes and ground of your error, I have thought it good therefore to set downe the originall and first cause of all our conference and writing, that it may the better appeare to what scope, end and drifte you allege and applie chieflie all those Scriptures and examples in your replie and saide letter contained as followeth.

The originall and first cause of all our conference and writing began (as you knowe) by finding you in Newgate with those ix Anabaptists that were banished, where in conference with one of them, I alledged Mr. Calvin, and offered her the booke to have read his wordes, which she refused, saying she or thei did not depend upon men. To whose wordes you added as seemed to confirme hir, that if there had never bene moe booke but the holie Scriptures onely, they had bene sufficient etc.

You also demanded of them of them [sic] in my presence without any cause offered, if they helde women to be common, as it seemed to mee also, even to drawe from them a purgation thereof, and to justifie them in the reste. Also at the same time and place, being come from the leads above, where thos said 9 Anabaptists were, into the neather hall, I tooke you aside and told you that I did not believe that you were inclining to the sect of the Ana[baj]ptists, because I had often heard such report of you, but because I had now taken you with the manner &c. To which you answered that you would never conceile that with your mouth which you believed in your harte, which was that of longtyme you have thought it unlauffull to weare weapon, wherupon I required of you that we might have some conference about that matter; and that you would note the same with any other pointe you stood upon, which thinge you promised to do, but before you performed your promise I mette you againe in Letch lane, where in like conference you affirmed that if a thief or a murtherer did come to robbe or kill you would perswade that he should not kill or robbe, and escape by flying if you could, but you would not use nor weare weapon nor resiste in any maner.

Further you declared the losses you had sustained by divers that did withhold your right, but you would neither contend in lawe, complaine to the magistrate, nor warne them to the Courte of Conscience, declaring what a terror of conscience you you had for once warninge one thether. And in conclusion you greatly blamed Mr. Wiburne for using law against Ditcher etc, with much other like talke tending to the same or like effect, and this was the originall the first and onely cause of our conference, to the defence and approbation wherof both your firste lettre and this your replie to my awnswer doth chiefly tend. Now to your reply upon mine awnswer as foloweth

The grace of god holy spirit be with us now and allwaies. Amen.

W.
That god will take from you the spirit of error and lies, and give to you and continue with us both his grace and spirit of trueth I adde to your Amen. So be it.

B.2.
Mr. White and brother in the lord, I have received your great and plentifull letter, thanking you most humblie for your great curtesie you would vouchsafe to take so great paines to write to me, being so simple and rude in understanding as I am; but God make me to understand his truth. Amen."

W.
It pleaseth you to begin your replie with verie plausible words:
1: calling me Mr and Brother etc.
2: termynge my lettre greate and plentifull
3: you give most humble thanks etc.
and lastlie: you cast your self downe, as it were, at my feete, in a shew of acknowledging your simplicitie and rudenes in understanding etc.

Of all your great curtesie I must rest indebted somewhat. For though I acquite some part of your kindenes in calling you Mr. B. and brother, yet can I not adde in the lorde, nor account your lettres great and plentifull in any good matter, but penned and applied to a most divelish purpose: and therfore I could better have accepted both of you and them, if with lesse commendation, thanks, and shew of submission, you had yielded to the truth of those points in which we disagree. But it may be doubted that notwithstanding your shew of simplicitie, and rudenes in understanding, yt will fall out in the end that in your owne conceit you thinke of yourself and your owne secte to be wiser and to understand more then the whole world besides.7

B.3.
I did not thinke seing ocicasion so served you would have written no sooner, but that at the first sight you had bene able to have confuted my reasons, and the force of my matter, but the scriptures alleged by me, sinfull wretch, and written with my unskillfull hande, be not so easilie confuted.

W.
Even now you begin to shew that howsoever before you pretended simplicitie and rudenes in understanding, yet you thinke very well of your self (as the rest of your secte doe). For where you have Ironicallie and in mockage saide that you did not thinke but at the first sight I was able to confute your reasons etc., you presentlie adde but the scriptures alleged by me, sinfull wretch, and written with my unskillfull hande . . . be not so easilie awnswered. By wch wordes8 you bewray this meaning, that in your opinion thei can not be awnswered.

B.4.
I alleged in talke and in writing that I thought it not lawfull for me to revenge my wrongs done unto me by extremity of lawe, nor to requite any blowes given me with the like, concludinge therby that I neede weare no weapon.

W.
At the time and place before cited, that is to saye, with those Anabaptists in Newgate you there and then not by a conclusion but in plaine wordes affirmed that of long time you have thought [it] unlawfull to weare weapon: which opinion with other like you also affirmed in our second conference, and do indeavour to approve and defend in both your lettres. And allbeit you would covertly hide your errors by saying it is not lawfull for you onelie to revenge wrong, and to requite blowes, yet is it manifest by the opinion and practise of you and your secte that you condemne as unlawfull, not onely the revenging of wronges and requiting of blowes etc, and that for & among your selves
A Conscientious Objector of 1575

onely, but do allso condemne the lawfull use of lawe, the use of weapon etc, among all Christians, and so consequently all Christian Magistrates which use lawes, weapons, and munition for government and defense of their people and countries: but this doctrine you did not observe or had not well learned when you your self did weare weapon, and also at another time did not onely requite blowes with the like, but did offer a brother injuries and threatened to breake his head, that offered to you neither blowe nor evill worde.

B.5.

But you say that those things which the lord hath sanctified in their lawfull use to his holie Church ought not to be refused of any member of the same. To which I briefly awnswer, that there are things sanctified to all the whole Church, and yet may be refused of some members of the same without displeasing of God: as, for example, god hath ordeined wyne to comfort the hart of man, and yet may some live and drinke no wine, as did the Rechabites, and yet please god. The Scripture saith that mariage is honourable among all men, and St. Paul saieth, let everie man have his wife and everie woman her husband, yet may not some men be without wives and some women without husbandes? Yes, for St. Paul commended the unmaried state better.

W.

I thought, as wrote in my former lettre, that I had to deale not with a contentious cavilling brother: but I finde my self now greatlie deceived, for besides many cavills wherof I shall have cause to speake after, as occasion is offered, you in these wordes before cited do shew your self not onelie a caviller, but also a very enemye, in falsyfying my wordes. For where in my former lettre I say that those things which God hath sanctified in their lawfull use to his whole Church ought not to be condemned as unholy by any member of the same, you for my wordes ought not to be condemned as unholie, do adde ought not to be refused: and then you tryumph before the victorie, in awnswering your owne wordes, which deserveth like praise as a man to fight with his owne shadowe. And because here you awnswer not me but your self, I might justlie leave you without awnswer. But least you should seeme to[o] wise in your owne conceipt, take this for awnswer. First, allbeit the Rechabites refused to drinke wine, yet thei did not condemne the drinking therof as unholie or unlawfull, as you do those things before cited. Secondly, as the Rechabites obeying their fathers will in not drinking wine please God, so their disobeyinge their fathers will in not dwelling in tents, did not displease God. Thirdlie, neither Rechab nor any other (except you will graunte a more ancient popedome than that of Rome) hath any authoritie to forbid the lawfull use of gods creatures as unholy to the faithfull and thankfull receivers therof. Forthly, the example of the Rechabites is not set downe to teach that absteiners from wine and other gods creatures do please god better than the faithfull and thankfull receivers therof, but to reprehend the disobedient Jewes, who were lesse carefull to obey and fullfill the commandments of god their heavenlyfather, than the Rechabites were to obey and do the commandements of their earthlie father. Likewise touching mariage, that some men may be without wives and some women without husbandes I graunt, so that none condemne mariage as unhofie and unlawfull for Christians, as do the papists in their priests etc, and as you and your secte do the use of weapons, the use of law etc; neither doth Paul commend the unmaried state better, but by reason of the incommodities and troubles which mariage hath more than single life, and especially in time of persecution.

B.6.

So most men are given to revenge and fewest to suffer; do those that will not revenge, stand in a more daungerous state than the revenging and bloodthirstie man? doth the shepe of Christs his shepefold? (or els can he hurte the wolfe, though he be his greatest enemie, or any of them which are out of the shepefold) ledd before the shearers & are dumbe not opening their mouth?

W.

This which you inferre would better have folowed yf you had firste sayed: as most men are given to mariage, and fewest do live unmaried, as most men do drinke wine and fewe abstaine, so most men are given to revenge, and fewest to suffer: which lacke of order I onelie note to decke your ignorance, and to commend the benefits of learning, which you and your secte to[o] little regarde, and to[o] much neglect and contenne. But to the matter: with those most which are given to revenge you seeme to include all that are not of your minde, and with those fewe that suffer you include your self and your secte. And by your demaund: whether those that will not revenge do stand in a more daangerous estate than the revenging and bloodthirsty man etc. you do as it were inferre that all those that contend in law, that weare and use weapon, and that use the defense of the magistrate, are but revengers and bloudthirstie men. This is the charitie and perfection of you & your secte, who in respecte of your selves, one handful in a corner, do condemne the universall Church of Christ as revengers and bloudthirsty men. Your demand if Christes shepe doth or can hurte the wolfe is the same question that your two companions which were executed did often use, saying, where finde you that the shepe persecuteth the wolfe: by which wordes you shew this meaning, that you account you and your secte shepe, and all the princes and magistrates that punish you, and other heretiques to be wolves. Behold one parte of your obedience to princes and magistrates: the rest will appeare hereafter.
A Conscientious Objector of 1575

B.7.

Though Christ call his a little flocke, you shall finde in all ages it hath not bene great. You know how many were in the time of Noah, how many were in Sodom, how many false prophets were against Micheas, how many were against Elias, how many were there that received Christ, when he came among his owne, his owne received him not? if you marke this, you may say with Esdras, there is much earth for pots, and but little for golde.

W.

My wordes in my former letter, to which you here awnswer, are these. Though Christe call his a little flocke, yet is it universall and 10000 times greater than a poore deceived secte, which neither is, was, or ever shall be universall. By which wordes I laboured to diswade you from the fellowship of your secte, to joine and keepe unitie with the Church of Christe which is universall. So that you had here chieflie to prove that your secte was, is, and ever shall be universall, and that Christe his little flocke is not universall nor greater than your deceived secte, which thing you not once touch, but allege divers scriptures and examples, to prove the smallnes of Christs flocke, which thing was not nor never was in controversy betweene us, otherwise than before is said, and to what end you urge those scriptures and examples I know not, except you accompt you and your secte Noahs and Christ his Church the old world, you etc. Lothes family and Christe his Church Sodom, you and your secte Micheas and Elias, and Christs Church false prophets, you metall for gold and Christe his Church metall for pots—except I saie unto this end I know not to what end you should recite the same.

B.8.
And wheras you call the deceived poore, it is most seene that in this world these be the richest, and goddes true Church the poorest, it is shee that must wander in the deserte, with he[r] two wings from the rage of the Dragon, she must be condemned and despised & put up all her injuries. As concerning the universall Churche I shall have occasion to speake of her after

[W.]
Indeed in my former lettre, I call you & your company a poore deceived secte &c, and not onelie the deceived poore, as you say, to which you should have awnswered. But that you passe over with a discourse of the rich and prosperous estate of the wicked in this world, & the poore afflicted state of Christ's true Church, which matter allso is not nor was not in controversie betweene us, except you covertly account your secte the true Church, which must wander in the desert to be condemned, despised, etc., which meaning you the rather seeme to have in that having immediately before saide that God's true Churche must be afflicted you presently adde. As concerning the universall Church, I shall have occasion to speake of her after, so that you make a difference betwixt gods true Church mentioned before, and the universall Church of which you promise to speake after.

B.9.
Where you bid me shew better groundes for my parte, I can laye no better foundation than the holie scriptures, which is the piller & ground of truth, on which truth god graunt me to builde and no other. amen.
Thus much by the occasion of the wordes of your firste syde of paper.

[W]
It is true that in my former lettre I willed you, either to keepe unitie with the universall Church of Christ, or els to bring better better groundes to prove your dissent lawfull, as in my saide lettre etc. So that in your awnswer you were to shew upon what groundes you leave the unitie and felowship of the universall Church of Christ and joyne your self with a sect of hereticks, or els to leave your saide sect and keepe unitie with the Church of Christe. But this you passe over with this awnswer—you can lay no better foundation than the holie scriptures, but not shewing here what scriptures those be which are your founda-
A Conscientious Objector of 1575

So that you seeme here to graunte as much as before I charged you with, which is, that the whole scope and drift of both your lettres, and all those scriptures and examples therein alleged tend to no other end than this, to prove those pointes which you affirmed in talke, and also your dissent and separation from Christs Church lawfull. Touching your generall foundation of hollie scriptures etc, I awnswer, As I graunt hollie scriptures understood and alleged by the same spirit by which they were first writen to be a strong foundation and the pillar of truth, so being understood and alleged by that lying spirit which deceived Achab, and hath deceived all heretiques in all ages, as it doth you and your sect at this present, as thei and you pervert and abuse the same, is a verie weake foundation and the pillar of lies. But upon this foundation and no other you pray God you may build, with Amen to that prayer, and thus you end all that you tooke occasion to awnswer as you confesse after, to the worst of my lettre, wherein my awnswer to the former lettre was inclosed, which it pleaseth you to name my first side of paper.

Now foloweth your replie to myne awnswer to your former letter.

B.10.

As I saide afore so say I still, I spake those thinges of my self, those that are otherwise minded have learne[d] further than I have done. The Scriptures that moved me therto I alleged, which I gather by your writing you thinke be not aptly or truely applied, but when you come in place where as you thinke you have confuted them, I will either yield or shew you the cause why I do not.

W.

You proceed in your replie affirming that you spake those things of your self, not namyng what things, but by adding those which are otherwise minded, have learned further than you have done, you seeme not onely to justifie your opinion touching those things here unnamed, but alalso condemn the judgement of all which are contrarie mynded, as though their learning, not agreeable to your opinion, did passe the boundes of truth. What those things are here unnamed you partly name in the 4 place, but more plainlie in my brief note before this mine awnswer, wherin I shew the original cause of all our conference. Touching those Scriptures which move you to your saide opinion, & my dislike of your unapt and untrue applying of the same, I referre to your appointed place, where you promise either to yield or els to shew cause why you do not. But this I must tell you by the way, there had not bene a fitter place to avnswer this matter than where I required the same, which was the last point you handled, as in the 9th place appeareth.

BII.
And first in your long discourse, that princes are ordeined of god, and set up by the ordinaunce of god, I marvaile much why you should make this discourse to me, for I have neither to you nor to any other at anytime said otherwise, but confesse with Paul that thei be ordeined by god, and thei that resist them resist the ordinaunce of god, and so purchase to themselves damnation; and I confesse that I owne unto them all reverence, feare, dutie, and obedience, both in bodie and goods, as much as is due to Cesar, and you shall not, nor any other, speake so much of obedience to princes, nor of their calling, but I will subscribe to it; yea, if all men were of my minde, Kings should live without feare in their kingdomes; so many in this realtime and other Countries would not rebell and lift up thei swords against their princes: thei would onelie suffer for the gospell, and not fight for the gospell, contrary to the example of Christe.

W.
I blame you not for using many worde to purge your self in this pointe, for it toucheth the quicke, not so much toward your body and goods by our prince, for contemnyng and condemning lawfull things by her lawes commandende, as of gods judgements toward your soules for secluding your selves from the Church of Christe to joyne with a secte of heretiques. But to your wordes. And first touching your great marvaile why I should make such a long discourse to you that princes are ordeined of god, which marvaile would easilie be removed, if you would consider that to deny that Christians may contend in lawe, may use and pray defense of the magistrate, and also weare and use weapons etc, is such a denyall of the lawfullnes of magistrates as all your pointed protestation Can not cleare you therof. For allbeit you say with Paul, thei are ordeined of God, that whose resisteth them procureth to himself damnation, that you owe unto them all reverence etc. as much as is due to Cesar, and that neither I nor any other shall speake so much of obedience, nor of their calling, but you will subscribe to it, all this notwithstanding, your subscription is but with tongue and hand, for your deed & harte sheweth contrarie, of which I shall have occasion to speake more after. But if you will now know
A Conscientious Objector of 1575 wherin I answer—in joyning yourself with a secte of heretiques and secluding yourself from & contemning all publique exercises used in Christe his Church in England, wherunto not onely a prince by her lawes, but allso god by his law doth commaund. But, say you, if all men were of your minde kings should live without feare. Indeed (if you meane as you say) kings should live without feare, either because you will not use nor weare any weapon, or els because you would neither use nor have a king, which your sect saieth is a vocation contrary or against the perfection of the gospell. You adde further: Thei would onely suffer for the gospell and not fight for the gospell. By which wordes you shew your dislike of the warres in other countries about religion; but as I for lacke of judgement and understanding their case can not alltogether commend them, so wiser then either you or I or 10000 such dare not condemne them. Neither doth the example of Christ so binde us to suffer for the gospell, but that in some case we may allso fight for the gospell, of which I shall have occasion to speake more hereafter.

B.12.
And wheras you bring in many examples of those that have made requests to kings, I have at no time spoken against it, but that it is lawfull as thus: If one more mightie than I should defraude me of my goodes, I thinke I may speake or sue for it by way of request, if I thinke I may obteine it, and allso be sure that no hurte may come to the partie by the meanes of my suite.

W.
You graunt here that it is lawfull to make suit unto kinges, but yet with thses circumstances: 1. by way of request, 2 beeing sure to obteine, 3 against your superior, and lastly, being sure that no hurte may come to the partie therby. And why not, I pray you, against your equall or against your inferior though the matter rest doubtfull, and allso the party both restore your owne and be blamed, punished, or damned for wrongfull withholding the same. And allso, if it be lawfull to sue to kinges, why not at the law and allso at the Courte of Con-science? both which you by expresse wordes denied to me, as is saide in the originall of the conference. And further if you will not sue against any nor reveile offenders, but by your rule above saide, and that you be sure no hurte maie come to the parties, you must keepe counsaille with whores, bawdes, thieves, traitors, heretiques etc, if you know any such, for thei being reveiled must be punished, hanged, headed etc as their demerits deserve by the lawes of god and our Country, and by keeping Counsaille with any such you are guiltie of their sinne, and deserve the punishment.

B.13.
But this I thinke to be verie evill, if an evill man should revile me, calling me rebell and such like, and if I by friendship and extremitie of lawe, might condemme him in 100 marks, and so he will not or is not able to pay me, and I cast him [into] prison till he satisfie me, to the undoing of his wife & familie, in this doing doth my light shine before men? or are thei occasioned by this evill facte to glorifie the heavenly father?
Christ saieth, be mercifull, as your heavenly father is mercifull.
If you be friendly to them that be friendly to you, what reward shall you have? the verie infidells do so. Marke the example of him to whom his Master forgave the great debte to[ok] his fellow by the throate for 20d.

[W].
That which you here so much dislike is indeed in some case to be disliked, but not in everycase to be condemned. God and the consciences of such as deale so, must be the onely judge whether thei do well or no. He whome you seeme chiefly to touch & note for example herein, can shew better reasons (I doubt not) for his doing than you or I and 100 such can shew cause to the contrary; and thus much will I say in his defense whome you note your example by: that partie which reviled and dispisde him the mynister of Christ & of God did revile not only him & Christs mynistry, but Christ allso and God himself, accordinge to this saying,

He that despiseth you despiseth me etc., so that his light shineth never the lesse before men, nor God is never the lesse but much more glorifie, by the lawfull punishing of such a one. But (as it seemeth) your common quarrell is under pretence of dislike with the rigor of the law (as you terme it) covertly as your maner is, to condemme the lawfull use thereof. That which you alledge how Christ biddeth us to be mercifull, and that to our enemies, willing us to marke him to whom his lord forgave the great debte, which tooke his fellow by the throate for 20d, which it pleaseth you to name 20d, doth not make to the contrarie but that my light may shine and god be glorifie by punishing of a wicked person, as for example if a godly brother and faithfull subject should finde your crewe at your next meeting, and cause the magistrate to apprehend you all, should not his light shine and God thereby be glorified, when the reprobate heretics should be punished, & the deceived elect converted? I trow yea.

B.14.
And now to your proof for wearing of weapon, and using the same. Those examples that you bring in can not persuade me neither to use weapon, nor to weare them. And first you bring in the example of Abraham, which was before there was any law given, then Josua under the law, and all the Judges and Kings after, which did that they did by the commandement of God. And now we are not under the law but under grace, by the gospell, and our state is altered, and we are delivered from the rigour of the law and the ceremones therof by the bloude of Christe.

My proofs for wearing and use of weapon are such, that allbeit thei can not move or perswade you, neither to use nor weare weapon, yet can you not confute my proofs and examples, neyther do you yield therto, nor shew cause why you do not as you promised in the 1o place. I referre you to the better view of my proofs and examples in my former lettre, which in effect are these which follow: Sith wearing and lawfull use of weapon hath not onely bene used of all godly in all ages, but also approved and commanded by God himself, and the lawfull use not abrogate by Jesus Christe (as you and your sect do fondly imagine) who in no pointe is contrarie to his father. Also sith God vouchsafeth to be called the god of battell and a manne of warre, who teacheth mens handes to fight and their fingers to warre, as witnesseth David. And further it is sette downe in the scriptures by the holie ghoste for a miserable thraldome when there was no smith in Israel to make weapon for defense, and also is noted among other things a great punishment of God to take away the man of warre, the captaine, and the cunning artificer etc, as in my former lettre. All which you thinke is sufficiently awnswered by this cavill, that Abraham his usinge of weapon was before the law, that the Judges and Kings did that which they did by the commandement of God, that we are delivered from the law and the ceremonies therof etc. Note nowe your proper confutation of my proofs with an apt alledgging and applying of scriptures, & substantiall approbation of your opinion. Abraham used weapon before the law was given, ergo Christians may neither use nor weare weapon in the time of Christ & the gospell. Judges and Kings did that which they did by the commandement of god, ergo Christian princes & magistrates may not weare & use weapon by the commandement of god. We are not under the law, but under grace, ergo we are delivered from the law and ceremonies thereof, ergo etc., by which last sentence you seeme to graunt that to weare and use weapon is a part of the rigor of the lawe, and also of the ceremoniall lawe, and if that be so I pray you shewe what signification the wearing and using of weapons had, for all the Ceremonies of the law had their signification.

And where you allege Nehemiah, how in the building of the temple the people defended themselves with bowes, spears, & shields, to what purpose is it to allege that example, except you would go build a new materiall temple, for this spirituall temple which that did figure must be builded with spirituall weapons, which before I alleged; and yet you can not finde that they were commaunded to build it with weapons in their handes.

If malice did not blinde you with great desire to cavill, you might easily see that I allege not the hystory of Nehemiah for the building of a new materiall temple, but to prove the wearing and use of weapon lawfull, which you deny. Which I prove, in that god did approve the use & give victory by the meanes thereof, & that even in the building of his holy temple; & though as you say I do not finde by expresse wordes that they were commaunde to builde with weapon in their handes, yet this I finde: that when the enemies conspired they first prayed to god, secondly they appointed watch and ward, thirdly, god allowing their doings and accepting their prayers brought their enemies counsell to nought, & lastly they conceived assurance that god would fight for them, all which is a sufficient approbation of their lawfull use of weapon. And this example in like occasion is to be folowed of all Christians in all ages as at this day; for example, if the Turke, the Pope, and like enemies should conspire against Christ his Church in England, it were the part of the prince, rulers, preachers, and people, first to pray to God, secondly to put on armor & to appoint watch & ward day & night, thirdly, to proceed still in building gods spirituall temple, by preching his gospell, having gods booke in the one hand, and the pike & halberde or other weapon in the other hand:
and thus as in other cases we must suffer for the gospel, so in this and like cases (as in my answer to the 11 place) Christians may & oughte to fight for the gospel. Your spiritual weapons before alleged be in my former answer sufficiently answered, and shall again be touched, as place and occasion is offered.

B.16.
You say that in all the new testament there is not one worde against the use and wearing of weapon; & I thinke you can not alledge one commaundement nor any example of any that have faithfullie embraced Christe stroke one stroake with hand or weapon; as for Peters sword wherwith he stroke off Malcys eare dothe smally make for your purpose, for that Christe rebuked him for his fact and healed the servants eare, & as I saide afore in my last lettre, how Christ sayeth All that strike with the sword shall perish with the sword.

W.
It is true which I say that in all the new testament there is not one word against the wearing and lawfull use of weapon.
But there is a rule prescribed to soildiers, whose vocation & calling is to weare and use weapons. And Christe himself in saying to those which apprehended him you be come out as it were against a thiefe with swordes and staves etc, doth therby graunt a lawfull use of swordes and staves and other weapons in apprehending of thieves. And god provided by his lawe that he which in apprehending a thief slew him with weapon being in the night, should not dye nor suffer any domage for the same. Allso if to wear and use weapon had bene unlawfull Christe would have suffered no swordes in his company. Which lawfull use of weapon is not proved unlawfull by saying that there can not be found any one commaundement or example of any that faithfullie embraced Christe that stroke one stroke either with hand or weapon. In which worde you seeme to graunt that all those which strike with hand or weapon are no faithfull embracers of Christe: which is a hard judgement to all princes, magistrates, warriours, parents, maisters, executioners.
Touching Peters striking off Malcus eare, as it maketh not for you nor any whit against me, but rather with me in that he had a sword, which if it had bene unlawfull Christe would not have suffered as is saide. Neither do I make any mention thereof, but it pleaseth you here as in other places, (belike to seeme to saye something or having pleasure to heare yourself speake) to propound questions and answer the same. By your wrestinge of Christes wordes, he that striketh with the sword shall perish with the sword you at once convince yourself both of ignorance and error, of ignorance in that you seeme to understand that Christ without exception saieth he that striketh &c shall perish &c., of error in that you denie the lawfull use of the sworde, for it is manyfest that Christ speaketh of such as use the sworde unlawfullie, and not against such as lawfullie use the same, as magistrates, souldiers, executioners may do, who have the swordes put into their handes by God, and not for nought, as saieth St. Paul Rom. 13.

Allso I shewed you out of Peter how Christe suffered for us leaving us an example that we should follow his steppes: shewe me in the printe of any of Christes footesteppes, that he dyd resist by force, and then I will subscribe to you, shewe me the steppes of any of the Apostles who folowed our saviour or any of the godly in the first Church, and this shall both be retracted and recanted. He that worketh not needeth no tooles, he that resisteth not needeth no weapon, and Christ saith the servant is not greater than his master, nor the disciple above his lorde.

Now that the wearing and lawfull use of weapon is not onely proved by example of all godliy in all ages but allso by the approbation and commaundement of god himself, & of Christe allso (as is saide) and not one worde for disproof of it in all the new testament, now, I say, you bring in the example of Christe to disprove & confute the same, as though the example of Christe condemned as unlawful the wearing and lawfull use of weapon. You require to see the printe and use therof in the footesteppes of Christe, & then you will subscribe. But if you will subscribe to nothing but that you finde the printe and use of in the footesteppes of Christe then you must allso deny mariage, for Christe was not married, you must deny the dwelling in houses, for Christe had no howse. this you graunt in the 32 place, you must deny to have judges, for Christe would be no judge, you must deny to have a kinge, for Christe would be no kinge (both which your sect doth) you must deny to punish offenders, for Christe would not punish the adulteresse, to which end it seemeth you alledge that texte, as in the 25 place. All which things with a number moe, you can not shew the printe or use in the footesteppes of Christ his example. will you not therfore subscribe to these as lawfull? but condemne the same, as you do the use & wearing of weapon & contending in law etc. Thus whilst you endeavour many waies to avoid the snare you are fallen into the pit which you most feared. To your saying (he that worketh not needeth no tooles) I awnswer, let him to whome God hath appointed no worke be without toole, and then see how well that foloweth which you inferre.
You allso alledge this saying of Chryste, but verie aptly the servant is not greater than his lord &c., upon which sentence I will conclude & leave you to conclude upon that which foloweth.
As Chryste did neither use nor weare weapon &c, no more must those that will be Christ his perfect discipes, upon which followeth: Chryste had no wife, Chryste had no house, Chryste would be no judge, Chryste would not punish adultery, Chryste would be no kinge, Ergo etc.

B.18.

And where you bring in the souldiers that came to John Baptist for that he had them not leave of[f] being souldiers, & est away their weapons, & so you conclude we may use weapons. but as you trulie alledge he bad them do no violence &c., & how can a man be a souldier but he must needes do violence, leave of[f] from violence & leave of[f] from being a souldier. As when Naaman the Syrian spake to Eliseus, and desired god to be mercifull unto him, that when his king went into the temple of his Idol Rimmon, & that he must bow before the Idol, the prophet bade him go in peace, not that he gave him licence to bow before Rimmon, but knowing if Naaman would have peace of conscience, he would no[t] bowe before Rimmon; even so John Baptist knew if the[y] did leave of[f] oppression, they would not be soldiers.

W.

Sith you still prosequute this matter. I must still follow your humor in awnswering you. It is true that I bring in the soldiers that came among others to John Baptist, who because (as I have saide) he doth not bide them leave of[f] to be souldiers, but prescribeth them rules to observe in their vocation, & therof conclude that to be a soldier, to weare & use weapon is not unlawfull for Christians. You graunt I trulie alledge that he bade them do no violence, and then you demaund how a man can be a souldier, and not do violence, adding this conclusion leave of[f] from violence, & leave of[f] from being a souldier. You may allso make a like demaund how a man can be a prince, a magistrate, an executioner, & not do violence, & then conclude, leave off from violence & leave off from being a prince, a magistrate, an executioner. But as St. John in this place, so Christ to the centurion, Peter to Cornelius, & Paul to the Jailer doth teach them to be Christians, and yet not to leave their vocations of being captains, soldiers, jailors etc, to which also agreeth this saying of St. Paul, let every man where he is called therein abide with God. Now if you can shew me where Christ and his apostles have willed any in becoming Christians to leave their vocations you have said somewhat. Your long discourse of Naaman the Syrian, and your exposition of the prophets bidding him farewell, with your conclusion therupon, as it maketh nothing for the proof of your opinion, so is the same farre fetched, and doth manifestly shew your arrogant boldnes, in thus abusing the scriptures, and also your malicious ignorance in not making difference betwixt soldiers, the wearing and use of weapon etc. which God hath approved and commended (as in my answer to the 14 place) and the bowing before an Idoll, which god so expresselie and so often forbiddeth in the holie scriptures.

B.19.

And for that Paul was brought afore Felix by the 2 centurions, you reade not that it was his request to have those armed men though the chief captaine did send them, and Pauls trust was not in them but onely in god, for you reade in the same chapter how the lord afore stood by Paul, and bad him be of good courage, shewing him that as he had testified and borne witnes of him at Jerusalem, so should he do at Rome, which promise more strengthened and confirmed Paul than the 2 centurions with their 200 soldiers; as for example, if you yourself were cunstable, deputy, or governor, & I being your prisoner & delighting not in armed men and weapon as you see, yet if you wolde send me with soldiers and armed men to some other place or prison, I could not lette you, nor being a prisoner it became me not though I esteeme it not.

W.

Allbeit St. Paul required not those armed men nor put trust in them but in god, by whom he was more strengthened than by those 472 armed men, which is pleaseth you to name 200, yet did he not refuse those meanes offered of god as unlawfull, & further by causing that conspiracy to be made knowne to the chief captaine by his sisters sonne St. Paul did as it were not Conscientious Objector of 1575. 95

...pray defense or not to be brought forth as the conspirators desired, but also approved and used those meanes as lawfull. And as in this place so in the 21 chapter of the same, God who hath all meanes, did yet use a like meane to preserve Paul's life, which if it had bene unlawfull it is likely God would not have used, & St. Paul would have refused the same, & also reproved the captaines as well as he did the high priest for striking him contrary to the lawe, which you by an example with a long discourse say it was not his part so to do being a prisoner; also you say well if I were a constable; you seeme [to] allowe no such office among Christians, and surely I will allow no such soldier or watchman when I am a captain or constable.

B.20.

Then you say that weapons be the holy giftse of God, and that we may use them, so that we have not a revenging mynde. I am persuaded never since the time of Christe that none hath revenged himself by weapon but he had a revenging mynde.

W.

Plaine dealing would awnswer to a whole point, and not catch here a word and there a worde, to cavill at, as not onelie in this place but also in many other. For I say not onely that weapons be the holy giftse of God, but also conclude of all those points wherof I had spoken before with these wordes. Now let this be the conclusion of all, that sith magistrates, lawes, and weapons be the holy giftes of God, let us the more diligentlie take heed that they be not defiled by our fault, which we shall awoide, if we take away a revenging minde; so may we use the same as necessitie requireth, and not offend against that commaundement by which revenge is forbidden to Christians, as in my former lettre. Thus farre it pleased you not to recite, but thinke in reseting a piece you have confuted the whole, even by your bare perswasion, that since the time of Christe none hath revenged himself with weapon but he had a revenging mynde. In which worde you againe bewray an evill meaning in that you except not princes, magistrates, & executioners etc., who may execute their office by cutting off evill members even by death with a mynde as free from revenge as a father correcteth his naturall childe. Here if I would cavill with you I mighte aske whether any before Christ did revenge himself without a revenging mynde, and whether men may not use weapon for defense without a revenging mynde, and resist violence with a mynde free from doing violence; and allso whether a man may not have a revenging mynde, though he neither strike with weapon nor with hand, but I will not revenge a Cavill with another cavill.

B.21. The godly father which you alledge is to be folowed as he foloweth Christe; for your 2 kindes of resistance I briefly awnswer, that if we suffer and love him that doth us no hurte, it deserveth as much thanke as an evill servant that is corrected for his deserte, & taketh it patiently. Allso I graunt to you we may eschew injuries by fleeing or running, and by circumspect dealing in our affaires. Allso if Christes meaning be as you saye that we should withdraw hart and hand from revenge, I can not see how there ought to be any resistance any maner of way. In this pointe I like your judgement well, & stand to those wordes, & marke the residue and you shall finde you ought to lose both coate & cloake, rather than you ought to resist.

W. That godly father, whome I alledge in my former lettre is Mr. Calvin, whose wordes you burie in silence, which be these—Those which deny the lawfull use of magistrates, lawes, weapon, etc. do therwithall despise the holie ordinance of God, to which you awnswer he is to be folowed as he foloweth Christe, which if you would do you would soone leave your pievish secte, and joine with the Churche of Christe as he did. My 2 kindes of resistance you brieflie awnswer, but shew not what thei be. The first kinde is wherby we repell injuries without hurte, which may be; the 2 kinde is wherby we do requite injuries with the like, which may not be. These be allso the wordes of a godly father whome you substantially confute by your brief awnswer, not worthy my awnswer. By your graunte etc. that we may eschew injuries by fleeing or runyng which differ not much etc, you deny all other kindes of eschewing of injuries, as by law, the lawfull magistrate etc as unlawfull. It is true that Christes meaning is, that both harte and hand should be free from revenge, and yet if you had any eies or godly sight, you might see a lawfull resistance one maner of way that is without hurte. And as well as you like me in this pointe, and marke you the rest as you liste, yet shall you never prove but that christians when time and occasion serve may eschew injuryes with a harmlesse resistance.
Neither did Christ deny his former doctrine, in that he offered not his other cheek to the high priests servant, when he strake him; what milder manner of speach could be in man, then to say, If I have done evill, beare witnesse of the evill, but if I have not why striketh outhe me?, this Christe saide to shew his humilitie, and to be an example to us, and allso to bring that wicked man to repentance; as he saide unto Judas, betrayest thou the sonne of man with a kisse?, and as he looked backe upon Peter that thei might know their unkindnes to so loving a lord and milde a saviour. And herein I am perswaded I may folow Christ in resisting, seeing you account it resistance. As for example, if an evill man should strike me without cause, I may say unto him these wordes or such like, Friend, if I have done you any injurie, I will make you recompence; if I have not, why strikke you me? And as Paul used himself in the same case, I am perswaded I may do the same, which is farre from revenge.

W.
I say in my former lettre that if Christ had so meant, as you understand him, he did not observe his owne doctrine, for being stricken on the one cheeke, he turned not the other. To which wordes you here awnswer, that Christe did not deie his former doctrine etc. in that he offered not his other cheeke etc., but if to offer the other cheeke and not to offer the other cheeke be not in wordes contraries, I know not what are contraries. Your discourse of Christs milde awnswer, his humilitie, his purpose towards him that strake him, towards Judas, towards Peter &c doth allso serve verie aptlie to prove the matters in conference, as allso that not turning the other cheeke is a turning of the other cheeke is agreement in wordes. Here allso you do falsifie my wordes, for I say not that Christe did revenge or resist, but that he turned not his other cheeke, according to his wordes, which you so much urge.

B.23.
And as for Christs wordes, of the right eie and the right hand if thei offend us, to plucke out or to cut off[f], thus I understand it. If my hand begin to shedde bloud, or to stretch out to any other unlawfull thing to the hurt of my neighbour, I ought so to mortifie and to slay that earthlie member that it should have no such power and strength to do the like. And likewise by plucking out the eie, if my eie begin to behold vanitie, I ought to make such a covenant with mine eie that I should rather lose the use of it than it should cause me to offend.

W.

Of Christ's wordes, resist not, sweare not &c I say in my former lettre, you may not urge such maner of speeches further than is meant. For when Christ saith likewise, if thy hand offend thee, cut it off[f], if thine [eye] offend thee plucke it out, yet he meaneth not that we should cut of[f] our hand and plucke out our eie so ofte as thei do cause us to offend; which thing you graunt by your long discourse how you understand the same. But why do you not understannde these saied wordes of Christ literallie as thei stand, as well as these wordes, resist not, sweare not, turne the other cheeke, give also the cloake &c? you can shew no cause why you expound the one and urge the other, saving that your will is a lawe in this matter. I might here also aske, if you might not as well and rather to mortifie your hand and eie, if thei offend against god, as if thei offend to the hurte of your neighbour; which onelie you do here name.

B.24.

But you say that which was a transgression when Christe came was also a transgression before he came. I will not contend, but briefly aske this question. Where do you finde this to be a transgresion before Christe came, that a man might put away his wife, if she found not favour in his sight? which Christe sheweth no man may do except it be for fornication. Where do you finde that Davides having more wives than one and the godly fathers before David as Abraham & Jaacob, to be a transgression of the lawe? but that Christe bringeth it to the first institution and the new testament biddeth every man to have his owne wife and every woman her owne husband. Where do you finde that to resist injuries was a transgression of the law, untill Christe came and sayed resist not?

W.

In your former lettre you say, before Christe came, it was thought no sinne to hate, to sweare, to resist etc., all which Christ at his coming proved to be manifest transgressions of the lawe etc. To which I awnswer in my former lettre—That which was a transgression of the lawe when Christe came, was also a transgression of the lawe before he came; to which wordes for awnswer you say you will not contend, but briefly aske this question. But I may justifie aske you, why you omitte to awnswer me?—touching St. Pauls words rebuking the Corinthians about contending in law which ye abuse to prove that christians may not at all contend in law: but this seemeth of the best of my lettre, & you say you awwnswe but to the worst therof. Now to awwnswe your brief question or rather questions, for there be three of them. Your firste for a man to put away his wife I finde a transgression before Christ came, even by your owne wordes, in that Christe reformed that abuse by the first institution: allso that god, the author of marriag saith, A man shall forsake father and mother and cleave unto his wife. Your second for a man to have moe wives than one at once, which in one respect was permitted by god as in Deut. 25., but in all other respects I finde the same a transgression, in that god saith—a man shall cleave unto his wife as to one, not unto his wives as to moe at once, touching which read Mal. 2. 14. 15. Your third, for a man to resist injuries with the like, I finde a transgression before Christe came, by these wordes. Say not thou I will recompense evill, and againe Say not, I will do to him as he hath done to me Proverb 22, et 24c. Thus have I awwnswe your brief question not with asking a question, neither have I cavilled with you by saying Abraham & Jaacob were before the law &c, and David was under the lawe etc, and we are delivered by the gospell etc., with which and like wordes you cavill at all the scriptures & examples which I alledge before the lawe, under the lawe, and in the prophets.
A Conscientious Objector of 1575

B.25.

If Christe came to fullfill the lawe by executing the rigour of the lawe, why did he not commaund the adulterous woman to be stoned to death? Much more I might say in this, but I will not be tedious unto you.

W.

You so catch lines and wordes to cavill at that you ofte force me to recite my formes wordes and the occasion thereof. To disswade you from your pievish secte and wicked opinion I in my former lettre saide to you thus: you may not frame to your self any private exposition of any scripture contrarie to the judgement of the universall Church, to which Christ hath promised his spirit &c., which spirit is one not contrarie to the giver thereof, neither is Christ contrary to god his father, nor the lawe against the gospell etc.—touching thosse points we treate of as in my saide lettre. To all which instead of awwnswe you aske this question, as seemeth by the occasion of the last lines, where I say that Christe is not contrary to god, nor the law to the gospell, you, I say aske, if Christe came to fullfill the law etc? why did he not cause the adulterous to be stoned? etc. By which words not myne but of your owne coyning you you again bewray an evill meaning. Firste in that the same sentence is by your sect urged to prove that among christians there ought to be no other punishment but excommunication. Secondly you seeme to have the same meaning by your oft repeating that we are now not under the law, but under grace by the gospell, that we are delivered from the rigor of the lawe by the bloud of Christ. Now to awnswer your question not with a question that Christ did not com;maund the adultrous woman to be stoned I collect 2 causes. First, because authoritie to punish did onely belong to the magistrate, and Christe was no temporall magistrate. Secondly, she was to be convicted by two or three witnesses, according to the lawe, and Christe though he he had bene a magistrate, yet had he lacked witnesses, for her accusers fledde and left her alone, as you may reade Joh. 8. That much more which you might hav,e saide touching this matter shall be awnswered when you have saide all that you can saye.

Now to this point touching swearing. That which you alledge out of the lawe, as Jerem. 4, and of Abraham how he sware to Abimelech. First, Abraham was before the law was given, therfore we must folow Abraham no further then we have an example with a commaundement, & Jeremy, in the time of the law. You know how the heathen used to sweare by their Molls, whome they thought the greatest. The Egiptians by the lif.e of Pharao the king, whome thei most esteemed, yea Joseph himself being amongst them, folowed their corruption in swearing likewise; which is no example for us to folow; and allso the people of Israel would sweare by god and by Malcom, that is, by the living and true god and by the Idolls, and allso would both professe the false religion of Idolatrie and the religion of god; so for the hardnes of their harts, as thei were in putting away their wives, thei were permitted to sweare by god, and by swearing is chieflie meant the profession of the true religion of god.

Here againe, as your maner is, you make a long discourse or rather a verie cavill upon my proofs and examples touching:
lawfull swearing; of which as in my former lettre by occasion, so now I say againe, that lawfull swearing was never condemned by the law, nor by Christe. For besides that god in forbidding to take his name in vaine doth therby graunt a true use therof, in the 6 and 10 of Deut, he expressly commaundeth to sweare by his name. Jeremy saieth an othe is to be taken in truth, in judgement & righteousnes. Christe did oftentimes sweare, Paul used an othe, god also sweare by himself. It may not therfore be gathered that when Christe saieth, sweare not at all, he forbiddeth that maner of swearing which god commaundeth, which the Patriarks, Prophets, Apostle, Christ himself, and God his father have given us an example of, as in my saide lettre. All which you have profoundly and sufficiently awnswered by your cavill that Jeremy was under the law, that Abraham was before the law, that the heathen sweare by their Idolls, the Egyptians by their king, and the Israelites by god and Malcom. To which, if I would cavill with you, I might aske whether you make no difference betwixt the law and the prophets, and also what difference you do make betweene the Egyptians & the heathen, and whether you will folow Abrahams example by commaundement in offering his sonne; but if I should resist or requite cavill with cavill there would be no end of cavilling. But I will come to a speciall pointe gathered by your owne wordes which is, that we may folow Abraham no further than we have an example with a commaundement, by which wordes you graunt that we may folow Abraham so farre. I except his particular commaundement & example touching the off.ering of his sonne. Stand you to this and I aske no more, to end this matter touching lawfull swearing. First, God commaundeth to sweare, as in the 6 & 10 of Deut. before cited. Secondly, the example of god himself, as in Genes. 22, and if you will not admit his example, because it was before the law (as you often urge) then take Christs example in the new testament, & St. Pauls also, who by the holy ghost approveth gods oth in the newe testament, as in the 6 to the Hebr. If now you stand to your owne wordes, our controversy is ended touching this matter. Lastly, you adde that as the Israelites for the hardnes, of their harts were permitted to put away their wives, so thei were permitted to sweare by god, by which your application, you both shew your grosse ignorance in not understanding the Scriptures, and also your arrogancy, with blasphemous boldnes, in abusinge the same. For as was saide even now, we have gods commaundement together with his example for lawfull swearing. But you have no example of any godly, nor any commaundement of god, but the flatte contrary (as is proved in my awnswer to the 24 place) that a man may put away his wife. Againe Moses did cause a bill of divorce touching such as did put away their wives, and Christe did reforme that abuse, (as is saide in the 24 place) but you can not shew a like bill touchinge swearing by god, nor that Christe doth condemne but approve lawfull swearing by his owne example.

B.29 [sic. 27.]
But the Messias who when he came must teach us all things, knowing it could not be to gods glory nor the profite of the Church, commaundeth we should not sware at all, his Apostle James agreeth with him, in the same commaundement, as is before rehearsed: And that which you alledge out of the new testament, as out of the 6 to the Hebr. where the Apostle saieth that men verily sware by him that is greater than themselves etc. I pray you marke in the same chap. before, whome the Apostle spake to, & that is to the beloved children of god; then leaving them he cometh to men, such naturall men as Paul spake of in 1 Cor. 2. 14, for he speaketh not in the same maner and phrase of speach, as he spake to the beloved in the 9 verse, he saieth not, & you beloved, an oth among you is an end of all strife, but leaving the beloved he cometh to men; as Christ willeth his disciples to beware of men, for thei should betray them &c., and that which [sic. you]. alledge in the 9 to the Rom. howe Paul calleth Christe to witnes, I am perswaded I may call god to witnes in a thing of truth, that I am fully perswaded in my conscience, & yet I can not [see] that that is a swearing by any thing.

W.
I have in my former lettre (as I have here partly touched and somewhat added) so proved this pointe, that you may (as you do) well cavill at it, but you nor all your sect can never confute the same. Notwithstanding I must still awnswer your cavills where I finde them. You say that Christ knowing that swearing could neither glorifie god nor profite his Church, commaundeth not to sware at all, with whome St James aggreeth etc. By which you graunt that Christe & James do forbid that, which (as is saide) both god doth commaund, & allso himself, Christe Jesu, St. Paul, with others have left us with an example of. You say hereafter that the scriptures have one sweete harmony and concert, but here as in other places you make them to jarre fowlie by setting Christe and the Apostle James against god and the prophet Jeremy. God saith, thou shalt sweare; Jeremy saith: an oth is to be taken; Christ, say you, commandeth not to sweare; with whome St. James agreeeth; behold one of your sweete harmonies. But your falling into such absurdities is gods just judgement upon you & your sect for abusing his worde, contenming learning and learned men, & defrauding your selves of publique doctrine and Ecclesiастical exposures upon the scriptures, wherby you might learne that god commandeth lawfull swearing, & useth it as a part of his worship, & to the great profite & consolation of his Church, as may be gathered Hebr. 6. Wherat you cavill so much with your blaspemous & wicked distinction, willing me to marke the same, which diligently I have, and do thereby see your malice, your ignorance, your wicked and blaspemous abusing of two of the most comfortable sentences in all gods scriptures, which is also a great judgement of god upon you. You proceed in this matter, and shew what I must marke, which is that the Apostle in the 9 verse speakeketh to the godly, calling them beloved, and in the 16v. he speakeketh of such naturall men as Paul speakeketh of 1 Cor. 2, and as Christ meaneth of when he saieth, beware of men, in which sense say you the Apostle saieth men verily do sweare, and an oth among men is an end etc., but he saith not an oth among you, beloved, is an end of all strife. Behold your blaspemous and lying distinction or application, but if you had any eyes to see the truth, and an harte to understand and receive it, you might see that the Apostle directeth his whole epistle not to such naturall men as Paul and Christe spake of (as you say) but to the regenerate Jewes, which were dispersed: who as he endeth the 5 chap. so beginneth the 6 in rebuking the converted Jewes, for that in long time they had so little profited wherein he proceedeth unto the 4 verse, where he terrifieth them with the daungerous state of such as having once embraced the truth, do revolte and become Apostates and heretiques, as you do, whose judgement with all other wicked he declareth by comparison of the two kindes of earth, both which receivinge the raine &c, yet but one beareth good fruite & receiveth blessing, the other beareth thornes and is neare to cursing. Then foloweth the 9th v., in which, as before he rebuked them, & by the same example terrified them, he now comforteth them saying, Beloved, we perswade ourselves better things of you. In the 10, 11, 12 verses he exhorteth & encourageth them not to fainte in doing of those good works there expressed, for that god is not unrighteous to forget the same, and further desireth them to shew their diligence in the saide well doing, to the full assurance of hope in the end, and that they be not slothful, but followers of them which thorow faith and patience inherited the promises, adding in the 13 ver. the stability & assurance of gods promise, made unto Abraham and all and all his elect, confirmed by his oth, who having no greater to sweare by, did sweare by himself, that he would abundantly performe the saide promise, which promise Abraham, after he had taryed patiently, he enjoyed. And now he cometh to the 16th verse, to your naturall men, and not beloved, as you say. But let it be that the Apostle here speaketh of men generallie, yet here is nothing against lawfull swearing, but rather a confirmation therof. First, in that it is said: men verily sweare by him that is greater than themselves, which is god onely. Secondlie, in that it is said: An oth amongst men is an end of all strife, which is a profite to men and glorie to god. But the Apostles chief purpose is to amplifie the stabilitie of gods promise, in saying: As men verily sweare &c and an oth amongst men is an end of all strife, so god willing more abundantly to shew unto the heires of promise the stability of his counsell, did binde himself by an othe, to end and remove farre away from his elect all distrust and infidelity. And that by two immutable things in which it is impossible that god should lye we (gods elect, not such naturall men as you speake of) should have a strong consolation &c. Thus according to that talent which god hath given me, I have freed this most comfortable chapter from your blasphemous exposition and wicked distinction. You proceede and graunt you are perswaded that you may take god to witness, etc., and yet you can not see that that is a swearing by any thing. But I pray you, what is lawfull swearing els, but a taking god to witnesse, in matters of truth, who is not onelie something, but the greatest thing, & the onelie cause of all things, sinne onelie except.
A Conscientious Objector of 1575

B.28.

And where you adde heaven and earth etc. Where Christe saith sweare not at all, I am sure god is not excepted, which is all in all; and I pray you, what neede at all is there that true Christians should sweare at all. If we be true Christians we ought to believe one another. For he that will give testimony against a man in wordes, will not sticke to sweare falsly, as Peters false saying well proved, after he had saide falsly, he swore as falslie. And where men should sweare before Judges, and for so many light causes, as men sweare upon books, I finde no such example nor commandement in the new testament.

W.
When Christ saith, sweare not at all, he also addeth (as I saide) these particulars, neither by heaven, by earth, by Jerusalem (as in my former lettre) which doth better prove, that in this word All lawfull swearing by god is excepted, than your bare assurance prove that he is not. You aske What neede is there that true Christians should sweare &c. I awnser you must either acknowledge there be some causes or els graunt that Christe and St Paul did sweare without neede, and so conclude thei were not true Christians.60 Touching Peters false swearing &c, if you were in as hard a case as Peter was, and left to your self, it is likely you would say and sweare as falslie as he did, which fact is to be condemned. To conclude, god by commaunding to sweare did foresee that there would be needfull and lawfull causes to use an oth, by which god should be glorified and the people profited, when truth is tryed out by taking god to witnes, which you can not see to to bee a swearing by any thinge. Touching swearing upon a booke, etc., as I dare not condemne a lawfull use therof, so I do not allow any abuse therin. But to sweare before Judges (who seeme to be great moates in your eies) as the same is most usuall so in truth it is most lawfull and needfull, because the hardest matters be decided by them.61

B.29.
Then you say, if I would view the text well, with a list to understand and yield to truth etc, I trust that god will direct me with his spirite, that I shall not resist the truth. No deceived sect I folow, their companies I haunt not, this mynde and perswasion I received not of men, neither by man, but by the revelation of gods holie worde, with the small exercise I have had in reading of the same. And since I gave my mynde therto, it hath so wrought that it hath made me of a woolf to eat hay with the lambe, and it hath turned my weapons into more profitable tooles, though I confesse I have not, nor do not one jote so neare as Christ requireth at my handes. but if that at any time I have had my slippes, & have not suffred my wrongs and injuries with a contented mynde, and recoyced therein, I have to ask God pardon, and further to desire him for to worke a more perfection in me.

W.

Touching your viewing of the text &c., I must referre you backe to the place and occasion in my former lettre, which is upon these wordes of Christe, sweare not at all, of which I say, as I have partly noted in the 28 place, that if you would view the text well, with a list to understand & yield to the truth, & would believe the judgement of the Catholique & universall Church, before a poore deceived secte, you might easilie see that when Christ hath saide, sweare not at all, by adding these particulars, by heaven, by earth, by Jerusalem, he excepteth that lawfull swearing which god commaundeth (as is saide) to which before you awnswer, that you are sure god is [not] excepted: and here, by trusting that god will direct you, not to resist the truth, both which are verie apt awnswers to the matter. But I awnswer that you have more cause to pray that god will let you see how ignorantly, willfully, and impudently, you do resist the truth. But (say you) no deceived sect I folow, their companies I haunte not, &c. But notwithstanding these your painted wordes, it will appeare hereafter that you so like your deceived secte, & so haunt their companies, that you account your self happie to be a hewer of wood and drawer of water among them. And allbeit in saying you received not this mynde from men, nor by man &c., you use therin Pauls wordes, yet are you not directed by Pauls spirit, for he had no such revelation in gods booke. Your small exercise in reading etc., with that company with whome you are to[o] much conversant, hath made you, not of a wolf to eate hay with the lambe, & to turne your weapons into more profitable tooles, but of a lambe of Christe, as was thought a very flat heretique, & to condemne the lawfull use and wearing of weapon as unlawfull for Christians. And notwithstanding your shew of humility, imperfection, & dissembling confession, with a like pharisaiell prayer for pardon, with an, if you have not, at any time, suffrd your wrongs &c, notwithstanding all which, I say, your arrogancy and pride is such that to justifie you and your secte you condemne the universall Church of Christe throughout the whole world.

B.30.

Those scriptures that I alledged, as well out of the 2 Cor. 12 [sic. 10] and Ephes. 6, what weapons we should use, I do not finde, though you have rebuked, you have not confuted. For a true Christian must be a spirituall man. for Paul saieth Rom 8. if any have not the spirit of Christ they are not his, and spirituall men must have spirituall weapon to fight with spirituall enemies.

W.

Your two sentences before allledged the 2 Cor 10 & Eph. 6., to which you here addde a third Rom. 8, all which you urge to prove that both the use & wearing of temporall weapon is is unlawfull for Christians. Which application of yours, because you say, though I have rebuked, yet I have not confuted, I will in part repeat both your application and my awnswer to the same. First out of the 2 Cor. 10 you say that the weapons of our warfare are not carnall but spirituall, and secondly, out of Ephes. 6 you say that a Christian must use the sworde of gods worde instead of the slaying sworde, the shield of faith instead of the worldly warriors shield, the helmet of salvation instead of a vaine helmet &c., and now you adde to the same end that a true christian must be a spirituall man, that Paul saieth, If any man have not the spirit of Christ, the same is not his, & spirituall men must have spirituall weapons to fight with &c. To which I awnswer in my former lettre that herein you bewray your lacke of knowledge, which chiefly is by defrauding yourself of publique doctrine, of conference, & of reading Catholique expositions of godly men upon the holie scriptures. For in the place of Ephes. 6 St. Paul having shewed that we wrestle not with flesh & bloud onely, but against the princes of the darknes of this world, against spirituall wickednes &c., he then prescribeth spirituall armours & spirituall weapon, wherewith we may quench the fiery darts of these spirituall enemies. And in the place of 2 Cor 10. St. Paul sheweth that the weapons of gods mynisters is the power of gods spirit, by which thei overthrow all imaginations, vaine opinions, errors, heresies, & whatsoever is highly exalted against the knowledge of God. Both which scriptures do no more make against the lawfull use of temporall armour & temporall weapon, than that scripture alledged by the Devill did make for Christ to have cast himself downe from the pinacle of the temple &c, as in my former lettre. Now whether I have rebuked & not confuted Your two scriptures most falsly applied, let any godly judge, & your 3 sentence now added out of Rom 8, with your conclusion that spirituall men must have spirituall weapon is even as truly applied, & doth make as much against the lawfull use of weapon as these wordes: he that is in the flesh can not please god doth make against the mariage of mynisters.

B.31.
All the other scripturs Jam 5, 1 Pet 2, 1 Cor 4, Hebr. 11, Matt 10 & 5, Isai 53, Rom 6. &c. you say doth no more make for my proof, than these wordes, this is my body, doth make for the papists real presence. I have alledged Pet. to this purpose, how Christe suffered for leaving us an example that we should folow his steppes, that is, in not resisting. I alledge Isai. 53, how he also shewed what a suffering Christ he should be, how he was ledde as a sheepe before his shearer, being dumbe, and openyng not his mouth. I alledged out of Rom. 6. If we be like Christ in the similitude of his death, we shall be like him in the similitude of his resurrection: the rest of the scriptures I alledged to like purpose, and if the papists hoc est corpus meum were as much to the proof of the real presence as these scriptures do shewe that a perfect Christian must be a sufferer, and not a revenger, thei were not farre from the truth: but we know that Christ is ascended upon high, and sitteth on the right hand of God in heavenly places &c.

W.
All your other scriptures before alledged & now againe rehearsed as Jam 5, 1 P. 2, 1 Cor. 4, Hebr 11, Matt 5 & 10 &c. All which (as before I saide I now say againe) do no more make for proof of those points which you affirmre, wherein we contend, & to which end you urge them, than hoc est corpus meum doth prove a real presence: and looke what the saide wordes do make for the papists real presence, & how neare the truth thei be, so neare are your Anabaptists, & so much your scriptures in both your lettres, & whatsoever all the whole route of your sect can say, doth make against the lawfull use of weapon, contending in law, or any lawfull eschewing or repelling of injuries. I omitte to examine particularly how aptly & fully all your above saide scriptures are alledged and applied to the proofe of those points which you affirmre.

But this suffering is so hard to the flesh that it can not embrace it, but it must have delay by fleshly glossing, perswading we may live with the gentills of this world, & receive glory, honour, riches, & magnificence, purchase, build, & whatsoever, & yet be the true servants of God, & have joy in the world to come, Where the true servants of Christe must wander to & fro, havinge no certaine city, nor dwelling, thei must sell their possessions & not purchase, thei must suffer rebukes & blowes, thei must be hated of all people, though foxes have holes, & the birdes nests, the poore christian may have no place safely to put his head in, thei must be like the Israelites, to stand with their staves in their handes, & with their loyynes girt, to flee at all seasons, thei must be brought before kings and rulers, & be whipped, scourg'd, imprisoned, and be condemned to shamefull death, wheras with the people of this world, all is farre otherwise.

W.

Here is a verie handsome discourse allso, & apt to the purpose to prove those points which you affirme, & about which we contend. But to your answwer. Not onely suffering, but all other pointes of a true christian be hard to the flesh, and yet in Christ, as St. Paul sayeth, his elect are made able to do all things, thorowe Christ that is in them. But suffering, say you, must have a delay by fleshly glosses, perswading that thei may live with the gentils of this world, & receive glory, honour, riches etc., by purchase & whatsoever, & yet be the true servants of god, & have joy in the world to come. By which wordes & that which foloweth you go further than condemning of those points about which we contend. For you seeme to affirme that christians may not receive glorie, honour, riches, etc., purchase, build etc, and be the true servants of Christ & looke for joy in the world to come. But that the true servants of Christ must wander to and fro, have no certaine city nor dwelling, thei sell and not purchase, thei must suffer and be hated &c, & though foxes have holes, the poore christian must have no place safely to put his head &c, as you amplify the same, all which is no awnswer or confutation of my lettre, but an approbation and confirmation, with an addition of like & greater absurdities than those about which we contend. I graunt that there be times when christians must leave all to folow Christ, & there be times allso when Christians may use all your forenamed things in the lord, according to St. Pauls rule 1 Cor. 9. It seemeth allso that in this your discourse touching true christians & their afflictions, you chiefly have relation to your owne sect, of whome lately some were banished, some imprisoned, some executed, & one I trow whipped, all which you expressly note &c. who thinke it unlawfull allso to have possessions, prince, magistrates &c, & are constreined when your crew is found to wander to & fro as you say, but yet you, nor the best of your crew, do not observe your foresaide rule, which you say is the case of all true christians, for you are content to abide in a certaine city, to have a dwelling, to buy as well as to sell, & not to wander to & fro.

B.33.
The doctrine of Christe is contrary to the flesh & the lusts therof, the doctrine of the flesh is agreeable to the flesh & the lusts therof; which difference, as I saide afore, the flesh will willingly imbrace. The naturall worldly men which keepe their brethren serving in miserable prison do embrace it, those that come so farre to London to enrich the lawyers at Westmynster hall do embrace it, but few found to suffer injurie. A small company of those souldiers Gedeon shall finde to lappe water like doggs; one Micheas amongst the false prophetes, also one Elias to almost 600,000, 12 Apostles amongst 12 tribes.

W.
All this discourse doth still well prove those points which you affirm, & very substantially confute my denyall. But to your matter. I graunt it true that the doctrine of Christ is contrary to the flesh & the lusts therof, & the doctrine of the flesh is agreeable to the flesh &c., excepting your meaning that to contend in lawe, to weare & use weapon, to use imprisonment etc, is a doctrine of the flesh, which you seeme to graunt by saying, the naturall worldly men do embrace it, who keepe their brethren in prison, which come so farre to London to enrich Lawyers etc. By which wordes you againe bewray your meaning, and covertly as your manner is condemn use of lawes, of lawyers, of Clients, of prisons & so consequently of Magistrates and all government. And by your comparing those few which suffer to Gedeons 300 souldiers, to one Micheas & one Elias amongst 600,000 false prophetes, to 12 Apostles amongst 12 tribes, you seeme to account you & your sect to be these few that suffer, & as Gedeons souldiers, Micheases, Eliases, 12 Apostles etc. And all others which use law, lawyers, prisons etc. to be naturall worldly men, false prophets &c. And if here or in any other place I gather contrary to your meaning, blame your owne confusion and disorder, both of forme & matter of which you treate. And further that you may knowe my mynde plaine in this matter, be it knowne, that as I allowe not any abuse of lawe, any corruption of Lawyers, any malice or crafte of clients, any cruelty of imprisonment &c, so I still advouch all these and those other about which we contend in their lawfull use not onely verie lawfull, but allso very needfull & very profitable, in every christian commonwealth.

B.34.
Allso the foundation which I alledged of the sufficiency of holie scriptures I am sure it is true. For men have & do crre, but the scriptures have one sweete harmony & consent: but Augustine, Ambrose, Jerome, Origen, Chrysostome, Luther, Calvin, Zwinglius, Brentius, Hemingius, have no such concorde, but are one against another.

W.
You alledge for your foundation Joh. 5. 33, Rom 1 16, 1 Cor 4 12 (which is 1 Cor 3 11) 2 Tim 3 16, which you take to be a more strong foundation than to build on any man, which I allso graunt, further than men build upon Christ. But see your foundation. In the first place, Christ saieth, search the scriptures &c., in the 2 place, Paul sayeth, the gospell is the power of god to salvation &c., in the 3 place he saieth that the whole scripture is given by inspiration from god &c., in the 4 place he saieth, Other foundation can no man lay &c.
Now all these 4 sentences do prove the authority, power, & profite of holy scriptures, & not that it is unlawfull for christians to contend in law, to weare & use weapon etc. So that you must seeke another foundation to sette up your frame upon, for this foundation before cited will beare no such burthen. But it seemeth your purpose in alledgeing the sufficiency of scriptures more than men is to condemne all mens expositions upon those scriptures on which you build that are contrary to your received opinion, as may be gathered by your quarrell against these godly fathers as foloweth. The scriptures say you, have sweete harmony and consent, but Augustine, Ambrose, Jerom, Origen, Chrysostome, Luther, Calvin, Zwinglius, Brentius, Hemingius, have no such concord, but are one against another. You say here after that you have not bene at the Universitie, but yet it seemeth you are pretie well learned, that have found such discord among these doctors. I pray you, when you reade them once againe, set downe allso what points thei are in which thei so greatly disagree. But be it that these fathers in some small points disagree as men, yet as I have heard thei have one sweete harmonie, consent, and agreement in the most and substantiallest points of gods religion, and therfore as St. Paul teacheth (which is scripture) we are not to quarrell at and condemne them, but to follow these foresaid fathers, & all others, as they follow Christ.

B.35.
And where you burthen me in divers places of your lettre that I am conversant with a poore deceived sect, men of phantastical spirits, such as deny the old testaments [as MS.] to belong to christians: First, I answer, I thinke the old testament to belong to christians, so much as is not abolished by the newe. And for keeping company with such evill persons as you burthen me, I shall desire you to judge charitably of me as you would I should do of you. The lord knoweth though I be the most sinfullest and wikkedest wretch in the world, yet my chief desire to be among the children of god, & such as follow the life of Christ most neare, and I so esteeme of them that I thinke them worthy of all reverence, yea thinking my self happie if I may be but a hewer of wood & drawer of water among them. But from heretiques & such as as do not embrace the holie scriptures thorowe the helpe of Christ Jesus, I will flee from them as from a serpent.

W.
It is true that I do often burthen you to be much conversant with a poore deceived sect, and will not leave so to burthen you, nor judge more charitably of you untill you forsake your saide secte and joyne with the universall Church of Christe. And here I must tell you againe that for lacke of matter, & no want of good will to be doing, though but very cavills, you, leaving many points unanswerd, do answer this matter twice, as is to be seen in the 7 place, where leaving out sect, which I there & you here expresse, you say the deceived poore, & then frame your answer as pleaseth you. You proceede, and graunt so much to belong to christians of the old testament as is not abrogated by the newe. But what is abrogate and what not, you do not declare, neither will you believe the judgement of any therin that is contrary unto your deceived sect. You would gladly be charitably judged of, but as before I have told you, so will I do, I am forbidden to call evill good, and threfore I may not call an heretique a christian. And that you are an heretique you can not avoide, with all your often protestation, and by taking god to witnesse (which you can not see to be a swearing by any thing) that though you be the most sinfull in the world, yet your desire is to be with the children of god such as follow the life of Christ most neare; whome you thinke worthie of all reverence, yea & accompt your self happie, if you may be a hewer of wood & drawer of water among them, but from heretiques and such as embrace not the scriptures you flee as from a serpent. All which you painted protestation, with your abusing of the name of god, doth not, I say, cleare you, but more manifestly prove you to be an heretique. For your great desire to keepe companie with gods children & such as follow the life of Christe most neare you meane not Gods children in his Universall Church, but your owne sect in a corner, whome you esteeme worthie of all reverenoe, & account your selfe happie to be a hewer of wood & drawer of water amongethern. Where is now your truth in these wordes, No deceived sect I folow, their companies I haunt not etc. Here also I must put you in mynde of your great marveile, why I should make so long discourse to you that princes are ordaine of god &c, & of your protestation with promise, that neither I nor any other shall speake so much of obedience to princes nor of their calling, but you will subscribe to the same etc., but as I saide in the 20th place it is with tongue and penne, not with deed and harte, for all your obedience to our prince & his lawes touching religion, & and touching the defense & government of her Ma'ty, people & country, with weapon, armour, lawes &c, & your great desire to be amongst gods people is come to this, that not onely you dislike therof & seclude your self theryfrom, but also do account your self happie to be a hewer of wood & drawer of water among your divelish secte, whome you account worthy of all reverence, and yet one of those who lately suffered even in the presence of Alderman Gammage, then Shrieve of London, Mr. Fox, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Field, Mr. Winthrop, myself, & divers others, did aske whether thei could name one christian prince in the world. Behold one of that felowship unto whome you woulde draw wood & hewe water [sic]. To conclude this matter: First in saying you will subscribe to all obedience, & yet disobey, you are a lyar. Secondly, in that you dissent from the Universall Church of Christ, you are a Schismatique. Thirdly, in joyning your self to your divelish sect, you are, as I have saide, an heretique. Fourthlie, if you have felowship with them, & be not of their mynde you are a dissembling hypocrite, as you were when you rode with a sword, & yet thought it unlawfull to use or weare any weapon. I had allmost omitted here one occasion by which you most plainly bewray your self, which is that havinge saide from heretiques, you adde, and such as do not embrace the holy scriptures, you will flee as from a serpent, by which exception & distinction between heretiques & such as embrace the holy scriptures, you shew your favour toward your felowe, who in your eies seeme not onely, but most rightly & alone, even with both armes, to embrace the holy scriptures, for which you not onely have them in great admiration, but allso to me did much commend their knowledge therin and utterance therof, when I found you with them in Newgate (as aforesaide.), and threfore from thence you flee not as from a serpent, but cleave fast to them, as a burre to a frieze. And here allso, if I would cavill, I might aske you where you can name one heretique which did not pervert (which you call embrace) the scriptures; allso how you or any other can be an heretique & not pervert & abuse the scriptures, & further might charge you to be a fellow heretique, with all heretiques, because all heretiques have, as you & your sect do, perverted (which you call embrace, as is saide) the holie scriptures (but I will not cavill here about.).

B.36.

For my confused heaping together of scriptures, I trust not so confused but they were trulie alledged, to the purpose of the thing for which thei were alledged: though I can not frame my stile with such excellency of speach, not in entising wordes of mans wisdome, for I have not bene at Universitie to studie Aristotles divinitie. Allso I pray you to beare with me, that I am no more expert in alledging the scriptures, for that I have small time or none, to folow my booke, for that my poore estate will not suffer me, for that my charge is great, which compelleth me more painfullie to folow the world; for that I would faine eate myne owne bread, and not hinder anie man, but truly give unto everie man his owne.

W.

Whether the scriptures by you alledged be confusedly heaped together, & how truly thei be alledged, & to the purpose for which thei are alledged I have partly shewed, & will stand to be reformed where I faile upon like condition. But say you, thei are truly alledged, though you can [not] frame your stile with such excellency of speach, & entising wordes of mans wisdome, for you have not bene at University to study Aristotles divinitie &c. To which I first make this request, that when you read over Aristotle againe, shew me what his divinitie is, for I know it not. Now to your discourse wherin you seeme besides a frumpe toward me to shewe againe your dislike of learning & learned men, in terming the University study Aristotles divinity. As for your desire to be borne with in that you are no more expert in alledging the Scriptures, is but your common shew of humilitie and simplicity, cast over your intollerable pride, vainglorie, and arrogancie, who not onely despise learning and learned men, but also the Universall Church of Christ dispersed over the whole earth, and that to justifie your sect of hereticks in a corner. Touching your many lets by which you have small time, or none to follow your booke, to which I wish you that either you had lesse time or els that you tooke better profite by it, being at it. But whatsoever lets you have being a carpenter, the same or the like I have, being a baker, who, be it knowne, have as great care for to eate my owne bread to give to everie man his owne, & not to be chargeable to any, as you or any of your sect. Your counterfeite humility and covert craving of glory, hath caused me thus foolishly to boaste; If here I should against your dislike & railing at Universities & learning, which an heathen man calleth the voice of an Ase, prove the lawfullnes therof by the schoolls or colleges of the prophets your awnswer is readie, but that was under the lawe, and we are delivered by Christ, but where finde you schooles or Universities in the new testament, and where can you shew in the printe of any of Christs footesteppes that he was schooled in any Universitie? Shew me this allso in the footesteppes of any of his Apostles, & this shall be retracted or recanted. I guesse this would be your awnswer, because you so often use the same in like cases.

B.37.
And now wheras you bring in not to use weapon to be a condemning of such occupations as live by fighting, brawling, & contending, as lawyers, soouldiers, armourers, cutlers, bowyers, fletchers, carpenters, among these I my self am a carpentar, and as yet I thanke god I never eate one piece of bread nor dranke one droppe of drinke by fighting, warring, & contending. As for the other occupations this I say—you must not set up carved images in Churches, because carvers may live therby, nor organs, nor candles, nor such like, to mainteine like occupations, nor schooles of fence and dauncing, to mainteine fencers, ruffians, and dauncers.

W.
Here you triumph, but before the victorie, & thinke you have caught me at a great advantage. but all in vaine. For I say not that not to use weapon is a condemning of such occupations as live by fighting, brawling, & contending, as you wickedly affirme; but I say to deny, as you & your sect do, that christians may contend in lawe, pray defense of Magistrates, weare & use weapon &c, is not onely a condemnation of all godly in all ages which have lawfully used the same, with all those whose vocation is to live therby, but also a condemning of the lawfull magistrate, which is the highest ordinance of god upon earth.91

Behold now, how substantially this your cavill doth confute these my wordes, in my former lettre. You proceed and graunt that you are a carpentar, & yet you thanke god like the pharisee, that you never eate a piece of bread, nor dranke one draught of water, by fighting, warring, & contending &c. By which wordes you seeme to graunt that souldiers, warriers, lawyers etc, do eat their bread by fighting, warring, brawling, & contending &c. Then having cleared your self of this cryme, but not the carpenters of the Tower, with other occupations els where that make stocks & carriage for gunnes, with other munition of defense of our prince, her people, & countrey, having, I say, cleared your selfe herof, but not the rest, you go further & say, I must not set up carved Images in Churches, because carvers may live therby, neither organs, candles etc. By which wordes you seeme to graunt no more lawfull use of weapon, armour, lawes, &c than of Images, organs, & candles in Churches. And if this be your meaning, either ignorance or malice hath greatly deceived & blinded you or els your sect hath devilishlie bewitched you, that can now see no difference betwixt Idolatrous Images in Churches, which god so often & so expressly condemneth, & the lawfull use of weapon, armour, lawes &c., which in so many places god approveth, commaundeth, & useth, & no where forbiddeth in the lawfull use therof. Touching defense & dauncing, as I do not alow but utterly condemne the wicked abuse of both, especially of dancing, so though I finde the printe of neither in the footesteppes of Christe, yet I dare not deny a lawfull use of both.

B [38]

And as for the magistrate, I am so farre from condemning his authority, that I account them worthie of all feare, reverence, & honour, & if I should do otherwise, I procure the wrath of god to my condemnation, as I saide afore; and thei are no terror unto me, for that I mynde not to resist or transgresse their lawes, through the help of Christe, but will obey it, not being contrary to gods law.
A Conscientious Objector of 1575

W.
It seemeth that your conscience doth accuse you in this pointe, both by your often handling of this matter as also by your using of many wordes & great protestation to purge your self therin, as before in the 17 place, & now in this. You account them worthy of all honour, and if you should not, you procure gods wrath &c., that thei are no terror unto you, for that you mynde not to resist, nor transgresse their lawes, not being contrary to gods lawes. But your obedience & not transgressing their lawes is partly noted in the 35 place, as the testimony of your hart doth shew the same by your acte[?]. Your saying that you will not resist &c. may the better be believed for that you deny all soldiers, all armour, all weapon, & all vocations that make instruments & munition for defense as unlawfull for christians. Which notwithstanding you are to be trusted as well as the rest of your sect at Mounster, read: the storie out of Sleidan. It seemeth allso by that when you have saide you will not transgresse &c you presently adde, their lawes not being contrary to gods law; & in the II place you adde, that you will give to princes so much as is due to Caesar, together with your example of disobeying & secluding your self from Christs Church in England, by all which I say you seeme to graunt that our prince by her lawes doth require more than is dewe to Caesar, & if she do I pray you shew me wherin; for I would not give unto Caesar that which is due unto God.

B [39]
Thus according to the talent that god hath given me I have somewhat boldly & rudely writen unto you, yet I trust truly, & have somewhat awnswered to the worst of your lettre, as time suffered and as they lay; and I shall desire you to judge the best of me as I do of you. I have not communicted so farre with no man as with you. I trust the lord will so direct me with his holie spirit that in any thing which you thinke is contrary to the truth, as I know nothing; the lord I trust will reveale it to me in his due time.

[W].
You have indeed according to your talent &c, not given you of god, who giveth to his the spirit of truth, but of the divell, who inspireth his with the spirit of lies, & by whose instigation with the help of his instruments, the Anabaptists, you have I say indeed, not onely rudely and boldly, as you say, but also falsly, blasphemously, & reprochfully awnswered, and verie truly as you say to the worst of my lettre, and like true it may be that you did it as leisure served, but most untrue that you awnswer to the same as thei lay. For besides your adding, dimynshing, falsifying, catching, & snatching here a piece, and there a piece, as you confesse, of the worst of my lettre, that is, whatsoever you could take any occasion to cavill at, & overslipping those points which you could neither confute nor cavill with, besides all this, I say, you more than once and in sundrie places which I have noted, do make two & contrary awnswers to some one pointe, & that by your wicked dealing in either, adding to my wordes, as in the 37 place, dimynshing from the same, as in the eight place, or els by falsifying therof, as in the 4 place. You proceed desiring me to judg the best &c, not without cause you make this request, for the worste is worse than starke naught, but as before I have saide, so shall you finde untill I see better. In that you have not communicated so farre with no man &c, you shall through me take no harme therby (as I am yet mynded), excepting my promise how I will esteeme of you. You further say that you trust the lord will direct you, that in any thing which I thinke is contrary, he will reveale it. But this your pharisicall prayer, with your counterfeit simplicitie and ignorance is but your usual cloake cast on your pride & arrogancie, which in your opinion not onelie see & know more than I; but also that you & your sect do see & know more than the whole Church of Christe, and are so farre off to believe me touching these things, which I not onelie thinke, but also do know, and upon the warrant of my salvation do advoutch to be contrary to the truth: that you will not believe the Universall Church of Christe, no not god & Christe himselfe, whose approbation, commaundement, & example with the example of all godly in all ages I have alledged for a proof of those points wherabout we contend. And notwithstanding your opinion touching the points which I have proved to be contrary to truth, yet (say you) I know nothing contrary and that is because you will neither see, heare, know, nor believe any thing except the same be revealed by the instigation of Sathan, & blowne into your eares by his instruments the Anabaptists, whom you esteeme worthy of all reverence & account your self happy to be but a drawer of water among them.

B [40]

Which the lord graunt & strengthen me in that wherein I stand to his truth, & raise me up when I fall, & bring me home when I wander astray, & open myne eies when I am blinde, & waken me when I am asleepe, for Jesus Christ's sake, to whome with the father, & the holie ghost, be all honour & glory for evermore Amen. Yours allwaies in the lord, as I am perswaded you will do no otherwise willingly. Fare you well. Writen the 13 of October S. B.

W.
When you before have saide that you know nothing contrary to truth, adding, the lord I trust will reveile it unto me &c, to which you say here, the lord graunt. But you have greater cause to pray that god will open your eies, ears, & hart, to see, heare, understand, & believe his truth, which he so many waies, & so manifestly doth reveile unto you, against which truth, touching those points in which we contend, you seeme even wilfully as in the broad day light & bright sunne shine to close your eies, to stoppe your ears, & to harden your hart least you shoulde see, heare, understand, believe, & embrace the same. That god strengthen you in that wherin you stand to his truth I adde Amen, & touching that which foloweth, I will pray that god will raise you up, for you are fallen, that he will bring you home, for you are gone astray, that he will open your eies, for you are blinde (& who so blinde as he who will not see, & most palpable is that blindnes, which is counted for perfect sight) & so much that the more blinde, by how much you thinke you see better & more than others: to conclude, that he will waken you, for you are on sleepe, that you even snorte in errors; all which god graunt you, if it be his will, for his crucified Christ Jesus his sake, to whome, with the holie ghost, be everlasting praise, honour, & glory. So be it. Thus have I as leisure served, as you say, somewhat awnswered,102 not to the worst of your lettre, but to the best allso, the begynnyng, the middle, and the end. So leaving you to the judgement or mercy of god in Christ Jesus. In whome yours, as you are his, Wm White. Jan 2. 1575[-6].

And further, as before I have sayed, sith you keepe fellowship with the foresaide company, it must needes folow that either you be wholly of their myndes, or els prove your self a very hypocrite, as is saide in the 35 place, for which cause I have sent you herewithall a copie of a lettre writen to those of your secte in Newgate, not many daies before 2 of them suffered touching the truth of Christs incarnation according to the holy scriptures, which those 9 that were banished, those that suffered, & those 2 that lately were delivered, with all the rest of your sect, & therefore very likely your self also do most ignorantly, impudently, & damnably deny, which said lettre touching that error together with myne awnswer to your other errors, I wish you diligently to weigh & consider, & that even as you tender your owne salvation, which I desire as myne owne, notwithstanding I have somewhat sharply writen unto you, to awaken your security, to correct your arrogancy, & to reclame you from your errors, & erroneous company to joyne with the universall Church of Christ without which there is no salvation. And that you may the more deeply consider of your daunegrous estate in secluding your self therfrom, I further desire you in the L. Jesus, well to consider of the late judgement of god, upon a brother (as was thought) whose credit among the godly, whose praise in the gospell, whose zeale & continuance in the same, whose persecution & exile for testmony thereof was not much inferior to those that suffered most, & gave the greatest testimony (death excepted), who held no such errors, neither did condemne the Universall Church of Christ, nor cut him self therfrom, as you & your sect do, but acknowledged the said Universall Church as also these members & parts thereof: the Church of Christ in Geneva, in Fraunce, in Germany, in Scotland &c; also in London the Italian Church, the dutch & the french, of which he was a member; so that his greatest sinne knowne to man, & as his owne mouth did confess not many dayes before his dolourous & daunegrous end, was that, for judging & condemning a part of Christ's Church & but certaine members of the same, the heavy hand of god was upon him, which as wofull experience declares never left him untill his owne conscience, hart, & hand, was his owne accuser, judge, & hangman, which saide terrible example none ought to rejoyce at, neither rashly to judge, or curiously to search gods judgement therin, nor yet to insult against any man or matter, especially against the glorious gospell & syncere professors thereof, but watch that all men of all sorts be admonished therby. Not surmising that he was a greater sinner than the rest, but that all do thinke as Christ saith Luke 13 that except we repent we shall likewise perish. And as every sort may take their peculiar admonition thereof as the Atheist & godles man, may conceive that if so heavy a judgement of God fell upon one that so long had professed his gospell, & with such zeale, imprisonment, persecution, & exile gave such testimony of the same, how hard a judgement resteth for them unless they repent which not only want like fruits, but also the same glorious gospel, which is the power of god to salvation to every one that believeth. 2dly. those which profess the same glorious gospel of Christ Jesus & thinke they stand sure, let them, I say, take heed they fall not, but with an holy & righteous life confirm their election, & in humility, feare, and trembling worke out their owne salvation: & as the Atheist, godlesse man, & protestant so the papists with all other hereticks & Schismaticks, & namely you & your sect, may likewise be moved to consider what an heavy judgement of god will fall upon you & your sect except you repent, which not only do erre, & as in many points so in one of the chiefest of christian faith, but also do separate your selves & condemn, not a part of Chrisst Church, or but certain particular members therof, but the whole Universall Church of Christ through out the whole world. But here an end. Desiring the eternall & ever living god, for his crucified Christ Jesus his sake that all those which do know or shall heare of the foresaide heavy Judgement of god, may so consider therof, as thei may be bettered therby, & learne that good which god would teach us by the same, that with feare & trembling, as said, we may walke before the lord our god in such holines & righteousnes of life, as by which his name may be glorified, our knowledge, faith & hope increased, our election confirmed, & wc in the end everlastingly saved thorow Christ Jesus our onely saviour, to whome with god, his & our father & the allmighty comforter, be everlasting praise, honour & glory. So be it.

It is long since that I wrote your awnswer & what other let soever hath with held the same from you so long, I am perswaded gods providence was the chief lette, that togethr with my awnswer & other lette, I might allso note you the late lamentable example threatnyng, you might be reclaymed & made excuselesse.

To which I will adde, & so require of you not to be denied as you will use meanes for your conversion, that after a time of diligent consideration of my saide awnswer lette, & late example, we may have further conference with 2 or 4 godly learned prechers indifferently chosen to decyde our controversy, & that so without further writing there may be an end had of all our former conferences and travailes, to Gods glorie, the discharging of my brotherly and christian duty, & to your conversion & salvation, if it be gods will, to whome for the time I leave you, & in whome yours as you are his, as before is saide Wm White Aprill 4. 1576.
My lettre written to the rest of your sect touching Christs Incarnation I require after reading & good consideration therof to have againe, But touching my awnswer I do onely desire & that upon like condition, that if occasion so serve I may have a sight of yt, the same remayning still in the hand of you or your friends.

NOTES.

All the notes marked M are the final comments of the Anabaptist, S.B., placed by him on the margin on the manuscript.

1 M. "the[y] utterly denied it."
2 M. "God keepeth me and the haires of my head are numbered."
3 M. "His cause you can not defend by the Scriptures." This is, of course, Percival Wiburne (Wyburn, Wyborne), prebendary of Norwich, Westminster, and Rochester, sequestered in 1564 from the vicarage of St. Sepulchre's, London, but preaching occasionally till death in 1606; one of the leaders of the Puritan movement, headed by Thomas Cartwright. Of Ditcher and the law suit, no trace can be found.
4 M. "Micheas had not the spirit of error for speaking against false prophets."
5 M. "a matter."
6 M. "and yet I trust I am the lordes. what Christ doth alow is good."
7 M. "I esteeme not for the worldes knowledge."
8 M. "It is at your pleasure to gather of my wordes."
9 M. "he is sometime a mynister, sometime a mariner, and sometime a merchant. this slanderer that walketh in no vocation you dare call a brother: But speake the truth, for he lyeth."
10 M. "are you not faultie in that you burthen me with all?"
11 M. "I seeke for no praise of men."
12 The meaning here is not clear.
13 M. "The wordes revenge and suffer had a relation to the former wordes if you marke it. I know all is ignorance contrary to your minde; call you that detectinge of a mans ignorance to painte him out as a foole?"
14 M. "Thorow the help of Christ my obedience hath and shall appear to the gratious prince as much as yours doth in all respects."
15 II. Esdras, viii., 2; not quoted literally from the Genevan version.
"I will not prove to defend no[r] sects nor heresies, but your words which say the deceived were smaller than the truth, and I say untruth is greater in multitude than the truth."

I.e., Lot's.

"I have no secte, nor am of any secte but of the religion of Chryste."

"I shewed you the scriptures in my former letter, which were these: Deut. 18. 15., Acts 7. 37., Matt 17. 5., Matt 7. 24., Joh. 4. 23., Matt. 5. 22, 30, 40, 41., Rom 12. 14., 2 Cor. 10. 4., 1 Pet 3. 8., Essy 53. 2 et 6. 5., 1 Cor. 4. 12, Wis. 5. 1, Eph. 6. 16, Matt. 26. 52, John 18. 22, Matt. 10. 16, Heb. 11. 32, 33, 34, Philip. 1. 7, 2 Thes. 3., Apoc. 7. 14, and divers others which to have rehearsed againe would have made the lettre to[o] great and tedious.

"I must beare this and greater at your handes, for thei saide Christ had a devill."

"Here Mr. W. seemes to be much moved that I saide I awnswered to the worst of his lettre: he hath my words in writing to shew, I saide to the most part of his letter, and moste' he taketh to be worste, and that moveth him without a cause."

"I named what things in my former letter, which be those which we nowe contende for."

"I have awnswered both your places at once."

"It toucheth as much the quicke as though you called me traitor, thief, murtherer, or sorcerer, from which things I praise god I am free, and as cleare I am in that you burden me withall: but you & I shall once appeare before the judgement seate of God."

"worldly wisemen: but I am contented to be called a foole of you, that I may be made wise."

"We must suffer the injuries of the worlde as Chryste did."

"I know no such, nor keepe company with not [none?] that [be] so evil disposed."

"Gods word must be the judge."

"Christe when he was reviled revenged not himself; no more must Christs mynister."

"by oversight I left out one sipher."

"So Chryste compareth himself to a thief and to a covetous man."

"Christ is the true expounder of the law, and saith, resist not, and gave us example to folowe his steppes."

"Though I saide we were delivered from the ceremonies of the lawe, I saide not that weapons were any ceremony of the lawe. I knew it would fall out that wherewith you burthened me you would be found faulty in yourself, by saying I was a caviller."

34 M. "As in building the stony temple they wrought with the one hand, & held the sword in the other, so muste we Christians do: we must worke that men may see our good works, & we must hold a sword in the other hand, the sword of the spirit & the shield of faith."

35 M. "as you do conjecture."
36 M. "which you leave to shewe."
37 M. "Christ did suffer it that the scripture might be fullfilled, among the wicked was he counted."
38 The Genevan note is:—The exercising of the sword is forbidd to private persons.
39 M. "Christe giveth us no commandement to absteine from mariahe, but gave us commandement that we should not resist."
40 M. "To be true christians is to folow Christ."
41 M. "I would you were so free from layinge untruths to my charge as I am as from abusing the scriptures and arrogancie."
42 M. "Idolatry is forbidden, so is revengement forbidden."
43 M. "The scrip. saith but 20o besides the seventie horsmen."
44 M. "You would still have something against me for princes, but you hope in vaine."
45 M. "I meane to leane to a more sure pillar than is Mr. Calvin."
46 M. "may resistance be harmless?"
47 M. "It serveth verie well to prove we must not resist."
48 M. "But shew me to strike and revenge how you can obey Christe his words resist not."
49 M. "Doth not Paul will them that thi should rather suffer injury: & wher do you finde that if thi might arrest one another by the serjeants, & cast one another into prison?"
50 M. "but you knew it not but by Christ."
51 M. "to alledge the gospell you account it a cavilling."
52 M. "you say it."
53 M. "I have saide enough alreadly."
54 M. "Yet of the heathen there was a difference betwixt them; the Grecians esteemed the rest barbarians; the Egiprians were a part of the heathen; if I had not named Egiprians, howe could you have knowne my meaning? finde no fault without a cause."
55 M. "But St. Paul useth his taking god to witness in spirituall matters. There is no such commandement that men should sweare at the barre before Judges in the old or new testament."
56 M. "Why do you so triumph? it is no jarre in the scriptures to harken to Christ, the fullfiler of the law; though thi might circumcise their children we may not, and yet not jarre; the Jewes might put away their wives, and we may not, and yet not jarre; the Jewes might offer sacrifice and we may not, and yet not jarre, etc."

57 M. "Your dealing with me is as the Jewes was with Christ; thei said, he blasphemeth, it is blasphemy; and though you say I blaspheme, yet I thanke god I am free both in harte and tongue."

58 M. Judge, good reader, wherein I have blasphemed, and marke his spirite."

59 M. "To take god to witnes in spirituall causes, and not in everie trifling matter."

60 M. "If I should use half such wordes, you would say that I blasphemed."

61 M. "True Christians will not hurte one another, and I will not contend with others."

62 M. "It is your wordes, for Christ alloweth no swearinge."

63 Sec B 28.

64 M. "Still I finde you my heavy Judge, but my conscience is cleare, but I trust god will judge you and me more mercifullie."

65 M. "My knowledge is according to the scriptures, and not according to your mynde."

66 M. "It maketh so for my purpose that you will never be able to confute it."

67 M. "These be your common wordes, and such like."

68 M. "Marke, good readers, yf these scriptures are not to the purpose."

69 M. "I shew the cause why this is not received, because it is contrary to the flesh, and very few will receive it, but the doctrine of the flesh must receive."

70 M. "What is a doctrine of the flesh els?"

71 M. "Shew me one word I have spoken against Magistrates."

72 M. "I never read that there were six hundreth thousand false prophetes, as you have noted; if I should have done this I knowe what you would then have saide."

73 M. "You take me contrary in all things."

74 M. "You abuse me: the scriptures I alledged for this purpose were: Matt. 5. 22, 30, 40, 41, Rom. 12. 14, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 1 Pet. 3. 8, Is. 53., Rom. 6. 5, 1 Cor. 4. 12, Wisd. 5. 1, Ephes. 6. 6, Matt. 26. 52, Joh. 8. 22, Hebr. 11. 32, 33, 34, Phill. 1. 7, 2 Thes. 1. 3, Apo. 7. 14, as is to be seene in the 6 leafe, the scriptures in this leafe I alledged that thei are only sufficient of themselves; let the reader judge indifferently of your dealing."

75 M. "I have read their authority in other books, and have heard them brought in sermons that thei all have their errores."

76 M. "Do what god shall permit you."
77 M. "I answered orderly as was in your lettre; more often have you burthened me than I have used my defence."
78 M. "I have declared it, and I say all which is not allowed by the gospell."
79 M. "This is a small thing; Christ himself was called a Samaritan and had a devill."
80 M. "Gods children are in his Church."
81 M. "Whie take you gods office, to judge of mans heart?"
82 M. "Marke, good reader, I say I thinke my self happie to be in the companie of the children of god, if it be but to hewe wood and draw water, and he termeth those whome it pleaseth him."
83 M. "These are still your salutatiOons, god give you a meeker spirit."
84 M. "Your charity still appeareth, but when you learned the words you wente not unto schoole with Christ."
85 John Foxe, William Fuller, and John Field are well-known names in Puritan controversy. Winthrop, so far, I have not traced.
86 M. "Aristotles' divinitie is Logicke and philosophie, which Paul biddes us take heed no man do spoile us by it."
87 M. "For no evill I have done or saide to you or any I desire not to be born withall, but suspecting your spirit would be thus moved, my wordes being contrary to your minde, that you should not passe the bonds of patience I desire you to beare with me."
88 M. "This messe of unsavourie meat still you set before me, which as Job saieth can not be eaten without salte."
89 M. "I do not charge you to the contrarie."
90 M. "Shewe me any railing word in any of both my lettres; but you have laide your ginnes and netts to catch me if you could."
91 M. "If I triumph, it is in Christ, and not in my worde; nor yet in any worldly thinge."
92 M. "I pray god preserve our most noble queene; farre is it from my harte to condemne her grace, but to shew my true obedience toward her grace to the uttermoste of my power."
93 M. "I have no oftener cleared my self than you have laide it to my charge, and I thanke god you have no more cause to burthen me than I have to burthen you; for I am as cleare from contemnyng authoritie as you are or any other."
94 M. "Read you the story, and you shall finde them to agree more with you than with me, for that you seeme not to mislike of the warres in France, and allso sticke so to the carnall weapon." An English translation of Sleidanus's work was published in 1560, with the title: "A Famouse Cronicle of our time called Sleidanes Commentaries . . . . . . ."

96 M. "Here he turneth my wordes from most to worste, which thing so doth move him."
96 M. "These be but your old speaches."
97 M. "I sai:de: to the most of your letter."
98 M. "I would you yourself were as cleare from this as I am, taking the scriptures that I alledged: for one proof, and putting them for another."
99 M. "I thanke god you can do me no harme, though you have writhed, and wrested, and judged my hart according to your owne pleasure, laying things to my charge that I am free indeed and hart from, that you seeke ever everie way to catch me at some vauntage."
100 M. "I dare stand to the scriptures, more than to either you or any other man."
101 M. "I have named none but the children of god."
102 M. "Christ's mynisters come in a milder maner and spirit. St. Paul sayeth: brethren, if any man be fallen by any occasion into any fault you that are spirituall help to restore such a one in the spirit of meeknes, &c. I have not used to you no such gally and bitter wordes, but the tree is knowne by his fruits."
103 M. "God give me his grace to take heed and to learne by the examples of all that god sheweth his judgements upon, that I be not as thei be with whom the Lord so dealeth, as for example Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, with divers others in the scriptures, which are written for an example to us. And as for Bolton, I have to be warned by him as you and any other were, but this be knowne unto you, he spake not to me in a yeare or allmost 2 before he dyed, and for this cause, he sai:de if the Queene would give him license and money he would make an army, and first go through England, and not leave a papist [alive], and so passe forward into other Countries. Then I asked him if that were according to the spirite of Christ, saying, whereas Christ came to Samaria, and thei Woul:ed not receive him, when the Apostles would have called for fy:er from heaven he rebuked them, and also of the tares sown amongst the good seede, and other such like scriptures as to the same end I alledged. then hee spake his pleasure at that time, and after that never gave me word where he mette me. But I thanke god I have not bene nor am not nor I trust thorow the help of Christ shall never be of his blouddie mynde."

John Bolton or Boulton was in exile during Mary's reign, becoming a member of the English Church at Geneva on November 5th, 1556 (Martin, Les Protestants Anglais réfugiés à Genève 1555-60). He was closely associated with the Separatist movement in London, 1567-71, a fact which opponents of Separatism in later days did not forget to emphasise. His name does not appear among the leaders of the Plumbers' Hall congregation examined by Grindal in June, 1567, but he was among the 77 taken in St. Martin's-in-the-field the following March, and among the 31 discharged from Bridewell on April 22nd, 1569. His name is missing from the three papers relating to Richard Fitz's congregation in 1571, and it seems likely that in the interval he had recanted at Paul's Cross, and been excommunicated by the Separatist Church of which he was elder.

In 1591 George Gifford (A short Reply, &c., p. 17) thus refers to him:

"I said that the fearful end of one Bolton, about twenty years past would not be forgotten . . . . for the truth is, he did for the same causes that you do, utterly condemn the whole church of England, and was with sundry others separated from it. And (as it is constantly affirmed) he was an elder in their secret church, and afterward falling into deep despair, he could not be recovered, but did hang himself."

In 1595 Thomas Drakes ("Ten Counter-Demands Proposed") refers to Bolton's suicide, calling him a "first founder" of Separatism, and Thomas Rogers does the same in the 1607 edition of "The Catholic Doctrine of the Church of England," quoting Gifford, and calling Bolton "he that first hatched that sect in England which afterward was termed Brownism."

Henry Ainsworth, in his Counterpoison (1608, p. 39), also refers Bolton, as does John Robinson in his Justification of Separation (Works. 1851, II., 57). When a very similar incident occurred in the career of John Child, a Baptist minister, in 1684, no parallel seems to have been drawn. The date of the suicide is not easy to determine. Gifford's "about twenty years ago" would give c.1571, but White, in 1576 speaks as if it had just happened. Possibly Bolton was excommunicated before 1571, and joined the French Church in London (though so far no association with this church has appeared), not "becoming his own judge and hangman" until 1576.
